THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

A Message to the Churches

BY W. I. DUKER, Moderator of General Conference

WISDOM GLEANED FROM THE PASSING YEARS

"I said, days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom." Job 32:7.

In the Scripture referred to in the above text, we are told that "Great Men" are not always wise, and that the aged do not always understand judgment. Surely this is not complimentary language. The above used text is surely right. We ought to glean wisdom from the passing years. A new year is being given us again. We readily recall our successes and our failures in the year just past. What of the New Year? What part will each of us play in the year given us by the Lord of Hosts?

It seems to me that we may approach our duties in the light of an ordinary business meeting. May we have the secretary read the report of the last meeting? What has been done? What have we planned to do? What unfinished business lies on our desk awaiting our action? May we remember that there is no virtue in planning work unless that same work is carried to its completion. Our National boards have met in conference, hours were spent in deliberation and prayer. Much planning and effort has gone into the work. If that is as far as the work goes, but little good will come from the same. Unless the local church shall take seriously each action of the Conference, all will be lost.

We have been disturbed a mite, when Brethren, acting under a disgruntled spirit, criticize the Conference in its work. However, we must not forget that if we become negligent with respect to our duties, self imposed, we can do and are doing infinitely greater harm to our own interests. With the new year now upon us, may we be very conscious of our duties, both to our local church and to our general interests.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

At the request of the Editor I am again undertaking what is a really difficult task. It is to attempt to answer questions, explain hard passages of the Scriptures and give suggestions and advice upon matters of discipline or administration in the Church. Not only is this a somewhat difficult thing to do but it is as well subjecting one's self to misunderstanding or perhaps attack.

I will only hasten to say that I shall be perfectly sincere in my answers and if my friends or the readers may differ with me I only ask what I am willing to grant to them. I shall grant to all the right of their opinions. Searchers after the truth never need fear loss by exchange of opinions on mooted questions. I have no pet theological bias. I am not the exclusive possessor of any key to the Scriptures. In fact I am afraid of interpretations that need keys through which to find them. One of the most dangerous, because so misleading, tendencies of our day is to fall into just this error, namely, that one has the only true interpretation because of some secret which others have not and cannot discover by a prayerful, a sincere and a scholarly,—not to say an ordinary,—application of intelligence to the Word.

I must be allowed to say one thing more. It is this—I shall not promise to answer every question sent to me. I shall welcome questions from the readers and I shall also welcome friendly criticisms. I shall not write at any time with a view to controversy. I shall write with a view to really give information and help to earnest seekers of the truth. My knowledge is quite limited. Please remember that. Perhaps I need not tell the reader that. I have often been surprised at the knowledge of others. For all that it is yet true that the real student of the Word is very modest in his claims of superior information. For one who knows I have profound respect; for the pretender or superficial or egotistic smatterer I have no time. I do believe though that the Word was written to be understood and in spite of some difficult passage or enigmatic sayings it can be so well understood that any seeking salvation may find it.

For the sake of reference as occasion may arise I shall number consecutively the subjects treated. I have some very interesting questions at hand with which to begin and I hope the readers may keep me well supplied with materials. Send your questions to the Editor or directly to my address, Ashland, Ohio.

1. Please explain Mark 16:17-18. To whom does "they" refer in the passage: "In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall in no wise hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

This very first question is one that involves a great difficulty. The difficulty rests upon the undisputed fact that we do not know whether this ending to Mark's Gospel is authentic or not. I can not give the full ground upon which my conclusion rests. I hope the readers will appreciate this fact. I have given this passage extended study and believe my conclusions may be fairly sound. Now for a few facts:

Dr. A. T. Robertson calls this the most "important variant reading in the New Testament." The two greatest, and the only practically complete, MSS of the New Testament do not have verses 9-20. These are Aleph and Vaticanus. I quote Robertson again. After critically examining the evidence for and against the passage he says: "So the passage as it stands seems condemned as not a genuine part of the original Mark." I will also quote the words of one of the greatest, if not the greatest textual critic of all time, Dr. Casper Rene Gregory. He says: "The closing verses of Mark positively do not belong to this Gospel, positively have no right to be in the New Testament. If I said they did belong to this Gospel I should speak as direct an untruth as if I should insist upon it that Moscow was a city of Spain. The kind of assertion would be different, the untruth would be equal or even greater."

I may add that both textual and external evidence compels such scholars as the two quoted to come to the conclusion they have. I should perhaps add the testimony of two early Fathers and writers. Jerome says, and Eusebius agrees with him, that the long ending to Mark is wanting in almost all Greek Manuscripts."

An old Armenian Mss. adds after verse 9 that the ending that follows was from the hand of one Aristion. Papias says Aristion was a disciple of Christ. This leads Gregory to say that though the words do not belong to the N. T. they are "every whit as good as Mark's and a Christian may read, enjoy, ponder them and be thankful for them as much as he pleases." He hopes that the archaeologists may yet find the full Gospel of Mark with its original ending.

My own conviction is that verses 9-20 are not the original ending of Mark's Gospel if we are to form a judgment based upon the evidence at hand. Second, I believe the section verses 9-20 is a reliable, trustworthy and veridical record probably to be traced to one of the writers to whom Luke refers. Luke 1:1-4. I am grateful that it has been preserved. I have no difficulty in believing and accepting it.

The teaching of the section as a whole is quite in harmony with the rest of the Gospel record. The antecedent of the "they" referred to in the question is easily seen from verse 17 in the words, "them that believe." Our Lord wrought miracles. The Apostles, and those to whom he directly gave the power, wrought such miracles as are here referred to in verse 17 as "signs." According to the N. T. no others did. So prominent a man as Timothy, or Titus, or Apollos is never mentioned as having done so. The signs ceased with the passing of the period and the purpose for which they were to be wrought. The facts of history are sometimes stubborn but can not be evaded.

Some one looked up the home conditions of all the sailors who got into trouble of one kind or another while they were members of the crew of one of the battleships, and found that in 92 per cent of the cases there had been a divorce or a step-parent in the home.

The River

By Pearl S. Buck

(This story, by Pearl S. Buck, author of "The Good Earth," was written prior to the arrival in China of any shipments of American wheat. Since then, several boatloads of wheat have reached the scene of the flood, and have been distributed by the National Flood Relief Commission. Relief authorities have announced that the entire quantity of American wheat will not be sufficient to feed the millions of Chinese men, women, and children who are victims of the flood which was the worst in China's history. Mrs. Buck sent this story for Flood Relief in China, constituted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and China Famine Relief U. S. A., with headquarters at 205 East Forty-second Street, New York City, to aid in bringing to the attention of the American public the real tragedy that has befallen the Chinese people and the need for extending mercy.)

The village had always trusted to the river. To them it was a good and beneficent force. In the spring it came swelling past them on its way to the sea, rich with its burden of silt and clay torn from the upper lands through which it rushed. This rich water rose in the canals and the creeks, and the village waited for it year after year, and seized the good tide and turned it into the rice fields, and the fields brought forth harvest, and there was food for everyone, for the old men and women and the little children and for the strong, lean men and women who were the strength of this generation. Yes, this was a good river.

The good river! This year it has deceived the village. The spring tide came high and full as ever it did. But when summer came there was no subsidence. The villagers looked at each other at first in surprise, then in consternation. What was the matter with the river? It swelled into higher tides; it began to eat into the land it had always fed; it rose to flood. The villagers were frightened. Some of the oldest men began to remember how when they were young they had heard their own grandfathers, now dust for many a year, tell of how the river did so once betray the ones who trusted to it. But it was very long ago and they had forgotten until now that there had even once been such a tale told.

What Shall We Think About in 1932

By M. A. Stuckey, Th.M.

The present illness of Editor Baer has brought a request from the editorial office of the Publishing Company for a brief treatment of some old or new theme for the new year. The question raised in the above title ought to be large enough for part of our consideration at the dawn of 1932.

Editor Baer

For one thing, we ought to remember our editor in prayer during the coming year. His task is a colossal one. It elicits every power of intellect, feeling, and will that he possesses. At no time is he free to enjoy a long vacation of rest, meditation, and recreation from his weekly grind. That grind is never made lighter, if pastors and church officers fail to cooperate with him in every possible way. When that cooperation has been lacking, you have never heard him whining or whimpering over the lethargy and slowness of others. Rather there has always been a word of praise and commendation for the work which others have done for him. I am wondering whether it might not be an excellent thing to remember him in prayer just now. Let the reader of these lines do this, please, before he reads on in this magazine.

The Evangelist

I have never seen The Evangelist better edited and published than during 1931. Our editor knows how to improve his paper. The editorials have all been worth reading. Not one of them has been lacking in sober thought and reflection. The news comments have always had a spicy challenge to the most casual reader. The general articles have been of high tone and order. The special sections have been improved. The reports from the field have manifested a spirit of industry and loyalty among the pastors, and our common work is greater and better than ever before. Brother McClain's front page comments have always been varied, excellently written, and never dull or uninteresting. If you have not read them, do so, and you will be greatly benefited.

Greater Cooperation

For another thing, we ought to be thinking during 1932 about improving the publication situation in our denomination. We have several minor magazines representing the separate and special interests of the church. Would it not be an excellent policy for these Boards to discuss their distinctive problems of a publication nature and come to the Publication Board and ask if they could not help to make The Evangelist a greater and bigger magazine, say by about twenty pages, by requesting special departments or sections in which they could present their efforts weekly, instead of monthly, as is now the case, to the entire church? Each Board could keep its special workers and should contribute financially to the enlarged magazine. No one would hail such a move more enthusiastically than the present Editor and Business Manager at our Publishing Company. Too many minor publications rob The Evangelist of its freshest and most vital news and keep it from growing as it should and could with greater support.

Such a move, rightly harmonized and judiciously guided, would accomplish great results. Every interest of the church would be adequately represented before the whole church; the financial end of the publication interests would show improvement; the editorial policy, already excellent, would be enlarged to meet the growing situation; more subscriptions for The Evangelist could easily be secured at a slightly increased subscription rate; and our church paper could be reduced in its border dimensions and wear a dress of extra folds. Let us think about this in 1932.

Doctrinal Preaching and Teaching

Yet again, we ought to be thinking about doctrinal and expository Bible instruction from our pulpits and in our week day Bible classes in our churches during 1932. Never has there been a greater need for Biblical preaching and teaching than just now. Everybody is lacking in a mastery of our Bible and its distinctive doctrines.

To understand ALL the doctrines of the church and to emphasize each one properly, requires the utmost sanity and wisdom. Where all of them are rightly preached and believed, there the church has grown by leaps and bounds; where SOME of them have been heralded to a lost and dying world, to the exclusion of others, there a lop-sided, hyper-dogmatic, and extremist church has developed. I will let my readers supply the proper illustration to illumine the idea suggested in this paragraph.

Good Living

Finally, let us think about richer and finer Christian living during the coming year. This should apply first to the ministry and then to the laity. At times the ministry of the Brethren Church has been greatly embarrassed to learn that one of their worthy brethren has not been living a good life. Have we not heard of some who experienced moral and financial lapses? Have we not known of others who were naturally wayward and prone to stumble? What has the church done to help such ministers? Let us think about this in 1932.

A good layman, righteous in his motives and conduct, is to be praised. So is a good minister. Our denomination has a great majority of each. After all, the world needs nothing so much as Christ, and good, great, lovable, tolerant, and wholesome Christian men and women. Think on this during 1932.

Providential Leadings

By Rev. Dyoll Belote

In their accounts of the Crucifixion the Gospel writers bring into prominence one Simon of Cyrene. This man is the one who happens to come into contact with the procession on the way to Christ's crucifixion at the time when Christ is sinking under the weight of the cross and the greater weight of the sin and ingratitude of men who is compelled to bear the instrument of torture to its place on Golgotha. Little doubt that after having been compelled to go that far he remained to see the whole gruesome proceeding to its culmination. As to whether Simon was influenced favorably toward the Lord is a matter of conjecture, though some seem to feel that such was the case, and suggest that the reference to Simeon, who was called Niger, was to the same man who bore Christ's cross for him on the way to Calvary.

One rather wonders as he contemplates this occasion what it was that led Simon to take the particular street on which the Crucifixion procession was traveling as the one on which to enter the city, perhaps on his way to the services of the Temple. How did it come that he was right at the place where he was needed and at the very moment when he was needed? These questions are hard to answer, but they do suggest the curious and inexplicable way in which our lives are often shaped. It is manifestly true to those who study human history that "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform," not only in great and momentous affairs but in our individual lives as well.

How curiously indeed we are led! Without knowing why we take one turning in life rather than any one of a number of other turnings we might have chosen, and behold! the whole trend of our entire after life is changed. It is probable that for many folk there is never a thought as to the meaning of such seeming trifles. But as some one has said, "Trifles make for perfection, and perfection is no trifle." And it is so with our lives; if we would make the most of our lives we must learn to seek the meaning of the experiences of life that we may evaluate them correctly and thus render to God the glory which is his due for all he so continuously does for us. For the seeming trifles of our lives, the little, inconsequential happenings, ARE NOT TRIFLES NOR YET INCONSEQUENTIAL. If our lives seem dull and commonplace it is because we have not learned to look for and find the meaning and importance of the events which are forming at the moment a part of our existence. What happens in our lives is not a matter of chance—it is God in our lives.

It might well be wished that we could see the meaning and importance of the events of our individual lives, see them as God sees them, and know their meaning and the impact they will have, not only upon our own lives but upon the lives of others as well. There is no CHANCE in this world, but a Divine PROVIDENCE which overshadows and directs the affairs and events of the universe. And if we lived in the consciousness of this fact we should be more careful of the things we say and do, because we should then realize the eternal results that words and deeds have in the plans of an all-wise Creator. And too, doubtless, if we should surrender our lives a bit more fully to the leadings of divine providence we should find the happenings of our existence a bit less irksome, for we should be conscious of a meaningful purpose in all our experiences and we would probably be seeking to find that purpose and to align ourselves with God's plan and to work and live that we might be constantly conscious of his leading. Then life would have a new meaning, and each new sense of change and leading would be a new adventure and life should no longer—or ever be—mean and commonplace but one glorious pilgrimage with the Spirit of God toward that perfect fellowship with him in his kingdom above.

It Was a Merry Christmas

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

One of our very recent advertisements announced that our Christmas "might have been happier." It is still so with every publication employee. Every person in the employ of the Publication Board would like to be busy and more than busy with the work of the brotherhood. As a matter of fact, a number of us did not get our Christmas pay and some of us did not get to work full time and so, never shall be paid for that lost time. Thus you can easily understand what was meant when we said, "ours could have been happier." In this campaign of urge for loyalty, we are making you very much acquainted with the situation as it is. One of the persons on the "inside" wanted to say that we had reached a crisis. Of course, we could not be happy if that were so, and the misgivings he has of course, prompted the suggestion. We hope

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Evangelist wishes a happy New Year to everybody.

Publication Day is January twenty-fourth.

Unusually spicy and interesting is the letter from Dr. Yoder from South America. One of their customs is quite minutely described. Who can say they do not need missionaries there after knowing that such things happen?

From the report of Brother W. H. Schaffer, we learn of encouraging things from our church in Johnstown of which Brother George Jones is the supply pastor. Of course the Whole Gospel wins. The Lord said it would. We are glad that we have so many young pastors sounding the true note.

Sin is something more than breaking a law: it is hurting the dear Lord who loves us. Christ died because he loved us all. When we sin we are bringing anew to him the agony of the cross. How hateful that makes sin! And how quickly we repent and are sorry because we have hurt our best friend, whose love never fails.—Floyd W. Tomkins.

Our church correspondent at Berne, Indiana, gives interesting news of their activities and incidentally commends heartily the work of a Gospel Team from the College and the Gospel preached by all these teams. No church can mistake getting these young men to give zest and life to the young people of our churches. We commend them to other churches.

Dr. K. M. Monroe makes an interesting report for the Seminary. The activities of this group always make news worthy of perusal. The "House" of which he speaks is very nicely furnished and one feels like helping when he considers that these occupants will soon be spreading the whole-Gospel message far and near, our future preachers. Why not ask him how you can help?

Let us give thanks unto the doer of good, and the merciful God, the Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; for he hath sheltered us, he hath succored us, he hath kept us, he hath redeemed us unto himself, he hath spared us, he hath helped us, he hath brought us to this hour. Let us therefore pray that he keep us this day and all the days of our life, in peace through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

In the absence of Dr. Baer, editor, who is laid up for a time with a severe "cold," his work is being done by the office force and some other helpers whose names you will notice in the editorials. We are sorry that the editor is thus afflicted and glad if we can bridge over this gap for him. We crave the patience of the readers in our efforts and the prayers of God's people for Dr. Baer's speedy recovery and return to his duties.

Fourteen baptisms; many reconsecrations; full communion tables; a remarkable case of healing and other interesting happenings at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania, where Brother Humbert is the pastor, all make interesting and encouraging reading. Revivals are the most needed thing in our country. They are the short-cut road to national health and prosperity. Let us hear of more successes like this.

From a "Gateway" to an "Oasis" might be the heading of the news article by Dr. Carpenter, reporting his new location at Smithville-Sterling charge. We believe that it will be a spiritual oasis. Dr. Carpenter and his good wife will sustain in this charge. But it is not an easy task to keep parity between worldly and spiritual wealth. Yet the Lord has placed these good workers here and we predict mutual success and blessing between pastor and people.

In a letter to the editor, George C. Pontius, pastor, tells of the plans and progress of the work of the Lord in his charge. In it he says, "I am glad to say that things are going along very nicely. We have many things that are encouraging." He mentions the fine meetings at the First Brethren church at Dayton, the Bible Institute from which the churches of the Valley received much help. Communion services have been held at both Clayton and West Alexandria and plans for the future indicate that these churches intend to continue their aggressive advancement in these splendid fields of service. A revival is being planned for West Alexandria early in the year with surrounding pastors assisting.

A letter to the Sunday School editor from Dr. L. S. Bauman, tells of the enlargement of their order for Brethren Sunday school literature. This is very welcome news. Indeed, it is a very fine order. We believe that there are a good many schools which could enlarge their orders with benefit to themselves as well as to our output. The Sunday School editor will not be radiantly happy about this matter until our own House shall be able to meet every need of our Sunday schools with our own productions. It will take time, but we believe it is possible to work out a fully satisfactory solution to this perplexing problem when all understand and when we have reached full cooperation and coordination.

"Men at Work" is the name of a publication that comes from Elgin, Illinois; R. E. Mohler, editor. It is brim full of good suggestions for the men of the Church of the Brethren which it serves. It offers special programs for the coming months as follows: January, The Family Altar; Family Visitation. February, Organize Gospel Teams and send them to surrounding churches. March, Visitation Evangelism; Sunday School Improvement Month; "Church Beautiful" campaign. Reports tell of one church giving fifty dollars for evangelism in a mission; another renting an orchard and caring for it and with the income paying off more than half of their church debt; another fostering an Anti-tobacco Oratorical Contest. All of which we pass on to our men and men's organizations as good suggestions.

Some Modern Educational Trends

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

Notwithstanding the fact that we are now in the midst of a very severe financial depression, the educational institutions of the country, are trying as usual to make progress. Perhaps, in time, this depression will have a noticeable effect upon this progress, but at present there seems to be small reason to believe that the institutions of higher learning, at least, will in any real way swerve from their course. I want to mention some of these tendencies as they affect the institution here at Ashland.

First, let it be noticed, that scientific research is going forward as eagerly as usual. There is not a single branch of human learning that does not have projects under way. In Physics, Chemistry, Sociology, the biological sciences, History, and others, men are working as usual to push back further the frontiers of the unknown. The problems involved in the atom, in social derelictions, in archaeology, in medicine, in inheritances, in genetics, and in anthropology are being attacked as never before. There is always something new in these and other fields, and scores and scores of magazines carry the accounts of these discoveries.

In my own department (Biology) I do not teach a single textbook that I used four years ago for the very simple reason that texts printed so long ago as that, lack what has been discovered within that short period. And as much could be said, with suitable adjustments, of other departments. Nor does this prove that science is built upon shifting sands, but rather that it is always seeking new truth or new interpretations of old ones. And let it be remembered, too, that at least three of our teaching staff here are just fresh from graduate study in America's foremost universities.

Secondly, much has been said within the year about academic freedom. This discussion was renewed because of the summary dismissal of a professor of Sociology at Ohio State University, but the point involved is much older than that. Teachers have always felt more or less of a sacred duty to teach what they regard as the truth, and the truth as they see it, and not as someone else sees it for them. However there are two sides to the question.

First of all, practically every institution of higher learning in the land was found to exalt and extend certain ideals. That is why men give money to them and for that reason men and women are called to teach in them, and no institution will ever surrender the right to insist upon these ideals. That is why certain colleges are known as Catholic, Protestant, private, or state—they have been founded to advance the ideals and beliefs of their founders. About that there can be no dispute, but the trouble comes in when teachers within their walls set up ideals of their own which vary widely from that of the governing boards.

The fact must be recognized, however, that the teacher might be right and the institution might be wrong, as I believe the case to be at the above-named institution in regards to compulsory military training. Yet the fact remains, that the institution itself reserves the right to determine what shall be taught and the entire teaching staff should necessarily put itself in accord with those ideals if it desires to ally itself with the institution. Yet the crux comes when you set out to determine just who has the right to set up the teaching standards. And in my opinion neither governing boards nor yet the Association of American University Professors will soon arrive at a final just solution.

In the third place, it may not be generally known, that certain standardizing agencies have recently received an appropriation of more than $100,000 from the General Education Board to defray the expenses involved in studying what are now known as educational standards. That is, nearly all of the above-named agencies either admit, to, or exclude from, membership on the basis of some score of points, some of which admittedly do not measure real values.

It is the intention to take five years or less to determine just what standards should be used to measure the efficiency of colleges. It is wholly within the range of possibility that certain institutions, not now unrecognized, are doing better work than some now safely within the fold, and yet the standards at present used to make the distinction would not reveal that fact. In this region, sixty colleges, some recognized and some not, have been asked to cooperate in this task. Ashland is one of these colleges. So Dean E. G. Mason met with the other representatives of these colleges and members of the general committee at Chicago, December 7th, representing Ashland as a small recognized college, in order to attempt to set up proper standards of recognition. I take this to be a very important step for the colleges of the country.

Fourth, great stress has been laid of late by all college associations on what they call "better teaching." This simply means that college teachers must more and more hold higher degrees and also have some successful teaching experience before joining the teaching staff. The placing on the teaching staff of a North Central College some one for private or personal reasons apart from other qualifications is probably not good educational practice,

*"Every day is a fresh beginning
Every morn is the world made anew.
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning
Here is a beautiful hope for you
A hope for me and a hope for you.*

The tasks are done and the tears are shed.
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover
Yesterday's wounds that smarted and bled
Are healed with the healing which night

for after all the heart of all education is the personality of the teacher. I take it that this was one of the newer objectives of the conference referred to above.

And lastly, one must not forget the move to make teaching more individual rather than mass, personal rather than mechanical. Several colleges have adopted methods looking in this direction, as at Clark University where in the undergraduate department those who are able may finish the college course in three years; at Rollins with its personal conference plan and less formal recitations; the "general examination" as now being studied by the Association of American Colleges; the plan of Chicago University; the experimental college of the University of Wisconsin, and others, all calling for a complete revision of organization and a greater outlay of money.

I close as I began, there may be financial depression, but those who think that college may ride through this period by only marking time are much mistaken. It will take more than the present financial disturbance to permanently turn back the hands of the educational clock. And what is more, probably so long as we have education at all, there will be changes, experimentation, divergence of view, and advancing standards. Men are no more settled in this field of activity than they are in politics, society, or anywhere else. And whether all changes are really advances only time will tell.

The Rending of the Veil

By Thomas Gibson

The veil is rent; we now draw near Unto the Throne of Grace,
The merits of the Lord appear,
They fill the holy place.
His precious blood has spoken there,
Before and on the Throne,
And his own wounds in heaven declare
The atoning work is done.

'Tis finished, here our souls shall rest,
His work can never fail,
By him, our Sacrifice and Priest,
We pass within the veil.
With the holiest of all,
Cleansed by his precious blood,
Before the Throne we prostrate fall,
And worship Thee, O God!—Selected.

The very minute that the Lord Jesus, "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world," expired on the cross, the veil of the temple in old Jerusalem was rent in twain, "from the top to the bottom," signifying that the time had come when Jesus, our Priest and Sacrifice, was about to enter into the Holy of Holies (heaven itself) and carry with him his shed blood, and sprinkle it around the Throne, and the Mercy Seat, making it possible for all humanity to have free access to the Mercy Seat, by the supreme atoning and redeeming, "once for all sacrifice, of the Son of God." Under the Mosaic law, no one but the High Priest was permitted to enter the Holy of Holies. Once a year he entered into the Holy of Holies to make a sacrifice for his own sins and the sins of the people. The blood of the sacrificial lamb was typical of Jesus, who was the "lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The statement, "The veil was rent from top to bottom," is very significant. Not from bottom to top, but "from top to bottom." "Every good gift, and every perfect gift descendeth from above" not from beneath. The poet sings:

"Peace, peace, wonderful peace,
That cometh down from the Father above;
Wonderful, wonderful peace,
Sweet peace, the gift of God's love."

James, contrasting the wisdom of God and the wisdom of the world, said, "The wisdom that descendeth not from above is earthly, sensual and devilish. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and hypocrisy." So, with the poet we sing:

"Within the holiest of all,
Cleansed by his precious blood,
Before the Throne we prostrate fall,
And worship Thee, O God!"

We worship, glorify, adore, magnify, praise, extol and laud his incomparable and holy name. Just now, the Spirit presents to my mind that beautiful scripture, "Who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the majesty on high." What was the joy that was set before him, that inspired his soul to despise the ignominious, shameful death of the cruel cross—"pouring out his soul unto death." It was the hope, the expectation, of winning back again to God, the Father, the affections of a lost race. And he no doubt had in mind the fulfillment of the prophecy, when "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." "Then he would see the travail of his soul, and be abundantly satisfied." In the language of the finite mind, he would be remunerated, he would be, as it were, amply repaid for his unspeakable sufferings, shame and contempt, and, best of all, he would see "the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints" (Eph. 1:18). And, on the Day of Judgment, he, Jesus, would, or will, with joy and admiration, point to his eternal inheritance, and say, "Father, these are they which thou hast given me; I have lost none save the son of perdition, that the scripture might be fulfilled."

Studies in the Types

Study No. 12

By R. I. Humbert

A Contrasting Type

We have studied several types which in one way or another foreshadowed Christ in some phase of his work. We will now consider a man who is a contrasting type of Christ. That is, instead of his life being like our Lord's, it was in contrast.

The Two Adams

When God created a man in his own image he made him head of a creation. The "first man Adam became a living soul" (1 Cor. 15:45 R. V.) That is, he derived life when God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (Gen. 2:7).

Adam was not only the federal head of the human race but he was given "dominion—over every living thing that moveth upon the earth" (Gen. 1:28). When he was placed in this position, he was innocent but later he partook of the forbidden fruit of Eden and by his "disobedience many were made sinners" (Rom. 5:19). This threw things into confusion.

Curse On Creation

Creation and man, who was the head of creation, had been placed on a high level, but after the fall creation was still on this plane but man, its head, had fallen and had become subject to corruption and death.

It would not be best for the head of creation to live on a lower plane than creation itself so God said, "cursed is the ground FOR THY SAKE" (Gen. 3:17) and brought the creation down to Adam's level where corruption and death hold sway.

Adam, being the head of the human race, brought it down to his level for, "by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation" (Rom. 5:18). This placed the whole human race under sin and death.

The Last Adam

To overcome this ruin a new federal head was introduced. "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven." The first Adam derived his life from God while the last Adam was himself the source of life, (1 Cor. 15:47 and 45).

Just as through the first Adam's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of the last Adam shall many be made righteous (Rom. 5:19). That is, when Adam sinned he brought down the whole race that was created in him, and in just the same way the last Adam obeyed and brought the whole race, of which he is head, up to a level where there is no condemnation (Rom. 8:1) and where ALL have passed from death to life (Jno. 5:24).

The Two Births

A man, to enter the first Adam creation must be born into it and to enter the realm of the last Adam he must be born again (Jno. 3:3). In this first birth he is born of the flesh and bears the image of the earthy but when he enters the new life in Christ Jesus he becomes a new creature (2 Cor. 5:17) and will bear the image of the heavenly (1 Cor. 15:4a) at the redemption of his body (Rom. 8:23).

Just like all that are in the first Adam realm die, so those that are "in Christ" shall be made alive (1 Cor. 15:22).

A man enters the first Adam's line absolutely without choice. He was born without any wish of his own. But to enter the line of the last Adam he must make a definite act of the will and "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 16:31).

The Curse Removed

In the first Adam the creation was brought down to the bondage of corruption and death and is as Paul says, the "whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now" (Rom. 8:22). The truth of this statement is everywhere evident. The lion kills the deer; the wolf eats the lamb; the wind whistles a mournful tune; the lowing of the cattle is in a minor key, while the little bird is in constant peril of the cat.

But it will not always be thus, for when the last Adam takes the reins of government the curse, which was placed on creation because of the first Adam, will be removed and "the creation itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21). At that time even the "lion shall eat straw like the ox" (Isa. 11:7).

Let us remember that a man must be born again through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ in order to be a partaker of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1:4) and enter the new creation in Christ Jesus.

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

VII. The scarlet thread of prophecy

In all the official cordage of the British empire there runs a scarlet thread. A rope may be cut into inch pieces, but each piece will contain a bit of the scarlet thread. In like manner the prophetic word of God contains a scarlet thread. It is the blood of Christ that runs through symbols, types and prophecies from Genesis to Revelation. It represents the deep underlying purpose of God to save mankind from the misuse of the great gift of free will.

The end of creation is not to produce machines which obey by force, but to produce sons of God who obey because of love (Rom. 8:18-21). Love is not the product of forces; it is the offspring of love. "We love because he first loved us." God foreknew the fall as a consequence of freewill, but he also foreknew redemption as the consequence of divine love. The cross is the symbol of that love, and the scarlet thread that emanates from it is the lifeline that divine love extends to fallen man.

Therefore, we have at the beginning of sin the beginning of sacrifice as the antidote for sin. Sacrifice represents love, and love doth not commit sin. Abel's sacrifice was accepted because he showed faith in the promise of forgiveness through atoning blood. After the flood when Noah and his family left the ark the first thing that he did was to offer sacrifices with the clean beasts that were preserved (Gen. 8:20). When Abraham came to Hebron to dwell, the first thing was to build an altar. Israel in the wilderness was given the type of the brazen serpent lifted up for salvation, as Christ was to be lifted up to draw all men to himself. The law preserved the scarlet thread in the passover, the altar and the many sacrifices that pointed to Christ. When the Savior appeared he was announced as "the lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."

So continuous was this scarlet line that Jesus when expounding the Scriptures to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus could begin "at Moses and all the prophets" to prove that it behooved the Christ to suffer. The twenty-second Psalm has at least a dozen predictions that were fulfilled in the crucifixion of Jesus. Isaiah 53 has many more. There are said to be over three hundred prophecies concerning Christ in the Old Testament alone.

Jesus himself repeatedly foretold his death. He explained its meaning and, in the bread and cup, left a memorial of it to be perpetuated until the end of the age. "As oft as ye do eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show forth the Lord's death until he come." Thus the doctrine of the blood continues until the coming of the Lord. It unites the whole body of prophecy around the central truth of the atonement, which has been the citadel of attack for the enemies of the faith in all ages.

And when he comes in his glory and the marriage supper of the King's Son is announced, behold he is the same "lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Thus the scarlet thread runs from the fall to the restoration, from Eden to Paradise. It signifies atonement, that is, at-one-ment,—the reconciliation of the world.

Of the condition of the inhabitants of other worlds we do not know, nor do we need to know, but this much seems certain, that as far as sin extends that far reaches the lifeline of the atoning blood, for we read of "reconciling all things through the blood of his cross, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven (Col. 1:20).

That one great sacrifice is infinite and sufficient for all repentant sinners. It represents the eternal cross in the heart of God. We cannot get beyond the circle of his love. As science reveals to us the infinite extension of natural law, so prophecy reveals to us the infinite extension of divine love. Only they are lost who willfully choose to trample upon that love and reject the scarlet lifeline extended to them.

If there is anything that is appalling it is the wealth of the promises of God and the poverty of our faith in these promises; and the majority of them are addressed to the believing soul.—A. T. Pierson.

OUTSTANDING TEXTS OF THE BIBLE

By Dr. G. W. Rench

"Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit"—John 15:2; which is to say, what we cultivate grows. Moffatt's translation of this passage will provoke a smile. "He cuts away any branch on me which is not bearing fruit, and cleans every branch which does bear fruit, to make it bear richer fruit." Since Henry Drummond gave us that great little book on Natural Law in the Spiritual World, not only cultivation but PROPER cultivation has held more interest in the things of God. And in this field he not only discusses cultivation, but our Father has MUCH TO SAY about it. What a large place is given to this thought in his Wonderful Book.

In the development of the body, how much attention is given the subject, and rightly, too. Concerning the blacksmith's arm, Longfellow has this to say:

"The smith, a mighty man is he,
With large and sinewy hands;
And the muscles of his brawny arms
Are strong as iron bands."

The sailor's keen eye; the pianist's fingers and wrist; the American Indian's acute hearing; the exquisite touch of the blind. These all come by constant practice.

How do we get possession of SPIRITUAL POWER? Why, by the CONSTANT USING of our spiritual faculties. That's the only way. An evangelistic meeting was in progress, and a bright, little girl of ten summers asked her mother whether she could not go forward and make the confession. Although in a religious home all these years, and for more than five of these years in the church school, her mother said, "Bee, you are too young." The next evening when getting ready for church, she asked again, if she might not go forward. Her mother said, "Bee, you must wait until the meeting of next year." Her little heart was heavy as she turned to go away from her mother, and she was heard to say, "All right; but Jesus would not turn we away." (And that was what her Bible school teacher had been teaching her for five years). Her mother's consent was obtained as they were entering the church that evening, and during the singing of the invitation hymn, Bee marched to the front to confess her Savior. Being small, the evangelist had her stand on the platform while she confessed her Lord "before men." There were many more moistened eyes, as the minister, while yet holding her little hand, repeated this little poem:

"Faces earnest and thoughtful,
Innocent, grave and sweet,
They look in the congregation
Like lilies among the wheat.
And I'm sure the blessed Master
Whose mercies are ever new,
Has a special benediction
For dear little heads in the pew.

When they hear "The Lord is my shepherd,"
Or "Suffer the lambs to come,"
They know that a loving Savior
Have given them a home—
A place for his own for his people,
He cares for me and for you;
But close in his arms he gathers
The dear little heads in the pew."

Ten years after the above incident, Bee was found in the same community teaching in the public schools, and on Sunday, teaching in the Bible school. All these years she had been cultivating the spiritual. The men who at that meeting refused to begin exercising the spiritual faculties, saw such desires growing fainter and fainter. And church members who fail to use the spiritual means God has bestowed upon them, find themselves growing poorer and poorer. And, oh, the danger of such a course! For, a gift unused is a gift withdrawn. What we repress, or neglect, dies. The most deadly opium is, "DO NOTHING FOR GOD."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

YELLOW JOURNALISM

The title has no reference to race color but to a well known type of journalism. With a daring which the yellowest American publication would not risk a Japanese newspaper printed a story purporting to come from an American news agency, reporting Secretary Stimson with having said some very undiplomatic and uncomplimentary things of the Japanese army and Japanese people. It was soon made plain that Secretary Stimson had said nothing of the sort and that no American news agency had reported that he did, but not until the Japanese foreign minister had said some equally uncomplimentary things about the American secretary. It is to be said to the credit of the foreign minister that his apology upon finding the truth of the situation was quite as effective as his former denunciation. The whole thing serves to make plain the final folly of yellow journalism. Japan is not to be held responsible, except for being too ready to believe the worst, but the yellow newspaper rendered the country which it hoped to serve a great disservice. That is what the cynical, sensation-making, suspicion-arousing type of journal is constantly doing. Some day the nation will awake to the damage it is doing.—The Presbyterian Advance.

CALIFORNIA MINISTERS PROTEST AERIAL WARFARE MANEUVERS

Cities of southern California were treated to an exhibition of aerial warfare maneuvers on Sunday, November 22. Planes of the U. S. army air corps reserve, of the U. S. navy and of the California national guard participated. Because the exhibition came during the hours when the churches were assembled for worship, Pasadena ministers, 22 of them, prepared a protest, which was signed also by 50 other Pasadena citizens. This protest was sent by air mail to President Hoover and the secretary of war; it read: "We, the undersigned, ministers of religion and citizens of Pasadena, California, hereby protest against the use of the time of religious services for aerial war demonstrations over the cities of Southern California, as was done today, as constituting a flagrant disregard of the sentiment of many people and disregard of religious observance." One of the ministers reported that the roaring of the planes occurred just at the time he was urging his congregation to sign disarmament petitions—which were to be presented to them at the close of the service.—The Christian Century.

WE'RE NOT SO MUCH

The Wickersham Commission laid its finger on a very sore spot when it touched the methods of the police in handling criminals, especially their use of the "third degree." A writer in the Atlantic Monthly, who assisted the Wickersham Commission in the assembly of its data, reveals what a sorry spectacle the police of most of the cities present. They arrest suspects on shallow evidence then undertake to beat the facts out of them with rubber hose or other forms of physical torture or with some plan of mental torture or deceit. Then having got "confessions," they are unable to use them in the great majority of cases. And most of these criminals becoming more and more hardened by this treatment go scot-free.

The complaint against this treatment is not so much that it is severe on the criminals or suspects, but that it degrades the law and accomplishes practically nothing. It violates the Constitution, and in the end leaves us with little real law enforcement.

The peculiar irony of it all is that never were so many people interested in reading detective stories. Never before were books of detective stories read in such large numbers. Never before were magazines and detective stories in such demand. Thousands upon thousands of people spend time reading the supposedly ingenious solutions of elaborate crimes and the clever defeats of criminal plans. One would think that our police systems would be efficient beyond all description in the matter of ferreting out criminals by the sheer processes of careful observation and clever deduction.

And that, this Commission tells us, is precisely what they are not. Instead of using their brains the police prefer to use their sticks. Instead of using their eyes they use their fists.

What is needed is not less severity toward criminals but more serious work on the problem. To browbeat a man seized upon circumstantial evidence is the easiest way. To throw him into jail for a week is the easiest way.

A nation that feeds on detective stories and can't solve a crime without rubber hose is not very bright, and is hypocritical into the bargain.—The Christian Standard.

GET BACK TO GOD

The other day, a bank president of Ocean City, New Jersey, ended his life by leaping into the sea, a few minutes' walk from his place of business. In the pocket of his coat, which he left on the shore, was this note: "If this old world doesn't get back to God, it is lost. I am so tired of it all. The spirit was there, but the flesh is weak."

The thought expressed, the remedy proposed and the Scriptural quotation all indicate that this man was brought up in the Christian faith, and was no doubt a Christian by profession himself. His belief—the belief that the remedy for the world's ills is to get back to God and maintain fellowship with him—remained sound to the end. But his heart had been made sick by deferred hopes, and his flesh gave out in the test. What he needed at the moment of that supreme test were words of counsel and encouragement. And, had he opened his heart fully to his pastor, or some other close Christian friend, he would in all probability have received the help that would have saved his life. It is on this ground that the Salvation Army has for years made a special effort in behalf of those contemplating suicide, letting it be known that the way is always open at their local headquarters to hear the distress of these troubled hearts. And many have thus been rescued from the fearful step which, for a time, they had allowed to lodge in their minds. —The Church Advocate.

BURMANS EVANGELIZE INDIA

The Burmese Gospel Team, which has been evangelizing in the mission schools of Hindustan, has been bringing a clear and moving message. W. E. S. Holland of St. John's College, Agra, India, says: "Throughout my thirty years in India I have never yet witnessed such a manifest working of the Spirit of God. We have been allowed to witness things for which decades of missionaries in the place have prayed and worked."

The Rev. McChesney Paterson speaks of the student band at Sialkot. "At the end of each address a perfect battery of questions was raised upon the speakers. The remarkable feature in it all this year was that our opponents brought their own Bibles with them, quoting from them and not as formerly from their own sacred books."

Seventeen Gospel teams carried on evangelistic campaigns in fifty-three villages of Burma during the last Christmas season. There were 436 public confessions of faith in Jesus Christ. The teams were made up of six teachers in high school, twenty-six students from school and college, Bible school girls, and various young business men and clerks.—S. S. Times.

WHEN THE ENGLISH WERE HEATHEN

Missions aren't so modern! Back in A.D. 598 Gregory made an appeal to Christian Africa on behalf of pagan England. Nearly 1,350 years ago he wrote to Eusebius of Alexandria, in northern Africa: "The English race, situated in the far corner of the earth, has hitherto been in unbelief, worshipping stocks and stones. But, aided by your prayers, I sent a monk. Now, letters have arrived telling me of his work. They show that he, and those sent out with him, shine amongst that nation with such miracles that they seem to imitate the mighty works of the apostles. At Christmas, more than 10,000 English people were baptized. I tell you this that you may know what your prayers are doing at the world's end."—The Congregationalist.

HAWAIIAN BUDDHISM FOLLOWS CHRISTIAN PATTERNS

T. Markham Talmage, correspondent to The Christian Century from Hawaii, writes:

The Buddhists claim to have the largest group in our religious life. Unfortunately, they are not much more loyal to their faith than many who count themselves as Christians. A recent gathering of the Young Men's Buddhist association with two hundred delegates from all the islands brought out their problems as quite like those of Christian young people. The Buddhist procedure here is unlike that of the same religion in the orient. I have before me a note which mentions "The Gospel of Buddha." They sing hymns (many adapted without credit from the Christian hymnals), preach sermons, have "thought waves," Sunday schools and Young Men's Buddhist associations with the usual Y. M. C. A. program—plus a little more religion.

DOES THE WORLD WANT PEACE?

With the world-wide Geneva Disarmament Conference only two months in the future, the outlook in international affairs is hardly such as to warrant an optimistic prophecy of the probable accomplishments of that gathering. Japan is still at China's throat, and the result of the exaggeration by the Japanese press of Mr. Stimson's words last fortnight show how easily the red-hot embers of suspicion and distrust in the Far East can be fanned into open flame. In Paris the amazing spectacle of the riotous disruption by militant nationalists, with the tacit support of the press and police, of a world-wide peace and disarmament meeting under the auspices of the International Union of League of Nations Association seems to indicate that France is not likely to cooperate in any scheme for limitation of armaments that does not guarantee her special privileges. Elsewhere throughout the world, in Europe, Asia, South and Central America, political and military pots are simmering and sometimes boiling over. All in all, it looks very much as if the world is reacting from the desire for peace that characterized the war-weary nations of a dozen years ago, and is rapidly approaching a situation of tenseness and mutual distrust strikingly similar to that prevailing in 1914. But there is yet time to avert a crisis that may precipitate the world into another suicidal conflict, if statesmen and diplomats of every country will unite to find a way, and if the citizens of their respective countries will back them up —by their words, by their votes, and, perhaps most important of all, by their prayers.—The Living Church.

we have not, but there is more than one token that makes us wary and scrupulous. It is far more serious than some of our people who are not supporting us believe. We need that support that we had hoped loyalty would bring to us. It is that support that would keep away the clouds and bring the sunshine. It compares to that extra, that Christ brings to a good life. "More abundantly," he said.

It is that "plus" that we crave. Almost all the gain we hope to make will be clear "velvet" as they say in business. Loyalty means "velvet" to your Publication Plant. It means "velvet" on the pages of your publications. Would you not like to see the "velvet" of nicer covers and better insides? Well, orders and subscriptions will do it AND NOTHING ELSE WILL. They can not be sucked out of the air nor conjured up by hocus pocus. If there were ten times as many members of the Brethren Church as we have; or if our doctrines were not so distinctive; or if the promotion until now had not been made at such great sacrifice, we might be un-mindful about this plea. But this is no "hot air" affair. It is as serious as we have power to make it and we hope that our brethren will receive it that way.

This Makes Us Merry

From a pastor in the Midwest comes this cheering message:

"Dear Brother Bame:

"Please accept our congratulations on the change to the King James Text in our Quarterlies. Mrs. — joins me in expressing our appreciation of the true 'Brethren Ring' in our Church School Publications." From another, a member of another denomination "Your Quarterlies are better than our own. Many thanks for them, we shall try to get much good from them."

Still another says: "I want to compliment you upon the splendid improvement which you are bringing about in the Brethren Sunday School Publications. May the Lord bless you and may his spirit fill you to accomplish greater things in the way of vital literature for our church."

Once More

The most substantial of all these Christmas cheers was an order from one of our Sunday schools for 455 pieces of literature. Most all of that is "velvet." But many other schools could do better and some members could subscribe for the Evangelist at these fine rates if they would. Remember, ONLY ORDERS WILL DO IT.

Teachers of Children

By Maud Newcomer

The Importance of Religious Teaching

We often hear it said "the children of today shall control the nation of tomorrow." If this be true, and it certainly is, they should be taught that a noble, Christian manhood or womanhood is a prize of great value, and every effort ought to be put forth to inspire them to develop it. In order to do this it is necessary to secure the very best teachers for the children and to provide for them whatever will assist in their moral and Christian development. "Nothing is too good for the child; no language too well chosen, no picture too perfect, no music too well rendered, provided they be simple." The impressions that are stamped upon the minds of the children are the influences that determine the characters of the people.

The Children

If we are going to give children their rightful place and their just dues, we must know them. They are not little animals to be tamed, neither are they little men and women to be judged from our grown up standpoint. They are simply children, with their own ways of seeing, thinking and feeling, whose destiny is placed very largely in the hands of their parents, teachers, or whoever else touches some vital point in their lives and influences them for good or bad.

Must Be Studied

Though all children possess the same general characteristics, no two children are identical. They differ in tastes and disposition, as do grown people, except that the difference is even greater for their young lives are yet in embryo and must undergo the peculiar process of development. Some unfold more rapidly than others; some are more capable and have greater possibilities than others, while all come from different homes and are reared under differing conditions. It is hard to estimate the influence a child's surroundings may have upon its life. The moral atmosphere which it breathes is sure to become a part of it. Thus, when we consider that the Sunday school teacher has the child under her care only one hour of the week, we realize that it is necessary for her to know it, if she would do good training.

The Absorptive Period

All children have characteristics peculiar to themselves because of the time in life through which they are passing. It is the absorptive period, the time when it is almost impossible to satisfy their hunger for food, both physical and mental. For, as the possibilities of the soul begin to awaken, they require food and exercise, just as the body requires nourishment and exercise to develop in size and strength.

Are Active and Curious

When the child enters the Sunday school it is an active little creature, but there seems to be no purpose whatever in its movements. It wiggles and jostles about just to be moving. As it grows older, it ceases to act aimlessly, but in its activity it endeavors to accomplish something. It is a curious little being, too, wanting to see into and know everything. A teacher walking down the street, with a small sack of apples in her hand, met one of her five-year-old pupils on his tricycle. As she passed him, he said, "What you got in that sack?" Not wishing to tell him, she walked on, paying no attention to the question. But the little fellow was persistent. He quickly turned and rode up beside her, saying, "Say, can't I see in there?"

Are Imitators

These little ones are great imitators. The mothers who send their children to our Sunday school tell us that the superintendent and teachers are frequently impersonated in their homes. Certainly, teachers have need to be careful of their conduct, for they never know the impressions they are leaving on the plastic young minds.

Have Great Imagination

All children have a more or less well developed imagination and in their imitations at play do wonderful things sometimes. The fancy of some almost runs away with them, and they "spin yarns" in their childish way which often greatly mortify their parents and cause them concern, too. Many a child has been wrongfully accused and even punished for telling stories (falsehoods) when it was innocent of doing any wrong. Knowing this, the teacher should be on her guard to properly direct the fancy whenever she has an opportunity to do so.

Are Trustful

I once heard a public school teacher say that she would rather teach the primary grade than any other in the school, because there the children trust the teacher, implicitly. This means a great responsibility and a valuable opportunity in the way of religious instruction. The biblical stories and truths are accepted as they are presented, no explanation being necessary. The child does not reason anything concerning the power of God, but out of the supreme confidence in the one who teaches him there grows a loving faith in the one who first loved him. If a child passes through the primary department without a strong faith in his Lord, the teacher has made a mistake in her teaching and perhaps has not kept in close touch with her God.

Crave Attention

The child is a selfish little being. His thoughts and feelings revolve around his own personality, and his own interest is what he is looking out for. In the Sunday school he insists on attention and is best satisfied when he feels he is receiving just a little more than anyone else. He also craves to be loved. No doubt many a teacher has looked into the faces of some of her pupils and seen there an expression of longing which she could not resist. When she spoke kindly to the little folks, they sidled up to her, trying to get close. If then she smiled at them and put her arms tenderly about them, their little faces fairly beamed with joy and appreciation. Thus we have noted some of the characteristics of the child. Now if the teacher has done her best with the material upon which she had to work, down deep in the souls of her children ideals will be fashioned which will bring forth valuable fruit in days to come.

The Teacher

While the teacher's method ought to be the best, her material the most carefully selected, and she should understand child nature, yet it is the teacher herself that matters most. The vital element in teaching is the teacher. It was Carlyle who said, "Be what you expect your scholars to become." The crying need in nearly all of our Sunday schools is for master teachers. While influences go out from everything, a human life radiates a stronger influence than anything else can. "It has a twofold effect upon the child; he not only feels the influence, but it also moves him to imitate the person." He may go home from Sunday school, not remembering a thing about the lesson, but have so absorbed the teacher as to imitate her in every way. If his model be a Christlike person, gentle and loving in manner, the very act of imitating her makes him better. We teach more by what we are than by what we know. It is unfortunate for children to be placed in the care of teachers who do not live consistent, Christian lives.

Her Consideration and Sincerity

The teacher should be considerate toward her pupils. No amount of fine teaching can compensate for lack of kindly concern for their welfare. She should also be sincere. Children are quick to discern deceptions. There is no such thing as feigning an interest in them when it is not felt. They like to be praised and made over, but flattery becomes obnoxious to them and they resent it.

An Enthusiast

The teacher should be an enthusiast. A certain great man, who did much effectual work among boys, said that if he had his life to live over again the only thing he would do differently would be to put more enthusiasm into it. Enthusiasm does not mean bluster and loud speaking, but it does mean that one should be confident of the worth of the message and be anxious to impress its worth upon others. Since children, especially, absorb the personality of their teachers, they, of all others, should be sincere and earnest in the presentation of Biblical truths.

Her Tact

The teacher must have tact and be quick to discern the favorable moment to say great truths. She must consider her language carefully, too, and be sure that the child understands what she is talking about. Her Love for Children and the Master

After all, perhaps, the basis of great teaching power lies in the sincere love of children and of the Master. Christ the Master Teacher, received the little children into his arms and blessed them. And when the disciples would have turned them away, considering them a nuisance, Jesus said, "Suffer the little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Let us remember, too, that Jesus, great as he was, never undertook any great work without solitary communion with the Father. If the holy Jesus, the Model Teacher, needed a still hour in which he could learn from his Father the right way to train men, can any Sunday school teacher rightly care for her class without secret communion with her Lord?

Daily Readings and Comments
MONDAY

The Baptist's Estimate of Jesus. John 1:19-28

John's mission in the world was of no small importance. He was to go before, and prepare the way for the earthly ministry of Jesus, teaching the need for repentance, striving to make men ready for the coming of the Messiah, their Savior; yet he unhesitatingly declared that he was unworthy to perform even the humblest service for the Coming One. Perhaps it was his sense of his own unworthiness and the unique worthiness of Christ that made John's ministry so effective and forceful. May the disciples of today have their thoughts again turned to the Lamb who alone is worthy.

TUESDAY

The Baptist's Introduction of Jesus. John 1:29-34

John's one and only purpose was to make new disciples for Christ, to induce men to accept him as their Savior and long-promised Messiah, and with this purpose in mind, at every opportunity he pointed to Jesus as the Lamb of God, slain from the foundation of the world to take away the sins of men. We might well learn a lesson from John in our work for Jesus today: the gospel of Christ cannot be divorced from its social applications, but our primary object must ever be to point to Jesus as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. May our ministry be as fruitful as John's!

WEDNESDAY

The First Disciple. John 1:35-49

"That in all things he might have the pre-eminence," might well be cited as John's guiding motive. At every opportunity he was glad to bear witness of Jesus. It is interesting to note the different ways in which these first disciples were called from their various walks in life: the first two were sent by John; one of these then went and called by his own brother to Jesus; then Jesus called Philip, who in turn called Nathanael. He still calls men in much the same way, and if new disciples are to be won, it must be through those who are already following Jesus.

THURSDAY

The Disciples at Work. Matt. 10:15-15

The Twelve, Jesus commissioned as full time workers, to give their entire time to the preaching of the gospel, giving up all other earthly cares for this work. In return, they were to be supported by those among whom they worked. Not all of us have been commissioned to give our entire time to his work today, but we can assist those who have been so commissioned, with our substance and prayers. As fully as we have been taught our duty and privilege in this regard, if we fail therein we shall be more without excuse than was the land of Sodom. Let us never neglect to pray for all Christian workers at home and abroad—and especially those of our own church.

FRIDAY

The Test of Discipleship. Matt. 10:32-39

Being a Christian is not an easy thing, in spite of much teaching that this is true. Even a mere confession is not always an easy thing; and then comes the daily taking up of the cross—acknowledging each day by our every action that our physical life is of much less importance than following Jesus. Often it is not hard to endure persecution from "outsiders," but when a man's foes are those of his own household it is much more difficult. What pathos in the words, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not!" If at any time it seems hard, let us remember that to spare ourselves is to lose all.

SATURDAY

The Disciples Commissioned. Matt. 28:16-20

The disciples had a place where Jesus had promised to meet them, and there he commissioned them for service. He has a place where he has promised to meet us each day—our "closet," or treasure house—and if we were more faithful in meeting him at the appointed place, perhaps our commission would be made more real to us. Note that the commission is prefixed with this statement: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." That is not merely a statement of his right to command, but a reminder that his power shall go with us as we strive to carry out his Great Commission.

SUNDAY

Jesus, our Sin-Bearer. Isa. 53:1-12

John had pointed out Jesus as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. With prophetic foresight, many centuries before, Isaiah had also visioned the Messiah suffering as a Lamb led to the slaughter for our iniquities. That we might have peace with God, and not be wounded for our transgressions, Jesus suffered for us on the cross. Because he first loved us, we love him, and desire to be his true disciples. Let us learn of him.

Crusade with Christ in Christian Conduct and Devotions

By Clifford Earle

(Published in Two Parts. Part II.)

Questions for Discussion

What is prayer? In how many ways can one pray? When is one "constantly in prayer"? What were the teachings and practices of Christ about prayer? What are the characteristics of the various kinds of prayer (confession, consultation, petition, intercession, gratulation, adoration, dedication, etc.)? What are the differences between Old Testament and New Testament prayers?

What is worship? To what does worship appeal, the intellect, the emotions, or the will? What is the ultimate aim of true worship? Can worship have reality? How can worship be related to discussion?

Why is Christ regarded as the perfect man, aside from his divinity? Are his teachings just as applicable today as they were two thousand years ago? Which of his teachings have to do with social religion? Which of his teachings are individualistic? Is it necessary to live a Christian life in order to be "saved"? Is it enough to live a Christian life?

Practical Project Suggestions

1. Improve the worship in the society meetings. Have the prayer meeting committee prepare a report on the society's worship, reporting upon the length of worship, preparation, relation of the themes to discussion topics, variety of elements used, the unity and continuity of the worship services, the quality of the songs and music, etc. Have the society discuss the report thoroughly and decide upon needed changes and improvements. Have a series of short talks on worship in regular meetings. Prepare a short typewritten manual on worship to be used by society leaders. Secure and circulate among members good books on worship.

2. Improve the discussion in the society meetings. Have a group of members prepare a report based on studious observation. Let the report consider the kinds of topics that excite discussion easily, the kinds of discussion that really "arrive," the number of members who take part, ways of participation practised by the members, ways of getting variety and interest, etc. Arrange to meet with each leader two weeks before the meeting to assist him in planning the meeting. Prepare a typewritten manual of instructions and suggestions for leaders. Secure and circulate among leaders good books on prayer meeting methods, discussion leading, etc.

3. Arrange for a question-box, with special meetings each month when the pastor can help solve problems in Christian conduct that the members indicate by their questions. Stimulate the reading of good devotional books by members; have a library of such books. Arrange for frequent personal conferences between the pastor and individual members. Stimulate practice of private devotions among members. Prepare outlines for Bible-reading and suggestions for pri-

A Few Items of News

R. F. D. No. 2, Sunnyside, Washington,
 December 23, 1931.

My dear Evangelist Readers,

Just a few items of news from the field, concerning Brother Kennedy's last days:

October 19—"Most important of all to you will be Brother Kennedy's condition. He is very thin, coughs when he lies down, therefore must sit on the edge of the bed leaning forward on the back of a chair. Last night he made two or three attempts to lie down but was defeated each time. He is completely tired out. He sleeps at intervals of one or 2 minutes at a time, after which his relaxing awakens him. His last puncture was very hard on him on account of not being able to turn on his left side. Thus I doubt if he will have another."

Another: "Poor Brother Kennedy is in a terrible condition. He coughs and coughs and has come to the place where he has to sit up practically all the time, and of course he is so weak he is not able to sit up. He has no flesh left."

"He says if the Lord is not going to heal him, he hopes he takes him soon. Each day must seem like ages to him in his great agony."

Another: "We would so like to see the Lord heal and spare him to the work, but his ways are not always our ways. Mrs. Kennedy is in bed with fever now, October 17. This certainly is hard for she would like to be with him and he wants her, but they must just be patient and wait. (Mrs. Kennedy was better the 18th.)"

"If one member suffer, all members suffer with it."

Miss Patterson writes from Bellevue:

"About the abridgment of 'Undaunted Hope,' I surely wish I had been there to help you. ... It seems too bad to take anything out but I know it must be! The book has been such a blessing to me as I retype it (for French publication) I wish I had read the manuscripts through when I first came to the field. I think I would have been a better missionary for the lessons it teaches are so helpful in our work."

"Since reading 'Undaunted Hope' I can see more plainly what ... separation must mean. ... God has certainly made the book a blessing to me."

"Little David Sheldon is a sweet baby, a darling, and so good. You wouldn't know there is a baby in the house if you didn't see him. He has blue eyes and is very pretty."

"Kenneth is growing so rapidly."

And so in sorrow, in perplexity, and in joy, the Mission Oubangui Chari moves on.

The "Brethren Missionary" has come to hand today saying there are only 386 subscriptions for "Undaunted Hope" to date. We know this is due to no lack of interest but to a pervading optimism that one's own individual subscription will not be needed!

That same all-pervading optimism has led to surprise when friends have learned how few letters reach our foreign missionaries! "I didn't suppose you would have time to read a letter from me!" naively remarks some humble friend who would gladly have written to the missionaries had she considered herself eligible!

"I didn't know a person could write directly to the missionaries," said another!

Missionaries are just humble servants of God, set in a land remote from that of their birth. A missionary biography, like "Undaunted Hope" is just a simple tale of a humble life—a life devoted to God and his glory. It awaits publication—has waited more than two years because hungry hearts who want to read it have not realized that they each have a humble share in the responsibility of broadcasting it.

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

Argentina

During the past month I have not traveled much among the churches because I have had a great deal of writing to do. However, I have preached in Tancacha and Alejandro and helped in Rio Cuarto. Here we are preparing for a campaign next week with the help of Don Juan Varetto, one of the leading evangelists of the country.

In Alejandro some of the members have moved away but the attendance was good and we hope to have a vacation Bible school there soon. After the campaign here we will follow with the Bible school. There are already a number of candidates for baptism.

We had a bit of excitement here on Saturday evening. Just as we were eating supper we heard five shots in front and then a woman screaming. On going out we found that a doctor had called to talk with the girl next door to us, and as he was chatting on the threshold, as is the custom here, another man came up and shot him twice and then, after he fell, twice more. Brother Romanenghi was the first to arrive on the scene and entered and helped to calm the family. The doctor died instantly and the murderer gave himself up to the police. He thinks he did his duty because he says the doctor betrayed his sister and broke his promise to marry her. Such conduct is very common down here and as a rule the authorities do nothing for the defense of the girl. They call it merely a love affair.

The elections have been over for several weeks but as yet we do not know the final returns. The delay in reporting serves to allay excitement somewhat, but it also seems to afford more opportunity for frauds.

This is Thanksgiving time but the day is not celebrated in this country. We wish all the church in the homeland a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

C. F. YODER.

A CHIEF WHO KNEW LIVINGSTONE

By Jane Mateer Beeman

In the time of David Livingstone, the place which is now a prosperous Malamulo Mission was part of a great tract of land owned and ruled by Maguira, a native chief who lived on the banks of the river Shire, in British Central Africa. Maguira is now dead, but one of his under chiefs, Kasonga, recently lived in his village on the mission estate. He is one of the very few old men who have responded to the call of the white man's religion and been received into the full fellowship of the church.

Standing with Kasonga in front of the church building, on the very spot where Dr. Livingstone, on his first trip into the country, camped and held a council with the chiefs of the district, an American missionary recently listened with deepest interest to the story of the coming of the first white man into the land.

The arrival of Dr. Livingstone, bringing with him the mtengo wabwino (good message), and demonstrating in his life the love of God, gave to the natives a view of a character totally new to them, making it necessary for them to adopt a new word to describe this wonderful white man.

He seemed so like a god to them that they gave him the name of Msungu, similar to Mulunga, their name for God. Although that pioneer of African missionaries has been followed by white men whose characters have fallen far short of his, yet the same name still holds good for every white man who enters the country.

Livingstone passed down the hill from his camp, crossed a little river, and continued his journey to the place now called Blantyre. His heart would have been made glad could he have foreseen the future of that little stream. Because of the many baptisms that have been performed in its waters, it has been named by the Christian natives "the Jordan."

The Malamulo estate, high up in the Shire hills, is bountifully watered and wooded. It was purchased from the native chief by a German planter, for a few yards of red cloth. This planter built the strong fire-brick house now occupied by the mission superintendent.

Later this estate was bought from the planter, and became the center of a most thriving mission. Not only is a training school maintained here, but many out schools are carried on in surrounding native villages.

One hundred miles to the north, a large out school forms the center of another circle of schools, so that many thousand natives in this region where Livingstone pioneered now enjoy the light of the blessed Gospel, which is slowly but surely dispelling the heathen darkness of Central Africa.—Forward.

BRITISH GOVERNOR DEMANDS CHRISTIAN CHIEFS

For the Governor of a British possession to say that two of the best chiefs he knew were Christians is a worthy tribute. This was said by Sir Donald Cameron, the new governor of Nigeria and until recently governor of Tanganyika, when he was giving evidence before the Joint Select Committee of the two houses of Parliament on East Africa questions.

Sir Donald described the type of man required to fulfill the duties of chieftainship, pointing out that education was necessary, and also men who would be good Africans, realizing the needs for development of their country. He finished his evidence with the telling words: "I hold the view that this depends upon a man becoming a Christian." —From Record of Christian Work.

BERNE, INDIANA

We feel that the readers of the Brethren Evangelist would like to hear how the work is progressing at Berne, for it has been some time since we have reported through this paper. We had a gospel team from Ashland College with us over the Thanksgiving vacation. These four fine Christian men each had a message from God's holy and inspired word. Their presence and fellowship was spiritually uplifting. May their service for the Lord not be curbed but may they continue to find opportunity to testify for Christ. If any one is to be well trained for Christian service they need practical work. Moody Bible Institute realizes the need of practical work when they require it of their residential students. We feel that many of the churches could help provide this training by inviting students to their churches. I heard our pastor, Rev. Parr, say, "We have had many gospel teams from Ashland but have never had one who tried to teach modernism or anything aside from the Gospel, which speaks well of their college or home training."

The various departments of our church are working in harmony to the glory of God. We are making preparations for a Christmas program to be given Christmas eve. The young people are to be the church of tomorrow so we should give them a part in the service whenever possible.

We are looking forward to our revival meetings which will be held in February by Rev. Willis Ronk.

Yours in Christ,
CLARK SIPE.

REVIVAL AT THIRD CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

November 2-15, 1931

This report seems somewhat belated and we thought after Brother George Jones, the pastor, made that splendid report concerning the meeting, which it was our privilege to conduct, we needed not to make any additional comments.

The two short weeks we spent in Christian fellowship with these folks was most encouraging. There is every evidence that with full time leadership a good work can be established there. Under the able leadership of the pastor who is serving but part time the Sunday school and church attendance are steadily growing.

That part of Johnstown in which the church is located is pretty well churchied but with a proclamation of a Whole Gospel we feel sure that it has a bright future. An evidence of this was seen during the meeting when folks of other denominations attended regularly and gave expression to the soundness of our doctrines.

It is not often that an evangelist can conduct a meeting outside of his own local church and yet spend the nights and mornings with his family. Our churches being separated by only twenty minutes' driving time made this possible.

The pastor and evangelist found a hearty welcome into the homes visited and in many cases found the "bread-winner" out of work or barely keeping things going. This is a day which taxes our faith and to those who place their all in the Lord's care, he is graciously supplying all the needs. The only solution to this world-wide condition when men forget God and trample his Son's blood beneath their feet is his sure return. Even so come, Lord Jesus!

Brother Jones reported the number of confessions during the meetings and now we rejoice to report that many more have since come into the fellowship of this church by letter and confession.

W. H. SCHAFFER, Evangelist.

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Closed our meeting at Ardmore, December 20th with 29 confessions and a house full of people. Will send a fuller report later.

Will begin a two weeks' meeting in Goshen with Brother Stuckman, January 3 and close January 17. We ask the prayers of the brotherhood for success in this effort, and want to invite delegations from nearby churches. In our last effort Brothers Port, Clark, Whitmer, Owen, both Dukers and ministers from M. E. and E. V. churches came in so we had from three to six ministers every night. Hope they may do as well at Goshen.

Sincerely,
A. T. WIRICK.

SEMINARY NOTES

Brother McClain's article, entitled "Current Tendencies Which Limit Faith and Life," which was published in the January, of this year, number of the Biblical Review recently appeared, by permission, in "The United Church Review," the official organ of the United Church of Northern India. Also his article on the Kenosis, published in the Biblical Review in 1923 will soon appear in a Porto Rico publication.

In our last report we neglected to say that Mrs. Stuckey accompanied her husband to the Waterloo Sunday school and Missionary Conference, and conducted a class in Practical Church Music.

Sunday evening, December 13th, the girls sent a Gospel Team to the Sullivan Christian church. The team was composed of Bernice Berkheiser, Cecile Robertson, Anna Bird, Dorothy Whitted and Ruth Snyder.

December 14th the Girls' and Boys' Gospel Teams held a union meeting, with about sixty present. Brother Joseph Foster, our African missionary, showed his curios and gave an interesting stereopticon lecture on the African work.

We are sorry that in our last report of gifts to the Seminary House there were several omissions. We are glad to make mention of them in this column.

Dr. Bell gave a number of books to the Seminary library and a dresser and davenport to our Seminary House.

Brother and Sister C. A. Bame provided a hall tree for the Seminary House, and Sister Slotter supplied a bedroom suite.

Dr. and Mrs. L. L. Garber also contributed some rugs and chairs.

The matron has received a quilt from

Mrs. J. M. Barringer of Fremont, Ohio, and two quilts from the Los Angeles Second church W. M. S.

We appreciate these gifts and are glad to say, thank you.

K. M. MONROE.

McKEE, PENNSYLVANIA

November fifteenth we began a two weeks' meeting with my Bible Chart lectures, at McKee, Pennsylvania but attendance and interest were such that we continued for three full weeks. On December thirteenth we held our communion service and almost every place at the tables was filled.

Many churches suffer from the "Young people's problem" and cannot understand why they do not take more interest. But to me there are several reasons, most of them lay with the parents. When parents are asked as to the absence of their children, they fulfill Christ's parable and with one accord they begin to make excuse, "Our children go to school and therefore they cannot come." And how the Devil does play on that feeble attempt on the part of the parent, to excuse their own lack of interest in the child's welfare.

If parents do not teach their children to put first things first, they need not be surprised if no one else will teach them. Certainly if it comes to a show down between the church and the school, a parent who is truly concerned will have no doubt what to do—let them stay home from school.

What difference will it make to that child in one thousand years, which battle was fought first or what a verb is for? But it most certainly will be for its eternal welfare to have God's Truth in its little heart.

In our meeting at McKee we did not lack for youthful interest and two or three rows of children would gather in front to sing the little choruses. That there was a response in their hearts was manifested in more than one way. One little fellow got a nickle and in response to my plea to pass out tracts, he bought tracts and planned to scatter them all over the community.

Special music was rendered by the choir and individuals of the church and also from friends who came in from night to night.

We were also glad for the presence of Sister Dess DeLozier, who was restored to us after a remarkable cure of cancer. Seldom is there a person in a congregation that can teach the Bible as she can, and knowing her worth it was indeed a great disappointment to me when I met her at National Conference and learned that she had that incurable disease and was on her way to Iowa to a specialist. A few days after our arrival here in Pennsylvania, we were again made sad by her return home. She then went to Missouri but was sent home an incurable.

She had been anointed but it seemed that the Lord was not pleased to heal her without means, but like Peter of old, "Prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God" for her and she went to a physician in New Jersey. We thank God that the cancers, both large and small, have disappeared.

On two Sunday afternoons we had baptismal services. In all there were twenty-one baptisms and reconsecrations, fourteen of which were baptisms. We were very glad for the presence of Brother E. S. Flora and family, who drove over one Sunday afternoon.

The Lord has also given me opportunity to give my Bible Chart Lectures at New Enterprise; the Altoona Rescue Mission and Gospel Hall at Newery, Pennsylvania.

Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

R. I. HUMBERD.

SMITHVILLE-STERLING

"Oasis of America"

There are plenty of oases in this land of plenty but newcomers to this section are reminded at once that Wayne County, Ohio is the third richest county, agriculturally, in the United States of America. The second is Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, while the third is Los Angeles County, California. And this township, Greene, is "the richest township, agriculturally, in the richest county in Ohio." Large sign boards along the highways remind all travelers of these facts. Truly the Lord hath done great things for the people of America and especially for the good folks permitted to dwell in the midst of this oasis in the heart of the Buckeye state. Happy indeed will this people be if they are equally rich in things spiritual, "for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

After a year's vacation we had a happy and safe landing and are now pleasantly situated as pastor of the Smithville-Sterling church. The reception given us has been all that any minister of the Gospel could possibly expect, all of which is a source of encouragement and a real cause for thanksgiving. An informal reception was held by the church to welcome us. There was a large attendance and an interesting program, several of the nearby ministers being present and bringing messages of greeting. Our empty larder was replenished very generously, to the extent that it required three cars to transport the produce, live and otherwise, from the church to the parsonage. Happy thought! And many thanks! We are now faring supmtuously. The results of this expression of kindness would grace any county fair exhibit. Brother Harvey S. Rutt was the efficient chairman of the evening.

The church owns no parsonage but rents a house owned by Brother Frank Hartzler who has been making a number of improvements in the house, putting it in first class shape for occupancy as a parsonage. Hence we are happily located and will be glad to have our parishioners and many friends pull the latch string.

Attendance at church services and Sunday school at both places has been very good. The total Rally Day attendance at both schools was 222. Christmas programs are being prepared. We are busy with a revision of the church roll and in getting acquainted. The members seem ready and anxious to cooperate with the pastor in the Lord's work. May the windows of heaven be opened wide above this people, for apart from the Lord we can do nothing worthwhile.

The Thanksgiving Home Mission offering has been received and the total is equal to that of last year. A White Gift offering will be received.

The Woman's Missionary Society and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha are both very active and well attended. Mrs. Carpenter was asked to serve as Patroness of the Sisterhood.

Brother Grant McDonald and wife, who preceded us in this pastorate, did a good work here and won a warm place in the hearts of this people. May the Lord continue to bless them abundantly in their new field of service.

We met at Canton recently with the Brethren pastors in this part of the state in their monthly ministerium. They gather for instruction and inspiration, an example that might be followed with profit in other parts of the brotherhood. The next meeting will be at Smithville the second Monday in January.

May the paths of all be radiant during the coming year with peace from above and with joy of service well done.

Smithville, Ohio G. C. CARPENTER.

THE RIVER

The river rose steadily. Hour after hour, day after day it rose, swelling silently in the night. The villagers ran to the dyke several miles away to see what might befall. That great, wide, dyke which had been a bulwark for generations, beyond which had stretched low, fertile rice lands to the river's brim, now held back a brimming flood. The river had covered the low rice lands and was now pushing against the dyke. The villagers climbing to that dyke's edge, stared down into the swirling, yellow, angry water, which was tearing and pulling away clods of the earth even as they stared. At any hour, at any moment, it would break through.

"We must make the dyke higher—we must watch for breaks!"

Thus spoke one of the younger men, the son of the village head. But his father was wiser. He answered sombrely,

"And can we in this sudden hour mend five hundred miles of dyke, and guard every

Beauty

Since time began—or so it seems—

A Will-o'-wisp I chase.

I saw her in the gardens fair,

Where the treetops interlace.

And from each lovely petaled flower

She stares me in the face.

Beyond the fields she beckons me,

Where sunlight tips the hill,

And when I climb the topmost rim

She's beckoning farther still;

She peers from places quite remote

And talks to me at will.

One day from out a lily's cup

She shyly smiled at me,

I took the lily in my hand,

The Will-o'-wisp to see.

My quest seemed o'er and won at last,

I trudged home happily.

Alas! Alack! The little flower

Soon drooped her lovely head,

And by her quivering petal tips

I knew would soon be dead—

And then I saw the Will-o'-wisp

Mysteriously had fled.

The lily cup was empty now—

I held her piteously—

Then raised my misted eyes—and lo!

From yonder maple tree

The Will-o'-wisp was beckoning still Encouragement to me.

—Laura Bedell in The Mail and Empire, Toronto.

break? Ten thousand men cannot prevail against the river when it turns evil!"

The young man would not give up. He argued that if they all—if all the villages—But the older men went back in silence and collected their few belongings, their winter clothing, as much grain as they could carry, their wives and children, their oxen and cattle and a few fowls, and they wended, their way across the fields of unripe grain to the highest, strongest part of the dyke. Well they knew this grain would never be cut by their hands, nor would any harvest be theirs this year.

Upon that narrow edge of high built dyke they pitched rude camp, twisting a few reed mats into shelter, tying their cattle to the sparse trees that grew there. The good river had turned against them.

Nor had they come a day too soon. The river rose yet further, and exerting its strength, tore its way triumphant through a break in the long dyke. From the upper dyke the villagers watched the yellow wall of water break and roar and crash over the land, and swirl even to the very roots of the trees where their beasts were tied. Would it overwhelm them all? But the river could not quite reach them. Its strength was spent, and it lay there like a malicious, wild force, having cornered the villagers in this spot.

What then? Then nothing. There was nothing to do but to look out over the sea and think of the good grain rotting at the bottom; nothing to do but kill the snakes and rats that swarmed up out of the water and fought to share this spot of dry land with the humans; nothing to do but to eat up the grain and the cattle they had saved.

Weeks have passed. Month have passed. The river is still waiting at the foot of the bit of ground where the villagers are encamped. Their grain is gone, their beasts are eaten. There are not even rats and snakes now. The only food the villagers have is the shrimps they catch out of the river. Having no fuel, they eat them raw. Raw shrimps—and the winter draws near in chill nights and in sudden cold winds out of the north. Raw shrimps—is it not better to leap into the water, seeing that death must come and the river will not abate? Raw shrimps again—there are many ill and many who have died, and they can but be thrown into the water. One old woman mutters over and over again,

"That river—it is not satisfied with dead—it wants us living—"

Sometimes one says, begging for hope, "I have heard it said that sometimes in a famine there are those who send food—clothes—at least I have heard it said."

Can this be so? Another is suddenly buoyed by the thought and cries,

"Is it a boat I see there in the distance? Does it come this way?"

They all stare out over the yellow, spreading water. It is a fair day and the water lies sparkling under the clear sunshine and ruffling under the keen wind. They can see a long way, since there is nothing to hinder their eyes except a few tops of trees. A boat? A boat? They gather and clamor a little to see the boat.

But there is no boat. Over the sparkling cruel sea no boat comes.

"Follow me," said Jesus, and so long as we disobey we are sure to get lost in the woods of perplexity and doubt.

KINDNESS

Kind words are the music of the world. They have a power which seems to be beyond natural causes, as if they were some angel's song, which had lost its way, and come on earth, and sang on undying, smiting the hearts of men with sweetest wounds, and putting for the while an angel's nature into us.

Kind words will set right things which have got most intricately wrong. In reality an unforgiving heart is a rare monster. Most men get tired of the justest quarrels. Even those quarrels, where the quarrel has been all on one side, and which are always the hardest to set right, give way in time to kind words. At first they will be unfairly taken as admissions that we have been in the wrong; then they will be put down to deceit and flattery; then they will irritate by the discomfort of conscience which they will produce in the other; but finally they will succeed in healing the wound that has been so often and so obstinately torn open.

All quarrels probably rest on misunderstanding, and only live by silence, which as it were stereotypes the misunderstanding. A misunderstanding which is more than a month old may generally be regarded as incapable of explanation. Renewed explanations become renewed misunderstandings. Kind words, patiently uttered for long together, and without visible fruit, are our only hope. They will succeed. They will not explain what has been misunderstood, but they will do what is much better—make explanations unnecessary, and so avoid the risk, which always accompanies explanations, of re-opening old sores.—F. W. Faber.

GOING TO MARKET

From "Our Friends at the Farm"

By E. Chivers Davies

Dolly was standing at the gate, ready harnessed to the light spring cart, and pawing the ground in her impatience to be off, but presently Mr. Pixton and Billy came out of the farmhouse, and when they were comfortably settled, with all their parcels tucked under the seat and Mr. Pixton holding the reins, Jem let go of Dolly's head, and away they went! For it was market-day in Weyton, and Mr. Pixton was selling some calves there, while Mrs. Pixton never failed to send a basket of her beautiful brown eggs, a crate of plump chickens and ducks, and some of her delicious butter. There they were, all tucked under the seat—all, that is, except the calves which had gone in another cart with a net over them, half an hour before.

Dolly started down the lane as if she knew quite well that they were going to market, and presently they turned into the main road, where a steady stream of horses and carts, droves of pigs, flocks of sheep, and little groups of cattle were all going toward Weyton. Billy found it fine fun to watch all the different people—and the animals, too, for some of them were very naughty and gave their drivers a great deal of trouble. Old Farmer Giles, his funny black hat well on the back of his head, and a clay pipe in his mouth, was riding to market on his sturdy horse, and shouting directions to a farm lad who was trying to drive a troublesome drove of pigs to market. The pigs did not want to go to Weyton Market, but were trying their best to turn round on the road, or to go down every little lane they came to, till the farm lad got quite angry!

Next Dolly passed a spring cart with a load of three delightful little calves, which Billy privately thought were the prettiest he had ever seen, only he didn't want to hurt Mrs. Pixton's feelings by telling her so!

In the field which stretched by the side of the road a donkey was munching thistles, and as a donkey-cart passed him he gave a most scornful "He-haw," as much as to say, "See how much better off I am, eating these nice thistles," which made the harnessed donkey so annoyed that the boy who was driving him could only persuade him to go on to market at all by the scheme of hanging a carrot in front of him, just out of reach, on the end of a stick, and promising that when he reached Weyton he should have it! He was really taking the carrots to sell to a vegetable shop in the town, but it was a rather clever idea, and you think, to use one of them in this way?

When they reached Weyton they found a very busy, bustling scene awaiting them. Mr. Pixton drove to the market-place, so that Mrs. Pixton could arrange her butter and chickens on her stall; then he went round with Billy to the Old George Inn, where he put Dolly up for a rest and a feed before her journey home again.

Billy had never seen a real country market before, so Mr. Pixton took him around all the square to see the sights. There was one huge inclosure divided up into small pens, and here they found the calves which had come from the farm looking quite happy and comfortable in their new quarters. Several farmers were already buying cattle, their wise old sheep dogs sitting down beside them as their masters discussed prices, looking as if they, too, knew all about the matter, and it was not long before one of the farmers came up to Mr. Pixton and asked him what he wanted for his calves. Billy was very interested in all this, and when the calves had been sold and led away they went round to look at the sheep-pens, and to see the pigs. The cattle market was a very noisy place—such a lowing and a bellowing, such a bleating and grunting from the cows and sheep and pigs, that it was quite a change to go into the square where Mrs. Pixton was busy selling her eggs and butter to customers in the town, who always came to her stall because they knew how good were the things she brought in from the farm. By the time she had sold all the ducks and chickens she had brought with her, Billy was feeling quite hungry, so after making a few purchases in the stalls in the market-place to take back to the farm, they went into the coffee-room at the Old George Inn and had as much roast beef and roast potatoes as even the hungriest little boy could eat.

After dinner Mr. Pixton went to the miller's to see about some food for his stock, and then Dolly was harnessed, and away they went, with empty baskets but heavy pockets, back along the road that led to the farm.—Courtesy, Thomas Y. Crowell Co.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NATIONAL MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

This notice will inform you of the death of Elder Jacob Shank at his home in Lodi, California, on November 23, 1931. Father Shank, as he was affectionately known, was one of the pioneers of the work on the west coast. He was in his eighty-eighth year and had been a member of the Association since 1904.

As this is a fourth death, the claim will be paid from funds on hand, and NO call will be issued.

WILLIS E. RONK,
Secretary-Treasurer.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

ROBERTSON-HARTER—At the parsonage of the First Brethren church of Flora, Monday morning, December 21, occurred the wedding of Mr. Woodrow Robertson and Miss Edith Harter. The bride is a member of the First Brethren church, and one of the St. Louis, Mo. group. She is a native of Franklin County, Virginia, but expects to make his home near Flora. A single ring ceremony was used by the writer.

IN THE SHADOW

LOOMIS—Mrs. Florence Loomis, aged forty-three years, wife of John A. Loomis, died at her home east of West Alexandria, after a short illness. Funeral services were conducted from the Block Funeral Home by the writer. Burial was made in the Sugar Grove cemetery. Besides her husband she is survived by two children.
GEORGE PONTIUS.

GILBERT—David Gilbert, son of Ezra and Elizabeth Gilbert, was born in Montpelier County, July 25, 1869 and departed this life Nov. 9, 1931, at the age of 62 years. He was united in marriage to Erie Guntle, to which union was born one child, who departed this life in infancy. Besides his brothers and sisters he leaves to mourn their loss a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted from the First Brethren church and burial was made in the beautiful Sugar Grove cemetery.
GEORGE PONTIUS.

WETZEL—Mary Estella Bear Wetzel, daughter of John H. and Hester Bear, was born in West Alexandria, Sept. 2, 1869, and departed this life Nov. 6, 1931, at the age of 62 years, two months and 4 days. She was married to Scott Wetzel Oct. 4, 1888. To this union was born a little daughter who died in infancy. She was a member of the First Brethren church at West Alexandria. Although because of illness for the last several years she was unable to attend services she read extensively from God's Word and was always interested in the work of the church. She leaves to mourn her departure a devoted husband, two sisters and many other relatives and friends. Services were conducted from her home by her pastor and burial was made in the Sugar Grove Cemetery.
GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

FRITZ—O. V. Fritz, aged 58 years, died at his home in West Alexandria on Nov. 29, 1931, following a few hours' illness. Mr. Fritz has been prominently connected with public affairs in West Alexandria for many years. He was postmaster under the Wilson administration for eight years. He has also served on the Village Council. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home and burial was made at Lexington. He is survived by the widow, one son Carl, and one granddaughter.
GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

MABBIT—Mary Francis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Crume, was born in Howard County, Indiana, March 20, 1863, and died near Lebanon, Indiana, December 14, 1931, aged 67 years, 8 months and 24 days. November 15, 1883 she was united in marriage to Mr. John A. Mabbit, who survives her death, with five children. The children are Mrs. A. J. Cook, Flora, Indiana; Mrs. Gertrude Viney, Flora; Mrs. Ethel Lantz, Flora; Orville Mabbit of Lebanon and Mrs. Bertha Peterson of Lebanon. Mrs. Mabbit will be remembered as the wife of Rev. Glen Peterson.

A short service was held at the home near Lebanon, and then the regular funeral service was held at the First Brethren church of Flora. She had been a member of the old Darwin Brethren church for years. Burial was in Maple Lawn cemetery, east of Flora. Services by the writer.

Challenged

Loyalty, Fidelity, Devotion, Dependability: these words stand for a stability and forcefulness of character that determines destinies and compels results. When from among these mighty words your Brethren chose Loyalty as a campaign slogan, they were trying not only to enhance the literature and holdings of the brotherhood entrusted to them but to arouse the noblest in the character of their constituency. The main purpose has been to build up our Common Cause here by arousing all the heroism and sacrifice that remained in us.

"Weaker and wiser" each generation grows, or a maxim of evil has gained great hold on humanity. True or false, there is always need for the stimulation of recondite powers that lie dormant in each of us. "The whole world lieth in the Evil One" and with the world thus insidiously ensconced it is not difficult for the Christian to accept the status quo of his environment. Indeed, that this is the whole truth is as easily discovered in our offices as it is standing in front of a Moving Picture place on Prayer-Meeting night.

Men support the things to which they are loyal. They have time for them; they have money for them. Though walking has been called the "universal exercise" and though many can not afford to finance their automobiles, we have not heard of many deserting their autos for the more healthful and economical method of arriving. Football, baseball and other sports have their devotees among which are many of us, but the claim of sport must not traduce the previous right of our religious institutions.

No people since the Inquisition has had a greater example of loyalty and fidelity set before them than we. It was because of their allegiance to Jesus Christ and his Word both in 1709 and 1880 that we have any institutions at all. They have adorned and embellished the entire fabric of our history with the drapings and weavings of finest heroism and denial. Weaker or stronger, it remains and is decreed that it shall not all be lost. We shall emulate them. We shall carry on. LOYALTY, FIDELITY, DEVOTION, DEPENDABILITY: these will suffice but nothing else will.

Signs of the Times

MINISTERIAL "Bootleggers"

Among the preachers of the Protestant churches, there are men who will do almost anything to collect a wedding fee. Who the applicants are, what their marital history has already been, whether their attitude toward the sacred relationship is one of seriousness or mere frivolity, are questions with which these preachers concern themselves not at all. Five dollars is five dollars! Or it may be even less.

One wonders at times whether the cause of Christ might not profit if the churches would absolutely prohibit ministers from accepting fees for performing ceremonies. Or better yet, if the ministers would themselves voluntarily remove this sacred rite from beneath the blight of commercialism. Such a course would certainly strengthen the position of those ministers who contend for the New Testament ideal of marriage, and serve to disabuse the minds of people who think they have a right to the blessing of the Church upon an illicit marriage because they are willing to pay the customary fee.

A REBUKE from a Unitarian

Dealing with this matter, Dr. Dexter, a secretary of the American Unitarian Association, in a recent address, said, "When clergymen marry persons about whom they know nothing, with the excuse that 'if I didn't someone else would,' it amounts to little better than bootlegging a religious ceremony. It is indispensable, if a minister wishes to be of assistance in helping to solve family problems, that he should know the members of a family before as well as after marriage. I know a minister who refuses to marry men and women outside his parish, and I think he has taken a reasonable position."

ALSO from a Newspaper Editor

The editor of the Chester (Pa.) Times, commenting on the address of Dr. Dexter, says, "Making allowance for occasional exceptions, where the minister is certain that he has adequate information regarding the parties, this would be a good rule for every minister to make for himself. If people are not willing to be married by a minister who knows them, let them go to a justice of the peace. A minister by virtue of his office stands pledged to the maintenance of a higher standard of ethics than is sometimes embodied in the civil law or profession by a civil officer. He should never consent to degrade a religious ceremony for the sake of a fee."

This is wholesome advice for all of us. If there is any church in the world that ought to stand like a rock against the commercial degradation of the marriage ceremony, against the modern tendency toward consecutive polygamy, and for the plain teaching of the Son of God on the marriage relation, it is the Brethren Church and her ministry.

A WISE Policy to Adopt

The ministers of the Brethren Church could bear no finer testimony in these perilous times than to announce to their respective congregations, and to the world, that they will perform no marriage ceremony where a divorced person is involved.

If there is one Scriptural ground for divorce and remarriage (as many devout Christians hold), no minister is competent to determine infallibility that such a ground exists in any given case, or who is the innocent party. Such people should go to a civil officer, since it is the business of the civil authorities to handle divorce cases. Christian ministers are not consulted in the granting of divorces. Why then should they be asked to preside at the marriage of the divorced, and blamed if they refuse?

The opinion of the secular sociologists is of no value on this point. Their science (if such it can be called) is of the earth, earthy, and their ideals are based on expediency. But the Christian minister has a revelation from above; he must find his guidance not in what is, but in what ought to be.

THE Ostrich Club

No matter how bad things become, there will always be those people who say only our thinking makes it so. Recently I read of a new club called the "Pollyanna Club."

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

2. Will you please give a brief sketch of the great living religions? Are any of these, aside from Christianity, Missionary in their appeal? What is the distribution and the relative strength of each of these great religions? Give any other information relative to the religious problems of the world.

Now there is a question that would really require books to answer in full. But I am glad to pass on to the readers some very general statements in reply to each of the parts of the inquiry.

Hume, a returned missionary and a recognized authority on Missions, says there are eleven living religions. By a living religion is meant one that now holds the allegiance of any considerable portion of the world's peoples. Hume also enumerates twelve "dead religions." Among these may be named the religions of Ancient American origins as those of the Peruvians or the Mexicans or the Incas, of Old Egypt, of Babylon, or of the Ancient Greeks or Romans and of our own forbears, the Old Teutons.

Asia was the birthplace of every one of the world's great living religions. The following is a list with the approximate numerical strength of each. (1) Christianity with 550 millions of adherents; (2) Confucianism with 250 millions; (3) Mohammedanism with 250 millions; (4) Hinduism with 220 millions; (5) Buddhism with 140 millions; (6) Taoism with 40 millions; (7) Shintoism with 15 millions; (8) Judaism with 15 millions; (9) Sikhism with 3 millions; (10) Jainism with 1 million and (11) Zoroastrianism with a hundred thousand.

Confucianism, Hinduism, Mohammedanism and Christianity are growing numerically. Perhaps the most aggressive of the non-Christian religions from a missionary point of view is Mohammedanism. It should be pointed out too that in giving the above numerical strength of each we necessarily include all nominal followers.

Of these eleven great religions four are strongly Monotheistic, that is, they hold strictly to the belief in One True and Living God. They are Sikhism, Mohammedanism, Judaism and Christianity. Each of these great religions has a sacred book or books. Geographically we find Hinduism in India; Buddhism throughout all Eastern and Southern Asia; Shintoism in Japan; Confucianism in China; Mohammedanism in India and the Near East.

This gives me a fine opportunity to say a word about our own Missionary activities as a church. Our oldest Mission is in Argentina. This country has some ten millions of people. Our territory covers an area of about the size of Indiana and has a million people within its boundaries. While the country is nominally Catholic there are many without any sort of spiritual guidance or fellowship. It is a matter of great rejoicing and thanksgiving that the Lord is graciously blessing this work in its widening influence. Our other field is within the territory of French Equatorial Africa. Here we have opportunity to come into close and vital touch with peoples more primitive who are not counted among the adherents of any of the above mentioned religions. Mohammedanism is the most persistent and aggressive of the religions pressing its claims upon the African natives. It is historically true that few Mohammedans are ever converted to Christianity and so if we wish to hold our territory in Africa for Christ we must not retreat nor retrench in any particular.

What we must do for both these fields is to uphold them with our utmost financial support and with our constant prayers for their success to the glory of the Lord.

An Old Subscription List

By R. R. Teeter, D.D.

All work of a religious or benevolent character requires support from some source. Movements or works do not go forward of themselves. They must receive power of some kind from some great source to give them momentum or to enable them to make progress of any kind.

It may be the work of a church or of a college or of a publishing house, but it must be supported, provided with necessary equipment or funds if it is to accomplish anything worth while. This support must come from voluntary or compulsory sources. In other words the supporters must be either assessed or must make voluntary subscriptions.

Old Testament Systems

In the Old Testament system of worship there was plenty of compulsory work, plenty of statutory contributions required. Sacrifices and tithes and other things were required in support of the general system of worship, but when it came to the construction of the Tabernacle, it was desired that there should be no compulsion, but rather there should be voluntary subscriptions or undemanded offerings to meet the requirements of this construction. And we are told there were parts of the standing ritual which were left to the promptings of the worshipper's own spirit. There was always a door through which the impulses of devout hearts could come in, to animate what else would have become dead, mechanical compliance with prescribed obligations.

If one would learn how this old subscription list was made up he needs but to turn to the account as recorded in Exodus 35:21-29, where the list is given in detail.

True Motives of Acceptable Service

It would seem scarcely necessary to say all service is not acceptable. Cain learned that in the childhood period of the human race. So there must be something back of any service that determines whether or not it shall prove to be acceptable, and that determining factor is the motive that prompts the service.

The twenty-first verse of this chapter makes the matter clear as it states "They came, everyone whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and brought Jehovah's offering, for the work of the tent of meeting, and for all the service thereof, and for all the holy garments."

There is a striking metaphor in that word willing as it appears in this verse. Wherever the spirit is touched with the sweet influences of God's love, and loves and gives back again, that spirit is buoyant, lifted, raised above the low, flat levels where selfishness feeds fat and then rots. The spirit is raised by any great and unselfish emotion.

Contact with Christ

Continual contact with Jesus Christ, and realization of what he has done for us, is sure to open the deep fountains of the heart, and to secure abundant streams. If we can tap these perennial reservoirs, they will yield like artesian wells, and need no creaking machinery to pump a scant and intermittent supply. We can not trust this deepest motive too much, nor appeal to it too exclusively. We should be reminded, too, that Christ's appeal to this motive leaves no loophole for selfishness or laziness. Responsibility is all the greater because we are left to determine for ourselves the amount of support or the kind of support we are going to subscribe to the Lord's work, and because we are left to assess ourselves. Those people who are clamoring for untrammelled "self determination" in the conduct of life should find in this plan an opportunity to give full expression to their doctrine. Like blank forms supplied to taxpayers by the county auditor that they may assess their own properties, the blank form is left us and the Lord leaves it to our honor to fill it up consistent with our ability. But we should not tamper with the form as there is an examining officer that will examine our schedule, and he knows whether or not we have subscribed according to our possessions.

Measuring the Acceptability of Work

If we are ever in doubt about the acceptability of our work or of our offering to the support of the Lord's work we can get from these verses in Exodus a standard of measurement that will enable us to gauge ourselves properly. Here we have a long catalog, very interesting in many respects, of the various things the people subscribed or brought. Over and over again such sentences as these occur—"And every man with whom was found" so-and-so "brought it"; "And all the women did spin with their hands, and brought that which they spun"; "And the rulers brought" so-and-so. Such statements embody the very plain truism that what we have settles what we are bound to give. Or to put it in grander words, the capacity is the measure of duty. Whether we are men or women or more exalted beings as rulers the responsibility is placed upon us, and our work is cut out for us by the faculties and opportunities that God has given us. The form as well as the measure of our service is determined thereby.

Going the Limit

"She hath done what she could," said Jesus Christ about Mary. One might read that as if it were a kind of apology for a sentimental and useless gift, because it was the best that she could bestow; but I do not hear that tone in the words of the Master at all. I hear, rather, this: that duty is settled by faculty, and that nobody else has any business to interfere with that which a Christian soul, all aflame with love of God, finds to be the spontaneous and natural expression of its devotion to the Master.

While these words are the vindication of the form of loving service it should not be forgotten that they are also a very stringent requirement as to its measure, if it is to please Christ. "What she could." The engine must be worked up to the last ounce of pressure it will stand. All must be got out of it that can be got out of it. And the only way one can be sure he has done all he can do is to try to do more and to fail in the attempt. We often hear a motorist speak of getting all the speed out of his car that there is in it, but one would be foolish to expect as much speed out of a four cylinder car of common make as he would out of a Cadillac sixteen. And sixteen cylinder men in the Brethren church should not expect four cylinder men to match their speed in the support of the Lord's work.

Variety of Service

The work of the Lord or of his church does not require service of only one or two forms, and a careful reading of these verses in Exodus will discover a list of offerings that brings out the thought of the infinite variety of forms of service and offerings, which are all equally needful and equally acceptable.

The list begins with "bracelets, and earrings, and rings, and tabrets, all jewels of gold." And then it goes on to "blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, and acacia wood."

And then we read that the women did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun—namely, the same things that have already been catalogued, the blue, and the purple, and scarlet, and fine linen. That looks as if the richer gave the raw material, and the women gave the labor. Poor women, they could not give, but they could spin. They had no stores, but they had ten fingers and a distaff; and if some neighbor found the stuff, the ten fingers joyfully set the distaff swirling, and spun the yarn for the weavers. Then there were others that willingly undertook the rougher work of spinning, not dainty thread for the soft stuffs whose colors were to glow in the sanctuary, but the coarse black goats' hair which was to be made into the heavy covering of the roof of the Tabernacle. No doubt it was less pleasant labor than the other, but it got done by willing hands.

The Climax

Then, at the end of the whole enumeration, there comes—"And the rulers brought precious stones, and spices and oil," and all the expensive things that were needed. The BIG subscriptions are at the bottom of the list, and the smaller ones are in the place of honor. This is just the opposite of the common practice of humanity. With man the big gifts are placed at the top of the list and the smaller ones at the bottom or on a separate sheet. But this record in Exodus teaches us just this—what a host of things of all degrees are given, and the works that are done from the same motive, because of the willing heart, stand upon the same level of acceptance and preciousness in God's eyes, whatever may be their value in the market-place. It also teaches us that none of us should be ashamed of our gifts because they are small when placed by the side of our more favored brethren, if we have given according to what we have.

Publication Day is January twenty-fourth.

The new editors (?) are very happy with the prospect for a Publication Day number in the next issue. We believe that pastors should consult the articles in it before they have finished their preparation for this important Calendar Day in our church.

We are glad to know and announce that Dr. Baer has, as we believe, crossed the divide and is on the road to recovery. He has been critically ill and the road to complete recovery will not be too short. We hope you will not cease to pray for him. The pastor and the writer anointed him Sunday afternoon.

The report of "a District Evangelist" in this issue gives a glimpse of a sort of work that we are sure is good. We believe that many churches would gain benefit and blessing from such a visit and we commend it as one method both possible and profitable, of unifying and harmonizing the work of the church everywhere. In this, imitate Belote and Crick.

Readers of the Evangelist will be glad for the sermon in this issue from the pen of Brother Quinter M. Lyon, former Sunday school editor. It was preached in the cooperative mission of Brethren peoples in Columbus, Ohio, and sent to the editor for publication. Friends of Brother Lyon will be glad to know that he is on the teaching staff of Ohio State University in the Department of Philosophy, and that a new son has come to bless his home.

A personal letter from Mrs. B. F. Owens tells of plans, and progress of the Cause at Nappanee. A Sunday school of 457 recently cheered them. Prayers are asked for Brother Owens who has begun a revival at Loree. We suggest a report in fuller detail and not only from this church, but many others. It would have found a fine and welcome place this week. Church news is good news and the Word says we should "Write what thou seest and send it unto the churches." Now then, do it.

In the death of Dr. J. Knox Montgomery, president of Muskingum College, Ohio, has lost one of its great leaders in church and civic affairs. He was President of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League and Moderator of the United Presbyterian church. He was also prominent in the Ohio Pastor's Convention and the writer of these notes had a high regard for his leadership and kindly Christian character. He had just passed the 70th milestone of his life, but was a strong man physically until a fatal disease cut it short. Ohio will miss his counsel and guidance in the things worth while.

The leading article of this issue by Prof. Milton Puterbaugh of the Ashland College Faculty will help the readers to see another side of the questions evolving from the great unexplored field of science and chemistry in particular. It may help some to be less rash about statements concerning things that are changing as fast as the wind and are bound to change continually as the newer sciences tear away the mask that concealed much truth before the days of the test tube and modern inquisitiveness and discovery. Men need not fear to preach the whole truth in the Word of God and that revelation as final, but it is easy to be too sure about final knowledge in the field of science.

The first pastor to assure us of his prayers for the editor is Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor at Waynesboro. In his letter he tells of an extensive organization for a city-wide revival. For it, he says, "a fine spirit of Christian unity prevails here. Some worthwhile work has already been done. A religious census has been taken, scores of prayer meetings have been held in the homes, and the personal workers' committee is organized for work among the unsaved. You may be sure our people are doing their part. Would appreciate your asking the church at large to remember this undertaking in prayer." We feel assured that praying Brethren will do so.

A Church Bulletin from Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, where Brother W. H. Schaffer tells of his feat of getting a deer that weighed 125 pounds which was "neither blind nor deaf", invites a personal letter for further particulars. What is more important to us is that he is making a determined effort to increase subscriptions to the Brethren Evangelist. He says, "Several have taken advantage of the low subscription rates and are using them for Christmas Gifts." In another issue he says, "It will not be long until the low subscription rates for the Brethren Evangelist will be gone. * * * We can not see how any one can be 100% faithful to the Brethren faith if they do not get the Brethren Evangelist." Neither do we. This is a striking contrast to the observation of Brother Belote that as soon as some men get on a new field, cancellations begin.

One of the big events in Ohio church life will be the Ohio Pastor's Convention at the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, January 18-21. It is the first time it has been put on any place outside of Columbus. It will be a bit easier for the ministers of all denominations in the northern half of the state to attend this great convention. This is the largest meeting of its kind in the world. Personally, I am not so much enthused by the personnel of the speakers programmed. I could wish more of another class of preachers of the country could be given a place; but I am not making the program. I only know that a larger world-view of actual conditions of humanity and a larger sympathy for their correct solution is gained by listening to these men whether we agree with all their bases of argument or their methods of solution. To discuss modern problems of church and civic life with such men as James Moffat, Fred B. Smith, Whiting Williams, Albert W. Beavan and J. Finley Williamson is at once a privilege and an opportunity. Besides, the Brethren have always had a fine fellowship meeting with the Church of the Brethren.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

January twenty-fourth is Publication Day. Remember that.

Magic aims to deceive, and the tragedy is that the magic-worker sometimes fools even himself.

The object of a miracle is to glorify God and to help humanity; the object of magic is to glorify the magician and to mulct mankind.

A desire for a religion which will amaze and dazzle men has its roots in evil, and its blossom and fruit are an egotistical selfishness.

Money will not buy the gift of the Holy Spirit, but the gift of the Holy Spirit will turn money into channels of helpfulness and holiness.

O Lord, who hast made me for thyself, and called me by my name that I might be an individual child of thine, help me to live becomingly as one whom thou hast loved and called. And in thy condescending and appreciative care and forethought, give me thy work to do and thy joy to share, that through the experiences of our human life thou mayest round me out into the image thou intendest. In the name of Christ, our model and our friend. Amen.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

What Shall We Do About Science?

By Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh

Three peasant women one evening noticed a man who had been seated on a stone with his eyes fixed on a spot on the ground since morning. "A poor innocent", they whispered as they crossed themselves. They did not know it was Fabre, the great naturalist, observing insect life.

Members of the University of Pisa are gathered at the foot of the great leaning tower one morning in the year 1591. A young professor is balancing two balls on the edge of the gallery—one weighing one hundred times more than the other. He releases them and they fall together and are heard to strike the ground at the same instant. "This meddlesome Galileo must be suppressed," was the comment. "Such disregard of the authority of our great philosophers who teach that a ball weighing one hundred times as much as another will fall one hundred times faster, must go no farther." So they turned to their books to explain away the evidence of their eyes and ears. Their hatred of the man who answered a question debated for two thousand years, who disturbed their philosophic serenity, who put belief to the test of experiment, gave him as a reward in his old age imprisonment by the Inquisition and a broken heart.

The great Michael Faraday, after showing a distinguished audience that when a magnet is brought near a coil of wire a slight current of electricity is produced in the wire, was asked by a lady "But, Professor, what is the use of it?" He replied, "Madam, what is the use of a new-born child?" Even the great Gladstone asked, "Of what use is it?" when Faraday had explained a similar scientific principle to him and the great experimenter answered, "Why, Sir, there is every probability that you will soon be able to tax it."

Here we have three types of scientific workers represented and the attitude of three classes of people toward them. It may be somewhat unnecessary to review some of the wonders of modern invention and discovery because in recent years such knowledge has become common property. Let us think of them for a moment, however.

Two weeks ago the college class in beginning chemistry made chlorine gas and as the students saw the greenish yellow cloud arise in the flasks and travel over into the collecting bottles, as they caught a whiff of the sickening, choking, suffocating stuff and staggered back from the fume hood one after another began to ask about the Great War and poison gas. As they pictured those first troops who unsuspectingly were caught in that first cloud of chlorine a look of horror began to deepen on their faces and they shuddered. Yet we are told that another war would see such chemical warfare as would make the past usage fade into insignificance. There will come gases that attack our eyes, our skin; that will cause nausea and consequent removal of gas masks; that will cause us to lose our sense of smell, of taste, of hearing, of direction; that will destroy our equilibrium; that will render whole areas a huge "No-mans-land": not to speak of the bursting shells that will scatter disease germs and leave a trail of certain death.

Turning now to industrial progress may we refer not to the usual great strides in transportation, communication, and manufacture, but rather to the industrial research going on at present. It may be as surprising to you as it was to me to find that the following groups of associations are some of those who are engaged in scientific research and studies of their problems: The Biscuit and Cracker makers, Meat Packers, Dry Milk and Evaporated Milk manufacturers, Fertilizer companies, Bottlers of carbonated beverages, National Canners, Soft Wheat Millers, Paperboard Industries, Dyers and Cleaners, Laundryowners, and the Steel, Automobile, Electric, Rubber, Petroleum, Cement, and Asphalt corporations.

So it goes without saying that we are rushing on in the field of discovery and invention and science until recently there is an expression of growing alarm noticed on some of our faces as we clutch tightly to our seats in the "train" swinging from side to side. We are asking, "Where are we going? Are we on the right track? Are we on any track? When will we stop? Is there an engineer? Does he still have control of the train?"

What should be our attitude in these days toward this kaleidoscopic existence? One thing is certain: no matter what our attitude is—even though we choose totally to ignore the situation—we are rushing on anyway. Some have suggested that we take a holiday in science and invention and discovery. Foolish notion! As if men could forget their cunning by a wave of the hand! Stop thinking? Never! Only beheading a man will do that. Pass a law against inventions? Preposterous! Smash the machines? Ridiculous! Rather the time must come—if we can do our work easier and quicker—when men will be paid a living wage for a four hour day and a three day week. They will have hours and hours free. Free for what? Ah! there is our task, great enough to challenge the most courageous. We must teach men to use this new leisure time in beautifying their homes, rearing their families, improving their minds, maintaining perfect health, enjoying recreative play, and understanding God and his universe.

Many have a mistaken piety which makes them shrink from the conquest of Nature. But science and Christianity are at one in abhorring the "natural man" and calling upon civilized man to fight and subdue him. The conquest of Nature, not the imitation of Nature, is the whole duty of man. Imitate Nature? Yes, when we cannot improve upon her. Admire Nature? Possibly, but not be blinded to her defects. Learn from Nature? We should sit humbly at her feet until we can stand erect and go our own way. Love Nature? Never! She is our treacherous and unsleeping foe, ever to be feared and watched and circumvented, for at any moment she may wipe out the human race by famine, pestilence, or earthquake."

Many are angry at progress because it disturbs their serenity. We reproach ourselves because we seem to be always "catching up" in our ideas about God and Man and the World. For a long time in the field of Chemistry, for example, each new discovery brought a change in definitions and conceptions. Just recently, however, we have begun to make definitions that will embrace the discoveries as they are made. Our Periodic Table of the Elements needed no revision recently for it had a blank place all ready for the newly discovered Element No. 87. So instead of our catching up all the time let us realize that God is the Creator of the World AS IT IS not as we think it is; not as the men of 2000 B. C., or 100 A. D. or 1000 A. D. found it, or as 1932 A. D. finds it to be but as it really is. Let us form a conception of God who is so great, so all-powerful, so wise, that when any new facts are brought from their hiding places in Nature we will not have to revise our ideas.

Some people make the mistake of thinking that revision means discard. Men have heard a speaker and have gone away saying, "He gave us a new Bible." Such extravagant statements are unreasonable. Perhaps all the speaker did was to clarify a single passage. Many are eager to jump at conclusions and "junk" all old ideas with one great sweep as they reach out for the new. We must neither be swept away by new ideas nor close our minds adamantly to them. The recent discovery of alpha and beta hydrogen has not caused chemists to tear the chapter on hydrogen out of their text books. The hydrogen we generate now from zinc and sulphuric acid behaves just as it always did for us only now we can explain a few observations that we were unable to understand before.

What shall we do then? Let us not smash the machines. Let us not behead the thinkers and inventors, and discoverers. Let us not fear nor hate nor ridicule nor ignore the new. Rather let us do as the Bereans did whom St. Paul congratulated for their earnest seeking after truth. Let us put our ideas to the test of experimentation. Let us TRY Christianity—not just talk about it. Let us catch a glimpse of our Creator—the God and Father of all of us—that will be centuries ahead of the feeble attempts of men to understand his handiwork. Let us teach men how to use their leisure time; teach them their relationship to God and each other; teach them to use their inventions in the interest of peaceful industry. Let us continue to make cotton into nitro-cellulose but use the product for clothing rather than explosives. Let us continue to ferment sugar and make alcohol but burn the product in our engines and automobiles rather than in our stomachs. Let us make poisons for bugs and not for Brothers. What of the future? It depends not on "putting on the brakes" but in putting Christ and his teachings into the hearts of men. Those who care to make a study of the situation may find some very interesting reading in the following books which are written in an easy style and non-technical language:

1. Discovery—The Spirit and Service of Science: Gregory: MacMillan, 1927; 2. The Riddle of the Rhine: LeFebvre: The Chemical Foundation, 1923. 3. Creative Chemistry: Slosson, Century Co., 1923. 4. Science in Action: Weidlein and Hamor: McGraw-Hill Co., 1931.

God In the Life of Men

By Q. M. Lyon

(Christmas sermon preached at the cooperative Brethren church at Columbus, Ohio)

The message of Christmas is that God has come to live with man. He is not an alien and transcendent God, but one who is reconciled with his beloved creation, in which he lives and moves and has his being.

Religious experience throughout the world is insistent that God is, at least not wholly transcendent. This much light has been given to all nations, namely, that God comes into at least occasional intimate contact with his world.

Skepticism

There has been much skepticism over the question as to whether God is interested in the human race or not. Modern astronomy has revealed such a vast universe that it seems pure presumption on the part of man to hold that God is interested in us human atoms of the earth. But spirit is intrinsically incomparable with matter and space, regardless of the vastness.

Deism, an eighteenth century interpretation of religion in Europe, held that God must be thought of as the creator of the universe, in about the same way as a man creates a watch and gives it its laws of operation. Then when it is wound up it will run by itself. So God withdrew and left the marvelous mechanism of the world to carry on its own affairs. He does not need to interfere, for his creation is excellent and can maintain itself. Nor does he bother to interest himself in it.

Such a position is wrong, and cannot be maintained.

The Christian Philosophy

Christianity is a religion, not a philosophy. Yet Christianity has a mightily attractive philosophy, such as every man would like to believe in. I believe that it is tenable. And if it is tenable, then Deism is untenable, and skepticism with it.

The Christian interpretation of the universe is as follows: First, negatively: the universe is not made up merely of matter in motion, which according to the "laws" of chance, just happened to take the shape which it has, including man and all his cultural creation. The universe is not a blind, insensate machine, rolling relentlessly on its haphazard way, unconscious alike of good and evil, of pleasure and pain. On the contrary, positively, the heart of the universe knows and cares. There is in the universe a Spirit which is essentially like the heart of Jesus. Jesus was the "Logos" or revealing word of the heart of creation, that is, of the Spirit, God, the heavenly Father. How many of our hymns dwell on the theme that "He knows, he cares." "I know my heav'nly Father knows." "He notes the sparrow's fall." "All the hairs of your head are numbered." Paul said, "In him we live, and move, and have our being."

Not only does God know and care. He is essentially an active Being. He is pure Creativity, in philosophical terminology. God does not dwell apart from his creation, as Deism holds, in idle carelessness and oblivion. God is rather eternally creative, according to his own nature. He is constantly active. He is not, however, in motion, for he is not material, and does not obey the law of gravity, his own creation. His activity is the activity of thought that is energizing, law-giving, power-imparting, motivating to purity and goodness.

God is not an impassive God, nor a pure principle of abstraction. He is a "seeking God," the "tender shepherd" whose love moves us to goodness.

Witness of Other Religions

Brahmanism is such a curious mixture that it is hard to make a statement about it that might not be contradicted. But there is one standing belief in Brahmanism, namely, that God is incarnate in the caste of the Brahmins or priests.

Buddhism thinks of God as pure passivity, whose symbol is the sitting Buddha, with arms folded and legs crossed and eyes shut. The smile on his face is one of internal peace, which cannot be disturbed by anything from without. That peace is the peace of nothingness. And yet what do we find in the religious experience of the Buddhist? We find, first of all, the deification of the Buddha himself, and following that, subsequent "avatars," "arhats," and "Bodhisattvas," who take the place of the saints of Catholicism, and are represented as divine manifestations of God in this life. So even Buddhism must admit that God does come into intimate relation with his world.

Lamaism, the Mongolian form of Buddhism, found especially in Tibet, regards the Lama as the living incarnation of deity. The Lama heads the church and becomes God to the living age. Thus the transcendent, impassive

God becomes active and interested in men's affairs once more.

The Zend religion, Persian Zoroastrianism, made god a visitor to his world in the sensuous form of light. To this they gave a symbolic and ethical meaning.

Egypt worshiped the Nile, as Osiris, who annually visited the delta and all that was habitable of Egypt, bringing about the rebirth of vegetation and the increase of life. The symbol of Egypt is the Sphinx, half brute and half man, with spirit represented as enmeshed in matter and struggling mutely to be free. God was Nature with the Egyptians, but they discerned that Nature was not without its spiritual principle, so they gave the human (spiritual) head to the animal body of the sphinx.

The riddle of the Sphinx is answered in Greece, by the word "Man." There the gods appeared in the forms of men, in the Greek mythology. These gods paid mythical visits to the world, and even produced offspring who became the Greek people. So we find the Greek religious consciousness groping toward the truth of an immanent God who is not uninterested in men. Nor is he alien to man, even as to sensuous form and concrete individuality.

Hebrew Visitations

These people of God held that the Deity was mostly transcendent, but that he revealed himself through Providence and by special acts or miracles. The common people had a certain relationship to the Deity, and yet it was a distant relationship. Only the high priest could enter the Holy of Holies, and that but once a year. Especially gifted persons, the prophets, held unusual communion with him.

God's relationship to his world, therefore, among the Hebrews, was rather that of a visitor, a creator, an external ruler. He entered into human relations, but only occasionally.

The Incarnation

In the incarnation it was seen that God was not alien to man as such, but only to man as less than he was meant to be. The incarnation has been shrouded in too great mystery. Life itself is a mystery, of course. But having accepted any one mystery, all the rest of the mysteries may be classed in the same order. The incarnation might have been expected, as indeed it was. For God's Spirit is not alien from man's spirit at its best. God created man in his own image at the beginning of the race. He imparted to man his own Spirit—"blew into his nostrils the breath of life"—and breath is spirit, in the original tongue. Man is truly the child of God, in the spiritual sense. It is only as less than he was intended to be by the Creator that he becomes alienated from God. God is reconciled to the world in Christ. Man discovers God in Christ, and God becomes man in Christ. Through Christ we are sons of God and joint heirs with Christ.

The object of Greek thought was man. The object of Christian thought is spirit. Spirit is the eternal right, goodness, truth, beauty, love. It is not abstract principles, but the perfect personal expression of these which is spirit. Jesus is "the Way, the Truth, the Life." He is the Light, purity, and through the Son we have freedom.

When Jesus was near, men's hearts burned with the presence of Deity in their midst. The resurrection put the climax to their convictions.

The Presence

Christ's departure was not a mere accident. It made possible the permanent abiding Presence which came at Pentecost. The life of Jesus was not merely a visit of Deity, but an induction of the Spirit of God into the hearts of all believers. The Spirit of Jesus was seen to be just what the spirit of every man ought to be. By this intimate insight into the eternal nature of Deity men have been enabled, through the new birth, to enter into that true holy of holies, the spiritual Presence of God. As the manger housed Jesus' sweet young life, so we now cultivate in our hearts the Holy Spirit of love, justice, truth and power.

God is known to be pure activity and creativeness, for that is how we experience the "well of living water" within our own souls. God is not external and transcendent, but we are one with God through Christ. Our Christian motivations are divine in origin, but because we are united with God they are also our own motivations. God has been reconciled, and is no longer alien.

The Spirit within me is my own. I am not God in his totality, to be sure. But I have appropriated the Spirit of Jesus and have been made free by him. So I recognize in Christian motivation that pure activity and righteous creativity which is God, and at the same time is the nature of the renewed life.

Christmas means no more than any other feast day, unless we see the deeper significance of the incarnation and reincarnation in countless lives of the Spirit of God in Christ and in the hearts of believers.

Christianity is not a mere name, but a designation for a certain type of motivation, of peace, of freedom that comes from knowing God in the mystic experience as One with us through Christ.

The Functions of Music in the Church

By Robert E. Kline, Organist at National Cash Register and at the First Brethren Church of Dayton, Ohio

Let us first consider the Christian Church, its origin, and the reason for its existence in the world today. The head of the Church JESUS CHRIST stamped his character indelibly upon her, and gave his disciples instructions about the organization of the Church. What was his intention in bringing into being this body embracing within its fold men of every condition, race, and clime? We believe, to provide a means of communion with him, and a channel through which we may be recipients of his love and grace. The Church is different from anything else in the world. When we enter within her doors we leave behind the world with all its cares and worries, and step into an atmosphere which breathes the very air of Heaven. Were we spiritually meet our Creator; here we worship and adore him. In view of the above facts, we may well ask ourselves what should be the character of music used in divine worship. What is the function of music in the Church?

Music in the church service should be an act of worship. It should express the religious emotions of the congregation. Nothing which savors in the least of the world should be used. Music which will uplift the minds of the worshippers should be heard, for they are there, or should be there, to worship their Master. I believe the Prelude should open the service and not the Doxology or other opening sentence. The Prelude should be quiet and always devotional. It should be of the character to set the minds of the people upon the worship of the Almighty.

The congregation should cooperate with the organist and endeavor to maintain a degree of quiet that will inspire reverence and worship.

All music used in the service should be within the bounds of what constitutes a piece for Church use. The purpose of the postlude is to bring the service to a close, and the congregation should remain seated while it is being played. Otherwise it should be dispensed with, as the custom of using it merely to cover conversation and noise made by departing worshippers is undignified, and destroys quiet and reverence which should prevail at the close of the services. The vocal portions of the service should be of an exalted type. The appeal of the anthem and solos must be to the souls of the people. And may I say in passing that I believe in vestments. We uniform our army and robe the justices of our courts, for the sake of orderly and dignified appearance. For the same reason the church choir should be vested.

The great standard hymns of the Church should be taught and sung. The singing of these hymns should be encouraged in the Sunday school. Certainly the children should be taught the great hymns of the Church.

All music should be arranged in keeping with the divine character of the church. The moulding of the proper atmosphere for the church service rests almost entirely in the musical program. It is a sacred trust and a duty that requires careful thought and preparation. Let us ever hold high ideals before us, and work toward them in a practical way with the minister, musical director and the congregation cooperating in creating something fine to the spiritual life of the church.

CATACOMBS TO BE MAPPED

Pope Pius has consigned to the Pontifical Institute of Christian Archaeology the task of exploring the catacombs of Rome and other Italian cities, and of making public reports on the subject. These burial places of imperial patricians and meeting and burial places of the early Christians have never been completely mapped or explored. There are about sixty near Rome—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

STATE RELIGIONS

The New York Times points out that the Spanish National Assembly's recent decision that "no official State religion exists" in Spain reduces the number of European countries that still have established churches to eight. The Lutheran Church is the established church in the Scandinavian countries, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland; the Roman Catholic in Italy, and the Orthodox in Greece and Bulgaria. In the British Isles, there are two established churches—the Anglican in England, and the Presbyterian in Scotland. In other parts of the world the Roman Catholic is the established church in Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Venezuela, Columbia, Peru, Bolivia and Paraguay. In the Netherlands the State grants allowances to the Protestant, Roman Catholic, Jansenist and Jewish churches, and in Belgium the State pays part of the salaries of ministers of all denominations. In the United States a national church is prohibited in the first amendment to the Constitution, which says that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting exercise thereof."

WHERE TWO FAITHS WORSHIP

Air-passengers flying over the Alleghenies from New York to Pittsburgh are sometimes puzzled by an oddly shaped structure resembling an Oriental tomb they can see lying in the fastnesses of the mountains just northeast of Ligonier.

It is, in fact, a reproduction of a famous ancient tomb built as a memorial by one of the Mellon family, at which Protestants and Roman Catholics among the mountain folk may worship at separate hours.

The story of this scarcely known "Little Church in the Wilderness" is told by The Pennsylvania Motorist, and is summarized by the Associated Press.

It runs:

More than a half-century ago, James Ross Mellon, the brother of the present Secretary of the Treasury, and Rachel Huey Larimer, daughter of Gen. William Larimer, prominent in Pittsburgh history, visited the Holy Land on their honeymoon, and there had pointed out to them the tomb of Rachel on the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem.

Twenty-five years later Mr. Mellon purchased 4,000 acres of mountain land near Ligonier and built on it Rachelwood, an imposing country residence, named for his wife.

On the death of his wife, Mr. Mellon commissioned a friend to visit the Holy Land and obtain the measurements and architectural details of Rachel's tomb.

An architect and construction engineers, on orders from Mr. Mellon, built the "Little Church in the Wilderness" after the original tomb of Rachel, and it was dedicated as a memorial to Mrs. Mellon and as a place of worship for the farm people and mountain residents in the territory lying between Ligonier and Blairsville.

Since its dedication, in 1925, the Little Church has had two services a day.

In the morning a visiting priest says mass for the Catholic residents of the valley, and in the afternoon a Protestant minister preaches a non-sectarian sermon.

No offering is taken, Mr. Mellon paying for maintenance of the church.

It is one of the few edifices in the world where both Catholic and Protestant services are held.—The Literary Digest.

KAGAWA'S MESSAGE TO AMERICA

"Well," he said, "I might say some things not so nice. As a matter of fact I've found two distinct Americas: A Heaven America and a Hell America. When you're good you're very good, but when you're bad, you're awful. And it's that contradiction that I've met with from coast to coast. A contradiction of fine, Christian people, honestly working at the business of being Christian, living side by side with a lot of others who may wear the feathers of fineness, but lack everything but the decorations, who scoff at Christianity with their voices and repudiate it with their lives. What place that America would be for a lot of hard-working missionaries with a hard-hitting gospel!

"The church in the United States needs more evangelists and it won't get them until it has more people who, personally, have been evangelized. I've heard a good deal of talk about a great revival. Frankly I haven't seen many signs of one. You are too busy, and the business of being converted is likely to interrupt too many of your own arrangements. In Japan, right now, we're in the midst of a 'Kingdom of God Movement,' and that movement is succeeding. The reason we are succeeding is that we've got Christians who, long since, have given up trying to arrange God's purpose to suit themselves and because, on the other hand, we've got a multitude of non-Christians who are conscious of the emptiness of their lives. It is my opinion that the Church in America will find an audience when its members have found the Gospel for themselves.—From an interview with Stanley High.

THE KING JAMES VERSION

Common sense, combined with a keen appreciation of the sublime, characterizes the remarks of Dr. Charles R. Brown, dean of the Yale university divinity school, on the dictation of the King James Bible. With Shakespeare, he says, the ancient biblical utterances comprise "the noblest example of English in the libraries of the world."

The craze for "modern versions" has been overdone. The lessons of the Bible are applicable to all ages; human nature doesn't change much in a few millenniums. If there is a meaning in a certain text for this day and age, it is reasonable to suppose that the intelligent reader can extract it without a translator at his elbow, ready to put it into slang. The amazing accuracy, moreover, with which certain scriptural comments apply to present day problems is an eloquent argument against radical revision.

The majesty of Job, the poetry of the Psalms, the wisdom and mysticism of Solomon, undoubtedly suffer from the meddling of a long line of translators. It is not a question of being able to duplicate in modern forms the subject matter of the old Greek and Hebrew manuscripts. It is one, rather, of substituting for the majestic language of the old texts the parlance of today. Much of the enjoyment many readers get from the scriptures lies in the dignity of expression contained therein—and this does not detract in any sense from the lessons they contain.

We cannot always improve by making over. This is true of the work of a master, in whatever medium he chooses to express himself.—The Cleveland News, issue of December 29, 1931.

Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.—Is. 43:1.

OUR BIBLE STUDY

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

VIII. The Glorious Goal of Prophecy

Judging by the facts of history it is a true proverb which says that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Jesus stated the same truth prophetically when he said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." He stated it in its wider or generic meaning when he said, "Except a grain of wheat fall to the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it beareth much fruit." It is love that is faithful unto death that begets love faithful unto death. The working of this universal and eternal law makes it possible to prophecy, not only the sufferings of Christ, but also the glory to be afterwards revealed. The scarlet line leads from the cross to the glory throne.

Learned Jews have argued that the "suffering servant of Jehovah" in Isaiah is none other than Israel, but they look for a personal Messiah to come in glory. The prophets never predict a kingdom without the king. The reign of God on earth has been the beautiful dream of the ages. "Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied saying, The Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints" (Jude 14, 15). The ordinances of the law were foreshadows of the body of Christ (Col. 2:17). The feasts were foretastes of the kingdom of heaven.

While the covenant of promise was made with Abraham, it was shared by those who became members of his household, as later, the covenant with Israel was shared by the proselytes to Judaism, and the new covenant is shared, as was predicted, by believers of all nations. By one spirit are we all baptized into one body whether we be Jews or Gentiles" (I Cor. 12:13). This body is the spiritual or social body of which Christ is the head as a king is the head of his kingdom.

The formation of this body was not clearly revealed in the Old Testament prophecies although it is suggested by some (Isa. 53:11; Ps. 22:22 with Heb. 2:12; Ps. 110:1, etc.). In the mystery parables of the kingdom (Matt. 13) the pearl of great price is undoubtedly the church. Whether called the "body" as in Rom. 12:5 and I Cor. 12:13, or the "bride" as in Eph. 5:21-32, the destiny of the true church is to be united with Christ regardless of nationality. Likewise the great multitude that comes into glory out of the great tribulation is composed of all nations and kindreds and tongues (Rev. 7:9-14).

And after the kingdom of heaven is established, princes of the line of David shall reign in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 7:16; Ezek. 45:8) yet Ps. 89:27; Jer. 33:14-21 and similar passages, show that the throne of David means the throne of Christ. It is he who hath the key of David (Rev. 3:7). It is therefore not robbing the Jews of their promises to see their fulfillment in Christ. They need only to accept the Messiah to receive the promised blessing. The imagery of many of the messianic prophecies is that of the law, but, as in the case of the rites and ordinances, "the body is of Christ."

Israel is a branch cut off from the olive tree of God's people through unbelief, while Gentile believers are grafted in through faith, yet believing Israel shall be restored (Rom. 11:18-28). The body becomes the bride and the bride the holy city in which the nations of the redeemed shall walk and to which the kings shall bring their honor and their glory (Rev. 21:24).

This is the "dispensation of the fulness of times" when all things shall be united in Christ (Eph. 1:10), who shall reign until he have put all things under his feet, and then shall deliver up the kingdom unto the Father that God may be all in all (I Cor. 15:25-28).

This is the glorious goal toward which the prophetic lights are turned from the beginning to the end of the Word of God. Though the vision tarry we will wait for it, for in the end it will come and not tarry (Hab. 2:3).

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

"If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself"—2 Tim. 2:13. The Revised reads, "If we are faithless, he abideth faithful; for he cannot deny himself." Moffatt has this: "If we are faithless, he remains faithful—for he cannot be untrue to himself."

In this second letter of Paul's what a scene greets our vision of an old, battle-scarred warrior. What Andersonville Prison was to many a Union soldier boy, Paul's prison in Rome was to him. But like Nathan Hale of 1776 fame, I think I can hear him say, "I regret that I have but one life to give"—for my Master. As he dictates this great text, evidently he sees the end approaching. Flashing from eyes dimmed by prison darkness and age, he sees the block upon which his head is to be placed, the heavy, sharp ax, the Roman soldier awaiting the signal to end all; and then he wonders if he will falter. Like many another outburst of assurance which has often sustained him, in his great heart this text is born, "If we are faithless, HE ABIDETH FAITHFUL." However we may falter, Jesus and his promises are fixed. If we do not remain true to HIM, he will find others who will.

I quote: "In God's sight, Christ was never austere nor obstinate; yet the Father committed certain divine principles to uphold, to which all persons coming to the Father through him, had to adhere. It is the same today, my brother. The rules governing Christian activity and conduct can not be changed; and any person who would exercise the effrontery of attempting to do so, shall surely fail. And should he insist in pursuing such a course, death and hell will be his portion." And this is but another way of saying, "If we are faithless, he abideth faithful." In defiance of all order and law, a great many subjects may overthrow their form of government, but Christ can not be driven off his throne like that. "He abideth faithful."

It has been said that this text enjoins the obligation of "KEEPING FAITH WITH CHRIST." At least, it is no guess that our Savior not only set forth the faith, but he practiced what he preached. This must have been in Paul's mind, for in a few paragraphs farther he says, "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:" (2 Tim. 4:6, 7). Yes, Paul could draw comfort from a memory like that, FOR HE HAD A FAITH TO KEEP.

What is meant by keeping faith with Christ? I think you know. It is something like keeping faith with the government in her hour of grave and great peril. Along in '17, and '18, many men who were making it difficult for the government at Washington to carry on, were thrown in prison; even preachers were shadowed by secret-service agents. It is somewhat like keeping faith with your school, or keeping faith with father and mother in maintaining the credit and reputation of the home. The Son of God himself gave the test again and again, in terms like this: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you" (Jno. 15:14).

I like to pin my faith on One who was so very much different as to never change his life plans. His explanation of this unusual feat is this: "I came to do the will of him that sent me." Look over the history of Egypt, India, China, Persia, Greece, and Rome. What are the outcome of their religions? It makes us ask, is there any religion today lifting up the race and giving hope of a life beyond; if so, who is its author? The answer must come from the soul of every informed and candid man, it is Jesus. I see nothing in the nations for the lame, halt, blind, the orphans and the aged, except as the followers of the lowly Nazarene promoted such institutions. He stands alone in contrast with the great of the earth. "He is not only the wisest of the great and the greatest of the wise, but he taught the wise wisdom and the great greatness." To do this, he was different. The towel and the basin was brought out, and "the Greatest among the great" insisted on HIS USING it. Men may aspire to be at the top in the race of life, but no one clamors for the towel and basin in order to reach it. His faith as he instituted it was sublime, but keeping faith with him is to be immortal.

Teachers of Children

By Maud Newcomer

Her Preparation

We can give only what we possess. It follows then that whatever the teacher wishes her pupils to know she should also know and she should know even more than she can hope to teach. A good teacher must necessarily be a Bible student. Then she must have a purpose, must see the end of the teaching process, and try her hardest to reach that goal, which ought to be to achieve in the pupil the highest type of religious conduct. It isn't a knowledge of the Bible, although that is good, that the children need so much as to be taught how to live it.

The Class Room and Furnishings

It is considered that order and quiet and reverence are essential to success in Sunday school work. In order to secure these conditions the proper equipments aid greatly.

In the first place, where it is possible, each class should have its own room. The floor should be carpeted or covered with something that will lessen the noise, and the little tots be provided with chairs or seats sufficiently low that no child need suffer the discomfort of feet swinging in the air. The walls may be decorated with a few select pictures. Then, as tools at the teacher's disposal, there should be objects, pictures and a blackboard. With these I am sure the competent teacher can do some effectual work.

The Atmosphere

In the Sunday school there should be a suggestive atmosphere. Much of a little child's learning is acquired indirectly. Therefore all the influences—the room, the light, the stillness, the attitude of prayer and personality of the teacher, should create an atmosphere to which reverence and worship are the natural response. And since the teacher to a great extent creates the atmosphere of her class, upon her devolves the duty of making it what it should be. In fact the greatest work she could accomplish during the hour would be to make the child feel that Jesus was in the place although she had not in her teaching mentioned it.

Supplemental Work

The hour or part of an hour allotted for the lesson is far too short a period to permit of much supplemental work being done in the class. Yet, as the teacher studies her class, she sometimes sees needs that the lessons alone are not supplying; then it is her privilege and duty to give them that which they need. Little songs and appropriate verses may be taught. An effort should also be put forth to create a missionary spirit among the little folks, for in this way only will the Sunday school grow and the children by and by be gathered into the kingdom. This may be done by interesting them in those of other lands who are attending our mission schools or have been placed in the orphanages. The children may also be interested in the poor or those of their own town, who do not attend Sunday school.

Teaching the Lesson

The teaching of children is apt to fall into the error of trying to teach too much. Many of us insist upon forcing on the young minds truths which they cannot understand. The child mind develops by exercise which is in harmony with his nature and proportioned to his strength. The young child should not be given a great deal of memory work or formal rules for living; he craves ideals, heroes to worship and live with.

Story Method

An excellent method is the telling of stories, from which the children can create their own ideals. Some one has said, "If I were to have a boy but one hour of his life, I would have him that hour around the campfire with a story." The story takes hold of the imagination and puts the little minds to work. Let the teacher say, "Once upon a time," and immediately her pupils are all attention. It arouses their curiosity—the key to knowledge. The little ones are curious to know, what then? The story prompts imitation. It gives the child an ideal and helps it to live that ideal. Many a child has been influenced for better by a good story.

The Bible is the greatest of all story books and Jesus is the Master Story Teller. But care should be exercised in telling the stories from God's Book that nothing is added or detracted by one's own ideas. In fact the story as it is given in the Bible is always the most beautiful and realistic. However, it may sometimes be told in simpler language.

Let the children adapt their own stories. We often spoil them by preaching or moralizing. Jesus usually let the people draw their own conclusions. Sometimes the teacher sees fit to use stories outside of the Bible to teach the truths she wants taught. Such stories should be selected which come within the field of knowledge and experience of the children that they may grasp them readily and apply them without explanation.

A story to be effective must be well told. Suppose the lesson itself is a story. Let the teacher read it and reread it, taking note of every detail. Then let her, in the privacy of her own room, practice the telling of it aloud, that she may be sure every part of it is made plain enough and simple enough to hold the attention of her pupils and cause them to feel its significance and grasp for themselves the truth taught therein. In order to make it vivid to the children, the teacher must first see every step of it and feel it herself. Then, by bodily and facial expression, by tone of voice, and often by illustrations upon the blackboard, she will be able, at least in part, to secure the results she desires.

Picture Method

Pictures are also used to good advantage in teaching the lesson, especially with very small children. The child often receives its earliest impressions from pictures. Even before it can comprehend a story it may grasp little truths from the pictures given it to play with. In the teaching of the Sunday school lesson, however, only such pictures should be used as are true to the lesson text. It is not a bad plan to present to each pupil a card or leaflet, containing the lesson picture. This the child carries home and there often tells again the lesson story from it.

Object Method

The use of objects may often be found profitable in the presentation of the lesson. When they can be procured a collection of Orientations is useful. The children often wonder what is meant by a scroll, phylacteries, idol and so forth. If they can see and handle those things the lesson will be made more real and much more interesting. Substitute articles also prove helpful—such articles as paper fish, clay loaves of bread, little houses and little boats. The use of some of God's gifts—fruit, flowers and seeds—may often stamp some truth upon the young minds. Great care should be taken, however, in the use of objects and symbols lest they become the important thing. Although the child should be approached through the "eye-gate" as well as through the "ear-gate," that method may be abused. There are some characters and incidents in the Bible too sacred for one to attempt to portray. Above all, the teacher should not try to illustrate in any way the personality of Jesus. Let the child form his own conclusion of that from the Word itself.

Work Must Be Planned

Whatever method the teacher may use, if she would do good work, she must plan her process of teaching in advance of the recitation. This plan must include a study of the pupil as well as a study of each lesson. "To plan carefully and then execute skillfully is the prime test of teaching." Real teaching does not consist merely in talking to the pupil or telling it the contents of the lesson. "Teaching may be defined as causing a human soul to know."

Home Cooperation

Home cooperation may be secured by several means, but perhaps the best is by personal visitation. A word with the mother will often clear up misconceptions that those in the home may have received from the expressions of the children. The teacher can also personally give a hearty invitation to the parents to visit the school and see for themselves how it is conducted. She may by occasional notes solicit the help of the mother in impressing some particular principle which is being studied just then, or her assistance along some other particular line. Suppose the class is memorizing the Beatitudes, or one or more of the Psalms, the mother could help greatly in teaching the child those verses in the home. Indeed, parents owe it to their children to assist in their religious training, and no teacher need hesitate to ask their aid. No doubt, it would be a good thing for the welfare of the children if the Sunday school were so conducted as to require a great deal more homework and assistance from the parents than they now do.—Selected Material.

JESUS AND NICODEMUS

Lesson Text: John 3:1-16; Golden Text:
John 3:16

Daily Readings and Comments*MONDAY*Jesus and Nicodemus. John 3:1-16

Luke, John, Paul, and others of the sacred writers wrote of the things which they had seen and known, but none of them could say, in the same sense that Jesus did, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." As the Son of God, he KNEW, and he taught this teacher. He can teach us many things, too. He especially emphasized the love of God for men, and their need of a Savior: As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, that those who looked might have life, even so must the Son of man be lifted up on the cross, that those who believe on him might have life. We cannot see the wind, but we can see the trees bow down before it; just so, we cannot see the Spirit in the lives of men, but we can see his effect.

TUESDAY*Jesus, the World's Light. John 3:17-21

These are those who insist that a loving God would not condemn men to eternal punishment. And in a measure they are right: by his own wickedness man made himself unfit for the kingdom, and God so loved men that he sent his own Son to redeem them and to restore to them the lost image of their Creator. The Pharisees of Jesus' day hated him, because the light of his nature and teachings showed up the shortcomings of their own natures. For the same reason many still reject him, for we cannot come to him without acknowledging his unique worthiness and our own unworthiness.

WEDNESDAY*Praying for a Clean Heart. Ps. 51:1-10

Jesus' teaching to Nicodemus was not really new: rather, Nicodemus and the Jews of his day had simply failed to understand the words of the prophets. In this passage David refers both to the natural birth, after the flesh, and the new birth, or the new creation. David prayed: "Create in me a clean heart, O God," and in the writings of Paul (2 Cor. 5:17), we read: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Until we find forgiveness and a new creation in Christ, our sins are ever before us.

THURSDAY*Dying unto Sin. Rom. 6:3-11

We must die unto sin before we can be born again. This will be clear when we realize that after all we have only one body, and it cannot house two spirits; the old man of sin must die and give up his right to this body before the new man which is in Christ Jesus can live in it. This is the symbolism of baptism, in which the old man of sin is buried beneath the waters of baptism, and a new creature arises from the waters. Let us ponder well the meaning of verse 10, especially the first part: "In that he died, he died unto sin once."

FRIDAY*Freedom From Sin. Rom. 8:1-11

The teaching of the "two natures," struggling within the believer, is only true insofar as we have failed to die unto sin once for all. God has provided for freedom from the dominion of the old man of sin and the body of this death (Rom. 7:24, 25), if we will only accept it, and it is our blessed privilege to walk without condemnation after the Spirit, and not after the flesh. If we have been born of the Spirit we no longer mind the things of the flesh (v. 5), but the things of the Spirit, and therein we find life and peace.

SATURDAY*Living in Christ. Col. 3:1-11

A Bible teacher once remarked that people are prone to speak of the "higher life in Christ," the "victorious life," etc., whereas there is no other kind of life in Christ; we are either living the Christ life, or we are not. Paul here calls upon us to give evidence that we are living the Christ life—that is, that the world may hear the blowing of the wind which it cannot see, to borrow from Jesus' figure to Nicodemus. The new creature that is born again bears not only the nature, but also the image of him that created him.

SUNDAY*Faith and the New Birth. 1 John 5:1-5

This scripture really doesn't need explanation or comment as much as it needs practicing! People are still as puzzled as Nicodemus over the manner of the new birth, but this scripture, and many others, should be entirely clear: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God," and "whatever is born of God overcometh the world." We might emphasize the difference, however, between a mere mental assent and a really earnest faith. May our hearts be really gripped by a vital faith in Christ that shall result in newness of life and freedom from sin—the new birth of which Jesus spoke to Nicodemus.

Selected Committee Helps*A BASKETBALL CONTEST

By James F. Neill

A league without a champion. Such was the situation in which the Eastern Intercollegiate League found itself after five weeks of play in the Young People's Society of Gaston Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The "league" was a contest arranged by the lookout committee to encourage promptness, stimulate participation, and increase the membership of the society.

The first step, of course, was the elimination of all "dead-wood." Then the remaining thirty members were ranked in groups of six on the basis of individual abilities, one being placed on each of the following teams: Columbia, Cornell, Dartmouth, Pennsylvania, Princeton, and Yale. The team captains were neither officers nor committee chairmen, all being young members who proved themselves "comers."

A schedule was prepared, together with a list of substitutes; three referees (the pastor and two honorary members to decide any disputes which might arise); a timekeeper (lookout chairman); and prizes for the winning team and the individual high scorer. The timekeeper was necessary to ensure a maximum participation of one minute, since at least thirty people had to take part in half an hour. It seemed cold-blooded to some, but it was necessary to call "time" only thrice during the contest, and conciseness is a valuable asset to any one.

Sheets were run off on the ditto machine, lining up the opposing players as in actual basketball, scoring being as follows:

Late—1 foul for the opponent.

Absent—2 fouls for the opponent.

Extemporaneous participation (this term caused much amusement)—2 field goals for the member.

Reading a clipping—1 field goal for the member.

New member—3 field goals for the member.

Visitor—1 field goal for the member.

At the bottom of these sheets were figures up to 75, by which it was possible to keep a "running score" and know how the teams stood at any time during the meeting. Scoring was different from the usual custom in that, instead of securing points for promptness and attendance, failure to perform these duties gave points to the opposing player. The team captains kept the score, turning a duplicate copy over to the chairman of the lookout committee at the conclusion of each game. Captains had the right to insert a substitute in place of any player who failed to attend or participate regularly in the meetings. Lineups were furnished to the opposing captain before the game started.

It was definitely stated in the circular letter sent to the members announcing the contest that a "visitor" was one who was not a member of any young people's society, but was eligible to membership, being eighteen to twenty-four years old. A copy of the results of the three games played each evening, team standings, and individual scoring, together with suggestions for improvement, were sent by the chairman of the lookout committee to the captains each week; and they in turn passed the information along, and "pepped up" their team-members, visitors, etc. Publicity was chiefly through the medium of these letters, the church calendar, and a number of posters.

Because of a three-cornered tie the league had no champion; so a play-off was necessary. Cornell defeated Penn and Dartmouth to take the championship. On the succeeding Sunday evening to each of Cornell's five pennant-winners was given a subscription to

The Keystone Endeavorer, the Pennsylvania State paper. To the individual high scorer of the league was given a subscription to The Christian Endeavor World. While the giving of prizes is not always sanctioned, these were regarded more in the light of investments than anything else.

On the seventh evening (five being for the league and one for the play-off) two all-star aggregations played each other, the Gaston Maids and the Gaston Boys. These consisted of the highest scoring girls and fellows. For this one night only the "visitors' rule" was removed, and the rest of the society were also counted as visitors for any of the ten who asked them. The Maids defeated the Boys by a margin of nine points. In all fairness we mention the fact that there are twice as many girls as fellows in the society.

Actual basketball games in the church

gym on Saturday nights were linked to the contest, two of the pseudo team captains being members of that team. A basketball social was planned, but other arrangements interfered.

We cannot help telling you that 29 out of the 30 members were present every Sunday, 26 of whom took part. A record of four latenesses a Sunday was due to the distance traveled by many. Only two new members were accepted, since experience has shown that members accepted promiscuously during a contest do not always make the best workers. The names, addresses, and church or society affiliations of all visitors were secured through the use of a visitors' register (pages in a "Christian Endeavor Handbook") placed in the meeting room. Thus we have a list of "prospects" from which we hope to secure members when the heat of the contest has subsided.

they would be displeased. When I went home a short time afterwards I found my mother weeping and my eight older brothers (I was one of the younger children) sitting around the room like judges. My eldest brother beat me. My mother continued weeping day and night, for a week. I said, "Mother, the Lord Jesus is so much to me that I cannot help but follow him." I suffered much persecution, for my brothers felt I had disgraced them and often said "Sister, what have you done?" When I came to the table and asked a silent blessing it displeased my family very much and sometimes they were so angry that they sent me away without a mouthful. Often I spoke to them about the Lord. He kept my heart in peace and kept me from speaking hastily. When my mother was ill and I again asked her if she would believe, she said: "When I am dead and in my coffin, and the lid put down, then and only then will I believe in Jesus!"

After a time, my favorite brother, who still loved me, wished me to teach him Latin. As we sat in one of the summer houses near our private temple in which were scores of idols, large and small, I drew his attention to them telling him they could not hear as Jesus did to whom I prayed. Gradually he came to believe. It was then that my mother suffered most. She said "I cannot bear it, I cannot bear it; it was bad enough when you followed this foreign doctrine but to have a son of mine believe it, is too much to endure, I will give you away to anyone, into any kind of home, just so you will not drag our family name into the dust."

I did not get angry, but said "Oh mother, Jesus is more to me than anything on earth."

They wished to betroth me and my mother opened the treasure chest and showed me all the fine apparel and jewels I should have upon marriage—but even these could not supplant Jesus Christ. My brothers still beat me at times but gradually the Lord worked in their hearts and, one by one, they turned to him. My mother became seriously ill and we brought her to the Friends' Hospital. Miss Leaman, another lady and I fasted for three days after which my mother showed signs of relenting. Before she left the hospital, she accepted the Lord. After that she tried to help in the work in every way she could.

A proud sister who lives in Shanghai said: "Do not call yourself a Bible woman, we do not want one of our family to be known by that name." I only said "It is most honorable to be a Bible woman."

"Then I cannot receive you into my home," she answered.

"I am sorry if you cannot receive me but I must serve the Lord with all my soul and strength," I replied, "and to serve him is my greatest joy."

I praise the Lord that now thirty-one of my family have come to know the Lord and that he gives me strength to tell my sisters of his great love.

Miss Tsai is now doing fine work and is greatly used of the Lord among Government school girls, knowing their trials and difficulties when they come out on the Lord's side. She herself has gone through the experience. Pray for her.—Missionary Review of the World.

The Story of Miss Tsai of China

AS TOLD BY HERSELF

My father had twenty-two children. He had two wives and a concubine and his position was next to that of the governor of the province. He was a man of wealth and of good character. Our household numbered about sixty, counting the servants—and each small child had a nurse. We could have almost anything we wished. Our home was large and had beautiful gardens with an abundance of flowers and a lake in the grounds. As a young girl, I spent most of my time playing Ma Jongg and drinking wine, paying a good deal of attention to fine clothes. I loved my father and he loved me and gave many pleasures, taking me every week to a theater. Once when he was very ill, I thought of the old Chinese idea that if the flesh of a child is boiled and given to drink that the patient will recover, so secretly I tried to cut a piece of flesh from my arm. I had no idea how difficult it would be and it sickened me as I tried again and again with a blunt pair of scissors to cut off a piece, but at last I succeeded and my father really did get well. My arm was very, very sore as I put on ashes of incense burned in our private temple, and tied it up with a none too clean handkerchief, but I kept my secret for a long time, for part of this superstition is to tell no one for a hundred days, during which time the idols are implored to take notice of this sacrifice. It took six months for the wound to heal. My father passed away about a year afterwards and while we still had enough of this world's goods, we were not as wealthy as before.

I was greatly interested in my studies but was told that I would not really be considered educated until I could speak other languages. I learned Latin and English in the normal school but as I grew up I wished to know more. I inquired where I could learn more English and a mission school was recommended to me. There I made some progress but when I wanted to have a special teacher for English, the lady, Miss Davis, who offered to help me stipulated that the Bible must be the textbook. I said that I would rather study some other book for I was not interested in the Bible, but she was firm and so we began. I would not attend prayers until I found it was required and then I took another book with me and held it inside my Bible to read during the service. I did not wish to pay any attention to Bible teaching. One day a celebrated American was to take the service and my only thought in hearing him speak was to learn new English expressions—for I thought, if I am obliged to go, I will use the time to improve my English and that will be my reward for attending. I realize now how much prayer was going up for me as I studied month after month. Gradually the words of the Scriptures began to sink into my heart and I felt anything but happy.

One day when I went to a service the pastor said "Why is it that some people who have heard the Gospel over and over again are so unhappy?" He drew the comparison that they were like a tree which had fallen and lay on the ground, and under it were all manner of crawling creatures because they loved to dwell away from the light in the darkness. One day as I sat in a park, I remembered his words and thought: I will see whether or not his words are true, and moved a large block of wood which was lying on the ground. There, to my amazement I saw a serpent wriggling its way out of the light and numbers of insects all made uncomfortable by the light shining upon them. It was then that I realized that the Lord Jesus was speaking to me and that I was unhappy in the light he had given me because I was still in darkness of soul. So I went to my room and prayed: "Oh, God, if there is a God, help me." Then God met me and the light came into my life.

From that day I knew Christ as my Savior and soon after made a public confession and was baptized. I had not spoken to my parents of my new experience but asked a friend to write and tell them because I knew

A DISTRICT EVANGELIST MAKES A VISIT

Early in November I received an invitation from Elder W. S. Crick, pastor of the Fremont church, to be with them on their annual Homecoming and Anniversary Day which was to be observed on November 29. As it happened that this congregation was one of the four assigned to me for assistance and encouragement as a district evangelist, I accepted the invitation and with the hearty assistance of some of the brethren here at Ashland was enabled to spend a very pleasant day with the Brethren at Fremont on the appointed date.

The day was a full one, as Brother Crick believes in getting all he can from his brethren who visit in his bailiwick. Three services of preaching—morning, afternoon and evening—had been arranged and so it was my privilege to speak to three fine audiences of the Fremont workers and their friends. There was a good interest at all of the services, and the personnel of the audiences was quite typically Brethren. And of course there were names and faces that are familiar to those who attend our State and National Conferences, and quite naturally these were found in places of service in the church's enterprises. This was my first visit to this church to have a part in their regular services and observe the work in its regular working routine. I found the work in very excellent condition in the midst of these trying times, the various auxiliaries well organized. The pastor had prepared a financial statement for the membership which appeared on the Bulletin of the congregation for that day. This statement seemed to me to reflect well on the financial work of the group. It must be remembered that this congregation has had some reverses and is at present receiving some help from the State Mission Board, but it was my impression that these people are making an honest effort to treat the Board fairly in the matter of the obligation which they have to the Board.

I have known the pastor for a good many years, but it had never been my privilege to fellowship with him in his work, and so the hours spent in his home with his fine little family were most pleasant ones, and I believe we know and understand each other a bit better than before. I want to make an observation or two at this point with reference to the attitude of the pastors of the Brethren church toward the auxiliaries and enterprises of the denomination. Here at Ashland where we are in touch with the various enterprises of the fraternity, we have a way of saying that when certain pastors change pastorates we may expect certain things to follow. That is there are certain folks who cannot find spiritual nourishment in Brethren Publications and the fact is reflected immediately in a curtailment of the support which the churches served by these pastors formerly gave to the various auxiliaries. Especially is this reflected in the use of Brethren Publications. Well I had no such observations to make concerning the Fremont congregation, and the pastor was anxious to know if his district evangelist knew of any way he might be any more loyal to the Church and its enterprises. (And a few other Brethren preachers might well take note of this characteristic of the Fremont pastor).

It so happened that the pastor was to conduct a funeral service for a non-Christian suicide victim, and so I remained over and assisted him at that very difficult service. I want to commend the good brother for the very masterly way in which he brought a message to the assemblage, without in any way compromising the Gospel or yet harrowing the feelings of the stricken family. Brother Crick showed himself as one capable of fitting into hard situations and leaving a fine feeling in the hearts of those he is called to serve.

I came away from my visit with the Fremont Brethren feeling that I had fellowshiped with another Brethren congregation—another of the many it has been my privilege to visit—and that with such loyal pastors the fraternity has little to fear as to the future of the church. And it is the hope of the writer that his visit as a district evangelist did not in any way compromise the pastor or the congregation in their mutual relations with each other, but rather encouraged both to continued and more earnest consecration and effort for the church which we all love. May God continue to pour out his rich blessings upon the Fremont church and its good pastor.

Fraternally,

DYOLL BELOTE.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear sisters who have passed to their reward. It was a lovely day, December 17, 1931, when the Womens' Missionary society of the Gretna Brethren church met for a day's session with Mrs. E. F. Miller to sew for the needy children near Krypton, Kentucky, where the Brethren Church conducts a mission school. The sun shone beautiful and the cheer without and within seemed to make it a gala day for all present. Among the women that have always made meetings of this nature pleasant and successful were Mrs. Opal Trout and Miss Josephine Shoemaker.

Sister Shoemaker has been a member of the Gretna Brethren church for a number of years, and Sister Trout united with the Christian church in early life and for ten years has been a faithful member and worker in the Gretna Womens' Missionary Society. About three years ago she moved ten miles away from the community, several times spoke of severing her relations with the society after the marriage of her daughter because she disliked to drive the car when her husband was busy.

The pleasant relations that had always existed among these women and "The Tie that binds" kept her faithful and loath to leave.

The efforts put forth by these two women have always shown the true Christian spirit in their untiring zeal to help others. That same spirit seemed to manifest itself especially on this day, and all seemed to feel when adjournment time came that the day, although too short, was as pleasant and helpful as any of the many such that they had enjoyed together. These two sisters started home with a pleasant air of satisfaction that another day had been spent in real Christian service. Those that had already gone and those present had no idea that the next few minutes would bring the saddest moments in the history of the society, when these two sisters drove in front of a fast bound train and were hurled into eternity.

Truly we are made to realize, that in the midst of life we are in death. Little will the children in the hills of Kentucky know when they are sleeping, warm and happy, under the comforts made this day, that these two worthy women gave their lives in an effort to make them happy.

They, like Dorcas of old, will be remembered as the years come and go, for the real service they have rendered. Our sympathy goes out to the loved ones in each of their homes and the kind deeds of these two women will ever linger in our memory.

Their passing seems untimely.

And our loss we keenly feel
But he who loves us truly
Can all our sorrows heal.

Lovingly,
THE GRETN A. W. M. S.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

No member is permitted to even mention the "depression" upon penalty of a swift kick. The insignia of the organization consists of a pin bearing the engraved representation of an ostrich with its head buried in a bank of sand.

Sir George Paish, eminent economist, evidently does not belong to this club. He says, "If my information is correct, and I think it is, nothing can prevent a world breakdown within the next two months."

Illiokota District "Moderator's Annual Message."

By C. C. Grisso

Delivered to the 1931 Annual Conference, at Dallas Center, Iowa, October 9, 1931

Dear Brethren in Christ: Greeting, Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy, for your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now; being confident of this very thing that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ.

You have called me to this place of honor and with the help and council of all and in particular these my more able brethren in the ministry, we shall endeavor to make this one of the greatest conferences of our history as a district.

First let me pause to say that we ought to be very grateful to our Heavenly Father for the way that he has led us through the days of the year that has just passed. While it has been a year of reverses for some it has also been a year filled with great blessings for his church. As for our ministry he has been gracious to us. As to the laity, some of our leaders have been called to higher service. We would pause to drop a word of gratitude for the memory of our good Brother B. F. Puterbaugh, who during the year went away from us to be with his Lord. But those that assemble here are spared, and blessed with the innumerable gifts of life. To us have been given the riches of his saving Grace. All the fullness of his love in Christ has been ours. All the power of the endless life has thrilled us. All the beauty and joy, all the dignity and grace, all the endowment of power for service, all the compensations of life that flow from clean, holy, godly living have been ours. What more could we ask?

Certainly we ought to thank God as a church that he has accounted us worthy of being his representatives in these last days, in an effort to complete his body for him when he shall return.

I believe in the Brethren church. I have given the best of my life to her ministry in the support of her plea. I believe she is ordained of God for just "such a time as this." I believe that as a church we are nearer the practice of the apostles, and come nearest to a reproduction of primitive Christianity than any other body of people in the world. We understand the terms and conditions of salvation as did the disciples of our Lord of the first century. We understand the purpose and place of the ordinances as well as they. We pride ourselves on our "whole Gospel plea." We have taken our place on the high and exalted ground of "Christ our only creed" and "The Bible as our only rule of faith and practice." This is the ground upon which the founders of our movement stood. Let us thank God they did, for all that we are as a people today is because they were fearless in advocating that plea. But, today, Brethren, to our shame and discredit we hear little of that plea. Our members are going into other churches: our ministers are taking up work in other denominations, but let us not lament it if we continually insist that they are just as good as we, and that we have no plea that is worthy of their support.

I believe that we need a greater faith in ourselves and our message; a faith that will push us out from the shore; a faith that will help us to reach out further and further and claim the unclaimed land with our whole Gospel message. Our message is given to us from God. It is his gospel. There can be nothing added and there can be nothing taken away. It is authoritative and final. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God . . . that the man of God may be perfect." What we are trying to do is to perfect men and women in Christ. How can it be done with anything less than the preaching of a whole Gospel? It takes a whole gospel to make a whole Christian, and brethren, if there is anything that I covet for the churches of our district and of our whole brotherhood it is that in these days they might "stand fast in the faith." In these days of doubt and indifference when men are heedlessly and carelessly trampling the teachings of Jesus beneath their feet, there is a need of a people who will rise up and boldly declare them anew. There must be a return to the old gospel message. The message that has cheered this old world's heart for 2,000 years, and will continue if faithfully preached.

2. Again let me take this opportunity of calling the churches back to our first and greatest task. I speak of evangelism. What would take place if every last member in all of our churches were set on fire to carry out the last commission of our Lord. I tell you we would be in the midst of the greatest revival our church has ever known. I am not urging any particular form. I am not raising the question of method. I am saying the church must be evangelistic. Our preaching must be an evangel, a message of good news. It must be proclaimed so as to win men to itself. Millions there are who have not heard it. God wills that they shall hear it through the church, and we need to be aroused to the danger of those about us lest they cry out in judgment against us. All the agencies and auxiliaries of the church ought to be evangelistic in nature. Please underscore this. UNLESS A CHURCH IS AN EVANGELISTIC CHURCH IT IS A DYING CHURCH. Her days will be numbered. Where shall the responsibility for this task be placed? Upon every member of the church. I am trusting that a positive evangelistic note shall go forth from this conference that God may use every one of us the coming year as he has never used us in the bringing in of the lost. And let me say further that just as long as we give ourselves up to other things just that long will our churches walk around in their own little narrow circles of their local congregations and the world will continue to go by on the other side in its careless, unregenerate way, unsaved, because, yes because Christians loved their own little narrow programs better than the salvation of mankind.

3. In this connection let me offer a word with reference to leadership in our churches. The plea I am making for it is that there may be such consecration on the part of our laymen that it will, by the very force of its character compel the respect due the church. To know the word of God in terms of a genuine experience. A pastor's best and most efficient helpers in carrying forward the work of the church is clean, holy, high, Christian living on the part of every member of the church. It is not at all necessary that one go to China or Africa to serve in the capacity of full life-time service. Each of us can serve full time right where we are. We need recruits for the ministry and the home fields, and foreign fields, and in all of these places are unlimited opportunities. And yet I am reminded that some of our larger churches have not sent out a worker for these fields for many years. Brethren of the ministry, let us lay this burden upon the hearts and minds of the young people in our churches.

4. All of this compels me to say that there is another matter that ought to concern us at this time, namely that of Church Extension. In my humble judgment, we as a church ought to have a larger Home Mission program. More churches should be established, for it is the home base upon which all our work rests. In this great district of ours there are yet places I believe that could be made centers of brethren influence. What better work could some of our larger churches like Lanark or Waterloo do than to lay hold on some young man, place him in such a field and give him our moral and financial support? As I view it there are two ways open to us: the first is to go on in the same old way, to hold and strengthen what we have and be satisfied; the other is to bestir ourselves to the interests of our district mission program and set as a goal, the establishing of a new work every year. Not a single one of us is satisfied with what we are doing along this line. Yet, I fear we have lost the spirit of those who have gone before us. Fifty years ago our preachers went everywhere preaching. Wherever there was an opportunity they went, even at the sacrifice of time and money. They didn't wait to be called by a large church offering a large salary, but they blazed their own way and made possible some of the churches that today are being neglected by those to whom they have committed the task of shepherding. They call to us out from their graves today. Is it possible that we have betrayed the trust they left us?

5. The next thing that I should like to refer to for just a minute is our educational interests. If we are to persist as a denomination we must have a school distinctively Brethren in its influence and teaching. Knowing Ashland College as I do I feel that we have here such a school. In the training of our ministers, and missionaries and church leaders, its demands and appeals must be given our consideration. In the days when the divinely established landmarks of the church are being tampered with, in this time when there is a tendency to lift the anchors and drift with the current, in these days when the great doctrines and principles of the church which she has believed and practiced for years are being denied, what an opportunity is ours to train our leadership, and maintain the "faith of our fathers." The whole church should constantly keep before her this matter of a trained ministry, and urge upon our best young men this distinctive work. We ought to be giving more young men to the gospel ministry. Where shall we go for our future preachers? We must go among the young men of our own churches and see that they are trained in our own institution. It is true that our district is so far removed that it is expensive to send our young people, yet there are some other things that we can furnish if we can not furnish them with students. We can give our moral support, our prayers, our sympathies and our money. The brotherhood has given well in the past, but the time will never come when we can say that we are through giving to our college. For such institutions are rarely ever self-supporting even though they have large endowments. If our missionaries in South America and Africa are to be accepted they must qualify here. Our young folks will not attend a college when they learn that their work will not be accepted or recognized in many of the states. Thus, in view of this, and in view of the fact that we cannot expect our youth to attend schools of other denominations and remain loyal to the Brethren church, we need as never before to get behind this our only educational institution and do everything in our power to raise it to the very highest efficiency possible.

6. And now, very closely associated in our educational interests is our PUBLISHING HOUSE. Those of us who are a bit older in years of service in the church are pleased to note the progress that has been made in all of our church publications. As yet, we are not burdened with the printed page. With but one church paper, and that one not large it is within the convenience and reach of all to be entirely familiar with its every page. Information essential to the intelligent co-operation of all may be found in every edition. Spiritual food and devotional reading fills every weekly issue, and like the word of God it ought to dignify the.

center table of every Brethren home. We are glad that it is a welcome guest in so many homes; at least enough so to justify its continuance. But yet there are entirely too few who read it. My experience is that those in every congregation who are really informed and are interested in the great forward movements and programs of the church in general are those who read the church paper. Little can be done until we have an intelligent and informed laity. What is going on in South America and Africa and in the eastern part of the United States ought to be known and appreciated by every home in our district. How can we be inspired by their strength and loyalty unless we know of their faith?

When we think of the work that ought to be done; when we see the growing tendency of our becoming more and more a number of isolated units; when we recognize the fact that our success lies in a measure, in the success of other local congregations, then we are constrained to feel that the pastor and people and paper are insolubly related, and this relation must be continued. Again I should like to see the time come when every Brethren Bible school would use the Brethren literature. We cannot build Brethren young people in the faith by placing in their hands literature that belittles our plea. We are suffering greatly as a church in losing our members to other faiths. Let us not lament it, brethren if we continually insist that other literature is just as good.

7. Again we have found a common interest in our Foreign Missionary program. We are grateful that our district is represented on the foreign field. Our district has ever been alive to foreign missions, and have responded to every appeal made by the church. And we also note with pleasure that we have several others who have given their lives to the work and are ready to go. And yet with all of this we ought not to be satisfied. We need more workers for our home and foreign mission fields. We need physicians and teachers in Africa. We need workers in the home field that are willing to make a sacrifice comparable to that on the foreign field. I am appealing to those to whom this may come to consider well the call of God.

Let us pray that this burden may so be laid upon the minds and hearts of the youth of our church that out from our numbers shall arise a number of our very best who shall consecrate their lives to this task. And let me add this word that the time is here when any one of our churches ought to support a worker on the foreign field. Yes, and there are single individuals in our congregations that could do the same thing and not financially embarrass themselves. What greater work could be done?

8. And last! Let me say one word with reference to the various auxiliaries. All are mighty big aids in the work of the church. But let us remember they are of value only as they contribute to the church. The church must be given the pre-eminence. We had better go through life with some of them cut off, than that they should fail in their purpose. Let the Christian Endeavor, the Bible school, the W. M. S. all be subordinate to the church, and make them worthwhile aids to the Christ-founded institution, each of them contributing their share of the responsibility in leading folks to Jesus Christ. I pray that God's blessings shall be upon us as a church. That we may go forth with a keener sense of our tasks, our opportunities and our responsibilities. Let us believe in God and in his plan for his church. Our God has not failed. He will not fail. Let us be found working in harmony with him. Personally, I believe I can do this better in the Brethren Church than anywhere else. I have never doubted my call or questioned my task, and what I speak for myself I trust I speak for all who hear me. May he bless us abundantly in the future. May he own the labor that we bring, so that when our life's labors shall be laid down, at the setting of our day's sun we shall have nothing of which to be ashamed.

OUR LITTLE READERS

HOW BOB RETURNED THE KINDNESS By Edward W. Frantz

Early one morning Mark Lewis was awakened by a low whining under his window. He crawled quickly out of bed and ran to the open window. The big, flat doorstone was just beneath him, and on the stone sat a puppy. The dog was brown and white, with a coat of long thick hair that would have been pretty if it had not been wet and muddy, full of snarls and tangled with burrs.

The dog hearing the slight noise that Mark made when he went to the window, looked up at him with a pair of soft brown eyes that seemed to say, "Please give me something to eat. I am a poor dog that has no home and is out of work!"

Mark hurried down and opened the door. The little dog came in, whimpering and wiggling all over. In a minute his pink tongue was lapping a dish of milk. Mark and his cousins Fred and Charlie named the dog Bob and kept him for their own.

One day when they had had him for about a week, they were playing with him in front of the house. Mark had an apple that he would throw for Bob to chase. They thought it was better fun sometimes not to throw the apple, but only to make the motion. Poor Bob would see Mark's arm move, and away he would dash, without waiting to see whether the apple went or not; and then he would look so puzzled that you could not help laughing at him.

The doctor who was driving along called to them, "Boys, I am sorry to see that you are lying to your dog."

"Why sir, what do you mean?" asked Fred.

"Well," said the doctor, "when you make a motion as if to throw the apple, your dog trusts you; he thinks you mean to throw it, and when you hold the apple back you really tell him a lie. By and by he will learn that he cannot trust you, and then he will not do what you tell him to. You ought never to lie to a dog."

That seemed funny to the boys at first, but they all liked the doctor, so they stopped fooling Bob. In time he became so well trained that he would do anything his young masters told him to do. Best of all he liked to bring things out of the water; and he had learned that he could trust his young friends surely, so if one of them made a motion toward the water, in Bob would go, certain that he would find there something which must be brought to land.

One afternoon the boys went down to the shore of the pond to play. While Mark and Fred were watching a turtle, little Charlie went over to a big rock that reached out into the water. All at once there was a splash and a scream, and Charlie was gone. He had slipped from the rock. The other boys ran toward him, and Mark lay down on his stomach, to reach out as far as he could; but Charlie was nowhere to be seen. In their fear both boys screamed at the top of their voices.

Both boys had the same thought at the same time. Bob could do what they could not. Each made a motion of throwing something into the water, and each cried, "In Bob, in! Go fetch it!"

With a great splash Bob leaped clear of the rock and began to swim in a circle. He had not made even one turn when Charlie's head came up close at hand. The dog did not have to be told what to do. He knew that he was there to get something, so he fastened his teeth in Charlie's coat collar, and in half a minute had him in shallow water, where the boys could drag him out.

That evening, when the doctor had come down from Charlie's room and had said that he would be all right in the morning, and the boys had told him again how quickly and how well Bob had acted, the doctor patted the dog's curly head tenderly, and turning to Mark said, "Now do you see, my boy, why I told you never to lie to a dog?"—Christian Evangelist.

THAT HONOR ROLL

It has been a long, long time since the full list of Brethren Evangelist Honor Roll churches was published, as we have been following the custom of publishing it only when a new church had won the right to appear in company with this honored list. However, we believe we are justified in presenting this list to our readers at this time whether we have the privilege of presenting the name of a new church or not.

Sometimes there is as much distinction attached to holding a place on such a list as there is in winning it for the first time, as sometimes the zeal and enthusiasm of the first campaign dies down.

The following churches have renewed their Honor Roll subscription lists since the Roll was last published in its entirety—

Ashland, fourteenth year; Buckeye City, eleventh year; Dayton, second year; Elkhart, eleventh year; Fairhaven, thirteenth year; Gretna, fourteenth year; Lathrop, eighth year; Linwood, second year; Long Beach, 1st church, fourteenth year; Napanee, thirteenth year; Peru, tenth year; Philadelphia, 1st church, twelfth year; Spokane, second year and Waynesboro, eighth year.

If you will notice this list carefully you will observe that a number of our best churches have been on this Honor Roll for eleven, twelve, thirteen or fourteen years. One can hardly help forming the conclusion that it really means something to a church to have a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll or these aggressive churches would not put forth so great an effort to retain a place with this group.

That Loyalty Campaign

One of the objectives of the Loyalty Campaign that has been pushed for several months is the maintaining of our present list of subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist and, if possible to increase it. But the response to the efforts that have been made to do this have not measured up to the results of the campaign of one year ago. We have used about every legitimate appeal we know how to use to persuade our old subscribers to renew promptly, but the results can not be bragged about. So we wondered if times and human nature were any different many years ago, and we took the trouble to look through some of the files of the Brethren Evangelist FORTY FIVE years back and found a couple of editorial items we wish to quote in this year NINETEEN HUNDRED THIRTY-TWO.

"First in the Field"

"It has become a custom for people to select their reading matter at this season of the year, and it is therefore the best time for agents to secure subscriptions. Members of the Brethren Church will find in the Evangelist, much that will quicken their interest in the work, and an effort ought to be made to call their attention to it before they have selected all the periodicals they feel able to take the coming year. We trust our agents and well-wishers will be active while the season lasts and gather in a large increase to the subscription list for 1887."

Further research uncovered the following at the head of the Editorial column of the Brethren Evangelist under date of December 1, 1886.

"Hard Times"

"Hard Times" is the excuse that some offer for not taking the paper. There are those, no doubt who do not feel rich, and who may be pressed for money. This is our condition, we know, and it is reasonable to believe that there are others in this condition. It is not a hard task to make a living, especially when a person indulges in no luxuries and works late and early all the time as we do. But we find much enjoyment in sacrificing for Christ, and we venture that it is not very much overdrawn to say that we spend little more for a living than many do for luxuries, who feel the times are too hard to take the paper.

"We are among the last in the world to ask others to sacrifice for our good if it was not necessary. But our church paper is published for the good of our cause, and all our brethren should certainly feel it a duty to give it such assistance as it needs. It needs your advice, the productions of your pens upon all the holy themes of Christianity and church work and your efforts as agents to increase its circulation, and your own financial support.

"If it is not what it should be, then as brethren, you should do what you are able to do to remedy this defect, and make reasonable allowance for frailties of human nature and error of judgment. Excellency of Christian character consists, partially, in forgiving others as we would have God forgive us.

"Ours is the only church in the world that grants to its members the privilege of keeping all the commands and ordinances without the traditions of men. This is a noble claim, and we invite you, brethren, to give us all the assistance you can in building up our paper and increasing our influence as a church. May the good Lord assist us to sacrifice for his cause and church on the earth."

Just a Remark or Two

Had we not already stated that the above quotation is taken from the editorial column of The Evangelist of December first, 1886, one might be led to believe it was written for this year of our Lord 1932. We have been told that "history repeats itself," but just recently it was stated by one who is an authority that "history NEVER repeats itself." However, we are quite sure that men react very much the same to certain conditions regardless of when and how often they occur. There is another old saying, "There is nothing new under the sun," that might well be applied to the excuses men offer for not doing some of the things they are urged to do. Upon the reading of the above quotation of forty-five years ago one may well conclude there are no new excuses to be offered for not taking the church paper.

Facing the Facts

This corner is being written in the evening of the last day of the year 1931, and we have just concluded making a few comparisons as revealed from the records of the year's business. In checking over the record of Brethren Evangelist subscriptions and renewals for the last two months of the last two years we find that in December alone in 1930 there were more subscriptions received and renewed than in the months of November and December combined in 1931. Further investigation reveals that more subscriptions were received and renewed in the last ten days of 1930 than in the last thirty days of 1931.

The excuse is "hard times", and no doubt the times are hard, they are TERRIBLY hard, and nowhere is this seen more clearly than in the Publishing House. The Business Manager doesn't get one good night's sleep in a week as it is impossible to get the weight of this matter off his mind as he endeavors to develop plans or schemes to keep the work going until "better times" really come. There are hundreds of subscribers to The Brethren Evangelist who ought to renew their subscriptions and they ought to do it NOW, and remove this burden, that is almost more than we can carry, from our shoulders.

All Working Together

Since our editor, Dr. Baer, has been confined to his bed with a serious illness, Dr. Bame and myself with the aid of other brethren at Ashland have been trying to get The Evangelist out on time each week in addition to our own work. And though Brother Baer is now on the mend, we still expect to find it necessary to carry on this task for another week at least. So we feel it would be a mighty fine thing if our pastors and churches would join with us and make this burden lighter by promptly making remittance for all financial obligations as promptly as possible so that we might be relieved of financial worries while these other obligations are resting upon us.

Publication Day Offering

Next week the Publication Day number of The Evangelist will appear and the plans for this special number are going forward regardless of the illness of the editor. With the aid of Dr. Bame and others we are trying to make it as good as possible under the circumstances and we only pray that the brotherhood may receive it in as gracious a spirit as the ones who have volunteered this service have manifested in the making of it. No one unacquainted with the work of editing and publishing church publications can realize the burdens and responsibilities of the work, but we solicit the prayers of all the brotherhood, not only for the restoration to health of Brother Baer, but also for strength for all the rest of the office force that they may be able to perform the tasks that the church has laid upon them.

Christianity in Business

By Henry R. Holsinger
Early Leader of the Brethren Church and of the Renaissance of Brethren Literature

The only true delineation of the Gospel of Christ is that it is thoroughly practical: something that is applicable to everyday life in every respect. The notion that Christianity consists in a devout countenance, a morning prayer, performance of a few ceremonies, a little church worship and an occasional holy groan, to the exclusion of equality in business and works of peace in practical life, belongs to the class of faith that is not accompanied by work—dead! It long since should have been buried.

The teachings of Christ and his authorized successors abound in rules that are useful in the experiences of business life: and if they were more generally obeyed even by Christian professors thus engaged, the land would be more prosperous, and the people more happy.

Obedience to the teachings of the notable Galilean wields an influence that is irresistible. If capital, at the present time, could be placed under the salutary control of Christian principle, applicable in business methods, a transformation would rapidly be consummated that would restore harmony between the employer and the employee. Tribulation and anguish, the cries of the starving and the clamor of the strikers would pass away, and contentment would feed the desires of unhappy thousands.

The simple exhortation to honesty, if made a general rule of business would work a wonderful change. As customs now are, a premium is put upon dishonesty. * * *

What the age wants, is more of the principle of Christianity in business and a more desirable condition can not be attained unless there is. Legislatures may make laws, soldiers may suppress for a season; but to make a pure commercial and mercantile stream, the fountain must be pure.—Evangelist, 1886.

DR. KYLE Comes to Ashland

The Seminary has been very fortunate this year in securing the promise of Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle for a series of archaeological lectures before our student body. As many readers of the Evangelist already know, Dr. Kyle has spent a large part of his life in field research and has to his credit many archaeological finds which are of high importance in confirming the Scriptures. Formerly president of Xenia Theological Seminary, where several of our ministers, including Brother Monroe and myself, had the privilege of sitting in his classes, Dr. Kyle recently resigned that position in order that he might devote his whole time to archaeological research and lecturing. Three of our ministers, Homer A. Kent, Herbert H. Tay and Kenneth M. Monroe, have accompanied Dr. Kyle on explorative trips to Palestine. Others have shared the fruitful benefits of his ministry at Winona Lake.

DATES of the Lectures

On account of his heavy schedule of lecturing in various institutions throughout the country, it was necessary to arrange Dr. Kyle's lectures here on two separate week-ends. For the benefit of nearby ministers who may wish to attend the schedule is given as follows:

February 5—Friday—9:30 A. M.; 7:30 P. M.

February 6—Saturday—10:00 A. M.; 7:30 P. M.

February 7—Sunday—10:30 A. M.; 2:30 P. M.

February 8—Monday—10:00 A. M.; 7:30 P. M.

February 12—Friday—9:30 A. M.; 7:00 P. M.

February 13—Saturday—10:00 A. M.; 7:30 P. M.

All the morning lectures, except Sunday, will be held at the College Chapel. Sunday morning Dr. Kyle will speak at the Brethren Church. All the evening lectures, except Sunday, will be held at the Brethren church. The second lecture on Sunday will probably be held in one of the downtown churches in a union service which may be set in the evening instead of the afternoon. Further announcement will be made on this point.

DR. KYLE'S Testimony

Here is Dr. Kyle's conclusion about the finding of archaeology: "The Bible narrative plainly interpreted at its face value is everywhere being sustained." "The recent testimony of Archaeology to Scripture, like all such testimony that has gone before, is definitely and uniformly favorable to the Scriptures at their face value, and not the Scriptures as reconstructed by Criticism."

We thank God for this clear word from such a distinguished scholar, and pray that he may be spared for many years of ministry to the Christian Church.

THE Idol of "Big" Business

In the last issue of Bibliotheca Sacra, of which he is the editor, Dr. Kyle writes a vigorous denunciation of an American idol that has gotten us into serious trouble lately.

"THE AMERICAN STANDARD has become an American fetish; in the minds of many people it is the principal object of worship. An idol worshipper once examined his god, and finding it a hollow image and full of rats, he knocked it all to pieces. An examination of this American fetish will make an equally discreditable discovery. The external appearance of the American Standard is a large income for everybody and a generous disposition to spend it. It looks well on the outside, but, like the heathen worshipper, let us look at its insides. What does this fetish contain? For what do the American people spend this increased income? In the maw of this plethoric creature we find . . . automobiles, and more automobiles, and fur coats and beauty parlors and golf clubs, and, for all these luxuries, installment contracts! And Big Business on the throne said, 'If at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery and dulcimer and all kinds of music . . . fall down and worship the image I have made.' Well, the people did fall down and worship, but they were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace just the same.

Questions and Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

Three. Recently a teacher in our Sunday school declared that John did not write the Gospel that bears his name and suggested that scholarship seemed against such a view. What do you think? Give any further help that may throw light on the present quarter's Sunday school lessons.—X.

This is a pertinent question and I am glad to reply to it rather fully for the present quarter's Sunday school lessons are all taken from John except the Temperance lesson. Many years ago I gave a long and critical study to the Johannine Problem, that is, the problem relating to the several books of the New Testament bearing the name of John including of course the Revelation. While in a few particulars I have had to change my conclusions by the discovery of some new knowledge on the whole they remain unchanged. I will state them concisely and so plainly that all may understand. They represent my decided convictions.

1. The Gospel according to John. Written by St. John, one of the Twelve Apostles, from Ephesus about the year 90. Zahn, one of the greatest German New Testament students, thinks we must place the date somewhere between 85 and 95 A. D. There has been a tendency recently among scholars of all shades of theological bias to bring the dates of all New Testament books nearer the Apostolic age. Notable among these is Harnack. Recently in reading again the discussion on this subject in Hastings' Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels, a notable and scholarly article by Strachan, Vol. 1, page 869 ff, I found the following statement of his conclusion—"In conclusion, the Gospel is a genuine Johannine work from the pen of the Apostle, who wrote from Ephesus." Accordingly it seems to me that men who have not given time, or who may not have the ability and training to speak with authority, to this matter should at least be very modest in their pronouncements.

2. The same man who wrote the Gospel is without doubt the author also of the great First Epistle of John. I place the date of this Epistle a little later than the writing of the Gospel. I believe the authorship of the First Epistle carries with it that of the Second and Third Epistles.

3. The Revelation. I believe the book of the Revelation of John was also written by John the Apostle. Contrary to the commonly accepted opinion that it should be dated in the nineties, that is perhaps between 90 and 95, I date the Apocalypse about the year 66 or 68. I have room here only for the briefest statement of the reasons for this early date.

(1) This date will account for all the linguistic difficulties the Greek of Revelation presents. The Gospel is written in very excellent Greek style which presents an impossible barrier, as many Greek students feel, to the same man being the author of Revelation if written at about the same date. Given the writing of Revelation by a Palestinian Jew about 66-68 we have sufficient time for this man, residing for the most part of the next thirty years in Ephesus, to acquire the finished style of the Gospel. On this position John could write the Revelation, under the sway of his Hebrew training and use his "rough Hebraistic Greek" soon after leaving Palestine and thirty years later write the fine and beautiful Greek of the Gospel and the Epistles. If we remember this simple explanation of what is to many an insuperable difficulty we shall not have to say as does one such scholar, "the same man could not possibly

He Being Dead, Yet Speaketh

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

Bible readers know that these words apply first, to Abel whose sacrifices were more acceptable to God than his brother's. It is the aim of this number of The Evangelist to let Henry R. Holsinger speak to those who but for him, would not be members of a church they cherish and to re-kindle for him a respect and remembrance that has been long since due him. The full appreciation that is due him, in my opinion, has never been written. I believe I know why, but that is not my object here or now; and lest I say too much and allow him too little, let us allow him to speak. These extracts were made from The Evangelist of various issues in 1886. What a testimony they make!

It seems that some admiring member of the church learned that Holsinger was of good Brethren stock and made some comments and finally wrote him concerning his relation to Alexander Mack, first leader and teacher of the Brethren. It is the nearest approach to an autobiography I have discovered. It is very terse—almost barbed:

"To the best of my knowledge my grandmother Holsinger was a granddaughter of Alexander Mack, Jr. But I don't think that that had much to do with my church work, for it seems to me I would have done just what I did do if my grandmother's grandfather had been the veriest old fogey. Still, I can't tell; I try to act from principle, but by times I feel that I am entirely a creature of circumstances, for so many things have occurred without any design on my part. I am strongly inclined to the view that the present reform has not been born of blood, nor to the will of the flesh, but of the Spirit, and to God shall be the praise." The last lines should be proudly pondered by all Brethren.

That he was a man of deep personal convictions and entirely unable to keep silent when wrongs were apparent to him, is assured. The purpose of the founding of his papers was always clearly stated and he knew and others knew why he was sacrificing and daring to do unusual things. This deep conviction was splendidly expressed in the following:

"In the great play of life there are many places where it is next to criminal to hold your peace. To stand quietly by and see throngs rush into the vortex of premature death and final misery, and sound no note of warning, is not the part of a child of God.

"There is a time to speak and there is a time to remain silent; and we must be our own prompters at times when we should speak. * * *

"Esther's silence meant death to her own people: now, dear reader, your silence may mean misery for your friend or associate in eternity. Then speak and warn them of the danger. Enter into the presence of the Lord and plead in behalf of those who are under the condemnation of sin. The tongue is made to speak and it should be freely used in exposing sin and in warning the lost."

In another issue, urging the right direction of all conversations, he says:

Talk About Christ

"There is not enough talk about Christ in these times. The week is almost wholly spent by the average Christian in labor for the benefit of the flesh, and when the day comes which God has set apart for himself, that is too often spent in talking about business matters, farms, stock, different ways of making money, and the successes and failures of other persons in hoarding the possessions of this world. There is so little preaching for Jesus in a quiet way, now, that a turn ought to be made in favor of more. It is deplorable to observe that there are so few, especially sisters, who have a message to tell about Jesus. It is almost pressed upon the considering mind to believe that there are persons who regard it an accommodation to God and the church to make a profession of religion. They are frigid cold and they send a chill over the heart of the speaker for the unsearchable riches, whenever they come in contact with him."

The wonderful vision of the man is clearly set forth in another issue in which he senses the difficulties of the effort that was thrust upon them when he envisioned a movement that would gain power as the years passed. Who of us has not had our dream that the thing would happen according to this paragraph? Occasionally, we hear that our movement will never become great or strong. It is always disgusting to me to hear that. If I thought that, well, I'll not tell you what I think. However, I do want to pass on to you this vision. What else can we call it?

The Outlook—a Prophecy

"Notwithstanding all opposition, our work continues to progress, and like the advance in the field of invention, the results will astonish the laborers of a few years hence. The lessons of toil and sacrifice that are now being taught, will make those receiving them masters of every situation, and then, a little effort will have great effect, while now great effort is required for little effect. A good cause well supported is like multiplying by itself and the product again and again. * * *

"Another feature of promise is that our people have come to a realization of just what we are and where we are. Those who had self and the dollar foremost in their minds have learned, in a measure, where their true place is and that the Brethren Church can offer no money bribe to induce men to be members in its body as laborers in its ministerial ranks. * * *

"Our future is a promising one, and therefore hope is not an illusion, when it sees, in the future a great and zealous religious people bearing the honorable name, The Brethren."

He was unflinchingly against compromise and hedging. This appears again and again. Whoever wanted to join the new movement must comply with its aims and doctrines. This is most interesting in the light of the fact that there were many small organizations that desired to unite with theirs. This point is clearly shown but there is space here for only this:

Doctrinal Preaching

"In the subject of doctrinal preaching, I would remind the Brethren that non-swearing, anti-war, against suing at law, paying promptly all honest debts, opposition to secret oath-bound societies, are ancient favorite doctrines of the Brethren, and founded on the Gospel. Our ministers should preach them fearlessly and diligently cultivate the sentiment. Gospel preaching will disseminate them as surely as it will those of trine immersion, the Lord's Supper, feet-washing, Salutation, etc. Our creed is the WHOLE Gospel."

To the Point

Recalling that we have reviewed the deep conviction and "plain-spokenness" of the man, it is but fair that we should quote this from the second issue of the first of his papers the "Christian Family Companion," issued only after his home church district had granted permission:

"As to the purpose we have:

"First, to furnish my brethren with a weekly journal which shall be free from all vanity, fiction, and falsehood, and, at the same time, give them all the information in regard to the "signs of the times" that may be necessary to their spiritual edification or physical welfare.

"Second, by affording a medium for the free discussion of all subjects of importance upon which there may not be a unity of opinion."

There were four reasons but I pause at this to remind us that that it was the fearlessness of the truth that was back of the whole Progressive Movement and had this man been as fearful of his theological tenets as some modern brethren seem to be, it would have never gotten anywhere. No doubt this last reason which he fearlessly gave for the publishing of a paper where there was none in the denomination, had more to do with the separate movement than any other human reason. There is a wealth of corroboration here.

That The Evangelist has always been a problem is evident from the following and some of the brethren at the office here may well be glad that it has not continued.

Profit or Loss?

.. "THE EVANGELIST has been far from a paying enterprise. Its proprietors have several thousand dollars invested in it and so far have not realized a cent from the investment, and its editors have never received enough to meet the expenses of what would be regarded a respectable living by the average member of the Brethren church. * * * Now Brethren, do not forget that we are willing to do all that we can to send out an acceptable paper and favor us with prompt payment so that our agents will find some pleasure in working for the paper; and when you want it improved we shall find great pleasure in doing it as soon as we are supported."

That Holsinger's convictions about money were as pronounced as that of speech rings out as clear as a bell in another excerpt on

What Riches is Like

"It appears to me that riches is like drunkenness. A man never knows when he gets it. If a fellow is so full that he feels upward for the ground, he will be insulted if you say he is drunk. And so, when you speak of the rich to the man worth twenty-five thousand, he will think you are alluding to his neighbor who is worth fifty thousand; and when you address the fifty thousand man, he will think of the man who owns a hundred thousand, and so on. Everybody thinks that the rich ought to give; but to find the rich, aye, that's the rub.

Perhaps you want my definition, and you shall have it free gratis for nothing: when a person has so much that the interest thereon, with what he himself can easily earn, will keep him, such a person is rich, and he ought to give liberally. Those who have more than that are very rich and should give very liberally from their abundance. Let everybody try this rule upon himself, and then report."

Our final appeal is from his pen.

How Get the Money?

"It appears I can reach the middle classes, and have been pronounced a pretty good beggar; but I am at my wit's end as to how to manage those who have large means and could donate large amounts. Who will put me upon a plan by which it can be done? And what is the average opinion of the church, in regard to the person who is worth his thousands, and has money at interests,

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

By Charles A. Bame

Remember Publication Day in Your Church. The date is January twenty-fourth or the time nearest possible.

The main editorial this week is mainly by H. R. Holsinger, the original Progressive Leader and the items collected are full of the very essence of Brethrenism as originally promoted. We believe that his intellectual genius and his great sacrifices have never been fully recognized.

Dr. Baer, editor, has so improved that we expect him to be able to manage the next issue. His illness has been somewhat severe and complete recovery will not be speedy. But all the force of your Publishing Company has been glad to be of help to him in his trial of affliction.

We believe that every article of this issue should be read by every member of the church. They are unusual and have been made by sacrifice during the illness of Dr Baer. Busy men have taken time off to give this service and we believe, have given us meritorious and apt contributions. They will do no good unread.

The report of the meeting at Sunnyside, Washington, under the leadership of Pastor Fry, assisted by Dr. Bell, former pastor, is full of good news. Twenty-four baptisms, with 13 received into fellowship together with 19 previously received during the year is a story of splendid progress. Other things are being achieved by this western church.

The personal letter to Professor Stuckey that appears in the columns of news is offered because it responds to his recent editorial and because it calls attention to an issue for all thoughtful people who desire to do the best for our great causes and best advance among our people. It needs no comment but it does need careful reading and consideration.

The Bibliography presented in this issue by Prof. Stuckey is full of suggestions for any who desire to have source-material for the study of our history. I may say that the history of our church is one of the most interesting episodes of American life. This article will enable anyone to find out what he desires to find out. It is a fine contribution to this issue of the Evangelist.

A letter to Dr. Baer from Pastor Riddle tells that he is working on "copy" for a Christian Endeavor number of the Evangelist to be forthcoming soon. Watch for that number. He also says that he is very busy getting ready for the fourth revival in which he is to be the preacher, the fourth in five years in his church in Warsaw, Indiana. That may mean a number of things, but we believe for one, it means that this pastor is doing very satisfactory work both as pastor and evangelist. May his largest harvest be this one.

The newsy notes of Dr. Jacobs will be very interesting reading for those who watch the progress of the College. It appeals to me that we might have a good many brethren who would be able and glad to attend these unusual lectures. I am bold to say that they will be unusual. Prof. McClain's announcement in another column will tell more about him. The dates are Friday, February 5, 6, 7, 8 and 13 and 14 of the next week. I assure any who may make it possible to be here will thank me for emphasis that may induce them to attend.

Another bit of good news comes from a nearby church at Harrah. Snows! Snows for two weeks sound strange to Ohioans who have seen only a "skiff" so far. We have really had no winter. The report of this meeting with Brother Kinsey, pastor, and Dr. Bell, evangelist, is also cheering. Twenty-five, all told, confessed or reconverted, among whom were three fathers, ought to perceptibly strengthen a mission church. Now, let other pastors and evangelists show us similar gains. Nothing can do for the brotherhood what a lot of revivals will do. The writer also believes that it has been a long time since the same opportunity for evangelism has been opened for a church with a message like ours.

The writer wonders if our churches think of unemployed evangelists in the light that they are thinking of other unemployed people. I have seen tears running down the cheeks of men who crave the opportunity to go out and preach the gospel and then yet, do not get the calls. I am sure that financial demands made at other times would not be required. We have a number of men who do not care to foster their own calls; men who feel that the way should be opened to them, who could bring great blessing to our churches. Why not ask them for a date and price and keep them busy? Why not? Many churches need the gains that these leaders could give. Let them be kept busy!

An unusual opportunity is now being offered all who desire to study the basic things in Christianity. Beginning last Sunday, the Sunday school lessons started the study of the Gospel of John. It is the record of the rock-foundation of Christianity and original theological beliefs and commitments. Coincident with that, the writer of these briefs has just begun to write for the next quarter's lessons and they begin with Genesis. What an opportunity for basic things comes to the Bible lover in the next six months. Our Sunday school officers and our pastors should originate a campaign for larger Bible classes for these months. Maybe you should take pledges for just these two quarters or, maybe, just one quarter. By the end of that time a good habit may have been formed. Suppose we try a new sort of appeal.

The writer has received appeals from several sources for money. I need not name the institutions that have thus called, save to say that they have been accepted as movements for the betterment of our social and religious life and are now in dire straits financially. Of course there are many cries for help these days and many of us feel that we have done our bit; but it is not a "bit," that the times demand. I do not respond to them all, but I am assured that unless heroic sacrifices are made in these times, we shall be greatly retarded in our spiritual progress. One of the big jokes of the American audience today is Prohibition. In one of the most historic gatherings of the year to which I recently listened, prohibition was the one thing that got the laugh. That's serious. Brethren, are you sounding the reverse note? If Brethren do not continue to cry for Peace and Temperance, what shall we expect of those whose training has not been like ours for the past two hundred years? If our teachers, preachers and Church Boards do not stand for these things when the course of events are to the contrary, what shall be our account to those who have sacrificed to obtain these great advances?

The Need for A Denominational Publishing Plant

By J. C. Beal, President Publication Board

Those who are planning the special "Publication Number" of the Brethren Evangelist have asked that, as president of the Board, I write under the above caption.

The need for a publishing plant for the dissemination of our distinctive church doctrines was fully recognized by the Brethren Church some years ago when purchase of our building and equipment was made. Since that time the church has year after year placed its approval upon this action by the observance of "Publication Day." All this makes it unnecessary to argue as to the need. All recognize the need but have all fully recognized the obligation thus incurred? The building and equipment have been purchased and have been used the past years. The plant is ours. Work has been going on week after week.

While it is not necessary to argue as to the need, since this has been fully demonstrated, it is necessary, however, to be reminded of another thing. The purchase of the building which houses our equipment and makes possible the carrying on of our publishing interests incurred, as the church well knows, an indebtedness of some proportions. Since the brotherhood has placed its approval on the purchase of the building it thus also has accepted the obligation for the debt against the property. This obligation should be fully and distinctly recognized by every member of the Brethren Church. Only in this way will it be possible to secure the cooperation necessary to meet what must of necessity be met. That our obligation relative to this debt may be met, the National Conference has designated Sunday, January 24, as "Publication Day." At this time the churches are asked to make an offering, the gift of the day being applied on the indebtedness against the property and for the carrying on of our publishing interests. The response on the part of the churches in past years, while not everything it might have been, was fairly generous and has helped in a definite way to further the work of the Publication Board. For this help all are very grateful.

The depression through which we are passing has made it unusually difficult to meet the expense of the publication of our various periodicals and out of the income from the plant it is impossible to meet any part of the indebtedness against the building. This makes it especially necessary to come again to the churches for the help they owe and doubly imperative that we have the real cooperation of all the churches at this time. No one knows better than the writer just what some of our churches are now facing due to bank failures and the general depression in which we find ourselves, but this condition dare not stand in the way of doing everything possible to be done. The present situation gives opportunity to test our willingness to sacrifice that the work of the church may be carried forward. It will be fine seriously to consider whether it may be possible that we did not do our full duty during the years of plenty. Had we fully met our obligations in the past the indebtedness against the building would have been fully provided and we would thus be free from the burden under which we are now resting. Since this was not done when it could have been done with comparative ease, it must now be done by real sacrifice. The members of the Publication Board have the utmost confidence in the membership of the Brethren Church and feel sure that the needed cooperation on the part of both ministry and laity will be given and that this absolute need will be met. Pray the matter through definitely and let the Holy Spirit direct in your giving. This obligation should have its rightful place in the distribution of our gifts. All your Board is asking is that this work have its share in the gifts of the brotherhood. If this is done, we shall be entirely satisfied.

With faith to believe that the church will again rise to meet the situation and give the needed help in this time of real crisis in all our church work, I am, your servant.

On Knowing Your Church

J. Allen Miller, D.D.

I have been an uncompromising advocate of the dignity and glory of the Church. I believe the Church is a divine institution. It was founded by our Lord Jesus Christ. It is builded by him. He himself says, "I will build my Church." More than that he says there shall be no power mighty enough to overthrow it. The New Testament reveals much more about the Church among which is the teaching that the Church is the "Body of Christ" and we who belong to the Church are "severally members of the body." Accordingly my life is the life of the body of which I am a member. All this leads me to two or three observations.

The first is this: I ought to uphold and support the Church with my whole might. I have no right to traduce, to slander, to outrage the Church by either word or deed. To do so is to dishonor our Lord whose body the Church is. We ought each and all to live, to act and to work with our utmost endeavor to magnify, to glorify and to adorn the Church with a character portrayed by Paul in Eph. 5:27. Let us herald forth far and wide the power, the beauty and the exalted worth of the Church of the "Living God, the pillar and ground of the Truth." One of the most effective means of doing this is through the printed page in the literature of the Church.

My second observation centers around the fact that I must know the work in which my interest is to be effectively expressed. I can not have much interest in a movement or in an institution about whose workings I know little or nothing and care less. My interest grows in that institution which makes an appeal to me. But there can be no appeal where there is no knowledge. For this reason I have been a reader of the Evangelist since becoming a member of the Church. I am anxious to know what the local churches are doing. I always have been and am yet intensely interested in evangelism and in missions. I rejoice over every report of a successful evangelistic effort. I thank God for the man who can by his Spirit become the humble and obedient minister of the Word through which men are saved. Hence I love to read even extended accounts of evangelistic meetings. I think the Brethren should report more faithfully. Here is a tremendous source of inspiration to others and unless we read our Church paper we lose this inspiration and encouragement. The same holds true about all mission news whether from our home fields or from the foreign parts and the outposts of the missionary activities of the Church as a whole. But I am especially interested in all forms of Church news and have had countless blessings in the reading thereof. I would not wish to lose this source of spiritual uplift and inspiration. So I am strongly in favor of making a "NEWSY" Evangelist of the Church paper in which we are especially interested.

Third, I believe of course in my own denomination. With all apologies that one must usually make for his denominational allegiance properly made I AM EVEN STRONGER THAN EVER FOR MY CHURCH. I believe we should propagate her doctrines, extend her borders, increase her membership. I believe we should beautify and adorn our personal living with all the virtues and graces of the Christian life so beautifully exemplified in the New Testament. I believe we should cultivate enthusiasm and joy in the service of our Master in the Church. I know of no agency which our day affords the Church that can be so powerful and so far-reaching in influence as to the Press of the Church.

Here are three good reasons why I believe in our Church Literature and am willing to support it to my full ability and responsibility.

Making Brethren

By K. M. Monroe, Th.D.

The dissemination of Christian truth is the work of both our Seminary and Publishing House. By virtue of teaching in the former, I have an active interest in the latter. The Good News of the Gospel does not spread itself but is dependent upon the witnessing of the tongue and the contact with the word.

Dr. Luke tells us (Acts 1:1) that in his Gospel he recorded certain things that "Jesus began both to do and teach." In the Great Commission Jesus commands us to do three things: Disciple, baptize, and teach. More particularly, in regard to the last admonition, he tells us we are to teach men "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." These two Scriptures may be blended into one thought, impressing upon us the fact that we are bound to preach the Word. One has well said, "If your religion is not true, you ought to change it; if it is true, you are bound to propagate it."

In our day when every false religion, sect, and ism is using the printed page to make known their particular tenets and vagarious interpretations of the Bible, we, adherents to the Brethren faith, must not neglect the printer's ink. Further, it is not sufficient for us to only use the literature of other denominations no matter how orthodox we may count it to be. Brethren truth is distinctive! Other denominations which have their own particular emphases relative to portions of the Word, are proud of the characteristics they thus gain, and very naturally saturate their literature with the same. Through the printed page they capitalize their distinctive beliefs. As a Church with a unique message, at least unique in points, we can afford to do no less.

It is imperative that our Church produce a literature of its own, and this must be produced by our own men. In my own thinking it is lamentable that we are not giving to our people and to others, even more than we are, works on Brethren truth. Then again, on the other side, our people should use for wide dissemination our literature that is published. Our Publishing House is trying to do its part and for the two counterparts, writing and reading, the Brethren Church is almost entirely dependent upon you who are reading this Evangelist. The proper order is: First, literature written by our own men; second, this literature published in our own publishing house; third, this Brethren literature read by all Brethren people and passed on to others.

Some twenty or more years ago a certain denomination decided they would characterize their preaching appeals by two things: first, evangelism; second, emphasis of their distinctive doctrines. They have been preaching "the faith once delivered" far and wide and indoctrinating their people. Could the Brethren Church do better than emphasize these two in our day? Let us win men and women to our Lord and then make them Brethren. Our Publishing House can aid us in both.

In our Seminary Library there are books and books of sermons. Pamphlets are easily obtainable containing sermonic expositions of selected Scriptures. But where can we find Brethren sermons on controverted texts for our young men to peruse? More of our ministers should publish some of their sermons. I see no reason why a part of the minister's tithe should not be used for this purpose, or a special fund be set aside by the local church, or the publishing expense paid by a tithing layman interested in spreading the Word. This may be applied also to missionaries and to the laity. Modesty holds many back and because of this it is well that the church take the lead. Why should all sermons, after being heard by a few hundred, find their way, sooner or later into the furnace? Continuing on, such productions should be sent free in adequate number to our churches and they in turn should freely distribute them to all worshippers who, after reading, can plant them "in good ground" readers and they, the readers, will bring forth fruit for our Lord and our Church.

The Brethren enterprise of publishing Brethren literature should not be neglected and most certainly should have our adequate financial support. It is my conviction that our denominational growth, is dependent not only on the spoken word but the written word.

Brother Holsinger and the Early Publications of The Church

By Martin Shively, D.D.

From my earliest recollections, I have known the name of H. R. Holsinger, because the first publication I remember having seen was The Christian Family Companion, of which he was editor and publisher. Of course I do not recall the date of my first sight of that paper, but it must have been in the late 60s or early 70's of the last century. Yes, I know there was an even earlier publication, but since it was issued only monthly, and probably had a limited circulation, it could hardly have made either a wide or a deep impression. The Companion at once sprang into wide favor, and exerted an influence both wider and deeper than either its editor or friends could foresee. When I remember that from the organization of the church, in 1708 to 1851, a span of 143 years, there was no universal medium of communication between the scattered elements of the church, and that except for the Annual Meeting which was not held annually until toward the close of this period, and the more local gatherings at the times of communion services, I cannot be much surprised at what took place during the 70's and 80's, when the body was rent and divisions resulted, which, in spite of the fact that the causes which brought them about have all but passed away, have not been healed. The birth of The Christian Family Companion, January 3, 1865, as the first weekly journal in the church, at once revealed both in its editorial and contributors' columns, that there was ability in the church, the presence of which had hardly been suspected. It revealed further that there were diversities of opinion on matters of polity, and none in matters of real Bible doctrines. It also revealed the fact that the church was being touched with the spirit of progress, as produced by contacts with educational agencies of various kinds, and that a heaven was being implanted which would have to be reckoned with at no late date. The presence of this heaven found expression in the rise of other journals, and within a few years, five weekly papers were in the field, which, while not differing widely either in doctrinal teaching or editorial policy, give a wider platform for expression by those who had an opinion to voice, or a message to impart. As could easily have been expected, with so large a number entering the field, differences of opinion not only found expression, but were widely heralded, and one of two things was bound to happen.—Either such love and forbearance as the gospel is calculated to develop, would prevail, in spite of minor differences of opinion upon matters more or less non-essential, or division would result. What really happened is history, painful to contemplate, by those of us who had no part in the fratricidal struggle. But out of that struggle has come at least a few achievements, and a birth of policies worth while. Thus the Brethren Church has its Brethren Evangelist, owned and controlled by the church and its official organ. The Church of The Brethren has its Gospel Messenger, in which are united the various publications which had, until recently been more or less independent, and this paper is also the property of the church, ably edited, and is one of the best, if indeed not the very best which comes to my desk. The Old Order Brethren have their Vindicator, a monthly journal, which is the mouthpiece of their church. These alone hold the field in the denominations which they serve, and these deserve not only the patronage but the unqualified support of the people for whom they exist. Without such mediums of communication, there could be little coherence in these bodies of Christians, and without the wider ministries they bring to their people, spiritual life could not be at so high a level as it attains by their help. Thus for our own sake, and for the sake of the church which to us is the best church in the world, we must be loyal to our publications.

The College and Our Publications

By President Edwin Jacobs, Ph.D.

It may seem at first thought as if there would be small relation between our educational institution and our publications and yet the College is vitally interested in the type of literature which issues from our denominational press. It is a regrettable fact that our clientele is so small that the worthwhile publications of the various faculty members have to seek publicity through presses other than our own. Within the year upwards of a score of papers have been published by the Faculty of the College, some of which would have been worth while in our own denomination. If our resources as a denomination were larger, there are many articles which should be printed by ourselves.

As it is now, all our text-books, magazine articles, and general references, are from the presses of others. Hence, the viewpoint on any controversial subject is often one which we do not accept, or if we do accept we do so with reservations. This is often a handicap to teaching, for such printed matter must be sifted, analyzed, and made useful to the purpose of the teacher. And what is more, a bent is often given to certain discussions, which, if we were publishing our own matter, would not happen. No one but a teacher knows the problems faced in a classroom, using texts which by no means represent the viewpoint of the teacher. This is a cause of constant misunderstanding. This may seem like a presumption,—that teachers here could make their own text books, yet the fact remains that whatever criticism we may have of any matter, must reach the public through presses not our own.

But what is still more, it is important that all our publications be on a high intellectual plane. Colleges are founded for the discovery, interpretation, and dissemination of the truth and if truth anywhere should be evident, it is in religious publications. I take it that this holds true in our published matter. If, at the College we rely almost wholly upon the printed matter of others, it ought to be true that when we come to teaching and studying our own denominational doctrines they ought to be issued by ourselves.

This makes it rather imperative, it seems to me, that we print and then USE IN OUR CHURCHES, our own denominational literature. If it is true that even at the College we are at times at variance with our texts, how much more would this be true if we had to rely upon others to print and edit our own church literature. If we as a denomination have any message for the world at all, it would seem that we should publish it.

Our Sunday school literature, our tracts, and our denominational weekly paper, ought to reflect the spirit, intelligence, and genius of our people. There is no reason why they should be second to any in their scholarship and in their adherence to the Scriptures. Here at the College we have several hundred young people to whom we are under obligation for leadership. It is a comfort and joy to know that when we get them to the Sunday school or when they seek information about the denomination which owns and controls the school, that they can find correct information in our printing. It is worth while to have in the magazine room at the College, our own publications along with the rest from other and highly diverse presses. And these publications should be of such a type that they will compare favorably with the best of others.

A college which today, leans too far away from discovered truth, is looked upon with more or less suspicion and the same ought to be so about religious publications. They ought to have an unmistakable and frank attitude towards truth. This can only come through correct scholarship and a deep devotion to the truth of the Scriptures. There need be no schism between secular learning and religion. So I heartily commend to our people that they read and support our own church literature for it is certain that if we do not print what we need, no one else is going to do it for us. It may not be perfect,—few things are,—but for the most part our own publications so far as they go, compare favorably with the best. And what is more, with fuller support, they can still be made better. I must quote once more that favorite verse of mine, "ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

If I understand at all the purpose of our printed matter and of the College, it is the same for each one, viz., the finding and spreading of truth. On the part of the world, nevertheless, and on the part of our press, the spreading of religious truth. Both are precious commitments to us and both impose a responsibility. I hope that our press shall always stand true to revealed truth and that it shall be brought forward by the pens of many, in fact all of our leaders. Thus as the diamond reflects all the colors in light, so our church literature should reflect the truth from its various angles. And there ought to be great freedom in expressing the truth as each man sees it.

CUT ARMS, STUDENTS VOTE

Poll of 70 Colleges Also Reveals Opposition to Compulsory Drill

A group of American students who spent last summer studying at Geneva took the initiative in organizing the Intercollegiate Disarmament council last September for the purpose of vocalizing disarmament sentiment among American students prior to the Geneva conference. This council now reports the results of a nation-wide straw vote of 70 American colleges and universities; Luther Tucker of Yale, chairman of the council, submitting the report. Of the 24,345 students voting, 92 per cent favor the reduction of armaments; 63 per cent urge the United States setting an example by beginning to disarm without waiting for other nations. One-third of the students favor 100 per cent cut, provided all nations agree to the same ratio; one-seventh favor 100 per cent cut without regard to the course followed by other nations.

The poll reveals a strong feeling against the compulsory feature of military training in colleges: 81 per cent of students voting are opposed to compulsory drill; but only 38 per cent favor the elimination of military training from the colleges and universities.

The questions in the poll, with results, follow:

(1) If all nations join in reducing military and naval establishments intended for use against each other, how much disarmament would you favor? (Check approximate figure desired.)

Of the 24,345 students, 8005 voted 100 per cent reduction; 13,914 reductions from 25 to 75 per cent; 1878, no reduction.

(2) Do you favor the American delegation to the general disarmament conference taking the initiative in calling upon all nations to join us in reducing armaments?

Yes, 17,785. No, 3288.

(3) Do you favor our setting an example for other nations by reducing our expenditures on armaments?

Yes, 15,284. No, 8501.

(4) Do you favor American adherence to the world court upon the basis of the Root protocols?

Yes, 12,848. No, 4548.

(5) Do you favor compulsory military training in colleges?

Yes, 3720. No, 16,030.

(6) Do you favor dropping military training in colleges?

Yes, 7292. No, 11,704.

(7) Have you had military training?

Yes, 3766—The Christian Century.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTION

The 11th quadrennial convention of the Student Volunteer movement began with an analysis of world problems by Kirby Page. It closed with characteristic missionary addresses by the traditional leaders of the movement, John R. Mott and Robert E. Speer.

For this return to normalcy substantial reasons can be advanced. The radicalism of most American college students exists largely in the imagination of their admirers. As one of the speakers put it, our youth are "serious about indifferent matters, and indifferent about serious matters." The strongest appeal of the Student Volunteer movement is to the small college rather than the great university, and to young people of orthodox traditions. The Detroit meeting illustrated the danger of the horse stampeding up the hill and leaving the cart behind it.

Depression Affects Attendance

The attendance dropped from 3,300 at Detroit to 2,200. Of course this decline can be largely ascribed to the times, but the writer is of the opinion that the cost of the convention to those who attend is unjustifiably high. For instance, the registration fee for a gathering of little more than four days was $8.00, which works out at something like 30 cents an hour for the program offered.

People attend conventions and sit through weary waves of words hoping that a "great moment" will arrive, when they will be lifted out of themselves by somebody's passion and eloquence. Our young people did not go to Buffalo in vain. On Saturday night the meeting reached its peak with the address of Walter Judd, not so long ago a student volunteer himself, recently returned from the interior of China where he had charge of an isolated American board hospital for six years. Judd's thesis was that the way of love, when it is also the way of the cross, work—and he had plenty of illustrations from his own experience. With utter lack of self-consciousness he revealed how the Christian motive had got hold of his life and what it had done to him. When our faith incarnates itself in such a life of service the appeal to us is simply terrific. With such men about there is no danger of the Student Volunteers becoming extinct.—John R. Scotford in The Christian Century.

WE DON'T BELIEVE IT!

According to the New York Police, there are 32,000 speakeasies in Greater New York. And according to the Advertisers' Mailing Service, who make it their business to know, there are only 7,699 grocery and delicatessen stores in the five boroughs of the greater city. In other words, it takes four times as many establishments to supply the thirst of wet New Yorkers as to supply the hunger of all the men, women and children in New York. We don't think any intelligent person believes this.

Considering the fact that if there are 32,000 speakeasies in the city, that allows only 218 persons, including children, babies, and adults who do not drink, for each speakeasy, we may be pardoned for saying—

"We don't believe it."—Christian Herald.

WORLD PEACE

"Let us have faith to believe not only that a warless world is possible, but that it is as sure as the promises of God.

"Let us not be too greatly concerned by the thunderings of a Navy League which accuses the President of the United States of 'abysmal ignorance' and sneers at the 'impelling motives back of his efforts at every turn to restrict, to reduce, and to starve the United States Navy.'

"The average churchman has but a meager conception of the pressure brought by powerful interests upon our high officials or of the abuse and misrepresentation to which they are subjected when they seek to curb the activities of militarists in and out of office.

"But here also 'anything can now be done which is intrinsically worth doing.'

"If, as we believe, the war against war is ordained of God, we must not faint or falter.

"If the strategic chance offered by the Geneva Disarmament Conference is not seized by the believers in world peace, how can God forgive us for our lack of faith?"—Reformed Church Messenger.

"The world expenditure on all arms is now nearly five billions of dollars yearly, an increase of about 70 per cent over that previous to the Great War. We stand today with nearly 5,500,000 men actively under arms, and 20,000,000 more in reserves. Because of fear and inability of nations to cooperate in mutual reductions, these vast forces, greatly exceeding those of the pre-war period, still are to be demobilized, even though twelve years have passed since the Armistice was signed."—From an address delivered, May 4, 1931.—Herbert Hoover.

but will not help in paying the College debt? Is such a one all right? Is the minister who has talent and influence, but who will not preach the gospel, because he can not make money at it, doing his duty? I hope the rich will think of these things. * * *

"I hope those who do not have much but who are willing to give in proportion to that which they have, will continue to help, and help and help, until we get the necessary amount raised. * * *

"At some places I am received as if I were a patent right agent or had an ax to grind. Why, my dear brethren, I am only out helping you to discharge your obligations. It is your school and your church I am urging you to support, as well as mine. I am your servant, and all I ask of you is to do your duty. If I could do my duty without asking you to do yours, it would be a long time before I would go begging. I wish our people would get into possession of more Christian dignity, which would create within them a desire to do their share of all Christian work, without being coaxed or driven into it. I don't believe that shirking duty is a Christian grace."—From The Evangelist, 1886.

OUR BIBLE STUDY

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

IX. Seven great parallel Prophecies

Undoubtedly the prehistoric nations were under the same providence of God as more modern peoples, but we do not have dates and details of their history nor recorded prophecies concerning them, more than the vague predictions of Noah concerning his sons.

The prophecies which outline the remaining history of the world coincide with the "times of the Gentiles" beginning with ancient political Babylon and ending with Armageddon. Covering this period from different points of view there are seven great prophetic passages. Each of these has seven parts, the first four giving the course of the age from the time of the prophecy onward to the time of the end, and the last three giving the closing events of the age. These divisions correspond to the seed time and the harvest of the world, to the precursory and final fulfillment of certain great predictions. The four prophecies in the Old Testament are of such a nature that if Christ had been accepted by Israel they could have had their final and complete fulfillment at that time, but as he was rejected, they have had typical or precursory fulfillments and await the final fulfillment at the end of the age. The church is not revealed in them, but a place for it is provided.

First, The statue of Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan. 2), interpreted by Daniel, gives the four great world empires that were to follow, seen in their gradual change from absolute monarchy to democracy and final anarchy.

Course of the age

1. The head of gold is Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (vs. 38).
2. The breast and arms of silver is Medo-Persia. Daniel 8:20 shows that this kingdom was considered as one and not two as some pretend.

3. The body of brass is Greece (vs. 29 with 8:20).

4. The legs of iron and feet of iron and clay is Rome, not named but clearly described.

End time events

5. The mixture of iron and clay (vss. 42, 43) is the rise of representative governments.

6. The stone cut out without hands (vss. 44, 45) is the coming of Christ in judgment on the nations.

7. The great mountain (vs. 45) is the kingdom of heaven on earth. Isa. 2.

Second, The four beasts (Dan. 7), giving the beastly aspect of world powers and the career of the western "little horn," the papacy as precursor of the beast of Revelation.

Course of the age

1. The lion with eagle's wings (vs. 4). This was the emblem of Babylonia. The wings were plucked and a man's heart given to it in the conversion of Nebuchadnezzar (4:25-37).

2. The bear (vs. 5) was Medo-Persia, the three ribs being Babylonia, Media and Persia, and the "much flesh," Egypt, Libia, Ethiopia, etc.

3. The leopard was Greece under Alexander (8:2).

4. The great and terrible beast is Rome (vs. 7), which was divided first into two and then into ten parts.

End time

5. The little horn I believe to be imperial Rome revived in the political papacy, and to be revived in the empire of the antichrist. The papacy conquered three of the ten kingdoms and continued the idolatry and despotism of pagan Rome. In its long war against the true church saints during 1260 years of temporal power millions of martyrs sealed their testimony by death.

6. The judgment of this blasphemous power (vs. 26, Rev. 17:16.)

7. The reign of the people of God (vs. 27).

For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter 1:16.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

1 Cor. 2:9, 10. "But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

Moffatt's translation reads, "No, as it is written,

What no eye has ever seen,

What no ear has ever heard,

What never entered the mind of man,

God has prepared all that for those who love him.

And God has revealed it to us by the Spirit, for the Spirit fathoms everything, even the depths of God."

In this materialistic age, what has not entered the heart of man? But, however numerous these concepts, and satisfying to the carnal mind, we are assured that some things have never entered the mind of the natural man. And very many people stop with the end of that statement of Paul as though he stopped there. We often forget that great passages of Scripture are often modified by other passages. How often is a great subject in the Book literally jerked from its setting and a half-truth heralded forth before we let God say all he wishes to say upon the subject. And what curious theories are held before the people today, most of which were born by lighting upon scraps of God's holy Word. And men are trying to feed the hungry soul on these theories—froth—as though there was nothing solid in his great revelation to satisfy the soul.

This great text assures us that there are "THINGS which God hath prepared for them that love him." This blessed assurance would be a comfort to me, and for no other reason than that Inspiration has spoken it; but dare we inquire what some of these "things" are, without being guilty of "handling the word of God deceitfully"? (2 Cor. 4:2). We may; for the Holy Spirit through Paul anticipated the longing of the soul and has provided that it shall be satisfied in the very next verse in these words: "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." What the apostles have revealed, therefore, we may know; we may glory in; we may feast upon.

"But there are mysteries," says one. Yes, of course there is. And Paul is ready to say, "And though I * * * understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, * * * and have not charity, I am nothing" (1 Cor. 13:2). There is enough revealed from God, and which we understand, to float this old world into heaven; the trouble is we are camped on the edge of the promised land theorizing about it, and throwing stones at each other in defense of our theories. We know what love is, don't we? And we know what God had said love to him will do. Oh, no; this old world is not rushing on to hell because we do not know what the apostles have revealed. We do not appropriate what we know.

Mysteries? "Behold, I show you a mystery" (1 Cor. 15:51). Thank you, Paul. Thank you, blessed Holy Spirit. Say on. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

"I show you a mystery." So there is something else to look forward to besides the death-struggle, and then the graveyard. "But we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." As important, and far-reaching as that revealed secret is, how much more important is the use we make of it. Our prayer should be, Blessed Holy Spirit, since thou hast assured us that thousands may be changed without death, in the twinkling of an eye, teach us how to make the best use of this sublime truth as we face the future. Amen.

Another divine secret, "How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; as I wrote afore in few words, * * * which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit" (Eph. 3:3, 5). And then, in verse 9, Paul says, "And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." Scholars who have made special study of the dispensations are agreed that "the fellowship of the mystery" is Christ's own, new institution—the church.

A Brief Bibliography of Brethren Church History

By M. A. Stuckey

A request has come to me to print a brief list of books dealing with the history of the Brethren Movement since its origin. I gladly offer this abbreviated, but suggestive list to our readers. Our historical literature is greater in intensity and range than most of us realize. We have a rich and radiant history.

JESUS AND THE SAMARITAN WOMAN

Lesson Text: John 4:9-26; Golden Text: I Tim. 1:15

Daily Readings and Comments*MONDAY

Jesus and the Samaritan Woman.
John 4:1-10

Samaria lay between Judea and Galilee, but we believe something more than geographical position is implied in the words that he "must needs go through Samaria." A little later Jesus steadfastly set his face to go up to Jerusalem, knowing what it would cost him; he declared the Son of man must be lifted up; and he must go through Samaria. In his great commission (Acts 1:8), he did not forget to include Samaria. The Jews hated the Samaritans, but Jesus loved even them, and wanted them to have the water of life, also. Who are our "Samaritans" today? Is our attitude toward them what Jesus would wish?

TUESDAY*The Water of Life. John 4:11-26

We cannot talk long with Jesus and keep our sin covered; the only safe and sure covering is his blood. How like this woman we still are: rather than confess her sin she began to quibble about the proper place to worship! Jesus soon reminded her, however, that there are more important things. Let us be sure that all our worship is in spirit and in truth. Just in passing, there are those who say that Jesus never claimed to be the Messiah; that such a claim was made only by his ignorant and mistaken disciples: their attention should be directed to Jesus' positive statement in verse 26.

WEDNESDAY*The Samaritans Converted. John 4:27-42

Once this woman had recognized in Jesus the Messiah, she went into the city to spread the good news. Note that she told the men: doubtless she was so despised by the women that they refused to listen to her. However, her water-pot was not the only thing she left by Jacob's well: she left her sins there, as well. Some of the Samaritans believed because of Jesus' own words, when they heard him; others believed because of the testimony of the woman whose joy was so great that she forgot her water-pot. In our service for him, let us neglect neither our testimony nor the words of Jesus.

THURSDAY*Healing Waters. Ezek. 47:1-10

Some of the details of this vision we may not fully understand, yet it suggests many things to us. The gospel of Jesus Christ is as an ever-increasing river, bringing life wherever it flows, healing the bitterness of the great sea of humanity. The early Christians, through fear of persecution, often spoke of themselves as "fishes;" here we read that there shall be a great multitude of fish in this holy stream, reminding us of Rev. 7:9.

FRIDAY*Life-Giving Water. John 7:37-44

Two interpretations are possible of these first two verses: one, that the living waters are found freely flowing from the side of Jesus; the other, that he that believeth in him hath this living water flowing from within himself, indicating not only the abundant life within but also the rivers of blessing that reach out to those about him. But which ever may be the correct interpretation (and both are really true), it avails nothing so long as we merely argue: we must heed his invitation, and come unto him, and drink.

SATURDAY*The River of Life. Rev. 22:1-7

This passage looks forward to the time when the River of Life shall flow unhindered from the throne of God into all the earth, bringing healing unto the troubled nations. Under the figure of the twelve manner of fruits from the tree of life, growing by the river, we are shown that there is never a season when we shall lack food for our souls. As we read these precious promises, surely the voice of every believer must echo the words of John: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

SUNDAY*The Promise of Pardon. Isa. 55:1-7

These words are among the most precious of the whole Book, bringing peace and pardon to the sinner, and joy to the saint. God's ways and thoughts are not as ours; but if we forsake our ways for his, and come to him, we may buy the water of life without money and without price. The things we can buy, after all do not satisfy; but the pardon we find in him satisfieth forever, and we shall never thirst again.

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

We are glad to announce that Brother Whitmer, director of this department is planning a series of articles on "Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits," to be published in our Christian Endeavor department of The Evangelist. They are to be short messages on certain fundamental principles and their counterfeits. Following is the first, and some of the others to follow are entitled: "Regeneration vs. Reformation," "Principle vs. Policy," "Faith vs. Feeling," "Liberty vs. Laxity," "Law vs. Luck," "Righteousness vs. Respectability," "Christianity vs. Churchianity," "Fruitage vs. Foliage," "Repentance vs. Remorse." These messages may not always follow one another in consecutive issues, as space will always be given to Christian Endeavor news reports or other urgent material, but they will be kept going as space and time require. And our prayer is that they may be widely appreciated by our Endeavorers.—The Editor.

GOLD VS. GLITTER

I should have more faith in Christianity if there were not so many hypocrites in the church. Why, my friend, do you know that hypocrites are among the very best witnesses to the value of real Christianity? Were it not for the imposters in the church, we should have good reason to despise true discipleship. Had there been no Judas among the apostles we might well hesitate about following the other eleven. Do you doubt it? Think a moment and you will agree with me.

What kind of coins are most frequently counterfeited, the gold or the copper? The gold, of course. Why? Simply because they are so valuable. It is not worth while to counterfeit copper, for the counterfeit would cost as much as the genuine, and would be worth about as much. But gold pieces and bank notes of large value tempt the skill of the counterfeiter, and well repay his labor and risk when successful. Imitations of such are therefore numerous. For like reason we may find many pretenders in the Christian Church. They are the tokens of its worth, and the evidences of its worthlessness. Christianity is among religions as gold among the coins; hence the gospel has more spurious imitations and the Christian Church more hypocrites than any other religious system the world has ever seen. This fact is undeniable. No true disciple need be ashamed that it is so; for this is one of the evidences of the truth of Christianity, not an argument for infidelity.

Another sort of counterfeit by which the currency of the kingdom is often discredited are the falsehoods which Satan is perpetually putting in circulation in the place of Gospel truth. And these counterfeits are so well made that in many cases they deceive the very elect. Mr. Moody said, "There is a lot of stuff men call the Gospel that has no more Gospel in it than there is wheat in sawdust, but some people do not seem to know the difference." He tells the story of a young housekeeper who kept her accounts very carefully, but closed the entries of each week with an item charger to "G. K. W." When her husband asked who G. K. W. was, she replied that as the account never balanced exactly, she put down the balance to "Goodness knows what." And, Mr. Moody added, that when he hears some men preach, he puts it down to "Goodness knows what." He did not know just what they were talking about: but he was certain it was not the Gospel.

As the greater worth of the coin makes any counterfeit the more injurious, involving as it does the greater loss to every one who is deceived by it: so the importance of truth is the measure of falsehood's baneful efficiency. The power of God's truth to save men involves the power of error or falsehood to destroy them.

We have various tests for coins and notes. We compare them with others. We note their ring. We examine them with a microscope. Here is the infallible test for spiritual coins: "To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, surely there is no morning for them. Isaiah 8:20.

A CHURCH WORKSHOP

Especially in city life young persons who would like to "use tools" and "make things" frequently have no means of participating in this useful hobby. Young people's societies and clubs might give thought to equipping a church workshop, possibly in a well-lighted, warm room in the basement of the church building. Such a room and its tools could be used not only by the young people who are interested in such work, but by older members as well.

Using such a plan, the church will find that many minor repairs to its property may be made on the spot by persons who are glad to serve in this special way. Some of the equipment for the church and its grounds that may be built in such a room is as follows: bulletin-boards, tables, and standards, bird-houses, lockers, bookcases, picture-frames, arbors for vines, toys for the children's room.

Some simple rules for the use of the room and its tools should be adopted and posted. It might be wise to keep tools in a locked chest or cupboard, but to arrange so that any qualified young person or adult would have no difficulty in obtaining the key.—Selected.

that he is no longer with us. Nevertheless it is all too true.

"August 28 he returned from Bangui with the diagnosis of inoperable cancer of the liver.

"For the first part of the weeks succeeding he seemed fairly comfortable, had a good appetite and rested fairly well at night. Periods of distress were relieved by tapping—four times four or five quarts of milky fluid was withdrawn. But the fifth time was less successful, and following we noticed a change for the worse. His legs swelled, his feet became like cushions, his appetite failed and generally speaking he became miserable. One week later, his feet opened, and there was a constant drainage of watery fluid. He gradually grew weaker and weaker, could not lie down, but sat on the edge of the bed, resting his head on the back of a chair. He could eat nothing but steamed bananas, the juice of which was the last food he was able to take. Several times his suffering became so extreme we thought the end had come. On November fifth at 11 A. M. he became so bad that Miss Tyson called Mr. Hathaway—who with Mrs. Kennedy and herself remained with him until the end came nearly twelve hours later. He rallied a little at noon, but the intense suffering continued.

"He complained of intense burning in the hepatic region, like the burning of an acid. From eleven o'clock on he could neither lie down nor sit up—Oh, how he suffered! But there was never one word of complaint. He was always so thoughtful and kind. Really the grace manifested during this long siege of intense suffering was wonderful.

"Once he said to the nurse, 'Lay your hands on my hand, and pray that the Lord may take me soon.' Silent prayer was then offered that the Lord should perform his perfect will ... but he looked up and said, 'Pray so that I can hear you and join with you.'

"During the early months of his long illness, he wanted so much that the Lord would heal him in order that he might give a few more years to his service, and he clung to this hope, nothing doubting. It was only after the last tapping that he realized that the Lord wanted to take him. From then on he prayed that the Lord would take him home.

"In spite of the intense suffering which preceded the hour of death,—death itself was easy, no struggle at all. He simply fell asleep, we scarcely realizing it.

"It seems as though God has taken our best but then he always does what is best—and we must just rest in his will now.

"Mrs. Kennedy says: "When Dr. Gribble met us on our return to the field, she said: 'We have much in common in being separated from our children'. Now Mrs. Kennedy says "I am exactly Dr. Dr. Gribble, separated from husband also." Bravely but oh, so quietly, she suffers.

"For four weeks we never left Mr. Kennedy alone either night or day. Mrs. Kennedy watched one night, Mr. Hathaway the next, and Miss Tyson the next.

"Our hospital money is gone and we very likely will close Yaloke hospital now. There is no money for either food or heating. Our personal funds were exhausted long ago. The Banque Francaise is still closed and the latest news is that the Commercial Bank has failed also. These are days when we must keep our eyes on the Lord.

A Message from Dr. Gribble

R. F. D. No. 2, Sunnyside, Washington,

January 4, 1932.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Letters just received from the field are of such intense interest that we count it a privilege to share them with you.

From Yaloke, November 9th: "We have just returned from Bassai where we laid to rest the mortal remains of our dear Brother Kennedy. You will have long since heard of his going to be with the Lord. It was a long, long testing that the Lord gave him, but his faith was wonderfully sustained. Not once did he complain. "Blessed Jesus," he would pray, "take me, come and take me." He suffered so long that he was very anxious to go. At the end he fell quietly to sleep.

"Mrs. Kennedy was wonderfully sustained through it all. You, of course, are able to realize her suffering. She did not wish to say where he should be buried, but Goumanzi, who was here at the time of his death, said that the Karre wanted him brought back there, so after a short service here the morning after his death, we took the sad trip to Bassai where he was buried the same evening, not far from Brother Gribble's grave. It is such a quiet, peaceful spot. One could not choose a lovelier one.

"Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Byron will live together in the remodelled house. Mr. and Mrs. Jobson are expected back this week. Conference will be at Bassai December 23rd, D. V. Brother Kennedy will be missed very much.

"Naturally we have all gone through a great deal in this trial for we are one body, and we all suffer together. We prayed so much for his healing, but it is all right, as we know the Lord knows best. We cannot understand now, but we can trust. It was all so pitiful, Doctor. At the last he couldn't rest in any position and had either sat up or lain on his right side for three months at least. To see him at last peacefully at rest seemed a blessing. The natives are much affected by his death, and by Mrs. Kennedy's desire to remain with them.—"

On another sheet the same writer speaks of special opposition in a way of which we cannot now write, but for the overcoming of which we ask your prayers.

An item of interest to our readers will be the capture of an immense man-eating leopard in the Yaloke trap. Human hair was found in his stomach.

Another letter says: "Voloungon is at the chapel at Iremon again. He has been having nearly 200 on Sundays with the chief present, and also good crowds on week days. He was glad to get into the chapel work again. Boumele is at Yambourou and he, too, has been having good crowds. The last we heard his wife had yaws. It is so hard to see this Christian woman suffer with this terrible disease and Miss Tyson has none of her specific remedy for it.

"If Mr. Jobson brings some paint it may not be long until the second permanent house is finished at Yaloke. The doors, screen-doors, screens and shutters should be painted before being put up, else they would smell and be spoiled.

"Mr. Camp (a Baptist missionary) went to the Coast after freight for us, since Mr. Hathaway was unable to leave on account of Mr. Kennedy's illness. Mr. Camp plans to be at the Coast at the time of Mr. Jobson's arrival."

Another letter, the latest received from Yaloke, says under date of November 11th:

"Brother Kennedy passed away November 5th at 10:15 P. M. We just can't believe Douala and Yaounde. Parcel post only comes by the river route now. A regular mail route has now been established between Douala and Bangui—mail arriving every two weeks at Bangui."

These are indeed days when we must keep our eyes on the Lord. Shall Yaloke hospital be closed? Shall our evangelists and their wives suffer the horrors of yaws unrelieved? Shall yaws continue to spread untreated and unrelieved?

Nay, more, shall Christ be continually honored as he is manifested in compassionate ministry among the heathen? Through this effective means shall souls be saved? For if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we (and they) are of all men most miserable.

Let us continue our labors as effective fishers of men, until he come!

Yours faithfully,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE, M.D.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

School has re-opened with all the students back except one or two who were not expected to return.

The Faculty members spent their vacation in various profitable ways. Professor and Mrs. McClain were at Waterloo, Iowa; Professor and Mrs. Haun in Chicago, where Professor Haun did considerable work on his course in Physics; Professor and Mrs. Black were at his home in Indiana; Professor Puterbaugh was busy with his non-residence advanced work here; Professor Mason was employed with his Doctor's dissertation which he hopes to present within the year; the others were also busy here. The writer got out the copy for the Summer School Bulletin and wrote some articles for publication.

Since last writing, the College defeated Muskingum College on our own floor and was defeated by Ohio Wesleyan, and by Heidelberg.

The College will be privileged in the near future to hear several lectures by Dr. M. G. Kyle, the well known archaeologist. He is to spend some time here with the Seminary students.

The College welcomed a short visit during the holidays by Dr. Hole, Dean of Manchester College.

Dean Mason recently addressed the School Master's Club of Mansfield.

A book by Dr. Bixler of the Department of History, relating to the World War is now in press.

We are anticipating a review within the near future of a committee with which we are cooperating relative to new standards to be applied within the area of the North Central Association. I spent a good part of my vacation getting records and blanks ready for that.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

A report from the Harrah church has not been sent in for some time. Since the last one a busy summer has passed followed by a busier fall and for nearly two months our fields have been blanketed with the snows of winter. Speaking from a financial standpoint we have little to show for a season's harvest but in a spiritual sense we can say with the Psalmist of old "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from which cometh my help," and praise him for countless blessings.

Two important conferences during the summer are worthy of mention. First, our own Northwest District Conference at Sunnyside—close enough to enable most of the members to attend. Here we were permitted to welcome home, share in fellowship and receive the spiritual messages of our missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. Jobson.

In July an out-of-doors Bible Conference was held at the State Fair grounds in Yakima where men who love the Lord and his inspired Word gathered from various states and various sections of our own state to make this conference a never-to-be-forgotten mountain-top experience.

Our pastor has painstakingly cared for his flock and given us the spiritual food which is necessary for our growth. He has organized two teachers' training classes, one for the young people and one for the present group of Sunday school teachers. The fruit from this effort is budding as two from the younger group have accepted classes for the coming year.

Our fall communion service held the latter part of October was impressive with the attendance ranking high.

A long felt want in connection with the church has been a parsonage for the pastor and his family. This has recently been realized by the purchase of a house and lot across the street from the church on the south. The structure was moved nearer the front of the lot, remodeled and the family are comfortably settled. Much of the work was done by the pastor and men of the church. On the last Sunday of Brother Bell's meetings a basket dinner was enjoyed in the church basement at noon after which the parsonage was dedicated to the Lord for his use.

The series of evangelistic meetings conducted by Dr. W. S. Bell in the first two weeks of December were a spiritual feast, the result of which cannot be expressed in numbers. Three men, fathers of families, who made confessions and were baptized, completed Christian homes. Twenty-one were baptized on Wednesday night following the close of the meetings. The following day the pastor, his daughter, Elizabeth, Dr. Bell and Mrs. C. P. West left for Vale, Oregon, to conduct meetings. Here they were cared for and ably assisted by Brother and Sister Gould. May the prayers of the Brethren people be lifted for the work at Vale, if it be the Lord's will.

Last, but not least, God has been good in permitting us to have Dr. Gribble with us for a week, in the church both morning and evening during the pastor's absence at Vale, at W. M. S., and with the Sisterhood girls. All have been permitted to look on her sweet face and listen to her messages telling of him. Surely she typifies the words,

"His grace is sufficient for me." We rejoice with her that she is permitted to spend the winter with her daughter.

We have three enrolled at the present time in the Los Angeles Bible Institute, who have gone from us to prepare for a broader life of service for their Master.

Our year closes with a watch service devoted to praise and prayer in the church, New Year's eve. As we enter upon another year may each Evangelist reader meet it with a higher aim than ever before, knowing "with God all things are possible."

MRS. IDA A. LYON,
Evangelist Correspondent.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Dear Evangelist Family:

This pastor has sent no report for six months or more, and the church correspondent being sick for several months, Sunnyside church has somewhat deserted the social columns of our church paper.

Perhaps a general report is wise. Our Bible school has averaged 202 for the past year. Two decision services have been held in the last six months. Our four Endeavor societies are carrying on in commendable fashion. On Tuesday evening the pastor's Young People's Bible Class, soon two years old, averages 16. Our own courses taught during the year were: The Acts of the Apostles, and the Life of our Lord in the Flesh. These youth of high school age constitute our Sunday evening choir, for which we practice after the weekly study.

Our women's work is not diminishing. We consider it a missionary work at home as well as abroad. God's true missionaries seek souls wherever they are. Under the leadership of Mrs. Grace Speck, the church choir has added effectually to our worship services. A pipe organ and human voices controlled by trained minds and earnest hearts can give forth inspiring praise to our God.

The church has had no definite campaign of evangelism for over two years. Our additions have been personally won, or brought through the Bible school. Brother W. S. Bell began three weeks' services November 1. We were glad to welcome the first pastor of this church back again, and found that his memory of folks 20 and 24 years ago was keen, and their appreciation of him helped the attendance. We baptized 24, receiving 13. Previously this year we have received 19. Now some 15 await reception, baptism or parental consent.

The Christmas season was observed one Sunday morning by a twenty minute program of Beginners and Primary, on Christmas eve by the Young People's play depicting in prophecy and fulfillment the Gospel Story. A large amount of Scripture was committed in this effort. On Sunday evening, our choir presented a varied program of Christmas music in conjunction with Brother Earl Reed's message. Tomorrow we plan for our annual New Year's basket dinner and business meeting at the church.

GRATIS NOTES

Since there last appeared on the Church News page of the Evangelist, notes from Gratis, many things have transpired in the Gratis church and community. There has been no lull in the work—no idle periods. With "Forward" as our slogan, we have striven to move forward in all departments of our work.

Beginning with our mid-summer open air meetings which attracted fine attendance, and which were even more popular than a year ago, we tried to make the biggest use of the special days which characterize the autumn season. Rally Day, Marion Lawrence Day, Harvest Home Day, were all splendid events, resulting in much good. In the annual Father and Son banquet which was of the nature of a community affair the men and boys of our church participated enthusiastically.

We made a lot of Christmas. On Sunday night preceding Christmas a great audience witnessed the presentation of two pageants. The quality of the work done was highly deserving of the occasion, and also reflected much credit on all who took part. This was followed later by a Christmas party for the children and mothers of the Primary Department of the church school. And this too was a decidedly worth while number.

It is with continued pleasure that we recall the two appearances this winter of the West Side Church of Christ choir from Dayton. The director of this delightful and capable organization is Mr. Lawrence Weimer, a member of the Dayton Church of the Brethren, with whom I first became happily associated during my Dayton pastorate. Brother Weimer and I have remained the best kind of friends. On the basis of that friendship he has brought his choir to us at three different times—first, during our open air meetings, and twice recently. On the evening of January third this band of consecrated singers and their leader sang for us the beautiful cantata, "The Star of Bethlehem." A capacity audience pronounced it at once the most "red letter" event of a musical nature the community has ever had. Brother Weimer and his fine choir have placed us under very great obligation to them.

Our Sunday school closed a year of good, solid work. The average attendance for the year measured up to the best the school has ever maintained in its long history. On the basis of actual facts we allow ourselves to believe that the Gratis Brethren Sunday school is one of the very best organized and efficient schools in our county. There are only a very few that may be larger—there are none better. But that does not mean that our problems are all solved. It is doubtful if, in a growing Sunday school, the problems are ever "all solved."

We maintain a just pride in our Intermediate Christian Endeavorers. The pastor claims them. He organized them in the beginning. We watched over them in those first months when they were in their "creeping, crawling" stage. And he continues to watch over them every Sunday night, and at our social gatherings as well. Our attendance now runs from twenty to twenty-four and is made up of Brethren, Church of the Brethren, United Brethren (will there be all these different brands of "Brethren" in Heaven?) Reformed, etc. Again and again the writer has been impressed with the thought of how happily free are children from the prejudices which separate adults into all kinds of harmful, silly, unwarranted groups. The best thing we are doing at Gratis is with these Intermediate Endeavorers. And they compliment me in the highest possible way by being just their natural selves in my presence, and by assuring me that my presence does not bore them.

Because we decided to change the time of our special meetings to an earlier rather than a later date, it brought two special meetings in 1931. Which means, among other things, that our Sunday school was carefully gleaned. We continued two weeks, closing December 6th. Brother Weimer was in charge of our singing and he rendered an excellent piece of service, at the same time greatly endearing himself to our people and the community. Our attendance was not only uniformly good, but it was extra good throughout. I have never seen more serious audiences. And I think I am warranted in saying that I never before did two weeks of better, more solid preaching than in these meetings. While visible results might seem to contradict it, many share with me the conviction that it was a really great meeting. Great from the standpoint of impressions made; seed sowed; Jesus Christ held up; the church and religion dignified; the social and moral standards of the community pushed up to higher levels. We must believe that these meetings will have a part in ushering in a new day here. Three adults have been received into the church—two by baptism and one by letter. We hope to enlist others yet and soon. Our morning prayer meetings in the homes were a mighty factor in the meetings. Many new doors are opening before the Gratis church. We hope and pray that the doors may not have opened to us in vain, but rather that we may make the biggest possible use of our opportunities.

The writer is having a happy time every two weeks on Sunday afternoon preaching in his old home church at Miamisburg. This is home to us. The old faces are all gone, and that part of it is sad. I grew up with many to whom I preach. We have fine audiences even if the services are in the afternoon. It is a happy experience.

PUBLICATION'S SUGGESTIONS

Prof. M. A. Stuckey,
Ashland College,
Ashland, Ohio,
Dear Prof. Stuckey:

I note yours in the last issue of the Evangelist relative to a larger publication by combining more of the brotherhood's interest in the one. I certainly approve your suggestions in that direction.

As you suggest in the article the Evangelist is robbed of much of its freshest and newest material by the present scattered publication system. Things of human interest are what people want, and by that I certainly do not mean an exclusion of the devotional aspects. Rather to the contrary. Even a secular publication thrives on things of human interest. It is a foregone conclusion that when the editor of the Evangelist must refrain from dealing with such items as may come to hand for fear of stealing another Brethren editor's "thunder" he is seriously handicapped thereby. With auxiliary departments to his publication, as according to the plan suggested, he could have greater freedom to make his own comments in his own editorial section without so much danger of infringing upon the departmental editor's rights or prerogatives, maintain a new sense of proportion and unity, and have the whole matter for his publication without the various auxiliaries losing their respective benefits.

Again, I believe one well edited publication, artistically done, would gain a larger hearing than several small organs appearing at different times and touching, perhaps, a smaller constituency. No message can be put over unless it can gain a hearing. Would not one well received paper gain a larger hearing for all concerned than several which might be indifferently received? There is such a thing as a gun scattering its shots so widely that they fail their purpose.

Now I understand, too, the motives that have led the various departments of the church to adopt their own publications. To the best of my knowledge these motives are above reproach, but we are handicapped by the fact that ours is a small denomination. A larger church has a wider field from which to draw both its contributing material and its subscribers. Thus you see that my only real argument against the present system is one of the practicality of the matter.

We cannot overlook the matter of finances. What could not Brother Baer do with the Evangelist if he only had the money! All of us are fully aware that the same money is not going to come by any easy process. They tell us that a dollar saved is a dollar earned (assuming, of course, that one has the dollar to begin with). I believe our other church organs are subsidized, as it were, by their respective patrons, while the Evangelist stands on a different basis. Am I right about that? If so, the Evangelist editor has a monetary concern that the other editors do not have. Why not reduce a disproportionate overhead by the pooling of interests?

With a centralization of interest in the one magazine we could have a larger organ, a more artistically dressed and consequently a more appealing one. The official church paper could be a more vital, newsy and less cramped one because of its freer access to the news of the entire brotherhood. It could more faithfully and successfully represent the various church interests. It could hopefully bid for a wider reading. As I see it, all would benefit by it, although I should prefer the larger church literature were we only in a place to make it highly successful.

Personally, I would like to see some such changes made. Cut down overheads and let the editor use the savings for new cuts, electros, decorations, perhaps type and similar materials. I believe a slightly smaller sheet done on a coated book paper (if price is not prohibitive) and with a colored covering would give a more luxurious "feel" and appearance and would bid for more than a mere passing glance from even indifferent subscribers. Too, this very appeal would lend itself to the securing of new subscribers. Perhaps, too, it would be possible to manage a story department running in serial from some good book, a missionary story, a moving biography or the like.

The fact is not overlooked that much of this is a matter of making an appeal to the senses, but what good is a message without an audience, and how get the audience? Again, I am conscious that at least some of these things, perhaps all, have long been wished for by Brother Baer and likely also by the Publication Board. Thus, while I am aware that I am not making new suggestions, I do cherish the hope that I might be of some service in securing the realization of these hopes and aspirations for our church paper.

Yours in the service of Christ,
FRANK GEHMAN.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

have written both Revelation and the Gospel."

(2) The only external argument that can be made for the late date is based upon an ambiguous Greek verb. This is a quotation from Irenaeus who when speaking of the Anti-christ says: "If it were necessary to have his name directly announced by him who saw the Apocalypse; for it was not a great while ago that (it or he) was seen, but almost in our own generation, toward the end of Domitian's reign." Terry's translation. See also Irenaeus, Adv. Hereses, Bk. V, Ch. XXX. The Greek verb translated "was seen" is Heorathe. It is an Aorist, 3d. Sg. and is ambiguous as no subject is expressed. Grammatically it is as correct and legitimate to make John the subject as it is to make Apocalypse the subject of this verb. My point is that Irenaeus' argument is made meaningless if the statement refers to the Book but is meaningful and enlightening if made to refer to John. The statement then would be an appeal to the fact that John lived almost to his own day and had it been necessary to reveal the name of the Antichrist he could have done so, regardless of the time when he saw the Apocalyptic vision.

I believe, as the reader can discern, that John the Apostle wrote all five of the New Testament books that bear his name; That he wrote the Revelation in the sixties, The Gospel and the Epistles toward the close of his long career in Ephesus between 85 and 95; And that a careful, reverent and critical scholarship will abundantly support these conclusions.

ON LEAVING THE BROTHERHOOD

"The fact is we could not recommend any of our own members to hand in their church letters to any other denomination, where there was no organization of the Brethren church, except to progressive German Baptists (now Church of the Brethren), Old Order, River Brethren, or Brethren in Christ, and even some of these omit services which we hold very sacred. There is just this about this liberality matter: if the ordinances and commandments of the gospel are worth our obedience, then we are better by obeying them, for to obey is better than sacrifice. And if disobedience is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry, we can not take very much part in it without loss. I do not wish to condemn anybody, neither shall I wink at their follies, or justify them in their shortcomings."—Holsinger in 1886.

"Church work seems to be moving along slowly; but I am not suited.

We are not half as progressive as I would like to see. There is not the Christian enterprise among us that there ought to be. O for more sacrifice, for the honor and the success of the cause of Christ. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." O Brethren and sisters, let us live and work as we think we would wish we had when we come to die. I have never regretted any sacrifice I have made for Jesus and his cause, but I have wished I had another life to offer up, and a better life, a purer life, and a younger life. Let us do what we can, which I feel is all that will be required of us. May God bless all our people, and all who desire to be his.—Holsinger in Evangelist, 1886.

ONE NIGHT AFTER DARK

By Josephine E. Toal

For an hour Norman had been playing "find the north pole," over at Robert's. It had been great fun at first, but ever since the sun had gone down Norman had not been having a really good time—not because he wanted to go home, but because he didn't want to go home right away.

For sundown time was always the time for him to feed the chickens and shut them up. Once he had stayed away from home too long and John, the hired man, had looked after the chickens.

"Don't do it again, John," daddy had said. "That's Norman's chore. He must be responsible for those chickens."

Norman thought of his father's words now as the light faded from the sky. The chickens would be waiting for their supper—old Sam, the big red rooster, and the fat red hens, and Pet, his own little white Leghorn pullet.

But oh, dear, he and Robert were almost at the north pole. They were just going to make the big dash for it. Rover was tugging to start the sled. It was loaded with "supplies"—two sandwiches in a tin pail, a sack of pop corn, and a box of cookies.

"All aboard for the north pole!" called Robert.

Away, away they coasted, down a steep, snowy slope, straight for the clothesline pole. Slap! The north pole fell down. But Rover didn't care. He kept right on, tearing through the back yard, upsetting the sled, spilling off the two brave explorers, and scattering supplies over the snow.

Then the exploring party had to become a rescuing party. By the time all the supplies were gathered up and eaten and the arctic expedition had made a safe return, it was nearly dark.

Norman ran home as fast as he could. Through the lighted kitchen window he could see daddy and mother and John eating supper. It was too dark now for the chickens to eat theirs, and it looked black and scary down at the henhouse.

Suppose he didn't shut the chickens up, just for tonight. No one would know. He could go down there early in the morning and give the biddies a big breakfast to make up for not having any supper. Slowly Norman walked toward the kitchen door. He wasn't a bit happy. He wished that he had come home at sundown and done his work. You didn't feel good when you couldn't tell things.

Suddenly Norman dashed off toward the barnyard. As he ran past the barn he caught a gleam of light through a crack in the door. Good! John had left the lantern burning. That would help.

Soon, with the lantern on his arm and a pan of corn in his hands, Norman was at the henhouse, calling: "Chick, chick! Supper, chicks! Come, chicks!"

What was the matter? Instead of coming down off their perches, the biddies fussed and cackled in fright. Something brushed against Norman's foot and shot out the door—something slender, furry, and brown.

A weasel! Hadn't daddy said that he had seen weasel tracks that very morning? Yes, sir, that fellow was after chickens.

"Oh, I am so glad I did come," Norman whispered to Pet as he lifted her gently from her perch and scattered the corn. "The old weasel might have got you."

When all the biddies had eaten and gone to roost, Norman fastened the door very carefully, saying,

"I'm going to look after you, biddies—tonight and always."—The Sunbeam. —

THEN—FIRST PRESS USED BY HOLSINGER

"Once upon a time" the fairy stories begin, but this is no fairy tale we have to relate even though we may begin it in conventional fairy style. However, once upon a time an earnest, zealous brother had an urge, or perhaps an inspiration, to use a more effective method for spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ than through the ordinary and common method of preaching. In his preaching he could reach but a few hundred at the most on any one occasion, and even then many of the congregation might peacefully slumber during the period of the sermon, and many more would forget what the preacher said shortly after they returned home; but, if he could get what he wanted to say and what some others wanted to say on a printed page and could secure for the publications a proper circulation, he could reach a great many more people with his teaching and it would be in a more lasting form than the simple spoken word. With some such purposes and aims H. R. Holsinger launched his first publications. It was no easy task either from a mechanical standpoint as the work had to be accomplished on such a crude press as illustrated at top of next page.

So far as we know this is the only piece of equipment in existence that was used by Brother Holsinger in his first printing shop, and this press is a part of the equipment of the Brethren Publishing House to this day, and it is in daily use as a "proof press" for the matter that is set up on our Intertype machines.

Modern Equipment

While almost the entire equipment of our plant has been replaced during the last ten or twelve years we can not say it is equipped with the most modern machines and presses, as our capital has never been sufficient to permit that, but we have come a long way from the first Holsinger press illustrated above to the sixteen thousand pound press illustrated below on which the most of our present printing is done. Of course this is not the only press in use in our plant, but it is the largest one in constant use.

The changes in equipment and the advances made in labor saving machinery are no more marked than the changes in the product of the plant which has developed from the one publication originally produced to the ten publications now regularly sent out from this office.

A Great Problem

One of the great problems that is always before a religious or church publishing house is the problem of making a literature or producing publications of a quality and kind demanded by the churches and Sunday schools at a price they are willing to pay. We do not know of a single church publication or strictly denominational church paper that receives enough from its subscriptions alone to pay for its publication. The lack must be made up from advertising or commercial printing, or from contributions and endowments.

Just recently we were in receipt of a personal letter from the credit manager of one of the very largest, if not actually THE largest denominational publishing houses in America, in which the writer stated that they were compelled to go to the bank the first of every month to borrow money to meet their current bills; and just a short time after we received a letter from what is the largest undenominational publishing house in America, perhaps, in which the writer stated that their papers with the smaller circulation were being put out at an actual loss, and the loss was being made up from the profits from their papers with the larger circulation. And we would judge that their paper with the smallest circulation has a larger sale than all our publications combined.

If these largest publishing houses, with their almost unlimited fields of distribution, can not make their papers self-supporting, how can a church with a field as limited as that of the Brethren church expect to put out a literature that pays for itself from subscriptions alone? It simply can't be done.

Financial Salvation

During the past ten years one of the largest factors enabling The Brethren Publishing Company to operate and to serve the church of which it is but a part has been the income from the rental of the living apartments in the building now occupied by our printing plant, even though the building was bought entirely on faith, and for the payment of which these Publication Day offerings are made each year.

The income from these apartments was a life-saver for all these years, and it is still a great help; but during the last year the unemployment situation has become acute among the very class of people who made their living quarters in such apartments, and because of unemployment a number of our tenants were unable to pay their rent, and for self-protection we were compelled to ask them to vacate. This has curtailed the income from this source the past year which works a hardship on the Publishing House, so it is more important than ever that a liberal offering be made on Publication Day, that the debt on the building may be reduced and the amount of interest payment be lessened.

Many of our churches face financial difficulties of their own we understand quite well, and while we are always glad to "rejoice with those who rejoice" we also are willing to "weep with those who weep," and we assure all such churches that they have our deepest sympathy, but we would like to have you remember us also in our need and to have you, even in your temporary distress remember there are others who are in greater need than you, and that you may expect a special blessing because "out of your penury" you have not failed to give support to a cause that is plainly the Lord's.

Loyalty Campaign

This issue of The Brethren Evangelist brings to a close the special efforts that have been put forth to develop the spirit of loyalty to all things Brethren among our own people. Of course, if these things we call Brethren were not in harmony with the Gospel of Jesus Christ we would have no grounds for making this urgent plea that has featured our paper for the last couple of months; but we feel that all our publications represent in the best way the Brethren church has ever known the spreading of the Gospel through the printed page. Because of this we have been urging most emphatically a larger and freer use of all publications that come from The Brethren Publishing House. This means the Sunday school, the missionary societies, the Christian Endeavor societies and the church as a whole. Nowhere else will you get the teachings that are fundamental to Brethren people like you will get them in our publications. There may be other religious publications that are more artistically made, they may have a larger staff of editors and paid contributors of marked ability; but they are not Brethren and they can not furnish satisfying food to those who are genuinely Brethren at heart.

Evangelist Subscriptions

On Publication Day, Sunday the twenty-fourth, the special price of $1.35 for new subscriptions to The Evangelist terminates; so if there are others who want to take advantage of this rate we urge the pastors to remind them of it before it is too late.

Last week we added FIFTY new subscriptions to the Evangelist mailing list which was indeed fine, yes very fine, and we rejoiced greatly; BUT, and Oh, what significance that little word but has sometimes, while we rejoiced to add fifty names to our list our hearts were saddened as we were compelled to remove SEVENTY names from the list at the same time, which was not so good.

Why do so many feel they can not afford to take their own church paper? Only this morning we received a letter from one of our younger pastors who is a loyal booster for all things Brethren including The Brethren Evangelist, and he stated that one of his members who wants to be called a good Brethren refuses to take the Evangelist even though he is earning more than $300.00 per month. He can't understand it and neither can we. But some day we will all be called upon to give an account for the way we have failed to support the things that are a part of the church we say we love.

Let us repeat here the special offers for The Evangelist. New subscriptions until January 24th, $1.35; one renewal and one new subscription, $3.00; Honor Roll subscription lists, $1.50.

An Honor Roll church is one that has placed the cost of sending the Evangelist to every family in the church on the budget and renews this list regularly each year; or one that has secured by personal canvass subscriptions from 60% or more of active Brethren families in the congregation; or one that has by canvass secured fifty or more subscriptions for the Evangelist. For such churches a special rate of $1.50 is made.

A Word of Caution

Some business houses that grant a 2% reduction on bills that are paid in thirty days or before the 10th of the month following date of purchase print across their monthly statements, "Don't take the discount unless you are entitled to it." The point we would make is this: some churches that secured the required number of subscriptions a few years ago to entitle them to the special rate and a place on the Honor Roll have had a falling off in the number of subscriptions of recent years, but still they claim the special rate. They may be entitled to it because of the decreasing membership of their local church, but we have no way to check up on it. So we would say like the business houses that send us statements of our accounts with them, "Don't claim the discount unless you are entitled to it." We are willing to leave it to you to check up on your own lists according to the rules and regulations pertaining to the Honor Roll.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

A WORLD Out of Joint

The floods in China, according to a careful observer, constitute "the greatest natural calamity of modern times." Unusual rains filled the rivers of Central China and rendered all dikes useless. At one place an inland lake was created 900 miles long and an average of 40 miles in width. The submerged areas equal in extent the whole of England, and are the thickly populated sections. At least 50,000,000 persons have been directly affected. Hundreds of thousands have lost everything, houses, stock, implements and clothing. It will never be possible to ascertain how many lost their lives in the rushing waters. Months will pass before those still living can return to their farms because the waters recede slowly. In the meantime an untold number will die of cold, starvation and pestilence.

Were it not for the effects of the financial depression in the United States, we would stand aghast at this Chinese disaster. As it is, many people do not even know there has been a flood in China. After all we do not know what suffering is in this country.

A COMPLICATED World

In the meantime, while the other great nations are too much exhausted from the last war, to do more than write notes, Japan coolly moves to grab the whole of Manchuria from the Chinese. The word means little to the average reader, but the territory involved is twice the size of Germany with 30,000,000 inhabitants—not a bad day's work!

The idealists condemn Japan's action unsparingly and think the nations should do something to prevent the "steal" from poor China. The more practical statesmen, however, will tell you that Japan will bring law and order into a region infested by warring Chinese bandits with whom the government of China was utterly unable to cope. It is reported that many of the poor Chinese are actually glad to be under the protection of the Japanese soldiers. Their women are safe, and what is taken is paid for; matters their own armies were careless about. Furthermore, you will be told that Japan's possession of Manchuria will forestall Russia (who would eventually take the territory for themselves), and thus provide a bulwark against the eastern march of Communism.

If you are not a statesman, you have something to be thankful for. Their problems are not easy today. It behooves the churches to keep strictly out of these political situations, if possible. If the church sides with China, she will injure her missionary efforts in Japan. If she sides with Japan, China will hate her.

The world, political and economic, needs the authority and rule of the Son of God. When he comes, he will cast out the sleek, well-fed politicians who start the wars and also the predatory financiers who support them with other people's money.

A COMMON, Mortal Man.

Recently the world was quite concerned over an accident in the Vatican Library. A section of the roof collapsed killing five persons and ruining a number of invaluable works of art. In a speech delivered (yesterday (Jan. 16) the Pope expressed sorrow for the loss of life. For his concern he is to be commended.

But were Pope Pius VI truly the "Vicar of Christ," as he claims to be, he could just as easily have restored to life those who were killed. He claims the office, but cannot do the works, being only one of those weak and shivering organic units that we call men.

STINGY as Caesar

An amusing story appears in the interesting Calendar edited by Brother Harold Fry, pastor of the First Brethren church at Sunnyside, Washington.

A negro minister of the old-fashioned type once described a well-known, but close-fisted brother as being stingy as Caesar. He was asked why he thought that Caesar was stingy, and replied, "Well, you see, when the Pharisees gave our Lord a penny, he asked them, 'Whose subscription is this?' and they answered, 'Caesar's.'"

Of course, the old colored man was a bit mixed up in his knowledge of the Word, but he had the right idea about giving and his blunder created a good illustration. At that, he doubtless knew more about the Bible than some College and University students do today. A college professor who was teaching the Bible asked in an examination, "What were the food, language and dress of John the Baptist?" And one student wrote, "His food was that of other people, his language was elegant, and he was dressed in swaddling clothes." Another student identified Martin Luther as "the man who started the Catholic Church."

Ignorance of the Bible, strange to say, is not regarded so disgraceful as it is in other fields.

Golden Words

By Robert T. Kerlin

For some weeks now I have been diligently reading forty-one Protestant church weeklies and the editorial pages of some fifteen metropolitan dailies. I have scanned the columns of these papers in pursuit of significant utterances, prophetic messages; and much I have found too valuable for the limited audiences they reach. Of this, however, more later. At present I wish only to excerpt from an editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of October 18, entitled "No Peace Without Justice," a passage that should be inscribed in letters of gold above the entrance to every courthouse and every legislative hall, every church and every schoolhouse, every factory, every shop, and every bank in all the land. The words to which I would give such honor are these:

"All internal revolutions are caused by injustice, political or economic. Every revolution in the world has been a revolt against political and economic oppression. Social and political justice are the only cure for national revolutions and disorders. They are the only cure for the distresses and disorders of poverty. Prosperity, as well as stable peace, national or international, rests upon justice.

"Armaments are maintained on account of injustice."

Is not my praise, which must have seemed extravagant, justified? If not so, read these sentences again and return to the study of history. To them I would apply the command of Moses:

"And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart:

"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

"And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

"And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates."

The rest of the editorial is not unimportant, but it is mainly elaboration. However, a passage on public opinion is so significant that I cannot refrain from quoting it. It is really needed for the completion of the thought of the editorial. It is as follows:

"These injustices cannot be righted by fiat of any league or combination of nations. They can be righted only by enlightened public opinion. When overwhelming public opinion demands the righting of international, social, and political wrongs, we shall be on the road to stable peace and prosperity. The dominant nations will not be able to withstand that pressure. The chief concern, therefore, of those who are working for international peace and cooperation should be to foster public opinion for justice and the removal of fundamental causes which bar progress toward disarmament, cooperation, and prosperity."—Religious Telescope.

Have nothing to do with dealing out penalties to men who have wronged you! God's mills grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small, and there is no coward, or sneak, or base man, or sharp-eyed, clever-fingered thief, who has done you wrong that shall not, if he do not repent, be ground to powder.—Joseph Parker.

Fishing for Men

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter

Hey! You fishermen, sitting there in the hot sun and angling all day, who you never give up? You catch nothing but you keep on trying. What a lesson for the professed followers of Christ! How ready we are to give up when we go angling for souls and meet difficulties. And in fact, how very seldom we go fishing for men. And when we do, how lacking are we in that persistency and determination and patience that characterize the average fisherman.

On every hand we are hearing of the lukewarmness and lethargy and lack of the spirit of evangelism in the lives of so many church members. Is it the spirit of the age? Do selfishness and forgetfulness of the fate of others mark us today as being unlike our Lord who set for us an example in living and sacrificing for others? More church members, both ministers and lay members, who are filled with the evangelistic fire, constitute the most pressing need in the church today.

Our Lord's program for his church has not changed. He still says: "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." He will do that if we will let him. He will do it by the power of his indwelling spirit. He can take a self-willed Peter, a profane fisherman, and make him eminently successful in the art of catching men. He can take a despised Collector of Customs, and make him equally successful, because of his full surrender and willingness to be led and used. Every saved person is saved to serve and not to be served. Let's go a-fishing with Jesus as our Guide and Instructor. Who follows his program will be successful.

"They caught nothing," and three verses farther on we read, "They were not able to draw the net for the multitude of fishes." O what a change! How can we account for it? The late Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, for many years one of God's most successful fishers of men, said, "That is an easy problem to solve. The first time they toiled in their own strength, the second time in the strength of their Risen Lord." The second time they obeyed the commands of the Divine Director on the shore who said, "Cast the net on the right side of the ship and ye shall find."

The story is often told of an artist who fashioned the statue of an angel from the marble and then sent invitations to his artist friends to look upon his work and criticize it. They were loud in their praises. Michelangelo came among the number, and the artist desiring to hear his comments without being seen, hid himself from view and with fast beating heart heard the great artist say as he examined the work critically, "It lacks one thing." The poor artist was well nigh broken hearted when he heard what seemed to be an unfavorable criticism made by the master. After days of suffering he sent to Michelangelo to hear from his lips what the lack might be, and he heard the artist say, "It lacks only life to make it perfect. If it had life it would move its wings and take its place among the angels in the skies, and would be as perfect almost as God himself could make it." The work of every member of the church needs the Master's touch which gives life. Then and then only will it be crowned with real success.

Successful fishermen study the habits of the fish they would catch and the bait that best allures, for not all fish can be caught by the same kind of bait. Successful soul winners study the people they would win and the best bait to use, and then after much prayer and preparation they go a-fishing. Paul said, "To the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews." He became "all things to all men that he might gain some." He baited his hook according to the fish he wanted to catch. The Lord by his Spirit will help us to know what bait to use, a sermon, a song, a tract, a verse of Scripture, a letter, a personal talk, or something else. We need to study the fish and the bait and successful fishermen.

Have you had one good catch? One great soul winner says, "It is a great matter to take a trout early in your trial." Go after a big fish and don't give up, for the Lord is with his fishermen.

Forget it not! Love is essential, for none can accomplish much without a heart of love. The kind of love needed is described in the love chapter, the thirteenth of First Corinthians. "Love never faileth." And Love must be mixed with devotion and sincerity. The salesman must believe in the goods he wants to sell. He must be earnest, enthusiastic, never half-hearted. Christians are Gospel salesmen. A religious depression is on and God's salesmen must work harder than ever to sell the Gospel to lost men, for multitudes are averse to buying.

Never say, "It can't be done," but say, "It can be done," and with the help of the Divine Manager "It shall be done." An expert salesman says there are four rules for good salesmanship: 1. Get attention. 2. Create interest. 3. Arouse desires. 4. Get action. The Gospel salesman can well observe these same rules. The lack of such observance accounts in part at least for the lack of more closed sales, the small number who are signing on the dotted line. Let's study the rules and try them out!

We cannot compel people to accept the Gospel and be saved, but we can do our best to sell them. Someone reverses the old adage and then it goes, "You can lead a horse to water and you can make him drink." But how? And he answers: "Give him a little salt before you lead him to the water." The salt for the lost soul may be the personal touch in some way with a genuine Christian fisher of men. We cannot compel but "We can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us."

Apart from the Holy Spirit the task of soul winning that the Lord gives us is impossible. Worldliness in the life of the church member will rob him of the Spirit's power. Inconsistency spells failure for many who ought and could be "workers together with God" in saving the lost for whom he died. Well can every church member pray, "Search me, O God, and know my heart. Try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me." Our Master Fisherman requires clean vessels. The abundant life is necessary for soul-winners, far more necessary than many talents. Being right with God is first and foremost.

"Too late! Too late!" O how many are lost by delay. How many fishermen miss a catch by procrastination. Awake! awake! The most pressing need of our church today is more of the passion for souls. More members are needed who are loyal fishers of men. Such are among the richest people in this world. Those who have a record of years of loyalty to the Church of Jesus Christ will be among the richest in eternity. May this year find thousands of members of our churches fishing for souls, each trying to win one soul.

Jesus says: "As the Father sent me, even so send I you." And may thousands answer, "Here am I, Lord, send me."

Smithville, Ohio.

The Editor Expresses His Thanks

The editor wishes to express publicly his thanks to God who is restoring him again to health, and to his fellow workers both in and out of the Publishing House, who have given so unselfishly, and often sacrificially, of their time to the carrying on of his work during his illness. God is good and merciful and all-sufficient in power, and people are friendly and full of kindnesses and helpfulness beyond what we are wont to think, and the editor is glad to acknowledge having been made more keenly conscious of these things during his affliction. He cannot find words to express adequately his thanks to all who have gone out of their way to be of service in this time of need. He wishes to acknowledge his indebted-edness to every member of the Publishing House force, all of whom were ready and willing to do all that was possible to help in the emergency. They are a loyal bunch. We must make special mention of Dr. Charles A. Bame, who took over the responsibility of preparing copy, directing the make up of The Evangelist and doing much writing, taking care especially of the "Editorial Review," and also made frequent trips to the bedside of the editor to counsel with him. Dr. Teeter also did us many kindnesses and gave time to editorial writing, as also did Prof. Stuckey and Rev. Belote, and Dr. Carpenter. We thank them each and every one, and also all those who responded, or are responding, so graciously in supplying copy for The Evangelist. Many laymen and ministers throughout the brotherhood have written the editor words of concern and encouragement during his sickness and for all these kind expressions we are truly grateful, and we also thank all who have offered prayer in our behalf. But most of all, thanks be unto God and to our Lord Jesus Christ, the Great Physician.

Next week we are celebrating Christian Endeavor week in the Evangelist and the beginning of a new half century of Christian Endeavor. For this effort material is being supplied by our National Christian Endeavor officers.

Do not forget to take that Publication Day offering, make it as generous as possible and send it to the Business Manager, and you will help not only your own publishing house, but through it, every other kingdom interest that our church represents.

In a personal communication from Brother R. F. Porte, pastor of the First church of South Bend, Indiana, we learn that he is in a revival meeting in his own church, doing his own preaching, and, as he says, "We are having good attendance and the music is fine, —seven have come forward the first week."

Brother W. R. Deeter of Carleton, Nebraska, wrote on the 10th that they were having ten to twelve inches of snow on the level, but that Sunday school and worship services were being maintained with good interest, having 72 at the Brethren school, 71 at the Methodist school, and 111 at the union church services, the two churches worshipping together regularly with one minister. We are glad to learn that Mrs. Deeter is recovering nicely from her hospital experience.

The intellectual quality of the faculty of Ashland College and Seminary is such that no member of its constituency need be ashamed of it in educational circles anywhere, as certain papers of which President Jacobs makes mention in his College News letter, and others of a similar character, indicate. Along with this, we believe, there is being maintained a moral idealism that alone can give scholarship that pose that will make its leadership safe. The church can be thankful for that.

Another Elder of the Shenandoah Valley recently passed to his eternal reward, as we are informed this week by Brother E. L. Miller, who conducted the funeral and pays fitting tribute to his memory in this issue. It was Brother John W. Thompson, whose passing occurred on January 9, 1932, and who was well known and loved in the Valley. It was not our privilege to have known this brother personally, but we have seen his name on the district conference programs and have learned of his services. We bespeak the sympathies of the Evangelist family to those who are left to sorrow at his going, and pray that the memory of such sincere and unassuming service as he was willing to render may inspire others to be willing to fill up the gaps that are being made.

A letter recently received from Brother Grant McDonald, pastor of the growing church at Ellet, Ohio, informs us that the Lord is continuing to prosper his work there in spite of the depression, which hit Akron as it has few other cities in the country. The Ellet folks have rallied under the leadership of the McDonalds in a fine way, and in a revival meeting recently conducted by Brother and Sister McDonald the Lord blessed with the conversion of souls, —but we are expecting an early report from Brother McDonald and we must not "steal his thunder" by telling more at this time about the progress. Suffice to say, that Dr. J. C. Beal, who recently visited the field, is greatly encouraged over the way things are going.

Brother Freeman Ankrum writes that the first year of his pastorate at Flora, Indiana, will soon be completed and that in that time the Sunday school has made commendable growth and the church membership has increased by thirty, some of whom have become active and responsible members. He has an originally organized young people's group, called "The Quads," which is functioning splendidly and bringing satisfaction to the heart of the pastor. The number and loyalty of the young people of this congregation speak well for the future of the church. Flora is to entertain the next Indiana conference and they seem to be anticipating it with pleasure. Brother Ankrum has been called to remain as pastor for another year, and is to be given time off for one meeting with some other church.

In a personal letter from Brother D. R. Murray, pastor of the Cooperative Brethren church in Columbus, Ohio, we learn that he has been ill and was compelled to undergo an operation for the removal of tonsils and adenoids, but he is rapidly regaining his health, we are glad to say. Brother Quinter M. Lyon and some ministers of the Church of the Brethren helped out in the pulpit work during his illness. A splendid Christmas program was presented and about a decorated Christmas tree "White Gifts" were placed—mainly groceries for the needy. They filled four baskets and were distributed among needy families. Brother Murray says: "We lifted a Thanksgiving offering of $15.00 for the Brethren church and a Christmas offering of $10.00 for the Church of the Brethren. . . . We now have all our repairing bills paid. . . . We had 67 at Sunday school Sunday (January 10th) and a good attendance for church." Thus the work goes on under faithful leadership, with signs of progress and encouragement.

Our good correspondent from Milledgeville, Illinois, gives us an interesting report of the work on that field, where Brother George E. Cone is the devoted pastor. Our church at this place is cooperating with the other churches in union Sunday evening services during the winter months, this being the second winter for such program. Three new members were recently received into the church by baptism and two other applicants await baptism in a stream. The young people's choir, under the accomplished musical leadership of Miss Fike, gave a much enjoyed Christmas program, that was said to be in all its parts a witness for the Lord. And that means much. There are many Christmas programs given successfully in every point but that. We commend those who are not careless or thoughtless in this particular. We have a feeling that every Christmas recitation and every musical selection ought to turn the minds of children and adults alike to the Christ, whose birthday we thus celebrate. And similarly, in every other children's or young people's program, a verse or song that is offered to them for planting in their minds ought to be something that is really worth while.

Brother B. F. Owen writes of his recent meeting held at Loree, Indiana, where Brother D. A. C. Teeter is the faithful pastor, and who is devotedly assisted by his capable wife. The meeting began on Christmas night and continued for two weeks and was a splendid success. According to the report of Brother Paul A. Davis, Ashland Seminary student and member of the Loree church, the numerical results were thirty-five confessions of faith, and two who had previously made confession were united to the church by baptism. Brother Owen was greatly pleased with the cooperation given him by the Loree brethren and their pastor, and speaks highly of the work being done by Brother Teeter in spite of the handicap of eye trouble. Prayer is requested in his behalf, and it is especially fitting that we should give him our prayers, as he is soon to undergo an operation on his eyes. The Loree congregation was encouraged in the meetings by the support of nearby churches, and on the last night the evangelist was surprised and complimented by the visit of a large delegation from his own church at Nappanee.

It is good to hear "Bell Jingles" again and to learn of the activities of Dr. W. S. Bell in the great Northwest, where our churches are few and our opportunities are many. Dr. Bell recently held a three weeks' meeting at Sunnyside, Washington, where Brother Harold D. Fry is the faithful pastor. This was no new field to Brother Bell, for he established the church and served it as pastor for many years, beginning with fifty members and leaving it with nearly four hundred. This church has been a real missionary

Preparatory Plans for a Victory Revival

By Charles H. Ashman

The Editor has requested us to give you the benefit of our experience and experiments in Preparatory Plans for a Victory Revival. Over a period of ten years as pastor in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, we have tested out a number of plans. The Lord has blessed some and condemned others. Some failed and some succeeded. We recommend only those that have succeeded. Each church has its own local problems, yet all Brethren churches have much in common. We believe these plans will work, if worked, in any Brethren church. It is one thing to "plan your work" and another to "work your plan."

Prayer Plans

Prayer is the supreme requisite. The ministry of intercessory prayer is sadly lacking today. There can be no Victory Revival without it! Genuine revivals are prayed down, not worked up. We win souls on our knees more than on our shoe soles.

Cottage prayer meetings are good. But, we have adopted the group prayer meeting plan. These are held in the church. After a short opening, the folks are divided into groups according to age and sex. Boys and girls up to 15 are grouped. Young people form a group. Then the men and women are separated. Four groups praying in different parts of the church simultaneously. Nothing but prayer in these groups. Then a closing service together. This affords opportunity for promoting general revival plans. These group prayer meetings should be held at least twice a week for at least two weeks prior to the opening of the revival. We recommend the deacons and deaconesses as a committee to arrange for them and conduct them.

Personal Workers

"What is everybody's business, is usually nobody's business." How fine if every member would go forth to win the wanderers back and the sinners to Christ! But, the fact is, they don't! The next best is to call for "volunteers" to form a Personal Workers' band. If needed, teach and train these. But, beware of the mechanical and over-specialization, which tends to discourage the workers. This year, we have appointed two committees to arrange for this work. One will give special attention to the unsaved, securing the list of prospects and assigning them to the workers. The other will attend to the "Renewal of Members," working especially among indifferent church members. These two shall work together, of course, but each have its distinctive work. The same "Band" will contain the volunteers for the two phases of the work. This Personal Workers' Band should be ready for the evangelist when he arrives.

Publicity

We have tried out a number of methods,—public billboards, cards on the street cars, window cards, door-knob hangers, paid "ads" in the newspaper, etc. From all these and others, we glean those we can safely recommend. A small hand card for the members to give to others is the best method of a personal contact invitation of which we know. An electrically lighted bulletin board and banner in front of the church are of value according as the church is strategically located. A short article in the newspaper each day is productive of great publicity. In most cities, this cannot be secured, however. There is nothing that can take the place of the personal recommendation and invitation of the members. Beware of sensational and exaggerated publicity. A letter to every family of the church two weeks prior to the revival is vital. We have opened meetings at churches where a large percent of the membership did not know about them.

Slogan

Yes, there ought to be one. Avoid "Campaigns," — that word smells too much of politics. We have used "Old-Fashioned Revival," but it is misunderstood and stirs opposition in the minds of some. The best slogan we know of is "Victory Revival." It inspires faith, confidence, assurance. It challenges. It contains the two-fold purpose of a revival, —to revive the church and gain victory of the devil in winning souls to Christ. We recommend it!

Music

Music will either inspire or ruin a service. It is either a handicap or a help to the preacher. Careful preparation should be made for it before the revival starts. A chorus choir should be ready. Congregational singing should always be a strong feature of a revival. A consecrated song director and pianist or organist are mighty assets. A revival is not an exceptional opportunity for folks to display their musical talent. Many a soul is either "sung to Christ" or "driven away from him," through the medium of music. Spiritual leadership and singers are indispensable to a Victory Revival.

Finances

The climax of many a revival has been ruined by wrong financial plans. Whenever the last day must be given over to a "drive for funds," the aftermath of the revival will not be good. We advocate an offering at every service with the understanding that after "reasonable expenses" are deducted for local needs, the remainder shall go to the evangelist, to be supplemented by a special envelope offering on the last Sunday. The envelopes for this special offering should be passed out during the last week.

Organization

It all depends! If the pastor is to be the evangelist, we recommend the following organization:—as many committees as are necessary to get the work done. We have ten committees this year, with over 60 different persons on them, no one person on more than one committee. This

TEXTS THAT CHALLENGE TO SOUL WINNING

He that winneth souls is wise.—Prov. 11:30.

And they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.—Dan. 12:3.

How can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?—Esther 8:6.

He that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.—James 5:20.

Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in.—Luke 14:23.

When I say unto the wicked . . . thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked . . . his blood will I require at thine hand.—Ezek. 33:8.

And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy.—Mark 2:3.

Lift up thine eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest.—John 4:35.

The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.—Matt. 9:37, 38.

Here am I; Send me.—Isa. 6:8.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Dr. Martin M. Shively

XXXIII—Elder William Keifer

As memory brings before me the group of men about whom I have been writing, there stands among them a man somewhat advanced in years, tall and rather spare of frame, with beard white as snow, and with a smiling countenance. When he speaks, I note an accent that makes me understand that he is of Pennsylvania "Dutch" descent, like the man who stands near him,—as he has every reason for so doing, because these two men have been neighbors and associates in the ministry, in the same congregation, for many years. The man whom I thus note is the subject of this sketch, for many years a resident of Wayne County, Ohio, to which he had come as a lad of fifteen years and in which he spent the remainder of his days. The man who in my vision stands beside him is P. J. Brown, and both were charter members of what is known as the Fair Haven congregation,—the result of the division in the early 80's, in the Church of the Brethren, which is near by. During the earlier history of this congregation, one or the other of these two men served as pastor of the local congregation, Brother Keifer having given in all 17 years of such service. Of course it was pretty largely a service of love, since practically none of our congregations at that time were able to give a full living to the men who served them. Brother Keifer was a farmer-preacher, as were many of the preachers of his day, but let no one think that none of the farmer-preachers were men of ability, for, having heard them often, I know that at least some of them were good sermonizers, and what they said, and the way in which they said it, compared very favorably with many a message I have heard since their retirement from the stage of action. They knew their Book, and some things besides, but they believed with all their hearts that the Book was God's word, and that it revealed his will and his plan of salvation, and that without acceptance of his way, man had no ground for help or hope. Brother Keifer was one of this group, and there was no hint of apologizing in the messages which he gave his people. There may not have been as much of entertainment in his utterances as in many more modern sermons, but in instruction in the way of righteousness, there was little wanting, and the kindly spirit in which the message was given, gave it such weight that it resulted in fruit bearing, which after all, is the acid test of worth. For almost 60 years he lived in the locality in which he died, and here, not far from the body of his team mate,—Brother Brown, lies all that is mortal of this man of God, waiting for the sound of that trumpet, at whose sounding, "the dead in Christ shall rise first."

During the earlier years of my own ministry, most of which years were spent in Ohio, I met Brother Keifer often, if upon no other occasion than at the annual conference, which he rarely if ever failed to attend. I met him first, I believe, during my school days here at Ashland, 1886-87, for he lived only 15 miles from Ashland, and on all special occasions he was here—sometimes as preacher, and at other times to give such help as he could give, in other capacities. Few if any of the men of his day could foresee the measure of reverence in, or with which, their memories would be enshrined in the hearts of those who were young, when they were growing old, nor could they estimate the degree of their influence on those who would come after them, but now that the writer of these sketches is both bald and gray himself, he most devoutly hopes he too, like these, shall not have lived in vain. Ashland, Ohio.

The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge; and the ear of the wise seeketh knowledge. A man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men. Prov. 18:15, 16.

"Publish Ye, Praise Ye"

By R. D. Barnard, Member Publication Board

"I wouldn't want to live in a land without churches" is a statement attributed to Robert Ingersol. Of course we knew it, as Christians before he told us, but it revives just a little of the old spiritual fire to hear such a statement from such a man.

I have just been challenged again during the last few days, as I have been reading how much the people of past ages suffered to publish the Gospel that all men might praise him. Men even as late as 1600 A. D. were executed for no greater offence than translating and printing a Bible.

Here today we have Bibles in various translations, we have great amounts of fine Christian literature, and I doubt if many of us ever really stop to thank God for the heritage that is ours. At least not many of us, I dare say, put ourselves out of the way so very much to help the Publication Interests of our own denomination.

Publicity does pay. Every bill board tells us that fact. To most of us the sum spent yearly by the great corporations in just one thing—Publicity—would stagger us. Would they continue it indefinitely if there were not pecuniary rewards? Well, you can just put it down "They wouldn't." I just saw a statement in one of the books of F. H. Case to the effect that a $7,000.00 publicity campaign carried on in the New York newspapers in the interest of the Near East Relief work had cash contributions traceable to it exceeding $500,000.00.

But I am thinking of Publicity in relation to the Gospel of Christ. What is it to witness, or preach, or teach, or testify, but to give publicity to the Gospel? As I see it one of the best channels through which this publicity can flow is through the printed page. And pages will not be printed, nor in any great measure approximate our desire, unless they are printed by Brethren people. The purpose of the Brethren Publishing Company is to accomplish this very thing.

Sometimes greater effort is required to carry on this "Publish ye, Praise ye" aim than at others. Our denomination is small. I am not sure that it really does any good to remind ourselves of the fact. Still God's Remnant was always small, and if my church is counted in as a part of that remnant I shall be eternally grateful. But our denomination IS small, and because of that fact every interest of the church has a hard time of it to keep out of the RED financially and still be faithful to its trust in presenting the Gospel. This is true of our Publishing House.

Some people are saying, "Depressions always do the Church good." That may have been true of past ones, but I am not able to see very many advancements that are being made right now. Might it not be that this very thing points with no uncertain hand to the "End-time?" Be that as it may, we are in a depression right now. Most places have passed the panic time and are just now awakening to the fact that there is a long, slow pull ahead. It has been curtail, retrench, and try in some way to make the dollar do many times as much as it ever did before.

This very fact makes denominational institutions to suffer most. Local appeals and local obligations seem to come first. Hungry mouths and cold bodies appeal to us, and they should. We should take care of the needs of our own church household. But hungry souls are more important than hungry bodies, and an impoverished church interest seeking to serve as a CHANNEL for spiritual food is really a more urgent need than an impoverished family or community. While caring for the poor and needy, we should care for these other things first.

If for any reason the Publishing Interests of our Church should suffer permanent loss, the entire denomination suffers with it. And we should NOT SUFFER loss, we should be MAKING GAINS. I believe we are, but not as fast as we could if everyone of us would just do as much as we really feel in our hearts we should do.

A church paper that it takes an hour to read, and that goes into 5,000 homes might easily be estimated to be demanding 10,000 hours of the denominations' time. That paper should be good. The Brethren Evangelist is good, as are all of our publications, but it should be better and better, and I believe it will be, if everyone of us as pastors, and all the laymen whom we lead, will just give the finest possible support.

Do you say, "Physician heal thyself?" Well, I probably have it coming to me. I take it. I'm going to try to do my best to back up the Publishing House with respect to the Brethren Evangelist, and in the Sunday school literature by using every part that we can use and still meet our local situation. As an interested pastor, I call on every other pastor to help. Let's all put our shoulder to the wheel and make it possible for our Publishing House to give even better literature for our whole Church.

The Publication Day offering is near. It is necessary. It is important. May every individual and every church do the best possible. But there is a greater need. May we give our best during the whole year to help our publishing interests to help themselves.

The store has a showcase. The purpose of a showcase is to reveal what is inside of it. May it please God to make showcases of each one of us, revealing Jesus Christ. Galatians 1:15, 16 is a good reading in this connection. Read it, and may God bless the Publishing Interests, and may he bless each one of you who read this, as together we go into the New Year.

Changing the Subject

Part I. From What Should We Change the Subject

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Custom has a strong way, even in civilized lands. It is not customary to change the subject of a conversation without an apology. Often one continues indefinitely in a conversation which is a bore to all participating, because no one has the courage to change the subject. If anyone does change the subject, he almost invariably apologizes profusely or uses the stereotyped phrase, "not changing the subject." It would seem however, that this, like some other of our customs, is not in full accord with scripture, nor is it in full accord with reason. We may dispense with this latter point briefly by saying that he who never changes the subject is a monomaniac, of whom there are many, both in and out of asylums. Taking up the thought from a scriptural viewpoint we would say that we find therein various things from which we should change the subject.

In the first place we should change the subject from "false religions." How many a missionary has of recent years gone to foreign lands and thought to win souls to the Lord Jesus Christ without changing the subject. How many a Mohammedan and Hindu hearer has been persuaded that since the subject has not been changed, after all his religion must be just as good as the "Jesus road." In Job 13:7-8, we find "Will ye speak unrighteously for God and talk deceitfully for him?" If we would win vital converts, vigorous in their Christian life, we must change the subject of their religion; whether that subject be Mohammed, Brahma, Buddha or a pagan idol.

Again we must change the subject from "evil doers." It is true as we find in Psalm 94:4, that "all the workers of iniquity boast themselves." It is also true that we are enjoined in Psalm 37:1, to "Fret not ourselves because of evil doers." How often, alas, do we fail in this. In time of war how difficult it is to talk of other things. If some depredation has been committed in the community; if a theft has taken place on a Mission Station, how difficult it is to change the subject! And yet, how necessary, not only for our own peace of mind, but also for the wisest dealing with the offender.

Again we must change the subject from ourselves and for ourselves. Ofttimes there are errors in our own conversation. In Ephesians 5:4 we read of things that are not once to be named among us—"neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks." How much we need to hold our conversation up to the light of this scriptural test! In Ephesians 4:31, "Let evil speaking be put away from among you." Here we less often fail, yet there are times when even here the enemy comes in like a flood, even in exemplary Christian lives. It seems the Apostles were aware of this, for not only Paul, but Peter gave injunctions against it, "Laying aside all evil speaking," says Peter in the second chapter and first verse of his first epistle. James, throughout the whole length of the epistle is a magnificent commentary on the need of changing the subject. Paul, in writing to Timothy, in II Tim. 2:23, comments on foolish talking, as he does to Titus in the third chapter and ninth verse. In the same epistle, the first chapter and tenth verse, he speaks of "vain talkers." Thus, for ourselves and from ourselves, we need often to change the subject.

Again we need to change the subject from "others." Others, who perhaps may not be classed with the workers of iniquity, those evil doers of whom we have already spoken. For instance in I Peter, 2:15, we find that we ought to "silence the ignorance of foolish men." In Job 15:3 we are warned against the unprofitable talk of others. In Eccl. 7:5 we are told that it is better for one to hear the rebuke of the wise. Let us who are his then be wise in rebuking the sinner. In James 1:19 we read, "Let every one be swift to hear and slow to speak." In Acts 17:21 we read of the Athenians who went about, having as their chief desire to either tell or hear some new thing. From all these errors and follies of conversation we should change the subject.

When should we change the subject? Paul says in season and out of season. It is theory in polite circles that we must successfully and tactfully guide a change of subject along the same line. It may be possible at times to do this. If so, we may be said to be changing the subject "in season." But there are times of rebuke, times of reproof, and a subject must be changed, so to speak, "out of season." The main prerequisite for changing the subject is not tact, but courage.

To what we should change the subject is a study in itself, and will be found in the second part of this little paper.

will harness your members to responsibility. The chairmen of these committees form the Pastor's Cabinet. He works with and through the Cabinet, meeting with the entire committee upon request. A meeting of ALL COMMITTEES with the PERSONAL WORKERS' BAND a few nights before the revival opens is the climax of preparation. Our committees are,—Prayer, Personal Evangelism, Membership Renewal, Publicity, Music, Finance, Delegations, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and Fellowship. The Fellowship Committee is responsible for welcoming strangers, seeing to it that they do not get out of the church without being welcomed and made to feel welcome. We constantly stress that this "machinery" is not to be a substitute for the Holy Spirit, but an instrument through which he can more effectively work.

If the church, any church, really wants a revival, it can have one. If we are willing to pay the price of preparation,—all the price,—to the degree that we pay this price, a revival will come. If pastor and people are prepared prior to the opening of a revival, the evangelist would have to be an exceptionally poor one to defeat it. However, if pastor and people are not prepared prior to the opening, it requires an exceptionally exceptional evangelist to bring one. Lord, send a revival to every Brethren Church!

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

The annual report of President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, New York, has a cheerful tone against the almost universal depression of the times. He reports an increase in capital of the University of $28,000,000, a sum unprecedented in its history. Evidently there is money somewhere. The report is interesting also in its criticism of growing lack of refinement in dress and manners. We believe that indictment is fully justified. Most of us have been disturbed now and again by the slovenly manners of people who seem to cultivate the ways of the underworld in their speech, swagger and appearance. Perhaps it is thought to be evidence of freedom, but it is really a mark of vulgarity.

Children of privilege ought to reveal their heritage in manners.

Some of us have had reason to differ with many things said by Dr. Butler, but in his fifty years since graduation from college and thirty years as president of Columbia, he has proven himself a man of strong intellect and great power. Had he not been so wrong on one or two important questions, he might have gone to even higher place. In his report he took a fling at homes and churches for their lack in upbringing and training of the young. He was not wrong in that.—The Presbyterian.

church, two other churches having been established under its leadership. Harrah is one of the offshoots of the Sunnyside church, established under the leadership of Dr. Beal, and now under the pastoral care of Brother Fred V. Kinzie, has gone forward until it has a membership of 150, has live auxiliary organizations, and, beginning this year, is fully self-supporting. A new parsonage has also been recently built. Brother Bell was two weeks with these people in an evangelistic meeting. The numerical results of these meetings are not told us, but we doubt not the pastors will soon make report. A week of meetings was held in Vale, Oregon, a new community in every respect, but the time did not seem opportune for the establishment of a new work, though it is expected, with the settlement of other Brethren families there, the prospects will be good for a new organization.

Brother E. L. Miller, pastor of the church at Maurertown, Virginia, has not overcrowded the Evangelist with newsletters lately, but he knows how to write interesting letters and he gives us one this week. "Brother Ed," as he is wont to sign himself, says the work in his splendid church is going strong in spite of the depression and that the finances have been kept up to normal. The revival meeting under the evangelistic leadership of Brother W. C. Benshoff resulted in eight confessions, which with two others have been received into the church by baptism. The Christmas season was filled with many kinds of service and things done worthy of note. Such a spirit of helpfulness is true to the season and the pastor who leads his church and community into such an experience is doing a good work. Brother Miller tells of his helping in the organization of a new Brethren congregation at Cumberland, West Virginia, last August. There are said to be as many as a hundred members there, being fully organized, having a Sunday school and possessing a good leadership. They have no church buildings, but are sharing in the use of a Seventh Day Adventist church. The outlook for growth is said to be good, but they need a church building badly. This is just one of the many calls for larger support of our Home Mission interests. If we did but give ourselves, every member of us, seriously to this task, what might we not do! Brother Charles H. Wakeman is the pastor of this group. We hope they find the fellowship of our people very satisfying and will enjoy the use of Brethren publications.

OUR BIBLE STUDY

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

IX. Seven great parallel prophecies (continued).

Third, The Ram and the he goat (Dan. 8 and 11). This prophecy begins with the conquest of Medo-Persia by Greece 334 B. C. and deals with eastern events as chapter 7 did with western.

Course of age

1. Babylon is a province of Medo-Persia.
2. Medo-Persia represented by the ram.
3. Greece is the he goat and Alexander the Great the notable horn.
4. The four horns are four generals, successors of Alexander, whose kingdoms were later merged in Rome.

Precursory and end time

5. The little horn (8:23, 24; 11:21-35) is Antiochus Epiphanes (168 B. C.) who took away the daily sacrifice and defiled the temple by offering a sow on the altar. He was to the Jews what later the false prophet, Mohammed was to the church in the east and the papacy in the west. He was a type of the "king" of Dan. 11:36-45.

6. This king is the dreadful apostate called the "false prophet" in Rev. 19:20 and the second beast of Rev. 13.

7. His destruction (Dan. 8:25; 11:47).

Fourth, Israel and the Messiah (Dan. 9).

This is a remarkable prophecy because it gives us the exact date of the manifestation of the Messiah, and, incidentally, the key to other chronological prophecies.

Course of age

1. The seventy years captivity (vs. 2).

2. The restoration (vs. 25).

3. Seven "weeks" (49 years) rebuilding Jerusalem (vs. 25).

4. Sixty-two weeks (483 years) more to the rejection of the Messiah.

These are Jewish calendar years of 360 days.

Precursory and end time

5. "Another week" (vs. 27). "He shall confirm the covenant with many." As the Messiah is the subject of the prophecy some think that it is he who makes the new covenant in his blood and takes away the old sacrifices by having fulfilled them. But grammatically, "he" refers to "the prince that shall come," that is, Titus, the Roman general who destroyed the city. He was a type or forerunner of the beast of Revelation. In its precursory fulfillment this week stretches out like the legs of Nebuchadnezzar's image, or the little horns of Dan. 7 and 8, and the "last days" of Joel (Acts 2:17).

6. The taking away of the daily oblation, and desolation of the city.

7. The consummation, the restoration of the kingdom.

Fifth, the eschatological prophecies of Christ (Matt. 24; Mk. 13; Lk. 21).

These are given in answer to the question of the disciples (Mt. 24:3) "When shall these things (destruction of temple, etc) be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world (age)?" Comparing the three chapters we may group the predictions as follows:

Course of age

1. False teachers and Christs (Matt. 24:5; Mk. 13:6; Lk. 21:8).

2. Wars and persecutions (Mt. 24:6; Mk. 13:7-9; Lk. 21:16, 17).

3. Iniquity and apostasy (Mt. 24:12; Mk. 13:12, 13; Lk. 21:16, 17).

4. Signs and signs (Mt. 24:7; Mk. 13:8; Lk. 21:11).

End of age

5. "The abomination of desolation" (Matt. 24:15; Mk. 13:14; Lk. 21:20). This last reference marks the time by the armies of the enemy (the beast) surrounding Jerusalem.

6. The hour of great tribulation (Rev. 3:10; Matt. 24:31; Mk. 13:19, 20; Lk. 21, 22).

7. The appearance of Christ (Matt. 24:30, 31; Mk. 13:24-27; Lk. 21:27).

Sixth, the prophetic parables of Matt. 13, giving the view of the kingdom in the aspect of its mystery or church form (vs. 11).*Course of age

1. The sower and diverse soils, representing the evangelization of individuals and their various reactions to the Gospel.

2. The good seed and the tares, representing the evangelization of society by the scattering of missionaries, and the opposing work of satan.

3. The mustard seed, representing the over-growth of the church through the entrance of unconverted multitudes.

4. The leaven in the meal, or the entrance of false doctrines.

End of age

5. The hid treasure, Israel, in dispersion, to be regathered.

6. The pearl of great price, the church (Eps. 5:25-32).

7. The dragnet,—the return of Christ to claim his bride, judge the nations and establish his kingdom.

Seventh, the book of Revelation. This great prophecy in turn opens out into seven parts which will next be considered.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

2 Tim. 3:10, 11, 12. "But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, longsuffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Moffatt has this: "Now you have followed my teaching, my practice, my aims, my faith, my patience, my love, my steadfastness, my persecutions, my sufferings—all that befell me at Antioch, Iconium and Lystra, all the persecutions I had to undergo, from which the Lord rescued me. Yes, and all who want to live the religious life in Christ Jesus will be persecuted."

Over, and over again has God pointed out, and warned, that the life of the Christian, living godly in Christ Jesus, will not be like other lives. Old Testament examples and New Testament examples, through parable and direct teaching, has this fact been pointed out. The outstanding strength of Paul's life, and his Master's before him, to the cause of Christianity, rested on the fact as to how they behaved when under the fire of persecution because of their religion. To escape trials consequently on a high type of religion as set forth in the New Testament, we prefer to live like other people around us. Again, and again, has the truth of God been yielded because we did not wish to break with friends. Who hears anything about the vast amount of teaching in God's Word concerning "separation from the world?" Doesn't this age need it? Does not the church need it? Where is the church's power? If a few ministers do not endorse everything which comes stalking down the pike, he is thrown into the discard. But, in the light of the above scriptures, what of that? There's a great day farther on.

J. G. Holland said, "Every man who strikes blows for power, for influence, for institutions, for the right, must be just as good an anvil as he is a hammer."

Many a brave young man starts out in life determined "to hit the line, and to hit it hard." He knows he will not be able to right all wrongs, but he feels the urge of his great mission so strongly that he hopes to make a dent at least. But alas, he has not calculated with what force this old world will strike back. A few exchange blows, and he is ready to pursue the course of least resistance, if not say, "it can't be done." The world fights back. We expect it through foe; but when it comes through friend, as many times it does, nothing but the fact that we are good anvils can save us from complete rout. The majority of us are experts at striking; and our hammers may stand the blows. But the question is "Can I be as good an anvil as I am a hammer?"

Paul was a good soldier of Jesus Christ; he struck great blows which shook cities and rocked to their foundations heathen temples and toppled to the ground heathen gods; and likewise he endured hardness—all because he was an unyielding anvil. When struck a blow that would have felled the average minister, he stood, perhaps stunned, but ready to fight on.

We must know God as Paul knew him; serve him as he served him; teach him as he has instructed us to teach him; abide in him as he dwelt in him, and endure hardness for him as he endured for him, if we are to establish his truths in the world as he established them. If we, having the light, cowardly assume a compromising attitude for fear we will lose some friends, how can we expect the world, having nothing but darkness, to walk in that light? If the church has lost the pioneer spirit, how far away from the spirit of the martyrs have we drifted? What a wide chasm between the religious atmosphere which Paul built up, and the atmosphere in the average church of today. And who is responsible for this modern craze of frolic and fun in the average church? The church needs New Testament faith more than it does money. It needs a lot of self-denying service more than it needs profession. It needs to be brought face to face with the Cross more than it needs organization. If we are to be used of God to hasten the kingdom of God on earth, where the will of God is to be done on earth as it is done in heaven, it is high time we get busy beating back the waves of worldly programs which is creating the demand for the tabernacle-movement, springing up like wild-fire over the country. Do you know whither we are drifting? New Paris, Indiana.

The Beloved Disciple's Gospel

By John Alfred Faulkner, D.D.

It is one of the ironies of history that John the Beloved Apostle, who has more to say on love than any other writer in the New Testament, should have become a storm center of modern times. It suggests a poetic nemesis of the cruel question of his early yet unchastened days, when Jesus came to a Samaritan village and was rebuffed by it because he was determined to go on up to Jerusalem: Lord, wilt thou that we bid fire to come down from heaven and consume them? (Luke 9:54). These storms have been around two of the most arresting books of the New Testament, the fourth Gospel and the Apocalypse or Revelation.

But these storms are late. For almost eighteen hundred years there was hardly a breath of suspicion on the genuineness of John's Gospel, that is, as the work of the apostle. That did not mean there were no critical minds before 1800. The Epistle to the Hebrews as to author was subjected to examination over and over again. I do not refer to the Alogi, the No-Logos people, who in doctrinal grounds about 175 threw out the fourth Gospel. They were few, and cut no ice. The first who had trouble with John was a Church of England minister in 1792 who became a Unitarian in 1778, was honest enough to resign his charge and taught school the rest of his life. There was a queer twist in our Evanson, for he not only rejected John but all the Gospels except Mark, and even the Epistle to the Romans and several other epistles. Falconer took care of his arguments (1805) in his Bampton Lectures of 1810.

The superintendent at Gotha, Bretschneider, one of the greatest scholars of the first half of the nineteenth century, a calm, clear, intellect, as cold as steel, published a book on our Gospel in Latin in 1820 which unfolded the case against John so thoroughly that few new points in that matter have been advanced since. But Bretschneider put forth his considerations against John as "Probabilia" (title of his book) and came to no decisive judgment. Of course his book raised a storm, and many replies were forthcoming. These he carefully studied, and in two years came out with a retraction, being convinced that his objections had been answered. This he repeated, and finally declared he thought the question settled in favor of John. Such candor or change resulting from it is so rare as to suggest that Bretschneider was a man of miraculous frankness to truth and receptivity to new light.

The next chief attack—not less powerful because indirect—was the famous David Friedrich Strauss in his "Leben Jesu," 1835. He was a left wing Hegelian, and from the standpoint of the immanence of God conceived in the most absolute way eliminated miracles and therefore, the documents which contain them. This lugging in a new dogma to get rid of old facts seemed hardly fair, for he frankly admitted that only in that way can we put out miracles. "If the Gospels are really historical, miracle is not to be gotten rid of from the life of Jesus." (Leben Jesu, 17). Therefore John's Gospel goes with the rest. But strange to say, (that is, from his standpoint), the more he studied that Gospel the more he was in doubt whether his first rejection was justified. So in the third edition, though he does not declare in favor of the Gospel, he is no longer convinced to the contrary. This was an impossible position for one with his premises, and he later went back to his former denial.

Strauss' character was stronger than his mind. Otherwise, how can you account for his variations? He made 1835 a year of fame in history by coming out with the mythical view of Christ. That is, the disciples of Christ started with a doctrine of what he was or ought to have been as Messiah, and then they invented facts to embody and make living for the people that doctrine. The mythical theory was started in 1812 by Neibuhr in his Hoster of Rome, though he did not elaborate it. It was applied by DeWette to the Old Testament, by Strauss to the New. As having to do with Christ it was shattered by the dilemma of Ulmann, that either the apostolic church invented Christ or Christ founded through the apostles the apostolic church. I would say that whoever invented Christ was far greater than he; and if the apostolic church invented him she performed a miracle beside which the miracles in the Gospels are the small dust of the balance. Strauss held that the discourses of Jesus in Matthew were genuine. The growth of myth required time, he said; therefore John's Gospel could not have been written by an eyewitness, as John the apostle was. That is, throw out John, in fact all the Gospels, by four hypotheses: first, miracles never happen; second, therefore the Gospels which contain them are false; third, the attaching of miracle to an historic character requires time; fourth, the Gospels are late; fifth, the Fourth Gospel could not be written by John. But these hypotheses must first be proved. Therefore the ground is clear to discuss the authorship of John's Gospel on its merits. But with various veerings Strauss went farther to the left from 1835 till he passed in 1874.

Baur, Professor in Tubingen from 1826 until his death in 1860, stimulated study in early Church History as no man has ever done before or since. During a life of perfectly amazing literary activity he came out with a new theory of how things went on in the first age of the Church which put old views topsy turvy, and in this theory our Gospel had its well defined place. In the first period (to 70), says Baur, there was a sharp conflict between the Jewish and Gentile sections of the Church, the one being represented by the Book of Revelation by the Apostle John and the other by the only genuine writings of Paul, the two Corinthians, Galatians and Romans. The second period (70-140) shows a moderating in this conflict by both sides, when we have most of the New Testament books. The third period (after 140) we have the pastoral epistles (Timothy and Titus) and the fourth Gospel, which is the ripe fruit of the union tendency; a Gospel made up largely out of the whole cloth by some thoughtful Christian Gnostic of 160-170, to show that the parties had come together on the new high doctrinal conception of Christ, the eternal Logos or Word of God, and on a compromise on the paschal question. Baur was of the left wing of the philosopher Hegel, and tried to run early Church History in Hegelian moulds: conflict of opposites, thesis and antithesis, higher unity. It was wrecked by the study which it prompted, even by some of Baur's own pupils and followers, as, for instance, by Ritschl who favored it in 1850, but threw it overboard in the second edition of his "Die Entstehung der altkatholischen Kirche," 1857.

Only five years after the death of Baur the eminent commentator Meyer could speak thus of the passing of his cult:

"We older men have already seen the time when Dr. Paulus and his inventions were in vogue; he died and no disciple remained. We lived through the Strauss storm thirty years ago, and in what loneliness might the author now celebrate his jubilee. We saw the Tubingen constellation arise, and even before Baur departed hence the brightness had waned. A renewed and firmer basis of the truth which had been attacked, and a more complete recognition of it were the blessings which the wave left behind; and so will it be after the present surge."

Slight acquaintance with the literature of the second century—say from 97 to 170—ought to show how impossible Baur's datings of New Testament books were. As to any vivid, strong, religiously vital and illuminating work such as the poorest New Testament Book there is complete absence. Read 2 Peter and the Epistle of Clement of Rome, or Shepherd of Hermas,—you are in another world. That is, 2 Peter springs out of an apostolic circle and time, the other two do not. Baur had learning, but did he have spiritual and literary discernment?

An interesting illustration of the instability of the negative criticism is seen in Schenkel, professor in Basel and Heidelberg (d. 1885), who thought that most of the speeches were genuine and the historical details added later. Then he came to regard the whole book as an ideal composition, 110-120, though indirectly connected with the Apostle John and Ephesus. After that he gave up all Johannine connection, and made the Gospel either from Asia Minor or Alexandria, about 150. Schenkel, like most German professors, was a voluminous author, though I think the only book of his ever translated was that on the Character of Jesus, by the Unitarian Furness, Boston, 1866.

One of the freest minds who ever devoted his life to Biblical studies was Ewald, a free lance if ever there was one, who cared for nothing but what he considered truth. He could find no support for the radical critics.

"That John is really the author of the gospel, and that no other planned and completed it than he who is at all times named as its author, cannot be doubted or denied, however often in our times critics have been pleased to doubt and deny it on grounds which are wholly foreign to the subject. On the contrary, every argument, from every quarter to which we can look, every trace and record, combine together to render any serious doubt upon the question impossible."

Ewald says again:

"That the fourth Gospel must be traced back to the apostle John has been, it is true, stoutly denied in Germany in recent times. Nevertheless the fact (that it can be traced back) is certain; and since 1826 I have all along publicly maintained it, and more recently (about 1865-70) given detailed proof of it. Whoever considers that the fourth Gospel is a spurious work ascribed to John had not learned to distinguish between original and not original, between books written in a simple unartificial style (as John) and those written artificially in the name of an earlier more famous author. The fourth Gospel does not bear a single trace of having been written in another's name; indeed it would be impossible to comprehend what reason an author would have had to ascribe it to this apostle. If Papias (about 120-150), as has recently been inferred from a fragment, really testified that John published the Gospel himself in his lifetime, that accords with everything I have previously said on the matter. . . . John wrote from his own most personal and vivid representations. . . . All the gospels are written with simple love of truth and faithful spirit."

JESUS FEEDS THE MULTITUDE

Lesson Text: John 6:1-13, 48-51; Golden Text, John 6:35

MONDAY

Jesus Feeds the Multitude. John 6:1-14. Many are the lessons we still need to learn from this story: The same Jesus who in the beginning created all things (John 1:3), still has power to change and multiply them; then there is the importance of our little part in the program, the offering of our loaves and fishes for his power to bless; the way in which he far surpasses the expectations of our faltering faith. But most comforting of all, perhaps, he is really concerned about the needs of men. These people were in danger of real physical distress if they had no food, and his great love provided for their need. We may be sure that he cares for our needs as well.

TUESDAY

The Bread from Heaven. John 6:22-40. The Jews got things mixed almost as readily as we do today! Jesus told them they were too much concerned with the material things of life while they neglected the spiritual; they gave Moses the credit for what God had done; they had, only the day before, literally been fed with bread from heaven, yet now they asked for a "sign!" With just a little reflection it may be realized that we haven't changed much.

How fitting a symbol of our Lord is the bread from heaven: real food for our souls, that lifts the starving, emaciated spirits of fallen men into abundant life and happiness that shall endure forever. May our sincere prayer be, "Lord, evermore give us this bread!"

WEDNESDAY

The Living Bread. John 6:41-51

How we should praise God for the Living Bread—Emmanuel, the Word made flesh and dwelling among us! Without his having lived among us, as one of us, he could never have been the perfect Savior that he is (Heb. 2:10). I like to think that when Jesus said: "The bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world," he included not only the final offering of his flesh upon the cross, but his daily wearing of the flesh for us, leading up to that sacrificial offering.

THURSDAY

Life-Giving Bread. John 6:52-59

After the various food kitchens have offered us their unsatisfying dishes, what a treat when we finally reach real food again! Just so, after we have tasted the best that this world can offer, do we turn to Christ and find the food that satisfieth! Perhaps if we had been with the Jews that day we should not have understood what Jesus meant, yet he makes it very clear, it seems, in verse 57: Jesus was not in any physical sense eating God the Father, but the Father was providing for his every need, and the very substance and being of God were so interwoven in the being of Jesus that he could truly say: "I and the Father are one."

And in exactly the same way, "He that eateth me, even he shall live by me." "In him we live, and move, and have our being."

FRIDAY

Choosing the Bread of Life. John 6:60-71

There is no foundation in verse 65 for the so-called doctrine of predestination. The meaning is certainly not that God calls some and does not call others, who must therefore be lost in spite of any efforts; rather, (see Rom. 2:4), it is God's goodness and grace, his many undeserved favors and blessings, that turn the hearts of his creatures toward him. All may choose, as did Peter, the Life-Giving Bread, or we may turn and walk with him no more—but the choosing is ours!

SATURDAY

Every Need Supplied. Rev. 7:13-17

When God calls a man for a certain work, it is certain that he will supply the needs of the worker, in some way or other; yet that does not mean that we shall never lack or suffer in this life. These that John saw had come out of great tribulation, but now they were to be ever in the very presence of God, who should supply all their needs according to his riches in glory. If we lack or suffer in this life, let us not lose faith in him who will supply all our needs.

SUNDAY

Jehovah our Provider. Ps. 34:1-11

"This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him"—the cry of every saved sinner today. Like David, we feel humble when we realize our own need in contrast with the power of God. O taste and see that the Lord is good!

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

The gospel of worldly wisdom today is attuned to the key of "Reform." The apostle of this age is a reformer. And his message is Reformation. This is the panacea of social ills. This is the cure of every disease in the body politic. This is the remedy for every personal trouble. This is the crying need of the church of Jesus Christ. This is the hope of every individual soul.—Reformation. "If men will only adopt my scheme and follow my plan they will be all right, the world will be happy, the millennium will be here.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ, on the other hand, knows no such partial idea as reformation. Our Lord was no mere reformer, slashing right and left at existing institutions, and locating the source of all evil in things and methods. Though evils abounded on every hand, the apostles made no direct attack upon them. Theirs was a deeper, grander, more permanent work. They aimed not at the reformation but the regeneration of men.

Their motto was, "Except a man be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of heaven." After all, what is the difference? Is it vital? A man says, "I have reformed." and what does he mean? Simply that he has taken off his old coat and put on a new one. The new garment may be genuine wool, or it may be shoddy. It looks well in any case so long as it is new: but when it is become worn and old it may be just as ragged as the former old one. All the while the man remains the same.

Every scheme of reform looks well till its freshness is gone: then it is no better than that which it displaced. Men always find out in the end that, "New Presbyter is only old Priest writ large." Let a profane man reform, for example, and his newly acquired interjections will soon get the ring of the old-time oaths. Tomorrow's oaths and yesterday's slang will have about the same meaning. As well hope to civilize the savages of darkest Africa by sending with every cargo of rum a corresponding cargo of dress coats and patent leathers as to redeem humanity by the process of reformation.

Regeneration, on the other hand, implies first of all a change in the man which will inevitably be followed by a change of habits and plans, and often even of clothes. Regeneration always begins at the heart. It rectifies the ideals. It transforms the character. It transfigures the spirit. And so working outward it gradually but surely brings the entire being into harmony with the divine law. It justifies Emerson's apothegm, "Right ethics are central, and go from the soul outward."

Counterfeits are of many kinds. Sometimes the entire coin is of base metal made to resemble gold or silver. In other cases the surface is genuine, the middle of the coin having been removed and replaced with the base metal. Reformation is a spiritual counterfeit of this kind. It is all right on the surface. The external marks are quite perfect. It responds to all superficial tests for genuine metal. The acid and the microscope do not detect the fault. But test it by its ring, or dig beneath the surface, and the sham is quickly made apparent. Reformation is not as good as regeneration.

Reformation can never redeem the race. It can never bring the Millennium. Reformation makes a man respectable; regeneration makes him righteous. Reformation makes society comfortable; regeneration make it Christian. Reformation makes the world decent; regeneration makes it divine.

on occasions as many as twenty or twenty-five are beaten in harmony. One is never complete by itself.

In the Northern Congo, part of a tree trunk is shaped with a somewhat flat top and legs underneath the body. It is then hollowed, leaving surfaces on which to beat. Sometimes projections are left to form seats for the drummers. These wooden drums give out a surprising amount of sound.

Not all the drums in Africa are used for heathen dances. On the Adua Mission Station we use drums to call the people together for worship. Owing to the number of the meetings we sound different beats for different purposes, and also have introduced a gong—actually part of the wheel of a railway truck. It may not be as tuneful as a bell but the sound is not disagreeable.

All through the week our drums call men, women and children to school, Gospel meetings, catechism and Bible classes. On Sunday the day breaks to the crash of drums. Then the gong sounds for prayer. After the prayer meeting the Christians go out into the villages to invite others to the Gospel meeting. The drums call the people to come and listen to the Old Old Story. Again the drum calls villagers to Sunday school when native Christians instruct six hundred of their own people in the Way of Life.—Missionary Review of the World.

African Drums and Their Uses *

By Rev. A. E. Voller, Adua, Western, Nile District, Uganda

Africa is a land of drums. The rhythmic throb of the big drum and the fascinating roll of the small ones that stir the whole district at home, communicating itself to the feet or fingers, is the same in Africa. But there is a difference. There is no pleasure in the African dance drum, but rather terror.

The grandeur of the dawn is spoiled by the death cry. Someone has died and the cry tells of the agony of those who have no hope, that are beset only by the powers of evil. During the morning the body of the one who has died is buried in a sitting position in a small round hole in the hut, or near by. The relatives stand around in a rough circle, the women clapping hands in unison as they wait out their sorrow. One of the men may be tapping the drum. There is the regular rise and fall of the voices as one of their number pours out her grief and the rest repeat it in a kind of chant.

On the morrow the dance begins. The death of a child is not much considered, but many gather to dance for the one who has taken his share in the life of the tribe. The more important the person the bigger the dance and the longer it lasts. People from all the clan collect. The chief mourners are daubed with white clay from head to foot. All the men are decked with cowrie shells and feathers and carry spears, bows and arrows. Drums are placed in the center and beat practically incessantly for a whole day, sometimes for several. The drum beats out a monotonous thrumming, the women and girls clap their hands, the sad chant continues, while the whole assembly jog up and down, without lifting their feet from the ground. The noise of the dance largely drowns the voices except at intervals when the song rises almost to a shout, or when a change of drummers is made and the chanting and clapping is heard alone.

Constantly throughout the day men run out of the circle singly or in pairs; fiercely poisoning their spears and then throwing them at some evil spirit discerned in the grass, they quietly return and others in turn go out.

They keep this up throughout the hot day till evening when beer is served. Thoroughly exhausted, they spend the evening in beer drinking. It is well that night falls over the repulsive scene.

The sound of the drum carries far in this land, and since on moonlight nights they continue till morning, it is seldom that there is no dance drum to be heard.

The African is beset by evil spirits in every circumstance and every action. More than all he fears sickness and death. He discerns the hand of the evil one all around but he does not know of the One who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver, in whom we trust that he will yet deliver.

The drums of this part of Africa are hollowed sections of trees covered top and bottom with skins, laced to each other by thongs. Often cow-skin is used, but the ear of an elephant is most sought after because of its elasticity and durability. The drums are of all sizes. Some are about as long and as broad as a man, others are three or four feet high and nearly three feet broad. They look very neat with thongs of different colors. At the court of Uganda,

A MISSIONARY PRAYER

*I go among unloving hearts:
Lord, go Thou with me there
And let me breathe Thy love always,
Just as I breathe the air.*

*Let each day's hard and thankless task
Be temple-work for Thee,
And every meal communion
And a feast of love to me.*

*May I through all the noisy streets
In Thine own peace rejoice,
And hear above the noise and strife
Thy Spirit's still small voice.*

*So shall Thy glowing love be lived
Ev'n in the common place;
And hearts unloving feel the throb
Of Thy rich, seeking grace.*

AMOY DECLARES A HUMAN DIVIDEND

The tall American found himself under intense scrutiny from the young Chinese seated opposite at a recent Century Club dinner to the Commission of the League of Nations for study of educational conditions in China.

Finally—"Good evening. Don't you know me?" said his vis-a-vis.

"Your face—yes, but I can't attach the name. Just give my memory a lift won't you please?" replied the tall American. The response was a greeting in Amoy Chinese.

"Oh, now I have you. I knew your father well twenty-five years ago," said the American. "Which one of his sons are you and what in the world are you doing in New York?"

"Lecturing at Columbia and special research work," was the reply in Harvard English. "I'm the fifth son."

By this chance reunion Dr. Warnshuis picked up the threads of a life that was in its early childhood when he left Amoy. Its subsequent record has been a brilliant one. First preparatory work in the missionary high school at Amoy, next a course at St. John's University, Shanghai, then post graduate work at Harvard, and finally, two years at Leipzig, where he earned his doctor's degree. He became a professor in the National University at Peking. Today he occupies a prominent place in government counsels and in foreign affairs, including the League of Nations.

His father, a Christian pastor in the primitive village of Poa-a, was supported in his work by the Reformed Church in America through the Amoy mission. He had six sons, of whom three have been or are university professors and one is today an international influence.

So has the Christian missionary stimulated the intellectual life of China. The modernist movement in that land of 400,000,000 souls is a reflex of the missionary impulse. But by no means have all the by the community. The church is making progress and growth under his ministry.

We had an enjoyable three weeks in proclaiming the gospel and thank God for those who accepted Christ as Lord.

Harrah, Washington

This church was established only a few years ago under the ministry of Brother Beal who at that time was serving as pastor at Sunnyside.

The church is located about thirty miles from Sunnyside on the Yakima Indian Reservation. Most of this land is owned by the Indians and leased by the Whites, so that the population is not very stable, but gradually the Whites are buying land and becoming permanent settlers.

The work was started here by three families from the Sunnyside church, who moved to the Reservation; they were the Goulds, Stovers and Faws. Brother Fred Kinzie was called to be the first pastor. He and his family are specially adapted to this field, sharing with the people the inconveniences of the frontier life and throwing themselves wholeheartedly into the work. Under his ministry the church has grown and gone forward: They now have a membership of about 150, a live Sunday school and Endeavor societies and an active W. M. S.

This year the church withdrew from financial aid from the National Mission Board and the people are maintaining their own work. They have a good church building and recently built a new parsonage.

I held a two weeks' meeting here in December. I enjoyed fellowship and work with the pastor and his people. The church got behind the work unitedly and the Lord blessed their efforts and souls were saved.

Vale, Oregon

This is a new project and land opening in southeastern Oregon. Some of our people have bought land here. Brother Gould and his family moved here about two years ago and is developing land. Brother Gould and others requested me to go over the project, hold a short meeting and feel out the situation for locating a church. Brother Kinzie of Harrah, with his daughter, went down with me to assist and look over the field.

It took plenty of nerve, courage and faith to hold a meeting with only three local people as members of the church. We secured the old city hall room, but after holding one service, we were run out with a leaky roof. The County judge gave us the use of the Court Room at the County Building, where we held services for a week. It was my first time presiding in court. The interest and attendance was encouraging. We did not think it best to go too far in the work and perfect a permanent organization at this time, but to wait until two or three more families who are established in the faith move in.

There is no fundamentalist church in the community. There are several who are interested in our church and I believe will unite with us when we establish a church there. Brother Gould and family were the ones who took the lead and in a large degree were responsible for starting the work in Harrah, Washington. They have located in Vale for the purpose of building up a church there; just as soon as we have two or more families move in, we should organize and start a church.

This field will offer an opportunity for a man who can preach the Gospel of Christ, who is willing to endure hardness, make some sacrifices, share with the people in the

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

It may be of interest to the readers of this paper to know that Dr. Charles L. Anspach, formerly dean of this College but now dean at the Ypsilanti State College in Michigan, had an article in the last number of the journal Social Science on the general topic of how newspapers report divorce.

Dr. Caldwell of the department of Sociology at Ashland has had several new articles accepted by some of the outstanding journals in America.

Also the writer has had one accepted for publication in Social Science on, The Biological Aspects of Vice. Also several book reviews for the same publication.

At the last meeting of the Faculty Club, which met at my house, Professor Garber read a very interesting paper upon the subject of the need of, and prophecies concerning, a new social order.

I report the above facts to show that one factor in a college with the standing we boast of, is the intellectual life of the teaching staff. I can think of little that is more important than this. President Butler of Columbia University recently defined a college as a society of scholars, with the power to grant certain academic distinctions and degrees, surrounded by young men and women who want to become scholars. There is a kernel of truth in this statement.

The College recently played Wooster on our own floor, in an over-time game of basket ball, ending with a victory for Ashland. Score, Ashland 39, Wooster 36.

Miss Mary Ann Scarborough, junior, of Nova, Ohio, was recently elected May Queen. The Maid of Honor who will crown her will be selected in the near future. A rather elaborate pageant is being planned for May Day, which makes the early choosing of the actors important. With the new Redwood Stadium and a fair day, the event ought to be a very attractive one.

The Commencement speaker for the College next June will be Dr. Beverly O. Skinner, the newly appointed Superintendent of Public Instruction of Ohio. Dr. Skinner is a very able speaker and also sympathetic with the smaller denominational colleges in Ohio.

BELL JINGLES

These reports are from the Northwest where I have been for the past two months holding meetings and doing general work.

Sunnyside, Washington

I held a three weeks' meeting with Brother Fry in the church I established and served for many years.

With my family, I first came to Sunnyside in 1909 to build up our work in the Northwest. At that time we had about fifty members of the church that had located in the Yakima Valley and were identified with the Federated Church; which was composed of the Congregational, Presbyterian and Brethren.

After a period of about eighteen months, the Federation was dissolved and each denominational group established a work of its own. Our people purchased the Federated building, remodeled it, installed a pipe organ and built a parsonage. Inside of five years we had a membership of nearly four hundred.

This church was never on the Mission Board, nor received any support from it, but has contributed largely to developing other fields. The work at Spokane and Harrah was first started by this church. It was while I was pastor here, that we started the work in Spokane. At that time there were only four families in Spokane—Bowers, Gouchnours, Mellingers and Graybill. I had the honor of baptizing the first converts, conducting the first communion and holding the first meeting. Sister Detwiler came later on, built up a Sunday school and conducted Bible study groups.

The church at Sunnyside has contributed her share of workers to the church at large: Among these are Alva J. McClain, Dean of the Seminary at Ashland; Loree Cutright Sickel, Missionary to South America; Earl Reed, active in the Evangelistic Laymen's Movement; W. S. Belcher, now in preparation for the ministry at Ashland College. It was here that L. S. Bauman was first brought to the Pacific Coast and found a wife, who has been an aid and inspiration to him in accomplishing the great work God has used him to do out here. To this early group who gave of their money, influence and personal service the work in the Northwest owes its beginnings. Among these families were S. J. Harrison, Chris Rowland, H. M. Lichty, W. S. McClain, John Miller, Dan and Joe Early, Ben Hoover, P. J. Lichty, Frank Weber, Dan Minnick, Joe Blough, Otho Sisler, Grant McLean, Clarence and Julia Zook, Dan Yoder, Will Morgan, Chas. Heath, and others. SUNNYSIDE IS AN EXAMPLE OF WHAT OTHER GROUPS OF BRETHREN MIGHT ACCOMPLISH, IF THEY WOULD UNITE THEIR EFFORTS IN BUILDING UP A BRETHREN CHURCH WHERE THEY ARE LOCATED.

The church here has lost heavily by death and removals, several transferred their membership to Harrah in building up the work there. We still have a fine membership left, devoted, loyal and faithful to Christ and the church. The people in the Valley have gone through testing times the past few years—low prices for their products, high taxes and the expensive overhead of irrigation is causing many to lose their homes.

I was graciously entertained in the home of the pastor and enjoyed fellowship and closer acquaintance with him, Brother Fry is loved by his people and held in esteem experiences of the frontier life, secure a home and build up a church.

This project has some good opportunities for irrigation farmers, who have had experience and know how to develop sage land. Water is now available and this tract will be settled and put under cultivation in the next year or two.

For information, write to E. B. Gould, Vale, Oregon (Box 384). It is people with the faith and determination of the Goulds that build churches. May their tribe increase. I returned with Brother Kinzie over the mountains of ice and snow as far as Pendleton and from there went to Portland to see some parties. I spent New Year's on the high sea, as I came from Portland to San Francisco by boat, which is a three days' trip. I expect to be in California for January and February. Mail will reach me addressed to La Verne, California, in care of Rev. A. L. Lynn.

MAURERTOWN, VIRGINIA, CHURCH

In all the hurry and rush of things I have become somewhat slack in reporting to the Evangelist. We are on the job in spite of the well known depression and hope to keep there in spite of it all. In fact, our financial report for the last quarter would say that the depression has not made any impression on the spirit of our folks to give. The total was up to the average of our best years, and that is something to feel good about. I know that some places the gifts fell down a little, but there were other places that called and a proper distribution of funds gave all some to go on and made a total as said above.

During August, when our vacation should have been had, we went to Cumberland at the behest of a group of folks from that fine growing industrial city and there had a hand in organizing a new church that has perhaps as many as a hundred members by this time. They are fully organized and have a Sunday school that has run over the hundred mark and a live group of workers who know how to carry on church work. They have no permanent church home as yet and are meeting in a Seventh Day Adventist building until better arrangements can be made. From the number of folks, they will soon have to have a place of meeting of their own, for the place where they are meeting temporarily is too small for them already. Brother Chas. H. Wakeman is in charge of this work and has the confidence of all his associates and of the people of the city in general. Oh, that we had a fund for helping at once to consolidate such groups and set them up permanently! I understand that the Home Mission Board is interested in this work and no doubt they will give what assistance they can give. Elder Geo. A. Copp of Strasburg was with me in the organization of this group at Cumberland.

From this work we went to Winona and enjoyed the conference to the full. Upon returning we prepared for our Rally Day and it went across in nice shape. On Rally Day we held or received an offering for the church debt and received nearly three hundred dollars. Then came communion and a fine time we had again. This was followed by a meeting in an outpost church where for two weeks we held forth with results visible and of course the usual invisible results too. Then Brother Benshoff came with us for a three weeks' effort. He took fine here and the folks enjoyed his sound Gospel pronouncements to the full. He was received in the homes of the community from time to time and I dare say he enjoyed the Virginia cooking. The time was all too short to get around to all the people, but we did our best. The attendance at the services was real good, Sunday evenings finding the house filled. And that is something in these days and in a rural community. During the meetings the young folks and children as well as the men were given special notice in services where they were the guests of honor. And how those young people and children did sing! No doubt seed that will bring forth fruit of which we think not was sown and besides eight made the good confession during the meeting. Ten were baptized the last afternoon of the meetings, the eight mentioned above and a young married lady who had come out previously and another young married lady who came with us from another church, so that she might be with her husband and that they might have their children with them in the one church. I can say that Brother Benshoff is welcome to come our way at any time again. I believe the things he saw while in our midst made some impression on him, for we have some great natural wonders in our valley. The general scenery is fine and then the underground scenery in our caverns is also superb. Sister Benshoff and the family were with us on Thanksgiving Day and helped use up some of the surplus stock of turkey and the like. Come again, folks.

Following the meetings we were in Christmas preparation. We had one fine Christmas season here. With community tree and services, caroling, and the regular Christmas program in the churches, we were going some and yet enjoying it all. The Mary and Martha girls remembered the prisoners' camp south of town with a treat for each of the one hundred and two men held there, and who are putting a wonderful highway through our valley. We also participated in the Almshouse services and tried to make Christmas mean something to those not so fortunate. Some also assisted in the services in an outpost church and they also had a fine time lifting an offering at the close of the service for the Children's Home at Richmond. This is the spirit we tried to keep up in the community the past Christmas season. And we also lifted the White Gift offering for the Sunday school board and its work.

Then came New Year's eve and a special Watch Night service. We had the regular prayer meeting at the usual hour and then left for our homes or other places of waiting after which we returned to the church at eleven o'clock and had a nice service, saying good-bye to 1931 and welcome to 1932, hoping that the incomer would hold more of satisfaction than did the outgoing. The M. and M. girls again assisted, a dozen of them, and we had a nice candle-light service, or pageant, prepared by the pastor and it made quite an impression on the nice crowd present. It rained all that evening and night but they came anyhow, not perhaps as many as would have come had it been fair, but it was our largest Watch Night crowd yet.

So now we are well entered on the new year and its work. We expect the W. M. S. and the Sunday school to keep up their good work and we look forward to meetings with the Bethlehem folks and also here at Easter time with pleasant anticipation. The prayers of God's people are asked in our behalf. Thanks to all who remembered us during all the blessed Advent season.

BROTHER ED.

FLORA, INDIANA

Likely the Editor of the Evangelist is commencing to think that we have forgotten that he desires a report from each congregation at least every three months. The report from Flora has not been delayed because we were awaiting something to report. There is no need to state that time passes rapidly when a person is busy, because all you readers know that, yet the first year of our pastorate here will soon be history. This has been a period of forming acquaintances and familiarizing ourselves with the work. One usually expects to use one year before becoming fully acclimated, as it were, in a new pastorate. During the time so far since coming here we have had the joy of seeing the Sunday school grow, until the largest honor roll of recent years was announced to the school by the superintendent, Miss Esther Roskuski. Thirty new names now adorn the membership roll of the church. A number of these have stepped right into positions of responsibility, which will cheer the heart of any pastor. The young people's organization, "THE QUADS," an organization of our own forming, has met once a week on a week night for their programs. This organization has functioned and thrived beyond expectation. They are at the present time undertaking the presenting of the pageant, "Brethren Progress." The young people who make up the organization are far above the average, with whom it is a pleasure to work. The attendance for church services, both morning and night, is splendid. Something to encourage the pastor is the large number of young people in the morning and night church services.

The work here has been exceedingly difficult because of the fact that Flora is a rural town, in a fine farming section of the state, and many of the farmers have seen their products leave them for prices far below the cost of production. Naturally conditions like these do not produce optimism.

We have been called to continue the work here as pastor, the second year of the work really starting the first of April. We have been given time off for one meeting during the next year.

We are making plans for many details of the coming year. A class is now being started to meet the middle of the week on Wednesday night for strictly Bible Study. The Dispensations are being taken up. A brief Bible lecture is given to the Quads at their programs. The State Conference will meet with the Flora church the first full week in October, and naturally we are expecting to be host to many of Indiana's Brethren. Soon after the conference closes we are entering a soul saving campaign to start October 16 and closing November 6 with Brother R. Paul Miller on the firing line.

We covet the prayers of God's people that the work here might continue to grow. Not only here but throughout the brotherhood. In this report we have tried to present the high lights. We are not putting down on paper the heart aches, the trials and the disappointments of the past months. No mention has been made of sleepless nights, frustrated ambitions and many failures. All these things that we may call "success" are brought about by him who gives power to the powerless.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

MEETING AT LOREE, INDIANA

The writer was called by the pastor, D. A. C. Teeter and the Loree, Indiana, Brethren church, to come to them on Christmas night and remain with them for two weeks in an evangelistic effort. The church furnished the program on Christmas night in the way of a Christmas pageant which I believe laid a splendid foundation for the following evangelistic campaign. It is always customary for these loyal Brethren to begin their revival on Christmas night and begin in the manner they did this year. But I want to emphasize the splendid spirit that was manifested by these people, as indicated to the incoming preacher, that they had a mind to work for the Kingdom of Christ, which was the outstanding feature of the pageant on that ever-to-be-remembered Christmas night.

My opportunity came on the Saturday night following Christmas day. It was my first appeal to the Loree Brethren and they received me splendidly. I was quite satisfied and deemed it a privilege to work with these people, who, from the very first night, supported me in every way possible. I take this opportunity through the Evangelist of thanking them one and all for everything they did for me in making my stay pleasant. The Loree Brethren church has a membership that any pastor can well be proud of. Any conference would gladly welcome them into fellowship. They are a loyal flock who support their pastor and try to do their part in upholding the standards of the New Testament and the Brethren Church. I like them.

Brother and Sister Teeter are loyal to the Brethren cause and it's a pleasure to work with them. I cannot find words to express my appreciation to these good people for the splendid way they treated me while with them in their home and around in our visitations. We worked together and the Lord blessed us both. When Brother Teeter sends his report of the meeting you will see by it that he has not been asleep on the job. It is remarkable how Brother Teeter has kept this church together when we think of his present handicap. He preached a funeral while the meetings were in progress and he astonished me. I wondered if I could handle the situation, had it been I with eye trouble, a trouble which Brother Teeter has been encountering for a few years. By the way, brethren, let us pray for Brother Teeter that the Lord, should it be his will, might restore Brother Teeter's sight. He is a valuable man and has done good work for the Brethren church and all the brethren should bear him up and remember him to the Lord. What a miracle it would be if the Lord would fully restore him! We had the glorious pleasure of seeing Brother Teeter leading a brother eighty years old to Christ in these meetings. It did Brother Teeter good to walk down the aisle with this man, whom he has been praying for ever since he took the pastorate. Let the Brethren pray for Brother Teeter that his sight may be restored, peradventure we shall rejoice at answered prayer. God be with you, Brother Teeter.

We want to say a word about the cooperating churches who gave splendid support to these services. I cannot remember to mention them all by name, so rather than to be partial, my appreciation, with that of Brother Teeter and the Loree church, goes out to all in the word THANKS. I cannot for the life of me refrain from mentioning the fact that 35 members of the Nappanee church drove 80 miles on the last Sunday night to attend the services at Loree and surprise their pastor. It was a surprise! I haven't gotten over it. Eighteen of the 35 who came were from our men's chorus. They came to lend their service in song. We have a chorus of 25 and they can sing. If you don't believe it, come and hear them. These men go freely and willingly to our churches in Northern Indiana and other churches and sing the Gospel into the hearts of listeners. They render valuable service to the churches. I like the boys.

Loree! The Lord will bless you for the way you have stood by your pastor, Brother Teeter. Brother Teeter and his good wife will appreciate what you have done for them. I believe it has proven true in the glorious way the Lord has blessed the Teeters and your labors in the glorious harvest which the pastor will let the brotherhood know about when he writes to the editor.

May the richest blessings of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit abide with the pastor, his splendid wife and all the members and friends of Loree. Pray earnestly for Brother Teeter, who will soon undergo an operation for his eyes.

BENJ. F. OWEN, Pastor-Evangelist, Nappanee, Indiana.

THE REVIVAL MEETINGS AT LOREE, INDIANA

Brother Owen, pastor of the First Brethren church of Nappanee, Indiana, came to Loree on Christmas night, and began the two weeks' revival campaign. The people were well prepared for his coming, as well as for the meetings, having communed with God, and read special portions of the Scripture in order that they might be fitted to do the Lord's will. The members with one accord worked together, and with their pastor and the evangelist, in order that souls might be saved. The results were evident in that an intense interest was shown every night by a large attendance not only of Christians, but also by the unsaved, of which number thirty-five yielded their lives to Christ; and two who had confessed before showed more faith in Christ by going down into the waters of baptism and united with our church. As is always the case, Satan was on the job, and hindered some from accepting Christ, who expressed a desire to do so.

There are many who want to hear the word of God in this community as was shown by the repeated attendance, and interest of those who attended the revival services. The young people came regularly to the meetings, and took part in various ways. Some pledged the loyalty to the choir, while others rendered special musical numbers in the form of song, and instrumental music when called upon by the music committee. The young people helped readily in the meetings, and they attended the meetings more regularly than the older people according to the size of the community.

Members of other congregations and churches in all parts of the county as well as from other states attended the revival meetings from night to night. Other denominations, namely, the Methodist, and Evangelical, also the Baptist, helped out in the meetings, by rendering special music, which fitted in with the subjects proclaimed by Brother Owen, and which he appreciated. The Christly spirit was well manifested in that all Christians worked together and in harmony regardless of church affiliation.

Our pastor, Rev. D. A. C. Teeter, and Brother Owen made a good sound working team. They worked with one accord in the community, and among the people; proving themselves true Christian brothers, working the will of God.

Rev. Owen preached an uncompromising gospel based on the Scripture, in such a way that many who had held on to the world could not see any way of salvation, save through Christ who is the True Way. Rev. Owen surely allowed the Lord to use him, and the Spirit to guide, because the music harmonized with the messages, and the statements he made convicted those who thought they could hold out in their own strength. His pleadings met every conceivable argument men could put up for rejecting Christ.

Many saw almost a miracle wrought when they saw an elderly gentleman come to Christ, when they thought he would not yield. He was eighty years of age.

The revival campaign was a total success, in that all who were fed on the Word were pointed to the Christ, and Christ had sway in the community.

PAUL A. DAVIS.

ELDER JOHN W. THOMPSON

On Saturday afternoon, January 9, 1932, we laid away all that was mortal of our Brother John W. Thompson. Brother Thompson departed this life on the evening of January 7, at the age of fifty-seven years, three months and three days. He was born not far from where he passed on to be with his Maker. Brother Thompson was an elder in the Dayton church for some years and had preached for different ones of the valley churches during his eldership. He acted as city mail carrier in Harrisonburg and also looked after the work of a farm on which he lived. Yet with all this he was willing to answer calls for service in the weaker churches of his section of the district.

Brother Thompson was loved by all his neighbors and lived the kind of life that will bring such results. He loved the Word, and, as an elder of the Mennonite church who assisted in the funeral services testified, Brother Thompson would always talk about the Scriptures whenever a conversation of any length was carried on. He had been anointed two weeks prior to his departure, but the Lord had use for him and he was called. Yet what a satisfaction to know that the service of anointing is not only for physical healing but also for forgiveness of sins.

A very large crowd of folks was present at the funeral services and that spoke well for the brother in that it was one of the worst days we have had here for a long while. The snow and rain made travel almost impossible, but yet they came out to do honor to him whom they had come to know well and yet to love.

Within the past six years this is the sixth elder of this district at whose services I was present, either as the one in charge or assisting. And five of them were active right up to the last days of their lives. Where are the ones who are going to take their places?

Brother Thompson leaves a wife and three daughters and two sons as immediate loved ones who shall meet and miss him. His genial smile and cheerful greeting will also be missed by the rest of us who used to meet and fellowship with him at times. There are those who knew him longer and better, who could have written a better appreciation of the departed brother, but having had charge of the funeral services and also having been a friend of some years' standing, I felt it my duty to the brother and his family to say these few words regarding one who lived in service to his Lord and who enjoyed such service to the full and who tried to be all that a Christian gentleman should be in home, church and community. May God comfort the loved ones left to meet and miss the one gone on before.

E. L. MILLER.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

It seems that pastors feel that others than themselves should report the church news occasionally and so here is one of the "others."

Nothing spectacular can be reported from here but we keep busy with the many duties that are ever before us.

Community Services

Since Thanksgiving the four churches of the community have united in Sunday evening community services, each church taking its turn. The sermons are delivered by the local pastors. Usually there is a prelude of special music, and sometimes a reading too is furnished by the church in which the service is held. These union meetings were so successful last year it was voted by each denomination to have them again this winter. Our young people are planning to put on the entire service when it comes to our church again.

Christmas

The young people's choir under the able directorship of Miss Vivian Fike, put on the entire Christmas eve program of music and a reading. The full chorus and special numbers were all enjoyable features. The quietness of the large audience attested the enjoyment derived from the music, every number being a witness for the Lord. Miss Fike not only understands music but has a beautiful voice and has done broadcasting. As usual the church was beautifully decorated.

The pastor's family, they tell us, was well remembered again with gifts from members and friends.

Christian Endeavorer

The Christian Endeavorers are not remiss in their work as large attendance and good meetings are reported. A Junior Christian Endeavor meets each Saturday afternoon. Two of our gifted young ladies take care of this work.

W. M. S.

The W. M. S. and three Sunday school classes were instrumental in sending two full bags to Krypton, Kentucky, in December. Two and a half days were given to sewing more than ninety garments, made mostly from new materials.

The February W. M. S. devotional program will be held at the church in the evening when the church and friends will be invited to meet with us. A social time will follow the program and light refreshments will be served. We are anticipating a most delightful evening of worship and social fellowship.

Baptisms

January 13 at the Bible study and prayer meeting three applicants received the rites of baptism and were received into the church. Two more are awaiting baptism in the running stream.

Sunday School Work

The Sunday school seems to be doing good work with Mrs. J. C. Lenhart and a full corps of officers and teachers guiding it. We are using all Brethren literature.

Golden Weddings

November 30, Brother and Sister W. L. Miller celebrated their golden wedding anniversary and also her birth anniversary. Their brothers and sisters and a few others with the daughter and her husband were invited in to participate in their happiness. Because the bride of years ago is not in the best of health dinner was ordered at a cafe where twenty-two were seated at a prettily decorated table. The afternoon was spent in the home where the hours sped all too rapidly.

January 1, 1932 Brother and Sister J. E. Miller reached their golden wedding milestone. Sister Miller being in bed with a broken hip, their only guests were their daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Beard, and two children, of Pierre, South Dakota, who were here for the holidays, and Mr. and Mrs. John Livengood, of Lanark. However it was a happy day, as Sister Miller was able to sit up in bed several hours that day. Both these couples have been and are still active in church work and are held in high esteem by all their acquaintances. Brother W. L. Miller has been for years our efficient church treasurer. The many friends of these young-old couples wish them many more years of happy wedded life.

Our pastor, Elder Geo. E. Cone and his good wife, find busy days in their work among us. Sister Cone is patroness of the S. M. M., is always with the Christian Endeavorers in their meetings and teaches a class in the Sunday school.

In November the parsonage was under quarantine when Mrs. Cone's sister, who was visiting, was stricken with infantile paralysis. We are happy to report her recovery with no ill results.

We solicit your prayers in our behalf that our work here may be ever a witness for the Master and for his glory.

Alice Livengood.

If you wish to be a candidate for success, you will have to run; but the goal is more important than speed.

FAT MRS. MOUSE

*'Twas when the moon was shining bright
That sober Mrs. Mouse
Once spied a crack within the wall
And gnawed herself a house.*

*And through the open cupboard door
She'd jump upon a shelf,
And of the cheese and pies and cakes
She'd freely help herself.*

*She grew so fat that Mr. Mouse
Would sit and laugh and tease,
When through the small door of her house
His wife tried to squeeze.*

*So while she shook her head and sighed
"I see it is no use,
I'll have to let up on the cheese;
I really must reduce!"*

THE HORSE THAT COULD READ

Molly and Tom and Don came home in great excitement. "There's a horse over in Lincoln Street that can read!" they cried all together.

Grandmother Layton was very busy, so she did not pay much attention to what they said. She knew a man had been in town a few days before with trained animals, so she supposed he was still wandering about getting what money he could by making the animal perform on the streets.

"Did you ever see a horse that could read?" asked the children.

Grandmother never had, but she was busy; so they ran to tell the wonderful news to Grandfather Layton. "Well, one time I saw a trained horse that could push blocks together with his hoof and spell out words," said grandfather.

"But this horse was hitched to a big covered wagon," said Don.

"And nobody told him what to do," said Molly.

"And he could read just as well as anybody," said Don.

"And there were no other animals along," said Don.

"I wish we had run home and taken you over to see it," said Don. "I just know they've gone to some other town by this time. I looked for a man to come with a hat to get the pennies, as they do when the monkey does tricks, but there wasn't anybody."

"And we couldn't stay long," said Molly, "because we had promised grandmother to hurry back with a loaf of bread."

So all hope of seeing the wonderful horse was given up until next day, when they were over on Lincoln Street playing with the Grove children.

"O, there's the iceman?" said Robert Grove, "and mamma forgot to hang out her card, I'll run and get it."

Robert hurried to hang out the big red card, and just as he did so the horse hitched to the ice wagon came across the street. The iceman was in another house getting the ice into the box, but the big horse came without him.

"Oh, it's that wonderful horse that can read!" said Tom. "You just watch him!"

Sure enough, the minute the iceman went into the house to put Mrs. Grove's ice into her refrigerator the big horse went right up the row of houses until he came to one with another red card out, and there he stopped.

"There! You see he passed a bread card and a laundry card and went right to where it said 'I-C-E'!" cried Molly. "I wonder who taught him to read."

The iceman laughed and laughed when they told him that if he would pass his hat they would put some pennies into it.

"You see, he learned the route, and he knows our customers," he said. "It isn't because he can read."

But the children believe to this day that the horse can read. "How else can he tell a bread card from an ice card if he can't spell out the words?" they said. "Of course he can read."—Hilda Richmond, Presbyterian of the South.

WHAT Wilt Thou Do With the Year?

By Mrs. Francis E. Clark

*"What wilt thou do with the year
That is dawning so fresh and clear,— Dawning in whiteness,
Dawning in brightness,— What wilt thou do with the
year?"*

Dr. Francis E. Clark
Founder of Christian Endeavor

Mrs. Francis E. Clark
Mother of Christian Endeavor

I have chosen this verse for our thought as we begin, not only a new year, but a new half-century of Christian Endeavor. We have celebrated our Golden Jubilee, and we have thanked our God for all the way His hand hath led us, all these fifty years. And now as we enter upon this new year which our God hath given us, let us ask ourselves very thoughtfully, each one, "What wilt thou do with the year?"

I am hoping that we shall take our Christian Endeavor Pledge very seriously. Let us ask ourselves, "Am I earnestly striving 'to do whatever my Lord would have me do'?" "Do I ask Him each day what He would have me do, and wait for his answer?"

Let us study our Bibles more prayerfully, trying to find there what is God's will for us, and asking daily for guidance and help. Let us try to make our prayer meetings more helpful spiritually, with more prayer, and more faithful testimony; and especially, let us prayerfully prepare each month for our Consecration Meetings.

Let us always remember the purpose of the first Christian Endeavor Society, and of all true Christian Endeavor societies:—"To lead its members into an earnest Christian life; to increase their mutual acquaintance; to make them more useful in the service of God."

May God bless us every one, and help us to go forward into this new year with "goodwill, doing service as unto the Lord."

Newton, Mass., January, 1932.

OHIO Protestant Pastors Renounce War

At their annual conference held in Cleveland, the Ohio Pastors passed a resolution declaring that they will never sanction or participate in any war; never use pulpits or classrooms as recruiting stations; never give financial or moral support for any war; and calling upon the church to disassociate itself forever from the whole "war-system."

Remembering the horrors of the late war, it would be difficult not to sympathize with such an uncompromising declaration. And this is especially true of us who belong to the Brethren Church, a body of Christians who have opposed war for over two hundred years. But several things about the pastors' action should be pointed out.

THE Popularity of Peace

Just at present the world, not merely the preachers of Ohio, is undergoing a violent reaction against war. We are like the drunkard who wakes up the next morning with a splitting headache and a dark brown taste in his mouth. At such a time it is not hard to get him to sign the pledge and make all manner of good resolutions. Because the world is still suffering from its after-the-war headache, the attitude of peace is immensely popular. In fact, it is doubtful whether the United States could command serious support for any kind of a war short of an invasion of this country. Frank Simmons, famous war correspondent, calls the present interlude of peace "the truce of exhaustion." The statesmen of Japan know that now is a fine time to help themselves to Manchuria. What ordinarily would precipitate a war with the other Great Powers, at present only stimulates them to write notes. No use to declare war. Even the professional soldiers are tired of war and its consequences.

WHAT about the Next War?

In view of the situation, it is not mere cynicism to suggest that the acid test of the resolution so recently passed by the Ohio pastors will come with the next war. For, do not forget it, there will be a "next war."

When the fires of war hysteria begin to burn, as they have always burned, what will the Protestant pastors do? If we may judge from the past, the answer will be as usual: A few will follow their convictions, no matter where they lead; the rest will follow the crowd, just as they are doing today.

Perhaps it is unkind to recall some experiences in the past, but it is difficult to forget that the bitterest persecution of Brethren pastors for their position during the late war came not from government officials, but from certain preachers of other denominations. On this point, Brother Louis S. Bauman could relate an experience of his which today would seem an utter impossibility. And I hope he tells the story sometime in print, if for no other reason than to make us face what can actually happen during war. And other faithful ministers, outside the Brethren Church, suffered from the same type of persecution. Dr. Biederswolf, well known evangelist, while conducting a union campaign in a western city during the war chanced to criticize the Red Cross for sending cigarettes to the soldiers, and was attacked almost ferociously by most of the very preachers who were supposed to be supporting the campaign for souls.

HOW Men Justify War

Certainly, men may change in their views, and due credit should be given them for this. But whether the change is genuine or merely a superficial reflection of the popular feeling will not be determined until war breaks out again. Then, strange to say, men who have renounced war will often try to rationalize its support by saying that this war is a different kind of a war. Many of the former uncompromising peace advocates defended the World War because, they said, it was a war to end war. Man always finds some way to justify what he wants to do. It may seem impossible, just now, to find any rationalization for another war, but wait until the situation arises and then men will frame their reasons. And those reasons

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

4. What are the chief causes of the too short pastorates and how do you suggest they may be overcome?

I have answered this question in its various forms in the past. I will say briefly that my observation, covering many years, has convinced me of the great advantages of the long pastorate. I believe this is true with our own brotherhood and I have seen many illustrations of it in other denominations. Why then are there so many too-short pastorates? Several reasons may be given. I do not pretend that my answer exhausts them. Here are three. 1. Too many ministers exhaust the full limit of their resources during a comparatively short time. In all such instances it is best for the change, for both pastor and congregation will profit thereby. Many excellent men are thus limited. They can and will do a splendid piece of pastoral work for a brief period of years. They should do so. With the man who is compelled to move frequently through sheer intellectual laziness and unwillingness to do real study I have less sympathy. Such men become mere parrot-like repeaters in pulpit and prayer meeting and tire the people. They neither inspire nor instruct; they can not lead and are often unwilling to be advised. People grow weary of listening to them and the only thing that remains to be done is to change pastors.

2. A second reason why some pastorates are short is not so pleasant to contemplate. Many a good minister's work has been ruined by the selfishness of leaders or would-be leaders. I have noted all too many instances within my church experience of men who wholly lacked the Spirit of Christ, who were openly living in sin themselves, or who were utterly incapable of leadership but who were nevertheless in positions of authority or leadership in the church. Let such men be reproved by the straightforward preaching of a true man of God and there is trouble in the offing. Sometimes the leadership is capable but selfish and unspiritual. Sometimes leadership is stubborn and unpopular with the membership of the church. Sometimes the minister is capable but unbalanced in judgment, or dictatorial or concludes that leadership means to have his way. In all or any such instances what might be an otherwise successful and extended pastorate is ruined. If men could just learn that in a successful enterprise all concerned must be willing to yield personal preferences and that good "team work" will always win more than anything else, we would doubtless all be happier and more successful.

3. A third reason may be found for some changes. I may call it the selfishness of congregations, or of the pastor involved in the change. I do not like to say this. But is it not true that sometimes the larger and more influential congregations determine to secure the pastor of another church and one in which the man is doing a fine piece of work? Is it to be wondered then if sometimes the minister's enthusiasm over what seems an opportune and advantageous personal advancement may be charged also with self-seeking? I have known, and to my sorrow and confusion, instances where ministers have been at least very unethical if not sinful in their efforts to dislodge a brother minister and make a place for themselves. Well, at any rate what I have here indicated is another cause of some short pastorates.

But how may we remedy this situation? Briefly. 1. For the future we must train an efficient and thoroughly competent ministry,—such men as shall have ability and resources to make a life-time job of a single pastorate and thus build a great Church.

Make It Christ--In Christian Endeavor

The Evangelist is cooperating with the young people this week in celebrating Christian Endeavor week. We have just passed the first year of the second half century of its existence, Dr. Francis E. Clark having organized his first society in Williston church, Portland, Maine, February 2, 1881. Christian Endeavor has had a wonderful history of work with young people, inspiring, developing and training them for the service of Christ and the church, and extending its helpful leadership into every phase of youth's life and problems. No other youth movement has done so much to lead boys and girls and young men and young women into an appreciation of, and into service for, the church. The very ground-work of its emphasis has been activity for Christ, as expressed in its name, Christian ENDEAVOR. The pledge that is the center of its life begins thus: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, ... I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do." Doing things for Christ has been the theme of its devotion and the purpose of its endeavor. It is a great goal that has been, and is, held out before its membership, worthy of every encouragement that can be given.

There is just one thing that we would stir up the minds of young people about, as they contemplate the challenge to activity in the name of Christ, and that is, the source of inspiration and power by means of which all this work is to be done. It is anticipated in the opening clause of the pledge,—"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength." In other words, it is expected that young people shall depend on Christ and not on their own wisdom and power as they engage in Christian activity. That was Paul's confidence, when with the daring spirit of a youth he said, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me."

Such divine trust is an important consideration to success, for it means not only dependence on the strength of God, but waiting on the wisdom and way of God. And that is quite essential. The mere doing of things is not enough. The right things must be done, and they must be done in the right spirit and from right motives. It is possible to be everlastingly busy doing things connected with the church and its work and yet to accomplish little or nothing that counts for the glory of God and the real success of his Kingdom. All must be done in the name of, by the powers of, and according to the will of Christ. "We are to be workers together with God" and not apart from him. That must be borne in mind and never forgotten, lest we rush carelessly and independently into the doing of many things that have not the favor nor the blessing of God. Christ must be in it all, or Christian Endeavor is a misnomer.

If Christ is in Christian Endeavor we shall be assured that our activities will be a real contribution to the advancement of the reign of the will of God in the world. Our efforts will be spiritually inspired and consequently they will be the right things done in the right way. We shall undertake only after prayerfully seeking the divine will. We shall go forward only under his leadership and instruction. We shall not rush ahead nor lag behind, but will keep in step with him. If we do that, we can feel fairly certain that our activity is truly Christian and will result in a hastening of the Kingdom of God.

If Christ is in Christian Endeavor the activities of our societies will be a real help to the church, building up loyalty to it, cherishing the ideals it holds, contributing to the work it seeks to do and developing a leadership devoted to its service. Christian Endeavor is a noble institution, however it is not independent or self-existent, but is universally an auxiliary to the church and exists for the church's sake. Let this not be forgotten. It is the church that the Lord loved and for which he gave himself (See Eph. 5:25), and that is the only institution in all the world that has that distinction. Christian Endeavor can only share in that love divine and participate in the sustaining and protecting care of Christ as it contributes directly and purposefully to the welfare of the church. If there are Christian Endeavor groups that have contributed to the building up of a society loyalty separate and apart from loyalty to the church, as occasional complaints of pastors indicate, and have influenced, consciously or otherwise, their members away from, rather than towards, attendance of the services of the church, let them take warning that they have lost the true aim of their worthy organization and stand in need of more Christ in their Christian Endeavor.

If Christ is in Christian Endeavor the young people in its fellowship will be built up in the knowledge and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. That is one of the true aims of the Society. That is what the pledge has in mind when it calls for daily prayer and Bible reading, and regular attendance at prayer meeting and the worship services of the church. That is the very thing that the Christ-inspired apostle urged his readers to do when he said: "But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18). And whenever and wherever Christ has been in Christian Endeavor it has done that very thing for its members in a wonderful way—built them up in the love and knowledge of God and of his Holy Word. It has caused young people, full of life and ambition, to separate themselves from the world with all its allurements and enticements and to allow themselves to be transformed by the renewing of their minds, holding themselves with set purpose to the higher things until they have "grown up in him in all things, which is the head, even Christ" (Eph. 4:15). And what it has done, it will yet do, and much more, if Christ be allowed to be the inspiration and the motivation and the sustaining power of all that Christian Endeavor envisions or attempts to do for its members.

If Christian Endeavorers will see to it that Christ is kept at the very center of their thoughts in all their Christian activity, they will thereby guarantee the future of this great training agency of the church as nothing else could. That will so empower and vitalize it as to cause it to be looked upon as indispensable in every place where it exists. It is Christ in it that has given it such a profitable life of more than fifty years, and by that same Presence the second half century can be made one of still greater achievements and glory. Let us in very truth make it Christ—in Christian Endeavor.

Church Paper Mergers Continue

These "hard times" continue to tell on the life and welfare of religious publications, and on many other publications, too, for that matter. But church papers are finding it especially hard to make ends meet, and in the face of the steadily decreasing circulation throughout the land and in every denomination and the cost of publication showing very little decline many papers are finding it practically impossible to exist. We have noted frequent mergers and combinations in the past, and still they come, and still others are being talked of. Just now, it is the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate that is discontinuing publication and being absorbed by the New York edition of The Christian Advocate. The Pittsburgh paper has been published since 1834, and since 1840 has been an official journal of the Methodist Church. Editor Urmy states the reason for the action as follows:

"Recently and more particularly in the pinch of the present financial depression, the Publishing Committee has found it increasingly difficult to maintain the paper as a self-supporting enterprise, such as it had been through many years. Thousands of delinquent subscribers throughout its territory have hastened the coming of a crisis to which the economic depression, especially severe in this industrial region, gave the finishing touch."

Dr. Urmy, the editor, becomes a member of the editorial board, composed of the various Advocate editors, and will have his office in Pittsburgh.

Among the Presbyterians there has been a decrease in the number of church papers in the last few years due to lack of support,

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Evangelist wishes to express its appreciation and that of its Christian Endeavor readers to Mrs. Francis E. Clark for her good message that appears this week on our front page.

We learn that they have had, or are having, a splendid revival at Warsaw, Indiana, with the pastor, Brother E. M. Riddle, doing the preaching. At the time the information was sent, which came in a round-about way, ten had made the good confession, and on "Young People's Night" seventy young people were in the service.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, who favored us last week with some valued suggestions as to methods that contribute to a successful revival, is in the midst of a revival in his own church in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and he asks for prayers in its behalf. He says: "We are setting no closing date, but will continue as long as we feel led."

We are giving space in this issue to a reproducing of the "goals for 1932" as outlined by the Second church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, printed on cardboard and distributed among the membership. Brother George H. Jones, the pastor, and his co-workers have done a splendid thing in planning so definite and practical a program. It may prove suggestive to others.

Brother N. W. Jennings, pastor at Turlock, California, says the Lord is still blessing them in their work, and though he admits they have been hit hard by the depression, yet he says, "We are trusting him who has said, 'I am with you alway.'" That is a good attitude to take towards "these hard times." Perhaps we would all be better off if we trusted more and complained less. He informs us that Dr. W. S. Bell is to be with them for a week's meeting during January.

The church at Masontown, Pennsylvania, is in the midst of a revival, in which their pastor, Brother Floyd Sibert, is doing the preaching. Sister Sibert is in charge of the music and the Bible reading contest. Enthusiasm for the meetings has developed remarkably, the auditorium of the church being crowded and overflow meetings have been conducted by Mrs. Sibert and her helpers. The meetings had gone into the second week and twenty-two had made the good confession.

A card from Brother S. C. Henderson says: "Our work is moving along fairly well at Roanoke (Indiana). The church at Huntington is picking up. The Sunday school is growing; we have as high as eighty-four and never less than fifty, averaging around sixty." But churches have shown appreciation of their pastor's sacrificial labors by bringing in donations. That is a fine thing to do. There should be more of it, especially on the part of those churches that are unable to pay their pastor a living salary.

Brother George C. Pontius informs us that he is in the midst of a revival at West Alexandria, Ohio, where he is pastor. He is having the assistance of other Miami Valley pastors in his meetings. Brother Barnard of Dayton preached on Monday night, Brother King of New Lebanon followed on Tuesday night and the remainder of the week Dr. Beachler of Gratis was to preach. A splendid interest is said to have developed. Along with West Alexandria, Brother Pontius is shepherding the church at Clayton, Ohio.

The editor received a card a little while ago from Brother W. A. Gearhart, who, with his family, is spending the winter at Harlingen, Texas, saying, "Brother Horace Yoder and Kelso's are about the only Brethren people here." But he is anxious that any Brethren who may be contemplating going to Texas shall come into his section, with the hope that they may have a "Brethren get-together." It's a good suggestion. Such a nucleus has more than once resulted in a Brethren work.

Though long delayed, the letter in this issue from Sister Orville D. Jobson will be read with interest. Brother and Sister Jobson sailed from New York on September 30th and were thirty-three days at sea. At the time of the writing, they had not arrived at their missionary station in French Equatorial Africa, but were expecting to arrive before Thanksgiving. They, of course, have now been long on their field, but their recital of experiences on their trip is still of interest.

Brother R. Paul Miller, Home Mission Secretary, reports a meeting recently closed at Mexico, Indiana, where Brother Mark B. Spacht is the faithful pastor. Brother Miller found it a good place to be and greatly enjoyed the fellowship and the support given him. The evangelist's wife was with him in this meeting, and that, of course, added greatly to his enjoyment of the campaign, and, no doubt, to its success also. We shall be glad to hear promptly from the pastor as to the number of souls saved and added to the church.

After a long absence from the columns of The Evangelist a report of the work at Morrill, Kansas appears this week. The faithful pastor, Brother L. A. Myers had a greatly appreciated opportunity to visit his old Virginia home during the summer and to take in the blessings of the General Conference on the way home.

While the Morrill church seems to have had more than its just portion of hardships and misfortune during the past year, yet its faithful members, led by a faithful pastor, have not lost courage and are pressing forward toward victory, regardless of past failures or present handicaps.

Brother Sylvester Lowman, after serving a successful four year pastorate at Portis, Kansas, came to Oakville, Indiana last October to begin his second pastorate at that place. After leading the people in making some repairs on the church property, he conducted a two weeks' revival meeting, which resulted in four being received into the church by baptism. He compliments the loyalty of the Women's Missionary Society and the fine work that organization is doing. We are glad to learn that Sister Lowman continues to improve, even though slowly, and we pray that she may continue until her recovery is complete.

A great revival was held at a little country church known as East Riverside, twelve miles out from Uniontown, Pennsylvania, by the Uniontown pastor, Brother William H. Clough. Sixty-nine souls made the good confession and the church was crowded every night. At their regular week-night service following the close of the meetings, four more confessed Christ as their Savior. Twenty-two are reported to have been baptized and received into the Uniontown church, and others await the rite. God is abundantly blessing the ministry of Brother Clough in that district. Those who are older in the church will recall East Riverside as one of the places where the late Brother J. B. Wampler preached just before he was called home.

Prof. J. Raymond Schutz, the popular pastor of the church at North Manchester, Indiana, writes of an evangelistic campaign recently conducted by Brother Willis E. Ronk, of Meyersdale, Pennsylvania. The attendance was good and a splendid interest sustained through the meetings. The numerical results were twelve received into the church by baptism, and besides, the membership is said to have been greatly benefited by the messages of the evangelist. Brother Schutz and his efficient corps of Sunday school workers keep their field carefully gleaned by the emphasis of evangelism in their religious education. It is a wise method, and more and more our church leaders are beginning to realize and to practice it.

In a personal communication from Brother S. E. Christiansen, of Allentown, Pennsylvania, we learn that though his church is feeling keenly the effects of the depression, yet there are some very loyal folks among them. The average attendance at both morning and evening church services for the year 1931 was seventy-five per cent of the membership, and that so far this year the average is still better, and in addition there are "ten to fifteen strangers out each Sunday." To help out the unemployment situation in his community, he is personally soliciting work among those who have employment and others who can afford to offer a few hours of work to those in need. He is urging those who are able to "create work," so that others may be helped by helping themselves, and he is challenging each family so situated to provide "at least one hour of work each week." And it is the plan to so distribute the work that each one in need may have a little. It is a fine idea and a worthy piece of work, and we commend this energetic pastor on his enterprise and resourcefulness.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ANNIVERSARY WEEK

The President's Message

By Rev. E. M. Riddle

Already a new year has dawned upon us. What it holds in store remains to be discovered. In our Christian Endeavor field from the standpoint of our own union, some things have been accomplished during the past year. We cannot enumerate all in this message. Several new societies have been organized, Expert Christian Endeavor classes have been conducted at both Shipshewana and Winona. Two local societies have plans in the shaping at present for such classes in their own churches. This we most heartily encourage. Our support for Krypton has been practically the same—financial help through the Home Missionary Board and boxes of gifts and clothing. It has been the writer's joy to appear personally in several of our societies during the year, as well as to speak in two conferences. In view of these facts, we look to the new year with the C. E. objective for Christian Endeavor Week in mind: "Greater Things Than These."

First, that young people may face seriously the demands of Jesus Christ, in terms of experience, knowledge, sacrifice and service.

Second, that young people may have proper recognition in the program of their denomination.

Third, that the principles and other values of Christian Endeavor through fifty-one years may be recounted and their application to young people of today be clearly shown.

Fourth, that young people, in large numbers, may be inspired to take a forward step in their Christian living.

Fifth, that fellowship and social and religious interests be promoted, and effectively supported.

Pastors and leaders! this the anniversary of the world's greatest youth movement, is the time to reflect a bit as to the organization of one or two societies in your church to care for your young people. Sorry indeed am I to know that some of our leaders see no field for and have no time for a Christian Endeavor society. Surely there must be a lack of knowledge as to the place, scope and value of this work, to the training of proper leadership for our churches. Christian Endeavor gives practical experience. It trains the PRAYER Life. It teaches STEWARDSHIP. It teaches MISSIONS, PURITY, and TEMPERANCE in every phase of life, and is an ardent exponent of PEACE.

Christian Endeavor is adaptable. The International Society works through the denominations and does not require any society to lose a single bit of its own identity with her local program or denomination. Even as to

"Christian Endeavor's Endeavor"

By Rev. F. C. Vanator, Associate National President

We are right at the doors of Christian Endeavor Week and we are asking ourselves what we can do to make Christian Endeavor stand out before the brotherhood. It seems that we have long since lost the real foundation upon which this organization is built and we are searching hither and yon for something that does not exist. We have come to look at the great outstanding organization of International Christian Endeavor and are forgetting that the main issue is not what the whole army of Endeavorers are doing, but what are we doing in each of our societies to advance the cause of Jesus Christ through the medium of work among our young people.

More than fifty years ago, when Frances E. Clark organized this body, the aim was how to cope with the problems of the young people. It seems to me as I view the matter from the pastoral side lines that we are forgetting that after all the success of the whole movement does not so much depend on what an international organization is doing as it does on what our individual societies are doing. As I write this article I am wondering how many of the societies in our brotherhood are looking at Christian Endeavor through the telescope instead of the microscope? It is the latter that we wish to use in this brief thought.

I have a desire to know how many of the societies are observing this C. E. Week. I am wondering how large a place the young people themselves are having in planning this program. I am also wondering whether the older heads have not taken in hand the work of this planning and then handed over to the program committee a program which is "cut and dried" and as "dry" to the young folks as it is "cut" by the elders? I am sure that one of the outstanding things that motivates the young people to work is a knowledge that they have been instrumental in putting forth a work of their own hands.

Then what will be the text of the program? What will be the real purpose that shall be set forth? Will it show to the adult membership of the church that our young people are developing into thinking, working, active Christians, who are endeavoring to prepare themselves for the duties which in so few years shall fall upon them? These thoughts should be the means of bringing some sort of a reaction in your minds as you read these lines.

To me there are two purposes in the organization: inward and outward. Our inward purpose finds expression in the local work of the society and is the means of bringing out in the lives of young men and young women a

Suggestions to Young Christians

*****

1. Trust the Lord fully. He is able to keep you.
2. Read the Bible daily as God's message to you.
3. Keep a daily trust with God, as you would your lover.
4. Speak to some one daily and helpfully about your Master.
5. Attempt difficult tasks for God. There is joy to the worker.
6. Be happy in the Lord. The devil cannot harm a joyful Christian.
7. Declare your allegiance to Christ openly. It will give added strength.
8. Do something for the aged, helpless or poor. This sweetens soul and character.
9. Cultivate the consciousness of God's presence. He is your strength and life.
10. Live in the light of heaven. Press toward that goal. The best is yet to come.

program, if that suggested by the Christian Endeavor World does not always meet with our expectation, we can be free to substitute our own subject or text. In a recent publication, it was suggested that we have a series of topics of our own choice, with our own comments and instructions, all included in a separate publication. That would be all well and good surely, if we were ten times larger as a Brethren Christian Endeavor Union. A fellow-minister recently said in my hearing, "In our church we are walking around knee-deep in church literature, so deep that we can't find time to read the Bible." Is there not some danger at least that according to our membership, we may be equally as deep. If any of our societies desire a Biblical course for a few weeks, secure some good outline, and present it. The idea is fine but a separate publication for such is next to impossible in these times with a small group.

We wish for every society in the Brethren Church a most happy experience this year. We urge a whole-hearted support for Krypton, our Endeavor goal. We pray for a deepening of the spiritual life of every young person.

Yours for Christ and the Church.

deep and undying devotion to the cause of Christ and his Church. It is the place of developing talent. It is the feeder for our College and Seminary. It is the place where many a preacher is either made or broken before he ever stands before the congregation and behind the sacred desk. It is the place where Christ stands out as a young people's Christ. And so the inward purpose of C. E. is to develop young manhood and young womanhood into living, moving and vitalized Christians. I know of no other organization which will do it better, if well directed.

But the outward purpose finds its expression in an earnest desire to help others. That is why the Brethren Christian Endeavorers are placing their emphasis on our work in Krypton, Kentucky. That is why one of our earnest Endeavorers with his good wife are working there in the hills of Kentucky that those who are less fortunate than we may have the opportunity to learn to know the Endeavorer's Christ.

And so at this time we are asking you to especially think along the lines that we have suggested and take a microscopic view of the work that is before you and labor from the inside out.

Peru, Indiana.

"What Are You Worth?"

Christian Endeavor Week Sermon by C. D. Whitmer

"But lay up treasures for yourselves in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Matt 6:20.

That is a popular question in the minds of Americans. Most people are not impolite enough to ask it directly, but the question is often uppermost in the minds of men. We value so many things by their monetary worth that the question requires of most people an answer in terms of dollars. After all, that is really the answer most people desire to their question. But it is not the answer of most importance. It is entirely secondary.

I. Certain Answer from a Monetary Standpoint

1. The Chemist's Answer. The chemist, it has been noted, has a ready answer to the question. It has been figured out exactly what a man is worth physically. If he weighs 150 pounds, from a chemical standpoint he is worth about $8.00. In a man of this size there are enough by-products to make an ordinary iron nail, enough salt to fill an ordinary salt cellar, enough sugar to fill a small sugar bowl, enough phosphorous to make a dozen matches, etc.

2. The Political Economist's Answer. He has figured out that the man at twenty-one is not worth what it has cost to bring him up. The business world must place a minus sign before his name. By the time he reaches the age of thirty, the average man is worth $16,000, that is, the $4,000 which it has cost to bring him up to that age, plus $12,000 in gross earnings. But it has also cost $10,150 for his maintenance; and thus his net gain is $5,850. When a suit of damage is brought against the railroad for the accidental death of an adult man, $5,000 is about what is awarded.

What are you worth? The financial estimate is the most discouraging one to most of us. And even if we have accumulated real estate, stocks and bonds to some extent, for most of us that does not make possible a very encouraging answer. Let us ask, therefore, "what are you worth?" with a fairer and more satisfactory answer as a possibility.

II. A Person's Worth to Himself

1. Self-Comradeship. That may not sound very important to some. To others it may seem to deal with selfishness. But it is a very important question. Everyone must face it. One cannot be of very much value to other people unless he is worth something to himself. Besides, personal satisfaction is possible only when one is conscious of the fact that in him is a personal worth. A man's value to society may be fairly measured by his value to himself. A man ought to be able to live alone and not have to feel that he has escaped all that is personally valuable.

2. Personal Spiritual Values. Real values are of the heart. True wealth is spiritual. Milton is right when he says: "There is nothing that makes men rich and strong but that which they carry inside of them. Wealth is of the heart, and not of the hand." When you consider this undeniable truth, what are you worth to yourself? Some people are worth very little to themselves because they do not have spiritual values.

Some people are worth very little to themselves because they have failed to make real the vision of their soul. Do you have something in your being which you have lived for that is of real value? Can you face yourself and know that there is worth inside your soul?

III. What One is Worth to his Fellowmen

1. Is what you possess materially, benefitting anybody? Dr. Frank Crane tells an interesting story which, while it is unique, is suggestively typical. An old man fainted in the Pennsylvania railroad station in New York. Those near him carried him to the booth of the Travelers' Aid. When he became conscious, he said that he was 65 years old, had no friends, and only fifty cents in the world. He wanted to go back to Serbia to die, but said that all his money had been stolen. As he was ill, they took him to Bellevue Hospital. For twenty-six days he grew weaker his old, soiled clothing which had been removed from him when he came to the hospital. It proved to be a gold mine. Cash, jewelry, bonds and deeds were crammed into his pockets and sewed into his clothing.

What worth was that man to himself or to society? What worth was his money to anybody? What worth is the miser's wealth to anybody? What good does it do his fellowmen? Is a man worth as much as it costs society to keep him going?

2. Men who were Liabilities. Most people so consider Kaiser Wilhelm. Napoleon cost the world millions of dollars. Yet he did not leave the world anything of real worth. Others have done nothing to make the world a better and a happier place in which to live.

3. Men who were of Positive Worth to Society. But some there are without whom the world could not well have gotten on. Socrates, Plato, King Alfred, Lincoln, Washington—these were men who did much for the world.

Agassiz lived in Switzerland, on the border of a lake. He had a little brother, younger than himself. One day the two were to go and join their father at a certain point. The lake was covered with ice. An anxious mother watched to see that the two made a safe journey. They came to a place where there was a crack in the ice a foot wide. The mother's heart failed her. She thought: "That little fellow will try to step over. Louis will get over all right, but the little fellow will fall in." She could not call to them; they were too far away. She could only watch. She saw Louis get down on the ice, put his feet on one side of the large crack and his hands on the other, like a bridge. Then his brother crept over him.

It is no idle story taken from the life of one of the world's greatest men. It sets forth for us the spirit which controls all people who are really worth anything in the world. They do something to benefit society. They help their fellows. They make safe the highways of life.

What can we do? We can be of some such worth today to the world. If you help in some way to rid the world of war, you will be of real worth. The world badly needs men and women of this kind.

IV. Your Worth to the Church

1. Financially. Some people think immediately of finances. And it is in order that they should. Most of the people who think of finances probably need to do so.

2. By Practical Help. There are those who could do much to help the church. They could give it a chance to do something by solving its many financial problems. But many of them are liabilities, rather than assets to this organization. They hinder its progress. A friend of mine tells of a church he served in which there was one rich man who did not want anybody to do more financially than he did for the Church. That could be a praiseworthy ambition. But in this instance because he was selfish, miserly, and money loving, the man gave very little. But he gave it so that no one would give more than he. Others could have and would have given more, but he held the situation in his own hands.

3. In Spiritual Strength. What are you worth in the deeper spiritual life of the church? When Robert Murray McChesney died, someone said, "Perhaps the heaviest blow to his brethren, his people, and the land is the loss of his intercession."

V. Your Worth to the Kingdom of God

What are you worth to the Kingdom of God on earth? What are you worth in service, making men inherit the life of God in Christ? This is the really vital question about a man's worth.

Here and Now. In a recent address Bishop Hughes spoke of a deacon in a certain Congregational church in Boston who many years ago said to himself: "I cannot speak in prayer meeting, I cannot do many other things in Christian service, but I can put two extra plates on the dinner table every Sunday and invite two young men who are away from home to break bread with me." And that man did just that for more than thirty years. He became acquainted with a great company of young men who attended that church.

Many became Christians through his influence. When he died, he was buried at Andover, thirty miles distant. Because he was a well known merchant a special train was chartered to convey the funeral party. One car was set aside for the young men who had become Christians through his influence. One hundred fifty of them came to honor the memory of the man who had meant so much to them in the deepest and best sense of the word.

What are you worth to the Kingdom? Is the King able to count on you? What are you worth to God? What are you worth to God in bringing in his everlasting heaven?

Your Future Worth

What you are worth to the Kingdom will determine your worth at the judgment. The purpose of life after all is to so live that at the end one will leave a fortune in character. It is the kind of fortune ONE CAN LEAVE, and also TAKE WITH HIM.

Conclusion

What will you be worth when the Great Accountant looks over your records? Material things will not count then, save as they have been expended for something better. If a man had money, and he is really worth something, it will be said to him: "Inasmuch as you gave it to good causes, or inasmuch as you left it to worthy institutions and needy individuals, you gave it unto me."

South Bend, Indiana.

Changing the Subject

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Part II—To What We Should Change the Subject

In Philippians 4:8 we find—"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." In other words, that of which we think becomes the subject of our conversation. Here we have a seven-fold classification of the kind of subjects of which we should think, and therefore speak.

Whatsoever things are "true." In II Cor. 6:8, we find the words "By glory and dishonor, by evil report and good report, as deceivers, and yet true, as unknown and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live." In the midst of the long list of tribulations in this paragraph, like the center stone of an arch, stands out the word "true," even though we may be thought to be deceivers. Perhaps in no other way can we realize the high and exalted place in which truth is held in the thought and mind of God, and therefore should be held in ours. In the first epistle of John, second chapter and eighth verse we find—"Again, a new commandment write I unto you, which thing is true in him and in you, because the darkness is passing away, and the true light already shineth." The commandment which he wrote was true, the light which he sought to disseminate was true. His thoughts concerning these commandments and this light were true. And why? The and weaker. Then he finally died without revealing who he was or who were his friends. As they prepared him for the potter's field someone suggested that they search answer is in the same epistle, the fifth chapter and twentieth verse "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life." No wonder the Apostle Paul says in the injunction in Philippians—"whatsoever things are true, think on these things"—for he himself is true, and we like him, should be true in thought and conversation.

And then, whatsoever things are "honorable." We find the mention of honorable men and honorable women several times in both the Old and New Testaments. In I Samuel 9:6, we find the story of a man of God, a man who was held in honor, of whom it was said, "All that he saith cometh surely to pass." We know who that man was, the prophet Samuel himself, an honorable man, held in honor, thinking of and speaking words of truth. In this he was like the Master, whose coming was yet in the future. In Psalm 45:9 we find the words—"king's daughters are among their honorable women." It has been said that women, more than men, are prone to stoop to frivolous and unprofitable subjects of conversation. It is comforting, then, to know that even in David's time there were honorable women, women thinking honorable thoughts and speaking honorable words. In Acts 13:50 we find the phrase "devout women of honorable estate" and in Acts 17:12, we find reference made to the Greek women of honorable estate, many of whom believed. This latter may have referred to worldly honor, yet it is significant that among these honorable ones were many of those who were chosen to eternal life. In Psalm 111:3 we read of One to whom all honor is due, "His work is honor and majesty; and his righteousness endureth forever." Truly, here is a subject for conversation! Here is a subject for meditation! Let us cry out with the Psalmist—"Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer!" But the Scriptures are plain in their teaching, that if he is honorable, we ought to be honorable too, for it behooves the disciple in all things to be like his Master. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Therefore let us seek honorable subjects of meditation and conversation.

And then the Apostle says "whatsoever things are 'just.'" As we glance through the Scripture we find that men are sometimes spoken of as being just. As the climax among these references, we find in Hebrews 12:23, a reference to "just men made perfect." We have a right then to speak of our dear departed ones. We have a right to think of them, for they are just, and their spirits have been made perfect. We read too that God's judgments are just. We read that his commandments are just. Happy is he who meditates and speaks upon God's judgments and his commandments, and upon his just and holy Name. For it is the name of Jesus which has brought forgiveness of sins. It is Jesus of whom it is written in I John 1:9, "He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." And so again we come to the wondrous privilege of meditating upon him who is our Lord. "Then they that loved the Lord," says the chronicler of the early church, "spake often one to another." Were he more the subject of our thoughts, he would be more the subject of our conversation.

and there is talk of still further merging of church papers among this denominational group.

The Northern Baptist Convention recently got rid of The Baptist, as a denominational enterprise and let it go into private ownership. though the paper continues to serve the Baptist church, being published from Chicago.

The Brethren Evangelist has long been unusually well supported, considering the size of our constituency. For a number of years our circulation was the largest per capita circulation of any paper about which we were able to get figures. And still, from the standpoint of membership, we stand well up in the list. But when you consider that our church is "the least of the tribes of Israel," numerically, you can see that it behooves us to keep our circulation high per capita. It will simply "be too bad" if our constituency becomes as careless about subscribing to their church paper as are the people of many of the larger denominations. And this depression is causing many of our hitherto faithful supporters to feel that they must discontinue their subscriptions. When you consider what it means to the church, it is a serious thing to stop your paper. It is not merely the paper's welfare that is hampered, but the church's future. Think it over.

The Baptist, published in Chicago, tells us that

The Russian Baptist Church, at the Baptist Tabernacle, Manhattan, is carrying on a unique ministry in relief to the hungry, in connection with the Bethel Restaurant, managed by the church. Free meals are served daily to the unemployed and hungry ones who throng the neighborhood. The cook, his helpers in the kitchen, who are women of the church, and the waitresses, serve without pay.

It is a fine work to feed hungry bodies, but what an opportunity these church folks have of adding to their praiseworthy service that of feeding the hungry souls of men and women at the same time! Sometimes the good that we do blinds our eyes to the infinitely better that we might do, and we might well give heed to the Master's words: "These ye ought to have done and not to have left the other undone."

"BY FAITH, NOT BY SIGHT"

The pastor of a large city church who has faced both bodily illness and financial problems during the past year writes in a personal letter: "We had a wonderful Christmas service last Sunday, and for once my sermon seemed to have value. I preached on The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light. People are discouraged, and many of them are getting somewhat bitter, but they are ready for a clear word of faith in God and the things that abide. For myself, it is true that the past year has been a trying one, but it has also brought some of the richest compensations of my life. Never have I known a people to be more considerate, affectionate, and loyal than my present congregation. And I myself have come to a feeling of assurance and peace such as I have never known before. We have our loads to carry in this church and sometimes I cannot see the way more than a step ahead, but I have resolved to walk by faith and not by sight."—The Congregationalist.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Rom. 16:5. "Likewise greet the church that is in their house." Moffatt has this: "Also, salute the church that meets in their house." In I Cor. 16:19, Paul says, "The churches of Asia salute you. Aquila and Priscilla salute you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their house." In Col. 4:15, Paul exhorts, "Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house." Stiffler, in his comments on Rom. 16:5, says: They had a church in their house at Ephesus (I Cor. 16:19);

Nymphas, whoever he was, maintained a church at his house at Colosse (Col. 4:15). (See also Philem. 2.) Paul had never been at Colosse, but he knew of Nymphas's church just as he knew of this one with Priscilla and Aquila. Paul was not ignorant of details, but carried "daily the care of all the churches" (II Cor. 11:28). The apostolic churches in the various cities do not seem to have had a permanent meeting-place where they could come together regularly, but the brethren met in groups in the houses of the brethren as here. Such a group regularly meeting was called a "church."

Yes, "And salute the church that is in their house." It was in a private dwelling where I obeyed my Lord in my first communion-service. It was there, too, where I made my first public prayer. Not much of a prayer, I'll admit, but it was the best I could do, and in that respect I have never been able to do any better since that time. And just so I am longing for some one with the gift of speech who would tell the story and uphold the glory of the little church.

That humble congregation meeting in the house of Priscilla and Aquila in New Testament times, is yet an inspiration to me, for its small membership was doing the best it could; but it was doing something. Whose house? Just tentmakers were Priscilla and Aquila, living in the world's capital city; neither apostles nor prophets, nor high church officials, but they had a church in their house!

Will not some one help me sing the glory of Christ-touched souls, groups but few in number who have met in village, in country, in crowded city, where the chief attraction is the blessed presence of one another and the greater Presence of him whom having not seen they love? Will not some one help me extol the virtue of that little group of men—bent of back and with calloused hands; of women—"in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit?"

"The men who are good and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I."

"The church that is in their house." Brave souls, earnest of heart, who knew the warmth of their first love, separated themselves from the big noisy groups, crucifying the pride of great numbers, fed their religious desires with the peace born from above. Here, indeed, is the potent—yea invincible body—"little enough to enter the home, and big enough to girdle the world."

All honor to the little church; the big one can take care of itself; for the chances are its officers were ground in the faith while housed in some Aquila's and Priscilla's dwelling, or in some school-house nearby; and its minister is breaking the bread of eternal life with the patience and tenderness of soul bequeathed as a rich inheritance from "the church that is in their house." And out of such little groups with divine ideals have come our James A. Garfields, our Herbert Hoovers, our David Lloyd Georges.

Joseph A. Vance has well said: "We must think in types, not of the big, successful, outstanding churches, but in terms of arousing the weaker churches. We must help to get efficiency out of the little churches that are not doing anything. We must enter into helpfulness with churches whose spirituality is dragged down, and must awaken them to the great challenge, must convey the thrill of the heroic that is in the work of the Christian Church. We must ourselves be an example."

I had rather have a few deacons whom I have associated with in giving the little church a chance, deacons with horny hands of toil and hearts warm with brotherly love, bear the casket which will contain all that is mortal of me, to its last, long resting-place, and have a few faithful brethren drop a tear of sympathy for having together tried to make worthwhile the commands and promises of the Christ, than all the stately trappings of potentates and kings.

Christ takes all life into his hands, but not for confusion and monotony. The law which in the higher natural forms confers individuality upon fruits and flowers is his law. He aims to make us one in him and yet different, a glorious unity, more gloriously diversified than any community of men upon the earth. The new name is the expression of Christ's knowledge of our individuality. So he named his disciples. And of his flock in heaven and on earth he says, "I am the good shepherd; and I know mine own, and mine own know me."—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

IX. Seven great parallel prophecies

Seventh, The Book of Revelation.

In the University of Chicago library there are over two hundred books on Revelation, and scarcely any two of them are agreed. Such is the diversity of interpretation of the mysteries of this book. Yet a good pastor said to the writer, "Revelation is the easiest book of the Bible. You just take it as it reads." However, the clue the book itself gives us (1:20) indicates that a large part of it is not to be taken as it reads. The meaning of its many symbols must be learned by comparisons with other passages throughout the whole Bible.

The present study is only a chapter and not a book, and does not pretend to do more than suggest an interpretation in harmony with the preceding six great prophecies already outlined. We have seen that each of these may be divided into seven parts, the first four giving the course of the age from the time of the prophecy onward, and the last three dealing with end time events.

Revelation, the seventh of these, divides into seven similar divisions, each of which in its seventh part opens into seven others. The book is not a list of events in chronological order, but a series of visions, each of which, by backward and forward glances, sweeps over the entire age. They are as follows:

1. The vision of the Son of Man.
2. The messages to the seven churches.
3. The seven seals.
4. The seven trumpets.
5. The seven vials.
6. The seven dooms.
7. The seven new things.

First vision. The Son of Man, among the golden candlesticks or Christ among the churches (1:9-18). This description is repeated item by item in the messages to the seven churches, showing that each item is appropriate to the message. The vision therefore covers the same period as the messages, that is, the entire church period.

Course of age

1. Seven stars in the right hand (1:16). See message to Ephesus (2:1). The Chief Shepherd guards his pastors.
2. The "first and last" (1:11). See message to Smyrna (2:8). The proto-martyr (Christ) speaks to the church of the martyr period.
3. The sword proceeding from the mouth (1:16). See message to Pergamos (2:12). The Lord sharply condemns the union of church and state and consequent corruption, begun in the Pergamos period.
4. Eyes and feet like fire (1:14, 15). See message to Thyatira (2:18). This means judgment on the papal apostasy, the bloody Jezebel of the dark ages.

End time

5. The seven spirits and seven stars (1:16). See message to Sardis (3:1) denouncing the incomplete work of the reformation churches, which in turn become state churches.
6. The golden girdle (1:13). See message to Philadelphia (3:7). The true and righteous Head of the church, in contrast with the pretended vicar, commends the faithful members.
7. "The amen" (1:18). See message to Laodicea (3:14) the final word to the apostate church.

Second vision, Rev. 2 and 3.

The messages to the seven typical churches.

Course of age

1. Ephesus (2:1-17), the apostolic church, already losing the fervor of its first love.
2. Smyrna (2:8-11). The period of pagan persecutions.
3. Pergamos (2:12-18). Union of church and state, beginning under the Emperor Constantine in the fourth century.
4. Thyatira (2:18-29). The dark ages of papal dominion, the sixth to the eighteenth centuries.

End time

5. Sardis (3:1-6), the post reformation churches which became formal and lifeless because subject to the state.
6. Philadelphia (3:7-13), the faithful believers of the end time.
7. Laodicea (3:14-22), the unfaithful believers of the end time.

The Beloved Disciple's Gospel

By John Alfred Faulkner, D.D.

The apologetic value of a man like Ewald maintaining without wavering to the end (1875) of his long career as a Biblical student the Johannine (apostolic) authorship is immense. Since his day nothing valuable has been added as objection. Speaking of the New Testament, I might say that once Dean Stanley called on him when he happened to be staying at a hotel in Dresden. Seizing a little Greek Testament lying on the table Ewald said, "In this little book is contained all the wisdom in the world."

The very liberal Karl August von Hase, Professor of Church History in Jena for 60 years—happy man!—1830-90, lived to see eleven editions of his Lehrbuch of Church History (1834, '86) and the proofs of the twelfth, (1900),—that wonderful manual with its pregnant characterizations. He says that the 4th Gospel has the same spiritual and world historical conceptions of Christianity as Paul's Epistles. Now these are the first writings in the New Testament, which would argue for a fairly early date for John. On the other hand not too early, because the sharp conflict with Judaism has gone by. Again the author does not write as desiring to defend anything, or to vindicate a position, as though he were conscious of a difference from the other Gospels a different or higher conception of Jesus,—nothing of this kind. If we assume, says Hase, that the Book of Revelation is earlier than the Gospel, the advance in one generation from Revelation to Gospel is explained by two facts, first, by the inner genius and deep feeling of John, and second, by his being the beloved of the Lord,—both of these giving him that wonderful insight into the inner life and soul of Jesus and into his deeper sayings and addresses. Now these points of Hase ought to have led him into a hearty acceptance of John the apostle as author, but the German atmosphere of doubt threw over him later a fog of reserve, so that all he will say for sure is that John gave the Gospel orally but some faithful disciple wrote it down after the old man passed on.

This conclusion of the eminent historian seems to me rather lame. Why couldn't John in his old age write his own Gospel? or, if his arm was entirely helpless, dictate it to this "faithful disciple," and then vise, correct, indorse, and pass it on. One of these two is the most natural thing in the world for an old man to do. It is not infrequent for men between 85 and 100 to be fresh and vigorous in intellect and strong enough in body to write and our John may well have been so. Why should we prefer the less to be more probable?

Since von Hase, this disciple-of-John theory has been a favorite. It has an advantage: it enables you to keep all of John you want to keep, and to bring in a disciple, a double, a helper, wherever you wish. Auguste Sebatier does this, von Weizsacker, Wendt, and several of the modern radicals.

As to the reliability of the Gospel, some prefer the speeches to the narrative parts, others vice versa; and so the critics cancel each other.

In the first edition of his "Introduction to the New Testament" (1868) Samuel Davidson believed strongly in the authenticity of our Gospel; in the second he devotes 163 pages to overthrowing it, and when you have read these 163 pages as I have done you have everything that can be said or imagined—except one or two more recent suppositions—on the negative side. In that case you need not read J. J. Tayler, Cassel of Supernatural Religion fame, Martineau, and B. W. Bacon's radical "Fourth Gospel in Research and Debate" (1910). The latter is so prejudiced that he puts in quotation marks the words defenders and defense in referring to those who uphold the Johannine authorship. Don't refute your opponent on a literary question, scorn and ridicule him.

On the other hand men who rejected evangelical religion and the faith of the New Testament and others who were mainly evangelical but entirely free in critical questions, remembering that all such Biblical territory is purely a matter of evidence,—these men, I say, held strongly to Fourth Gospel as by the apostle. I have already spoken of Ewald. The celebrated Schleiermacher (died 1834, aged 65) was free in his treatment of New Testament and of theology, and yet was a warm advocate of this Gospel.

"It is right good that this matter is discussed, and all grounds against the Gospel of John brought together; that is what Bretschneider meant to do, and later as good as took back his hypothesis. But no one will think any longer that among the single points any one is of sufficient importance so that in the face of the total impression (which the Gospel makes) any one could doubt its genuineness. (Many an earnest Christian besides Schleiermacher has been held captive by what he called the Macht des Totalindrucks. The spiritual vigor and drive of the Gospel made him place it above the synoptics (the other three), and by it they were to be judged. In fact he even went so far as to think that the Jesus of the other Gospels could not explain the triumph of Christ). How it could be possible for a Jewish rabbi, with humanitarian sentiments, a somewhat Socratic system of ethics, a few miracles (or what were taken for miracles), a talent for introducing happy maxims and parables,—how a man like this could have produced a new religion and church is something we cannot explain."

But I think here the eminent preacher and theologian depreciated the Jesus of the synoptics. Judge for yourself. Read carefully from beginning to end say the shortest and most matter of fact of the Gospels, Mark. What do you get? Divinity. The unconquerable feeling that here was more than a man. But no one claims he was an angel. Therefore he was the Son of God, and if so with the Father to be worshipped and adored. You get that even from Mark, to whose picture of Jesus as divine John adds nothing in substance. What does it to enlarge and deepen the effect by a longer and more spiritual experience of his Master, and by a profounder inspiration.

For the present let us close with the ever beloved Church Historian Neander, one of the sweetest, most learned, most noble spirits God ever made. He knew all there was to be known on John's Gospel and on the half-century (say before 140 or 150) to which "advanced" critics have assigned it. Like his colleague and friend at Berlin, Schleiermacher, he was hampered by no former views, shared the freshness, clarity, and frankness of his spiritual vision,—perhaps one reason why the radical view of the Gospel came and found nothing in him. For one thing he was sure that the second century was impossible for the creation of such a Gospel. He says:

"Could an age involved in perpetual contradictions, an age of religious materialism, anthropomorphism and one-sided intellectualism have given birth to a product like this (John's Gospel) which bears the stamp of none of these deformities? How mighty must have been the man who in that age could produce from his own mind such an image of Christ as this! And this man too in a period almost destitute of great minds remained in total obscurity!"

He says again:

"The whole development of the church from the time of Justin Martyr (say from 125) testifies to the existence of such a Gospel which operated powerfully on men's minds. Its existence cannot be explained from any mental tendency in the following age, nor from the amalgamation of several. Indeed it existed as a higher unity, as a reconciling element in the contrarieties of that age, and could exert an attractive power over minds so opposite as Heracleon (Gnostic, first half of second century, commented on Scripture), Clement of Alexandria, Irenaeus and Tertullian (eminent Fathers of last part of second century and first years of third, all keen, wide-awake, informed men who accepted John's Gospel). Where could we in that age find a man who was raised above its contrarieties by which all were more or less moved? And could a man of so high a Christian spirit have crept in the dark and made use of such a mask, instead of appearing openly in the consciousness of all-conquering truth and with a feeling of his mental superiority? A man so exalted above all church teachers of that century need not have shrunk from the conflict. He must certainly have placed more confidence in the power of truth than in those arts of darkness and falsehood. (This argument against falsification of history of Christ by such a writer as that of the 4th Gospel, or its spurious authorship, is valid). And how can it be shown that such a man, if we look at him in the light of his own age, would have been kept by no reverence for sacred history, or scruple, from falsifying a history, the contents of which were holy to him, through arbitrary fictions for a purpose, through falsehoods for an object? How queerly he must have acted if to get his object he set forth Christ's history just opposite to universal tradition? Truly only from an apostle such as John, who received into his own breast the impression of that unique Personality could proceed a work which stands in such relations to the contraries of the post-apostolic age! A thoroughly first-hand work, and cast in a single mould. Only the divine in its own essence contains this power of composing differences; and never could such a fresh originally powerful piece of work spring from a designed cleverly constructed composition of differences. The Gospel of John if it did not proceed from the apostle John, and point to that Christ, the seeing of whom by the apostle alone gave birth to it, would be the greatest of riddles (and I might add, the greatest of miracles!)—"Christian Faith and Life.

THE SLAVERY OF SIN

Lesson Text: Matt. 24:45-51; John 8:31-36;
Golden Text: John 8:34

MONDAY

The Slavery of Sin. John 8:31-36

We are a free people. That is our boast today, even as it was the boast of the Jews in Christ's day. But Jesus was not slow to remind them that there is a worse slavery than political serfdom, and perhaps we are not more free from that awful slavery today than were the Jews. Our nation today is rather generally enslaved to pleasure, self-will, self-indulgence, greed, and suspicion. May we who call ourselves by the name of Jesus continue in his word, that we may be his true disciples, and that the truth may make and keep us free!

TUESDAY

The Consequences of Sin. Matt. 24:42-51

Nearly two millenniums ago the Roman Empire waxed great until its power was felt through all the world that was then known; so great was its power that its influence may still be traced even in our world today. Yet Rome fell into the slavery of sin and is no more, finding that the consequences of sin are death (Rom. 6:23). When the people of Christian America willingly enslaves themselves to sin, it is as though they said in their hearts: "My Lord delayeth his coming." But let us not be so deluded; verses 50 and 51 are plain enough. He that hath the blessed hope of his Lord's return will walk even as Jesus walked.

WEDNESDAY

Sin Debases. Isa. 28:1-8

All sin debases. This is a truism, and any further words in proof thereof would be wasted. Drunkenness is sin, and is therefore debasing; verses 7 and 8 of this passage, especially, give the testimony of God's word on this point. The drunkenness that existed in greater degree before prohibition, that men might get gain from the weakness of their fellow men, debased our nation; the graft and disregard for the laws of men and God that have followed prohibition are scarcely less debasing. The Christian people of today should demand that ALL laws be respected, and that drunkenness and, as far as possible, any other great debasing sins, be forever stamped out of our national life.

THURSDAY

Sin Disinherits. 1 Cor. 6:1-10

No one who has named the name of Christ needs to be reminded that sin disinherits. It is true that most of us have never committed any of the vile deeds that are especially referred to in verses 9 and 10, yet it is not necessary to do these vile things in order to be unrighteous, and "the unrighteous shall not inherit." Verse 11 should certainly have been included in our reading for today: "And such (unrighteous) were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God!" Praise God there is One who can cleanse us from ALL unrighteousness!

FRIDAY

An Example of Self-Control. 1 Sam. 24:1-11

This is indeed one of the noblest examples of generous self-control of which we have any record. Every dictate of reason or common sense, even the very word of God, seemed to urge that David should not spare Saul, yet he spared him. It is akin, at least, to the Spirit of God in so long sparing and suffering sinful men. God give us men to-day who can place duty and devotion to an ideal above personal gain and privilege, both in the church and in the nation!

SATURDAY

An Example of Abstinence. Jer. 35:1-14

The Rechabites were put to a severe test: the prophet of God led them into the house of the Lord, and there in those sacred surroundings placed wine before them and bade them drink. Yet they stood true to the command of their earthly father. Jeremiah made a wonderful object lesson of the incident to the Israelites, who had refused to obey the commands of their heavenly Father. May we as Brethren ever be as true to the commands of our Master in all things.

SUNDAY

True Freedom. Rom. 8:1-10

If any man be in Christ he is a new creature. That which was born of the flesh has died; that which was born of the Spirit now lives in his body, and is subject only to the laws of the Spirit, being made free from the law of sin upon the death of the old man of sin. May his Spirit dwell in each one today, and may many souls be born anew!

New Societies

A new Christian Endeavor organization has been started some few months ago at Oak Hill, West Virginia. This group felt the need of just such an organization in their church. Their pastor, Brother Eppley, is taking steps toward conducting an Expert Training class in his society.

Another new society has been organized at Lanark, Illinois. The letter follows:
Lanark, Illinois,
January 11, 1932.

Rev. E. M. Riddle,
Warsaw, Indiana.
Dear Rev. Riddle.

This is just to let you know that there is a Christian Endeavor Society in Lanark, Illinois, at last. After all our prayers and longings, we have at last received an answer in the form of one of the most active and "peppy" societies in, I should say, three or four counties.

We organized last October, and have been going strong ever since. Our committees are composed of wide-awake and thoughtful young people and our officers—well, you should see them for yourself.

Following are our officers: President, Myron Gossard; Vice President, Kenneth Seiler; Secretary-treasurer, Amanda Wilson; Corresponding Secretary, Bernice Diehl; Chorister, Harry Tallman; Pianist, Marjorie Putterbaugh.

Many societies are composed of all ages, but ours is strictly a young people's society, one of high school and college age. We now number about 25, with splendid prospects for doubling that number soon.

Yours truly,
(Miss) Bernice Diehl.

This is certainly an enthusiastic society, and well reported. We shall be glad to receive other such splendid reports. Tell us what you are doing.

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

From the General Secretary

To date the Peru and Nappanee, Indiana Christian Endeavor societies are the only ones that have forwarded any money toward this year's support of Krypton.

These two societies are to be congratulated, and we sincerely trust that all others will be taking up the matter of either making a pledge toward this work, or forwarding the pledge already made as soon as possible. Eight other societies have pledges which were made at the late Conference.

Let us as Brethren Endeavorers give "ol' man depression" a real knock-out this year, and let's work with all our might to support this work better than ever before. It is surprising what folks CAN do when they have a mind to work together!

If you prefer to send your money direct to R. Paul Miller, at Berne, Indiana, it will be all right with the Secretary, BUT BE SURE and notify me at the time you do this, so that our C. E. records may be kept up to date.

While our hearts are yearning for the Return of our Lord and we keep "looking up" for that Blessed Hope, let us remember that this work of witnessing to the Kentucky folks for Christ, has been entrusted to us by our Heavenly Father. Are we going to keep the trust as Good Stewards?

GLADYS M. SPICE.

RIGHT ATMOSPHERE FOR SOCIALS

By Marjorie Bengtson, Social and Recreation Superintendent of the California Christian Endeavor Union

To make a social successful it is necessary to provide for a pleasant atmosphere. This can be done in various ways.

There are five factors which contribute to an attractive atmosphere.

1. Light. A brilliant light outside will suggest cheerfulness and happiness. Inside, the lights can be changed to depict ideas. Dim lights should be used in a quiet part of the program.

2. Color Costumes and colored lights may be used on many occasions. Colors suggest emotions, such as purple, royalty and wealth; blue, night, cold, and mystery; red, sunsets, home fires, warmth, and cheer. Every detail of the decorations should be on the same color scheme, and they should be simple.

3. Action. An active, alert, vivacious attitude on the part of the leaders reacts in action among the players and maintains an "alive" atmosphere.

4. Expectancy. An active, alert, vivacious group should be kept in constant expectancy.

5. Music. Little need be said of the value of music as an element in providing a pleasant atmosphere. The emphasis, however, needs to be on good music. Church social recreation has no place for jazz tunes and cheap songs. Secure the best possible music in advance. Special music during refreshments will provide a background of pleasant melody for conversation and good fellowship.—C. E. World.

A Delayed Message from the Jobsons

Accra Gold Coast ,
October 27, 1931,
On Board S. S. West Kebar, Port Kribi, Cameroons.

Dear Friends:

We have been at Accra two days, unloading freight. The commodity of this boat is freight, not passengers. However, there were twelve passengers on board as far as Free Town. All of these were missionaries and we were very happy to have the fellowship of these friends.

We have made several stops along the coast which helps to break the monotony of the trip. Our first stop was Cape Verde Islands. We took a small steamer and went on shore. Most of the white people were Portuguese, so we could not converse very well with them.

October 15th we arrived at Dakar, a large French Port. There are about two thousand white people living here. We were happy to send our first mail to U. S. A. Also had Air Mail service which left the next day for France.

In the afternoon we drove out to see the Botanical gardens about one mile out of town. Also visited the Governor's palace. Then, curious to see all there was to be seen, we asked the driver if there happened to be a "Zoo" in the city. He said, "I will take you there." After driving for some time we came to a large field where many goats, sheep, cows and donkeys were grazing. This of course was interesting for the new missionaries.

Each Sunday we are privileged to have one of the missionaries speak to us. The captain attends these services and we are as one big family.

October 19th we arrived at Freetown in Sierra Leone. Five of the missionaries landed there—three who were members of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, and a Doctor and his family, members of the United Brethren Mission.

We were invited to visit the United Brethren Mission home here. Mr. and Mrs. Schutz are in charge of the mission house. Mr. Schutz is a brother of Rev. Schutz at North Manchester, Indiana.

Sunday, October 25th, we attended a native service at Takarado—on the Gold Coast. This being an English town the services were held in English. After the service was over we were informed that we arrived too late to be witnesses at a native wedding. However, we saw the distinguished bride and groom. It seemed that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed as these were! We tried to secure a car to take us back to the boat, but were informed that the wedding party had engaged all of the cars. We were obliged to wait for an Elder Dempster bus.

Last evening, October 28th, we arrived at Lagos, an English Port. We visited the American Southern Baptist Mission here which has been opened since 1875. Two ladies are in charge of the work.

The Lord willing, we expect to arrive at Kribi, November 2nd. There being no dock there, we shall be let down in a basket to the deck of a small steamer and be taken ashore. And the faithful "West Kebar" steams off down the coast to Matadi, where nearly all of our missionaries disembarked before we adopted the new route via the Cameroons.

We have had a very pleasant and profitable voyage. No one has been seasick. This has been our longest time at sea at one time—just 33 days!

We hope to arrive on our Station for Thanksgiving day. We shall have about 800 miles to drive inland. This being the dry season we are hoping to have good roads all the way.

Wishing the Evangelist family a very Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

Yours in his Service,

MRS. ORVILLE D. JOBSON.

P. S.—We left New York September 30th.

Baptist World Strength

Many of the Evangelist readers will be glad to learn of the status of other denominations now and then, and we give herewith a statement from Dr. Rushbrooke, General Secretary of the World Baptist Alliance, regarding the strength of the Baptist church throughout the world. It is encouraging to note the growth that has been realized in this largest Protestant denomination in the world, yet it must be confessed that an 80,000 increase is not very flattering when considered from the standpoint of their vast numbers and wide reach. Nor are the Baptists unaware of that fact, for Dr. Rushbrooke himself says that "in too many parts of the world," they are "marking time." But let this Baptist leader speak for himself, as he did in a recent issue of The Baptist:

The reports received by the Baptist World Alliance down to December 31, 1931, give the following world totals (excluding Russia):

Continent	Members	S. S. Scholars
Europe .....	662,410	629,332
Asia .....	389,575	169,587
Africa .....	85,182	32,893
America:
North .....	9,402,007	5,536,938
Central and West
Indies .....	70,020	59,599
South .....	42,643	39,719
Australia and New Zealand .....	37,378	48,962
Total .....	10,689,215	6,517,030

Regarding these figures, a few comments may be offered: (1) The most encouraging feature of the present report is that the totals of Sunday scholars show an advance in every continent. The largest numerical increase is in North America and the largest proportionate increase in South America.

(2) The Church Membership shows an advance of approximately 80,000, of which the larger part is in North America, though there is also advance in Europe, Asia, South America and Australasia. Africa and Central America show slight losses, but in the case of the former, this is explained by the absence of any statistics regarding the German Baptist Mission in the French section of the Cameroons.

It is satisfactory to note that British Baptists have had their due share of the advance in Europe. The figures from Asia are in view of disturbed political conditions, peculiarly gratifying. In China the churches are substantially holding their own; from India almost every district reports advance.

(3) From Russia no statistics have been received. The unions and associations of Baptist (and all other) churches in that country have been dissolved by administrative action under the repressive laws of 1929.

(4) The comment upon last year's statistics must, despite the elements of encouragement, be repeated. It is still the case that we are, in too many parts of the world, "marking time"; and there is little evidence that the churches are availing themselves of their infinite resources in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The real blessing of the meeting was sixty-nine souls made public confession of Jesus Christ as their Savior. Each night from the first souls came forward, weeping up the aisle in true repentance ... The range of years was most beautiful, ranging from 9 years to 73. One couple came forward, the wife being 68 and the husband 73. Another man aged 72 (I believe) came. Most of the converts ranged in age from 21 up.

These meetings should have been carried another week, but due to our work in Uniontown this was impossible. The Tuesday night meeting following the closing of the meeting on Saturday, January 9th, four stepped out for Christ.

On Sunday evening, January 10th, in our own church here in Uniontown, twenty-two were baptized before the evening service and received into the fellowship of our church. There are several others who are going to unite with us, but who await baptism. We are praising our God and Savior Jesus Christ for the blessings and desire the prayers of the brotherhood that he may continue to use us in leading many more to Christ while he tarries.

In his Service,
WILLIAM H. CLOUGH.

THE REVIVAL AT MEXICO, INDIANA

This is one of the oldest churches in our brotherhood. It has a congregation of some of the strongest, staunchest Brethren people that there are. This is the home of our Elder L. W. Ditch who is now retired from the active ministry, although I am told that he is still able to preach some powerful sermons when an occasion demands. Brother Ditch was one of the most faithful attendants and supporters of the meeting. Would God that a number of our younger ministers could come under the loving, brotherly influence of this man of God.

Our meeting with these people opened January 4th and closed on the 17th. The weather was rainy a good deal of the time but that did not seem to bother attendance much. On the most rainy nights we seemed to have the fullest house. I never preached to more appreciative audiences.

Nowhere in all the brotherhood have I found a sweeter, finer, more large hearted fellowship and hospitality than here. The homes and hearts of the people were wide open. Mrs. Miller was with me through these meetings and this made the experience the richer for me. We were privileged to share the home of Brother and Sister Carl Fisher and a more pleasant experience could hardly have been ours. It was home to us in every sense of the word.

We believe that there is a future for Mexico church. They have some fine leaders and workers in that church that only need to be harnessed up. A church with a real gospel is needed in that community.

Brother Mark B. Spacht is the pastor of this church and has his hands full with his two charges. He has the Corinth church a few miles away to care for besides. He is planning some new Bible classes to follow up the revival and I believe they will be attended well. He was out with me nearly every day in personal visitation and did all he could to make the meetings a success.

The meetings were too short to really gain a large harvest, but we confidently expect the pastor to reach many in his follow up work. Two weeks is too short a time to have a real revival in any church unless the

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

MORRILL, KANSAS

A number of weeks have passed since we were represented on the pages of the Evangelist. A variety of things have transpired since that time. Some of them we never could have even suspected, others were accomplishments the church worked for. The so much discussed depression has been here too, as everywhere, and has helped embarrass the business side of the church. The bank failure came in addition to the general depression with a paralyzing stroke, totally unexpected. Most of the church money is tied up and some of our strongest financiers are heavy losers. Yet all are working together with faith that when the storm subsides our work will continue.

Since our last writing five have been baptized into the church. Two of these, a man and wife, and the others young people. Our average attendance at all the services has been good. The weather and muddy roads have cut the average some in the last two months.

The pastor was granted a vacation which was happily spent, in August, which permitted a visit with relatives and friends in the Virginias. The family also came home by way of Washington, D. C., visiting Mt. Vernon, George Washington's old home, and other historical interests. We returned home from Conference September first, not much rested but happy to be back home.

The auxiliaries of the church have done their part well. The W. M. S., the Bible school, the Sisterhood, have all been very faithful to the work. The good spiritual state of the church has been of the best type. An excellent spirit of fellowship and friendship has prevailed, and continues, in spite of the business upheaval which has caused much anxiety. We are looking for better days ahead after this period of discipline has gone on.

L. A. Myers.

REVIVAL AT NORTH MANCHESTER, INDIANA

Sunday evening, January 17, the North Manchester church closed a two weeks' revival with Brother Willis Ronk of Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, as the preacher, though in the dead of winter, we had almost perfect weather, and night after night everything was inviting and consequently good audiences from the first, growing to overflow audiences on both Sunday nights. The interest was good from the beginning and was sustained to the very end. It was the result of clear, forceful and scriptural preaching by Brother Ronk, and faithfulness and prayer on the part of the congregation. In confessions the result was an even dozen, all of whom have already been baptized and added to the church. Ours is a closely garnered field; our young people coming regularly through the Sunday school, the result of evangelism in Religious Education. We feel therefore that the results can not be told in numbers. The greater worth of this revival of the church is the heartening of the entire membership, and the upbuilding of the entire congregation.

The other churches of the town cooperated to the extent of dismissing the customary union meetings during the National Week of Prayer to help us out. Special music was provided each night by various groups including such large and useful bodies as the Young Mothers' Chorus of the P. T. A., The Isaac Walton League Chorus and others.

It was a good meeting in every respect and we thank Brother Ronk for the sacrifice he made to lead us. Also his church for their willingness to let us have the services of their fine pastor.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH

Uniontown, Pennsylvania

Dear Brother Baer:

Two weeks after closing our revival in Uniontown we began a two weeks' meeting at East Riverside Community church, the results of which have been so wonderful I feel I should write you a brief word regarding it.

East Riverside is a small country church twelve miles from Uniontown where I have been filling the pulpit on Tuesday nights since September. The little building will seat comfortably about 125 people. The crowds that filled the church every night from the first more than doubled the seating capacity. This in itself was remarkable when we think of how far the people have to travel, and many walk even four and five miles.

church is in excellent condition. We feel that the work was not finished by any means. It will not be hard to receive an invitation to return to this church and actually finish the work we merely started.

R. PAUL MILLER.

VICTORY REVIVAL

The folks of Masontown Brethren church asked their pastor and wife to conduct an evangelistic service beginning with the first week in January. They complied and the meeting is now in progress. We are in the midst of the second week and members are saying it is one of the best they have ever had. Pre-prayer services were conducted. An abundance of special music; two choirs, one of which is an enlarged Sunbeam chorus consisting of one hundred youngsters of grade school age. The interest and attendance has been excellent from the start. The house was filled from the first night with an overflow on Saturday night when the kiddies gave their program. Mrs. Sibert has charge of the choirs and special music and Bible reading contest. An average of about 5,000 verses a day has been read. With the beginning of the second week the crowds have increased to such an extent that an overflow meeting has been started in the Sunday school annex where Mrs. Sibert and her helpers conduct services for about a hundred, who cannot be seated in the auditorium. Aisles and rostrum have been filled with chairs and people, and still they come. Twenty-two have made the good confession since the meeting started and the spirit is still claiming victory. We give him all of the praise and credit.

FLOYD SIBERT.

SOME DOINGS AT OAKVILLE, INDIANA

Of course we ought to have written long ago, but amidst a lot of work and our special home cares we have put it off until now. Because we have not written is no reason to think we are dead; we are not.

We came here the first of last October from Portis, Kansas, where we had served as pastor for four years and they were very blessed years with that large growing church. We haven't got a more loyal hard-working group anywhere, and they have one of the best young people's groups that it has been my privilege to work with. But on September first I turned it all over to James Cook to wrestle with.

May God bless the Portis, Kansas, church and its leaders and the new shepherd.

On coming here we found a lot of repairs to our property were needed and by the loyal help of the brethren and sisters we have that part pretty well done. Thank you, brethren.

We conducted a two weeks' revival meeting in October and November as an immediate result four were baptized and several seemed deeply moved, but would not take a definite stand.

At the close of this meeting, we held our fall communion.

At Christmas time the Sunday school gave a nice program and a treat to the children and received our White Gifts. Our W. M. S. is a live, growing, going concern. They work, they give, and cooperate with the pastor in a mighty fine way, and they are not using any claptrap methods to flich money out of the worldly folks either. We praise the Lord for this.

I want to take this opportunity to thank our friends of the Brethren Church for the many cards sent to my wife at Christmas time. They came from seven different states. Wife is slowly getting some better.

Thank you for your prayers and will you still continue to remember us in your prayers, for we realize you too have your struggles and disappointments.

Let us all watch and pray, for we know not the day nor the hour when our Lord may come.

S. LOWMAN.

GOALS FOR 1932

The Little Brick Church on the Corner
Second Brethren Church of Johnstown, Pa.
Grove Ave. and Bond St.
George H. Jones, Pastor

I. Spiritual Goals.

1. A ten % increase in membership.
2. Scripture read and a prayer daily in every home. S. S. Lesson selection read.
3. Attendance at Church of every member, not less than 4 times in the year.
4. Every home visited at least once in the year.
5. Every member in one of the Church organizations, S. S.—C. E.—W. M. S.

II. Educational Goals.

1. A Sunday school with an average of 100 in attendance.
2. A C. E. society with an average of 15 in attendance.
3. A W. M. S. with an average of 15 active workers attending.
4. Every financial obligation met by December 31st.
5. A Tither's group organized by the end of the year.
6. Every member a supporter: every supporter giving for others as well as for self.
7. All Church officials functioning regularly.

III. Social Goals.

1. One great "get together" meeting during the year.
2. A church picnic during the year.
3. A camping period for every girl and boy over ten.

4. One social meeting for each S. S. class in a different home during the year.

IV. Physical Goals.

1. Our building improved and better equipped.
2. More class rooms.
3. Definite progress toward a new piano and church pews.

(The above program was prepared and distributed among the members of the Second church of Johnstown, was aimed as a challenge to every "person, class, or group" in the church, with the suggestion that each one should find his place and fill it. Then each one was faced with this question: "What kind of a church will our church be, if every member is just like me?" Does your church have its work as definitely outlined and its aims as definitely stated? Sometimes it helps to let your members know just what you want to accomplish.—Editor.)

THE BEAUTIFUL RIVER OF LIFE

By William C. Allen

Have you ever thought of how like the onward sweep of a river the Christian life may be? A glorious stream may have very small beginnings. Its source may be in a tiny dell amid diminutive pebbles and lovely mosses, where the pure water trickles into a little pool enclosed in the cool shade of sheltering trees.

So is many a conversion to Jesus Christ. Men worn by cares or pains, women tired of household burdens or of fashionable existence, in moments of relaxation can turn their thoughts to the more abundant, the abiding things of life. Like the advent of a spring of water in the higher altitudes there is introduced into their better emotions the refreshing water of life—the Spirit of God. They drink and are satisfied with the cooling rill.

With others the Christian experience comes tempestuously. I have seen a mighty burst of hot water gushing from between huge boulders in the midst of a desert land. The tumultuous stream is slung and tossed along to its outlet in a neighboring canon. Thus to some is the entree into a Christian career. Perhaps the call of the preacher to repentance, some tragedy, the loss of a loved one, a sudden overwhelming sense of undeserved temporal mercies, awakens the sleeping conscience, the warning voice of the divine Spirit is listened to in the midst of a spiritually barren life. A one-time sin-soaked soul after fierce conflict with human passions is born into the earthly Kingdom of God.

We note that the smaller rivers sometimes eagerly rush around the big rocks that impede their progress, but swiftly break over the little stones with which the river bed is strewn. Here we learn a lesson. How often it is best not to contend too strenuously with the larger obstacles that threaten to obstruct us. Rather it may be well to quickly pass around the irritations of life and, like the mountain torrent, leave them far behind while we, with sturdy faith, go gladly on our way.

A normal Christian life becomes an enlarging experience. As the stream increases in volume so does genuine spiritual vitality grow in energy and power. Many are the vicissitudes of our creeks and rivers as they follow the course assigned them. At times they are dashed over jagged cliffs, again they gently glide through green pastures bedecked with winsome flowers. Bitter trials, unexpected descent in material values may at times be our portion. We are often precipitated over perilous places by circumstances beyond our control. Yet, after such experiences we—like the waterfall—find ultimate quiet in the limpid pool of heavenly love. Again, as the river of life rolls on, and the beauty of the valley of peace opens to us, once more we discover our Master's joy.

We pursue our analogy further. The one-time narrow current becomes a broad stream and steadily flows onward to the sea. Perchance contact with disintegrating soil on its banks, perhaps impurities issuing from great industrial establishments muddy the transparent fluid and destroy its charm, its life-sustaining goodness. Even so it is possible for the Christian, tempted by questionable earthly or business contacts, to lose his fervor on behalf of Jesus, when yielding to the call of pleasure, greed, or pride. But we recollect that a temporarily discolored or polluted stream can again become pure—so is it with the chastened soul that returns to God.

Others, like the progress of a noble river, go on their course uncontaminated, diffusing purity, service, peace. Storms do not affect them, calamity and crime do not dismay them. Like the spacious waterway that bears upon its bosom the burdens of little or greater craft, these carry on their hearts, the loads, the hopes, the happinesses, the insecurities, the griefs of others. Their sympathies deepen and broaden with the swelling tide of worldly and spiritual experience. It cannot be otherwise. Under the clouds and in the sunshine they pour upon humanity their Christ-created affection until finally the ripples in their lives are absorbed in an endless sea. When what we call death shall overtake them it will mean that the fearless faith which found its source like a tiny rill on a mountain top, or as a great gush of waters in the midst of a granite desert, shall, at its conclusion, be merged into the eternal love of the infinite Ocean of God.—Christian Intelligence.

PALESTINE ZIONIST PROJECT A CERTAINTY

Assurance to the Zionists of America that Great Britain will fulfill the letter and the spirit of the Balfour Declaration for the building of a Jewish homeland in Palestine was cabled to the Zionist Organization of America by Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, Secretary of State for the Colonies in the British Cabinet. The cablegram was read to a large gathering at the Hotel Astor at the first public reception given for Nahum Sokolow, president of the World Zionist Organization and of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, by the American section of the two organizations. "Since his Majesty the King accepted the mandate for Palestine," the cablegram said, "successive British Governments have been charged with the duties which the mandate entails. They have sought zealously and fairly to discharge their responsibility of giving effect to Lord Balfour's famous declaration and of facilitating the building up of the Jewish national home in Palestine. In this matter policy is constant, though governments change. The present government will fulfill not only the letter but in the spirit those solemn obligations which it is their 'CUNLIFFE-LISTER.'—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

THE WETS SUDDENLY DISCOVER "THE PEOPLE"

Mrs. Charles H. Sabin's poll of Congress on the question of a prohibition referendum, proves the contention of the Drys that prohibition is here to stay. She reports less than one-third of the members willing to vote for a referendum and not all of these favor repeal or modification. There must be a two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress to order a repeal referendum and then three-fourths of the States must ratify any such repeal or modification.

It is no wonder that one of the noisiest of the Wets, the disgruntled ex-Federal enforcement officer, Maurice Campbell, pessimistically admitted yesterday that it would be 1939 and probably 1941 before the Wets could hope to get a hostile vote upon prohibition through Congress. The Drys do not concede wet success then or at any time in the future.

This sudden zeal of the Wets for "the people" is a typical piece of Wet inconsistency. Mrs. Sabin is old enough and experienced enough to remember that the Wets fought every suggestion of a referendum upon liquor, in cities, counties, States and Nation, and fought to the last ditch against a referendum upon the Eighteenth Amendment. Now they profess to want "the people" to decide—meaning in their own minds, when they refer to the people, the Wet-controlled machines in the large cities, such as Tammany Hall.

Senator Bingham, of Connecticut, who proposes to introduce a resolution for repeal, fails to state the Congressional record of his own State. His predecessors in the Senate, Brandegee and McClean, voted against submission of the Eighteenth Amendment to the people. The list could be extended through other wet members of Congress now talking loftily about the rule of "the people."—Edwin C. Dinwiddie.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

2. By education, instruction and wise leadership bring about a consciousness among the laity and throughout the whole brotherhood that ministers do occupy a place of trust and responsibility in the church and as such can not be made the target of carping criticism or the mere plaything of congregational whims. Whims, I mean, as just indicated, of an uninspirited and selfish or incapable leadership. Given men in the ministry of the type I have indicated in the preceding statement new and better leadership will be forthcoming among the laity. For a trained ministry will make a new leadership. 3. Ministers must themselves come to a deep conviction that it is their business to build up the Church of God committed to their care. This must be first and last in their thought. If the pastor does a piece of work so big that all must see it he will doubtless have the support of the people. If he learns through a serious and prayerful test that he cannot succeed where he is then he will follow the leading of the Spirit to another field. A sincere minister will not go far wrong following his best impulses when he realizes a change ought to be made.

We have in our brotherhood a fine and loyal group of men who could do a worthy piece of work extending over a long period of time if given the opportunity. There are others who can do a splendid service for a congregation but covering a briefer period. To the credit of all worthy ministers let it be said that sacrifice and toil and the spending of self are never counted too dear for Christ.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

will seem perfectly logical and valid to them.

THE "Devil that deceived them."

One of the factors that complicate the entire problem of war is the deceiving agency of Satan. He is the deceiver of the nations, pitting against one another men and nations when it is to his advantage. Read the record in Rev. 16:13-16 where he gathers the nations of the world into the place called "Armageddon." And when released from his thousand-year imprisonment in the abyss, his first act is to gather the nations "to the war." (Rev. 20:7-8). He sits in every council of war and, we must add, at every peace table. If in the light of present day conditions you will examine some of the provisions written into the Treaty of Versailles, it will not be difficult to believe that the Devil had considerable to do with it. For the Treaty of Versailles, by its parcelling out of Europe, practically guarantees the coming of the next war.

Of course, many of the statesmen who settle our international affairs, and also some of the preachers whose voices resound most loudly in religious affairs, no longer believe in the existence of the Devil. They will tell you that the world has "progressed" beyond such a medieval notion. And that, doubtless, is one reason why it is so easy to deceive them.

Men once had the idea that they could settle all political problems by the aid of religion without a scientific knowledge of such affairs. Of late they have gotten the idea that these problems can be settled by political science without Christ. Of the two blunders the latter is the more stupendous. Without Christ nothing can be settled.

BUT there will be Some

All that has been written above is not intended to discount the good motives of men who are beginning to see what a horrible thing war is. We should thank God for every sentiment against it. But now, while there is no war, is a fine time for men to examine their motives for pronouncing against it, and also to count the cost of maintaining one's convictions.

I am persuaded that, as before, there will be men who will refuse to participate in or bless the next war. And this, not because it will be the popular thing to do (for it will not be popular then), but because they are determined to follow the Will of Christ as revealed in his infallible Word in all things. Such men have no illusions about an unregenerate world. They know there can be no peace to the wicked. But they know their duty and they are going about it quietly, striving to win men to Christ and the Life which he came to give.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

STOUT-KERN—On Saturday, December 19th, at 4 P. M., at the parsonage, Miss Amber E. Stout, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Stout, of Nappanee, Ind., and Mr. Henry Earl Kern, of Montone, Ind., were united in marriage. The best wishes of their many friends go with them. They will make their home in Montone. BENJ. F. OWEN.

GROSE-NULL—On Thursday, December 24th, at 4 P. M., at the parsonage, Miss Beulah Iva Grose, of Bremen, Ind., was united in marriage to Mr. Clifford Kenneth Null of Wakarusa, Ind. These young people have the best wishes of their friends. BENJ. F. OWEN.

IN THE SHADOW

KING—Wilson King, for thirty-six years a devoted member of the Brethren church, died December 2, 1931, aged 67 years, 6 months and 16 days. It was the privilege of the writer to receive him and his dear wife into the church at West Alexandria, Ohio, in the fall of 1895, and since then, it was also my privilege to be five times the family pastor—once at West Alexandria, twice in the Salem church at Clayton, once at LaVerne, and once at Compton Ave., Los Angeles. Between our families an intimacy has long existed, far closer than ordinary, and in an unusual degree we rejoiced in the successes which came to each other, and wept together in our sorrows. He was ordained to the office of deacon at my hands, years ago, and thus it was but natural that the family should wish that I officiate at his funeral. So this was only another of the many numerous occasions when such service was as difficult as it would have been if the departed one had been my own brother in the flesh. Not for his sake, but for my own, did I weep, for the going of such a man leaves me poorer, with one less friend to comfort and cheer in times of trial and stress. He leaves to mourn his death, his devoted wife, and a son, Carl, and daughter, Carrie, one grandson and a host of Brethren and friends, all better acquainted with him, and rejoicing in the fact that they did. Funeral services were held at the family home, near West Alexandria, on Dec. 5, 1931, by the writer and by Brethren Beachler and McClain. The major part of his life was spent in the community in which he died, and which will be long influenced by the impress of his life. MARTIN SHIVELY.

MUSSELMAN—E. P. Musselman was born not far from Dayton, Ohio, June 3, 1875, and died in that city, Dec. 2, 1931, aged 56 years, 5 months and 29 days. When he united with the Brethren church, I do not know, but when I became pastor of the Dayton church 28 years ago, I found him and his wife among its membership, and then a friendship began and grew in warmth until it was terminated only by his death. During these years I was called at least three by the family to bring such consolation as the Gospel offers to the bereaved, once the occasion being the death of his wife, Mattie. Thus it was but natural I suppose, that the family should wish my presence in their present sorrow, due to his going. By profession Ed was an architect, and a good one,—the builder of the Dayton Brethren church, as well as the one at New Lebanon, and many others in the section of country in which he wrought, as well as not a few of the great commercial buildings of his and other cities. Big as he must have been recognized in this field, to me he looms still larger as a father of his four children, left nevertheless ten years ago, to whom he has been both father and mother. Thus in his death, Mary, Ruth, Anna and Edward, are doubly bereft, but they are blessed in the memory of a father whose life had too few parallels among men.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, Dec. 5, 1931. MARTIN SHIPLEY.

DAITSWORTH—Amos C. Daitsworth, a long time resident of Olatka, Ill., passed on to be with his Lord on Dec. 27, 1931, at the age of 100 years, 2 months and 9 days. He was born in Pennsylvania, from which state he enlisted in the Civil War in 1861 with Co. K, 5th Pa. Reserve Infantry, and served for three years. He was twice wounded at South Mountain and again at Gettysburg. After the war he was engaged by the U. S. Army, Antietam, Fair Oaks, Gaines Mills, and Mechanicsburg. He also spent six weeks in Libby Prison.

At the close of the war he came to Illinois, and here married Miss Anna Newcomer. To this union four children were born, two of which with the mother, preceded the father in death. Those remaining are, Mrs. Cora Gordon of Staples, Minn., and Hilar Daitsworth of Lanark.

For more than twenty-five years Brother Daitsworth has been a loyal member of the First Brethren church here, having been received into its fellowship during the ministry of Elder Z. T. Livengood. For several years he has had a longing to go home and be at rest. He met death peacefully and triumphantly. Peace to him and comfort to every sorrowing heart until the morning of the first resurrection when the dead in Christ shall come forth to meet the Lord in the air.

Funeral services held from the late home on December 31, conducted by his pastor, the writer, assisted by Elder Livengood. Services at the grave were in charge of the American Legion. C. C. GRISSO.

SHANK—Jacob Shank, of Lodi, California, for many years best known as a resident of Jenny Lind, California, laid by his earthly armour and went home to be with the Lord on Nov. 23, 1931, after a brief illness. Brother Shank had passed well beyond his 88th year and was active until the last. He was loved by all who knew him and especially in the church circles was he esteemed as a valued counselor. He was a Christian of extra fine qualities and to the writer of this notice, a friend of many years standing. Brother Shank was a man of strong convictions when once convinced of any truth. He was also a fine Christian conversationalist by which I mean he always brought every conversation to a Christian bearing. In this respect he was unusual. He was a lover of souls. His joy in life was to witness the salvation of souls and to rejoice when he was thus blessed. He preached in the Stone Coral community for many years, contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints. All we Brethren of Northern California will keenly miss our brother, but we realize that he is the winner in the race of life and is now at rest from the toils of life. He is survived by his wife, Lois Shank, and by six children, and a number of grandchildren among whom is Curtis Morrill, a student at Ashland College.

His earthly remains rest in the old historic Pioneer East Union Cemetery between Manteca and Lathrop, where now many of the older Brethren and their families of this part of the state have been buried.

The sympathy of a large number of friends is extended to the bereaved family as well as the appreciation for a life so well lived in the service of the Lord.

J. WESLEY PLATT.

FLORY—Isaac Daniel Flory of Lemoore, California, departed this life to be with the Lord on Easter Sunday, April 5, 1932. Brother Flory and his family have been connected with the Brethren Church of Northern California, for a number of years. Mrs. Flory is a sister to Mrs. Shank, until recently of Lodi, but now of Santa Cruz, California. A few years ago Brother Flory and wife and daughter placed their membership with the Manteca Brethren Church. Brother Flory had been an invalid for several years and on Easter Sunday closed his eyes of this world to open them on the other side of Jordan. He was well versed in the Bible and enjoyed the study of the Gospel and the communities where he made his home. He is survived by his wife, Ida Flory, and one son and one daughter. The prayers of friends have accompanied the bereaved members of this family since his death. J. WESLEY PLATT.

BOWERS—Mrs. Elizabeth R. Bowers, aged 81, was born in Pennsylvania, June 20, 1847, and passed away at her home, Sunday, Nov. 8, at 3:30 A. M.

She pioneered in Illinois and Iowa, moving to Spokane in 1904. Her husband died in 1917.

She is survived by 5 daughters, Mrs. J. C. Dunn, Hemingford, Neb.; Mrs. G. M. Hall, Janesville, Iowa; Mrs. H. S. Church and Miss Lillian Bowers, Spokane; Mrs. A. J. H. Hildebrand, Spirit Lake, Idaho; three sons, A. E. Bowers, Kellogg, Idaho; Dr. A. S. Bowers, Orient, Iowa, and J. E. Bowers, Seattle; one sister, Miss Mary Emily Guenther, and two brothers, J. A. Guenther, Anderson, Missouri, and S. E. Guenther, Marcus, Wash.

13 grandchildren and 14 great-grandchildren also survive.

Mrs. Bowers was a charter member of the First Brethren church at Spokane and much loved and revered by all who knew her.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor, the Rev. Albert L. Lantz, at the Hazen & Jaeger large funeral chapel, Tuesday, Nov. 10, at 11 o'clock.

B. G. JONES, Acting Secretary.

WYCOFF—Amy Stroud Wycoff was born September 18, 1856 in McCoubbin Co., Illinois, and departed this life at her home, south of Fort Scott, Kan., on January 22, 1932, at the age of 65 years, 3 months and 14 days.

She was the eldest daughter of Sam E. and Ella Stroud, and came with her parents to Kansas when but one year old. She was married to Lem Erick in 1885, to which union were born four children.

She was married to Jake Wycoff in 1903, to which union three children were born, one of which preceded her in death.

She leaves a husband and children and 12 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren. Mrs. Wycoff professed faith in Christ and united with the M. E. Church when 18 years of age, and remained true to her Christ until death. Funeral by the writer, whose home was the place of abode, was held at the Cherry Grove church, assisted by Rev. W. H. Reeves.

Burial was made in the Pleasant View Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD

ELLER—Jennie Harmlinda, the daughter of James and Melennis Apt, was born in Marion County, Ohio, May 23, 1875, later coming to Carroll County, Indiana, where, March 11, 1899, she was united in marriage to Mr. David Eller of the Burlington Community. She passed from her suffering at her home near Radnor, Christmas morning, 1931, aged 56 years, 7 months and 2 days. Besides her husband she is survived by a niece, Mrs. Raymond Douglass, and a nephew, Lloyd Apt, whom she raised.

Though she had suffered a paralytic stroke several years ago, her death was sudden and unexpected. About fifteen years ago she, with her husband, became members of the First Brethren church of Flora, and were faithful and consistent members until her death. Just a few days before her death she expressed a hope to the writer that she would soon be able to attend the services of the church she loved. Funeral services were held in the First Brethren church at Flora, on Sunday afternoon, and the large number of people present bore a testimony to the esteem of the departed. Burial in Zion Cemetery, a few miles southwest of Flora. Services by the writer, her pastor.

Again we are commanded to meditate upon whatsoever things are "lovely." Of David and Jonathan it is said in II Samuel 1:23—"They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided." Of our Lord himself we read in Canticles 5:16—"He is altogether lovely." The loveliness of friendship, the loveliness especially of friendship with himself—what a subject for our conversation! What a subject for our songs, as we read in Ezekiel 33:32—"And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song, as one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well upon an instrument." Let loveliness permeate our thought, our conversation, our songs and all our worship, that he himself, who is altogether lovely may be increasingly exalted.

And then, we are admonished to think upon whatsoever things are "of good report." In Exodus 23:1, we read that the Israelites were forbidden to raise a false report. What an easy thing it is to do! How often such reports are raised through misunderstanding of a word, a sentence, an action, a gesture, or even a silence, even among Christians. How often among the worldly false reports are raised through malice alone. But of these things we are not to think. We are to think of those things which are of a good report. In Proverbs 15:30, we read "A good report maketh fat." Our first association of the word report was perhaps in the days of our childhood, when we took our school reports home, anxiously or proudly, to father and mother. But even yet, though children of a larger growth, we have reports, whether we will or not there is constantly a report out about us. Shall we, like many Bible characters of whom we read have good reports? Shall we give good reports of others, whether or not they give them of us? We read that Cornelius was a man of good report. Ananias was a man of good report. In Hebrews 11:2 we read that "the elders had obtained a good report." In Hebrews 11:39 we read of those who died in the faith, "these all having obtained a good report, received not (yet) the promise." Good reports! Let us get them, let us give them. Let us talk about people of good report. Let us read biography, let us grow thereby. Let us think and converse of those of good report, and let us scorn to take a lower standard than was set for the Israelites, who were not permitted to raise a false report.

And then—if there be any "virtue." Peter helps us here, as we turn to his second epistle, first chapter and third verse, we find that we are called to glory and to virtue. How shall we have the one without the other? Glory and virtue, like faith and works, are indispensable companions. In the fifth verse of this chapter we find "add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge." Virtue should be early learned in the Christian life, it comes next to faith and before knowledge. Let us therefore think of it, let us talk about it, let us practice it. Let us scorn a profession which does not reveal itself in corresponding virtue.

And then—if there be any "praise." Oh, let us offer the sacrifice of praise, as admonished in Hebrews 13:15. Let us realize that faith must be found to praise. To praise whom? To praise him, to whom be praise forever. And let us remember Jesus Christ to the praise and glory of God. Let us praise God and not man, and let us praise him continually. But let us not refuse to think of the praise of man, where man has exalted God, for such praise is to the glory of God. "If there be any virtue, if there be any praise," let us think on these things.

Girding for the Climb

"I tightened my belt and went on." It had been a strenuous experience. The road had been rough, the climb difficult, and the dangers many. It was a good place to turn. The road back would be easier than that which lay before. But there was no goal in the backward turning. The reward and the joy of it was on beyond. Nothing could satisfy but just this one accomplishment. So that sturdy, undaunted, unswerving disciple of Jesus, at the very point where it was hardest, where it would have been easiest to retreat, wrote this word in his diary, "I tightened my belt and went on."

What a word for the Church of Jesus Christ, my Church, myself! What a word for this day, the hardest, the most difficult of them all! In the face of all that may lie before us in this New Year, untrodden and untried, but with problems that will challenge the stoutest heart, what shall our attitude be?

Not retreat, surely, for that would lose us all the vantage we have taken. Not the same slow pace, for that will not satisfy the hot heart of intense desire. Not retrenchment, for that would be the beginning of defeat. Not even the backward look, for that would be the beginning of the backward going.

Purposes have been born. We have declared ourselves in ringing resolutions and we meant it. So there cannot, must not be any retreating. Rather let it be a forward going in evangelism, in missions at home and across the seas. Forward in definite, persistent, warm-hearted Christian education. Converts should be multiplied. The Church should be better acquainted with the business which she is trying to carry on. And all of this cannot be accomplished with anything less than a hot heart. Let us all, each individual member of the Church, write it close to his heart—"I TIGHTENED MY BELT AND WENT ON."—Bishop L. H. Seager, in Evangelical-Messenger.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

The Editor has asked me to write a few words of introduction and reply so far as I would care to the criticism of Brother Hann which follows as the leading feature of this department. I am glad to do so and my own words shall be very few. If the reader will refer to the Evangelist of January 2 he may the more readily see the points involved. My reply to the criticism shall be just long enough to introduce Brother Hann and to justify my brevity.

1. My personal position in the matter at issue is found in the last two paragraphs of the discussion, beginning with the words, "My own conviction, etc." In these I answered the question as well as stated my opinion as to verses 9-20. This opinion I base on a fairly wide acquaintance with the whole field and not upon references to the opinions of others. I am fairly well acquainted with each of the fields to which Brother Hann appeals for evidence. It is precisely the knowledge of this field that leads me to my conclusion.

2. Manuscripts vary in value as textual sources. The two I named by far out-class all others. Those well informed in this field class all Uncials except six as of secondary importance. Of these six three have the section Mk. 16:9-20. But they are either of late or of small value as for example A.

3. Take the matter of the Versions and paragraph 1 below referring to the Peshito. It was once thought that the Peshito was the original Syriac Version but we now know better. There are two earlier versions in Syriac. One, and the oldest, called the Sinaitic Syriac, does not contain the section under examination. The other is the Curetonian Syriac. The Peshito to which Brother Hann refers as of the second Century is now referred by scholars to the fifth century. No, not by radical moderns, but by the best and most conservative scholars. Robertson for example. At present the Peshito does not rank high as an authority.

4. As to the Fathers—Eusebius says that the long ending of Mark is not to be found in the "accurate copies" of the Gospels of his day. (Ad Marin. Q. 1, Vol 4). Jerome says, that this section was wanting in nearly all Greek copies. Ep. CXX. Q. 3). Dean Alford in his Commentary on Mark says, "It was still absent from the majority of codices as late as Jerome's day."

Conclusion.—I have made these three statements only to show that the citations of Brother Hann below are open to serious questionings. I quoted Robertson and Gregory in my first answer not because I wished to support my view. I did it only to show what other men whose opinions it is worth while to consider had to say.

I do now want to add to the names of Robertson and Gregory the name of one of the greatest writers and scholars in the field of New Testament Introductions and a man who is thoroughly sound and conservative in his positions. I refer to Theodor Zahn of Erlangen University. In his monumental work on New Testament Introduction he gives an extended discussion of the problem under consideration here and at the conclusion of a vast survey, exhaustive indeed, he says, "The conclusion stands, therefore, that Mark was circulated from the beginning only in its incomplete form C (1:1-16:8)." Int. N. T. Vol 2. Page 479.

I do beg permission to add that in giving answers to questions involving honest differences of opinion I must be true to the best of my knowledge. That may be very limited. I am however eager as are all my readers to know the truth. I shall yield to none in my loyalty to and my advocacy of the Holy Scriptures. Unfortunately questions and problems of great difficulty arise and these sometimes give rise to difference of opinion. So I repeat here that I shall doubtless subject myself to criticism in conducting this column. But if the truth is disclosed or error exposed we should all be satisfied. I am glad for the criticism of Brother Hann and give his contribution the remainder of my space.

THE LAST TWELVE VERSES OF MARK'S GOSPEL

Albert G. Hann

Dr. Miller's answer to a question in connection with the closing verses of the Gospel of Mark, p. 2 of The Evangelist, January 2, 1932, would likely leave the ordinary reader somewhat mystified. He quotes Dr. Casper Rene Gregory whom he (Dr. Miller) regards as "one of the greatest, if not the greatest textual critics of all time" with reference to these verses (9-12), "The closing verses of Mark positively do not belong to this Gospel, positively have no right in the New Testament." However, later on in the article he eases our hearts somewhat by admitting vs. 9-20 as "reliable, trustworthy and veridical record" but probably added to the Gospel by some unknown writer. We are thankful he can say "I am grateful that it has been preserved. I have no difficulty in believing and accepting it," even though it is a little perplexing to understand how he can do so and still be consistent with his expressed opinion of the greatness of Dr. C. R. Gregory as a textual critic.

The writer most strongly holds that they (vs. 9-20) are certainly genuine, the weight of evidence both external and internal, compelling me to the conclusion. We believe many readers of The Evangelist are of like faith. We will give briefly the documentary reasons for the faith that is in us and perhaps these reasons may also help other ordinary readers.

Briefly our reasons are as follows. The evidence comes from three sources: (1) manuscripts, (2) versions, and (3) the early Christian writers known as "the Fathers."

I. AS TO THE MANUSCRIPTS: It is true as Dr. Miller states the oldest two uncials, the Sianaiticus (Aleph) and the Vaticanus (B) do not contain these verses (9-20). But of the others (consisting of some eighteen uncials and some six hundred cursive MSS. which contain the Gospel of Mark) there is not one which leaves out these twelve verses.

II. As to the Versions:—

1. The SYRIAC. The oldest is the Syriac in its various forms: the "Peshitto" (cent. 2), and the "Curetonian Syriac" (cent. 3). Both are older than any Greek Mss. in existence, and both contain these twelve verses. So with the "Philoxenian" (cent. 5) and the "Jerusalem" (cent. 5). Just here we would like to remark that the "Peshitto" ranks very high among the versions, even superior to the oldest Greek manuscripts, and dates from as early as A. D. 170.

2. The LATIN VERSIONS. Jerome (A.D. 382), who had access to Greek MSS, older than any now extant, includes these twelve verses. But this version (known as the Vulgate) was only a revision of the VETUS ITALIA, which is believed to belong to cent. 2, and contains these verses.

3. The GOTHIC VERSION (A.D. 350) contains them.

4. The Egyptian Versions: the Memphitic (or lower Egyptian, less properly called "COPTIC"), belonging to cent. 4 or 5, contains them; as does the "THEBIC" (or Upper Egyptian, less properly called "SAHIDIC"), belonging to cent. 3.

5. The ARMENIAN (cent. 5), the Ethiopic (cent. 4-7), and the GEORGIAN (cent. 6) also bear witness to the genuineness of these verses.

III. The FATHERS. Whatever may be the value (or otherwise) as to doctrine and interpretation yet, in determining actual words, or their form, or sequence, their evidence, even by allusion, as to whether a verse or verses existed or not in their day, is more valuable than even manuscripts or Versions.

There are nearly a hundred ecclesiastical writers older than the oldest of our Greek codices; while between A.D. 300 and A.D. 600 there are about two hundred more, and they all refer to these twelve verses.

Papias (about A.D. 100) refers to v. 18 (as stated by Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. iii. 39).

Justin Martyr (A.D. 151) quotes v. 20 (Apol. I c. 45).

Irenaeus (A.D. 180) quotes and remarks on v. 19 (Adv. Haer. lib. iii. c. x).

Hippolytus (A.D. 190-227) quotes vv. 17-19 (Lagarde's ed 1858, p. 74).

Vincentius (A.D. 256) quotes two verses at the seventh Council of Carthage, held under Cyprian.

The Acta Pilati (cent. 2) quotes vv. 15, 16, 17, 18, (Tischendorf's ed., 1853, pp. 243, 351).

The Apostolical Constitutions (cent. 3 and 4) quotes vv. 16, 17, 18.

Eusebius (A.D. 325) discusses these

Our Duty to God and to Country

No month in the year has so many outstanding occasions for the emphasizing of patriotism as February. It is pre-eminently the patriotic month. That fact, together with things that are transpiring in the world and in our own country, naturally turn our attention to the consideration of the duty of Christians to the state. And the particular phase of citizenship responsibility as claimed by the state and which is now receiving much attention is that of engaging in war, or the bearing of arms.

The Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a decision that has far-reaching significance, affecting some of the most vital elements of our religious faith and practice. It has declared against the right of a citizen to refuse to engage in war for reasons of conscience. It says, "Whether any citizen shall be exempt from serving in the armed forces of the nation is dependent upon the will of congress and not upon the scruples of the individual, except as congress provides." The conscientious objector to war, says the recent decision, "may be compelled, by force if need be, against his will and without regard to his . . . religious . . . convictions, to take his place in the ranks of the army of his country." This is in effect a denial of the time-honored principles of religious liberty, and subjects the Christian to the possibility of a conflict of loyalties, in which case shall obedience to God or to country take precedence? The Christian should always be respectful of, and recognize the power of, the state, and render due obedience to its laws, yet when the acts of a government contravene the expressed will of God (for men are fallible in official as well as in individual capacity), there is but one thing for the true Christian to do, and that is to follow in the path of the will of God, as he understands it. And we have scriptural precedent for such a stand in the reaction of Peter and the apostles to the restrictions of the rulers of the Jews, when they said, "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29).

That is practically the position set forth by Chief Justice Hughes, in his minority opinion, concurred in by Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Stone, in which he said the requirement to do military service was "directly opposed to the spirit of our institutions." He is keen and logical in his distinction between the province in which duty to state cannot be questioned and that in which duty to God is supreme. He says:

Much has been said of the paramount duty of the state, a duty to be recognized, it is urged, even though it conflicts with convictions of duty to God. Undoubtedly that duty exists within the domain of power, for government may enforce obedience to laws regardless of scruples. When one's belief collides with the power of the state, the latter is supreme within its sphere and submission or punishment follows. But, in the forum of conscience, duty to a moral power higher than the state has always been maintained. The reservation of that supreme obligation, as a matter of principle, would unquestionably be made by many of our conscientious and law-abiding citizens. The essence of religion is belief in a relation to God involving duties superior to those arising from any human relation. . . . One cannot speak of religious liberty, with proper appreciation of its essential and historical significance, without assuming the existence of a belief in supreme allegiance to the will of God. Professor Macintosh, when pressed by the inquiries put to him, stated what is axiomatic in religious doctrine. And, putting aside dogmas with their particular conceptions of deity, freedom of conscience itself implies respect for an innate conviction of paramount duty. The battle for religious liberty has been fought and won with respect to religious beliefs and practices, which are not in conflict with good order, upon the very ground of the supremacy of conscience within its proper field. What that field is, under our system of government, presents in part a question of constitutional law and also, in part, one of legislative policy in avoiding unnecessary clashes with the dictates of conscience. There is abundant room for enforcing the requisite authority of law as it is enacted and requires obedience, and for maintaining the conception of the supremacy of law as essential to orderly government, without demanding that either citizens or applicants for citizenship shall assume by oath an obligation in regard to allegiance to God as subordinate to allegiance to civil power.

We could wish that this was the majority decision of the Supreme Court instead of a minority opinion. The five to four decision practically takes away our religious liberty in principle, so far as engaging in war is concerned. The case is settled. The only way the situation can be changed is by act of Congress, and this should be encouraged by Christian people appealing individually and in groups to their representatives in the House and Senate to foster and to vote for the necessary legislation. But there is not likely to be any great influence exerted on the part of people who are not being taught to believe in and to encourage the peaceful settlement of international disputes and to oppose resort to war as sinful and unjustifiable. And that is what we are not doing in any positive and extensive way. We are not teaching our people that war is wrong and that we as followers of Christ cannot engage in it, and as a result there is growing up a generation that does not believe in the Gospel teaching against war, which has been the historic stand of Brethren people for two hundred years. We need to build up conviction at this point—that Dunker faith was not mistaken, that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, and that consequently we cannot engage in the carnage of war. Our duty to God is supreme.

Anti-Saloon League Upholds Bishop Cannon

Bishop James Cannon Jr. is always interesting, if not always approvable. We have not always been in full accord with all his methods, nor have we sanctioned some of his personal enterprises, but we do give him credit for being one of the keenest, most efficient and most courageous leaders that the cause of Prohibition has in the country today. Whether his handling of campaign funds is subject to censure or not (It is hard to tell how much of truth there is in the reports of investigating committees, and how much there is of politics and Catholic prejudice), yet the dry Protestant forces of America owe him a debt of gratitude for what he has done, and we are disposed to rejoice in the fact that the Anti-Saloon League in session in Washington a few weeks ago, gave him a unanimous vote of confidence by adopting a resolution proposed by O. S. Poland, a Boston lawyer, which said:

"The Anti-Saloon League of America records its debt and notes the debt of the whole American people to Bishop James Cannon, Jr. His has been a life of self-sacrifice and denial—singly devoted to the advancement of the cause of prohibition.

"The friends of prohibition will never be able to repay him for what prohibition has cost him in money, or in health, or in assaults on the spirit.

"More than all this—perhaps more important than all this—is the fact that Bishop Cannon stands today, and ought to go down in history, as a great champion of freedom of conscience and intellect—a protector of the independence of the franchise. Only his resolution and sacrifice stands between thousands of independent voters and social ostracism, financial ruin, serious physical harm.

"As a sacrificing worker in the cause of prohibition—as a champion, to your own hurt, of the civic rights of free men—Bishop Cannon, we salute you."

"If we think too highly of ourselves we bring ourselves into ridicule and men will not permit us to do what we are able to do, if we think too little of ourselves we refuse to do what we are able to do. In both cases we deprive God of the service he wants us to render him."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. C. F. Yoder gives us a report of the work in Argentina. A new tent in which to conduct meetings is now a part of their Gospel coach equipment for spreading the knowledge of God among the many towns of their district, and it affords new opportunities for reaching men who are hard to reach.

In a personal communication to the editor, Brother C. H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, says, "The Victory Revival is in the second week and going strong. Large crowds on Sunday, and also Monday and last night; 13 confessions to date. We will continue into the third."

In a personal note from Brother Fred C. Vanator, we learn that the work at Peru, Indiana, is going forward in a fine way. They are preparing for an evangelistic campaign during the weeks preceding Easter. He says, "The church surely is the center of activity for our whole congregation." And that is fine, the way it ought to be in every locality.

Brother A. B. Cover, pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, California, after his two-months' vacation last summer, returned with renewed energy to his eagerly waiting people, who warmly welcomed his return and gave him cooperation in his intensive efforts for another year of service in the Master's kingdom at that place. Both Sunday school and Christian Endeavor organizations cooperated in the rally effort and spirit, and through these auxiliaries six souls have been added to membership in the church.

Dr. Charles A. Bame gave a very comprehensive view of the contribution of Brethren people to Religious Education during the 200 years of their history, in his interesting and instructive lecture in the Brethren church at Ashland on Wednesday evening, January 27th. This was one of a series of special lectures given under the auspices of the Ashland Seminary and open to the public. Dr. Wm. H. Beachler, of Gratis, Ohio, is to be the lecturer this week on the Glory of the Christian Ministry.

The Brethren of Fremont, Ohio, under the able leadership of Brother W. S. Crick are bearing a faithful witness, notwithstanding the difficulties and limitations of their field. The pastor's report to the mission boards last summer showed an average Sunday school attendance of 49. Since Rally Day last fall the attendance has been around 58, and as high as 67. The pastor recently put on an assiduous campaign for Evangelist subscriptions, and as a result we have fourteen members to our family in that community. We thank Brother Crick and pray that the subscribers may rejoice in this larger fellowship.

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Warsaw, Indiana, reports twenty confessions of faith during his recently conducted evangelistic campaign, in which he did the preaching and his chorister, Brother Albert Hartman, led the music. One person has confessed Christ since the meetings closed and awaits baptism. One other was added to the church since his last report. It was the pastor's fourth meeting in his five years of service at this place and the interest and attendance were good, which bears out what the pastor says about having been given unusual liberty and power in rebuking sin and calling men and women to repentance.

Richards county, Nebraska, in which our Falls City church is located, is promoting a "Standard Leadership Training School" from February 2 to March 11, two evenings during each week, and we notice the name of the Falls City pastor, Brother H. H. Rowsey, as one of the instructors. The efforts of this community in this matter are motivated by the following conviction, stated at the very outset of their printed leaflet: "Religious Education deserves and needs the same high level of training demanded of public school teachers. The Standard Leadership Training School offers such training to present and prospective church school workers."

Brother C. A. Stewart is leading the good people of Bryan, Ohio, forward in a splendid way, according to a report in this issue by their correspondent. The various departments are active under capable leadership and the spiritual life of the church is being deepened. A successful revival was conducted under the evangelistic leadership of Brother Stewart, with the assistance of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer, popular leaders of evangelistic music. Thirty-two confessed Christ as their Savior and on the last day of the meetings twenty-one were baptized into the church. Not only the church but the community was greatly stirred by the meetings.

Brother S. C. Henderson reports encouraging progress in the churches at Roanoke and Huntingdon, Indiana, where he is pastor. At Roanoke the loyalty of the membership is worthy of commendation, he remarks and the Sunday school is growing in attendance and the Sunday school crowd stays for church. And that is encouraging and commendatory. A new Christian Endeavor and a new Sisterhood of Mary and Martha have been organized and both are doing good work. At Huntingdon the work is said to be going forward harmoniously and that the future seems brighter. The Sunday school has nearly doubled its attendance since last October. And during that time three have been baptized into the church.

Our good correspondent from La Verne, California, says the church at that place is growing in spirituality and power under the able leadership of Brother A. L. Lynn. A people is bound to grow spiritually when they give themselves to prayer and the study of the Word as these people seem to do. Brother Lynn's Bible instruction, both at his special Bible Study Class and at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, provokes keen interest and consequently the attendance is excellent. Souls are being frequently saved at the regular services of the church. During the year forty-one were added to the membership of the church without the aid of any special revival campaign. The Sunday school's average attendance for the year was 200. During the past nine years the church has raised an average of $9,000 annually.

We have an interesting letter this week from Mrs. Hattie C. Sheldon of the Bellevue station in French Equatorial Africa. Sister Sheldon makes mention of the keen loss that was felt at the death of Brother Lester Kennedy, and it is not hard to understand how it should be so. A beautiful and strong spirit of friendship grows up quite naturally among a group of missionaries having common experiences in a far-away land like Africa. We think the fellowship must be closer and finer than that which is usually experienced among Christian workers in the homeland. It is said that Brother and Sister Jobson arrived at Bassai on November 14th from their furlough in America. The Sunday school at Bellevue is "averaging around 400 lately" and the Sunday school at the branch mission at Sassara is averaging 171 in attendance.

Brother Harley F. Stuckman, capable pastor of the church at Goshen, Indiana, writes that the work there is pressing forward in a more substantial way than ever before. Prayer meetings were stressed in the fall and attendance began to increase and continued until the average was one hundred. Then came the revival meeting, with Brother Arthur T. Wirick as the evangelist, and his preaching and Bible studies were real attractions. The crowds came and the interest was sustained to the end. Twenty-one confessions were made and three were baptized at the beginning of the meetings. The Christian Endeavor is said to be going efficiently, as also is the Sunday school under its new leadership. Brother Herman Roscoe, for many years its efficient superintendent, withdrew to the ranks of a teacher of young people.

THE LAST SUNDAY IN FEBRUARY is the time for lifting the regular annual offering for the two-fold benevolent purpose—the support of the Superannuated Ministers and of the Brethren's Home at Flora, Indiana. In this issue Brother Fred C. Vanator, president of the Board of Benevolences, having in charge the Superannuated Ministers' Fund, writes his "First Call." Dr. J. Allen Miller, president of the Home Board, makes an opening statement. We call your attention to the fact that both these boards—the Brethren's Home Board and the Board of Benevolences—are given the right to appeal to the brotherhood for an offering on the last Sunday in February. Next week members of these boards will lay before you in these pages the needs that must be met. We take it that every pastor will welcome these statements and will cooperate with the Evangelist in an effort to bring the people to give their best support to the benevolent work of our church. The duties of these men have been thrust upon them by vote of General Confer-

Should Brethren Make Use of Lent?

By R. F. Porte

The mere mention of Lent carries to the minds of many people certain objectionable practices connected therewith. Many think, perhaps, of unwilling observers and the abandonment with which these same worshippers again take their places in the world. "Shrove Tuesday," the day before the beginning of Lent, is a day in which the people may enjoy feasting and great personal gratification before the fast days. When Christians consider the observance of Lent as anything but a sacred privilege, the real meaning of the period is lost. However, much as we dislike these rather objectionable features, this is not the true measure of the Lenten season. We may better arrive at a conclusion to our inquiry by contemplating the real purpose and meaning of Lent. It is here that we shall come to some idea of the proper use of Lent.

The antiquity of the observance of Lent may be gained from the fact that Irenaeus mentions that "the custom of keeping a fast before Easter Sunday was quite old even in his day, but that no uniformity of observance had, up to that time been established; some thinking they ought to fast for one day, others for two days, and others having other peculiarities" (Ency. Brit. 9th Ed. art. Lent.). Irenaeus (Born 130 A. D.), was a disciple of the aged Polycarp, and Polycarp, says tradition, was a disciple of the Apostle John. This fact lends considerable interest to the observance of Lent and its place in the life of the Church. We learn that the observing of Lent is not a later idea of an ecclesiastical Church but may be traced in some form to the days of the apostles.

In the days of Tertullian, (Born 150-160 A. D.) we find another important development of Lenten observance in the Church. At this period we discover that Good Friday was being observed as a fast day. Tertullian suggested that the fast ought to be extended over a longer period. Tertullian says, "Christians ought to fast during all the time the Bridegroom was taken away from them". This means observing the period beginning with the arrest of Jesus and ending with the resurrection as a period of fasting. Leo the Great, (440-461 A. D.) was the first to suggest to the Church the present forty days period of Lenten observance. There has never been a uniform period of Lenten observance during the history of the Church, which does not in any way argue against the importance of observing the Lenten season. The fact which does particularly interest us is the fact that we do have on record some kind of recognition of this period in our Lord's life on the part of the Church reaching back to the days of the apostles.

The next step is to say that we have no command to observe Lent. It may also be stated that we also have no command for the observance of the first day as the day for rest and worship. The Christian Sabbath has its foundation, however, in the fact of the place of Christ in the life of the Christian community. It is this same consideration of Christ which lends power to the suggestion that Christians should remember the days of our Lord's Passion. The motive in the observance of either Sunday or the Lenten season rests on the motive of love for the Master. The observance of one day of worship, however, stands above all days having its authority in the decree of God the Father at the beginning of Creation. The observance of days has no merit in itself, the merit lies in the purpose of the observance. The Christian who really loves the Lord wants to worship on the Lord's Day. This

The Brethren Home

By Dr. J. Allen Miller, President Board of Trustees

During the month of February the churches of our brotherhood look forward toward making a contribution for the support of the Brethren Home of Flora, Indiana. By regulation of the General Conference the Board of Benevolence and the Brethren Home are granted the privilege of an appeal for support and of receiving an offering on the last Sunday of the month of February.

The readers of the Evangelist are asked to watch the columns of the paper for information. We will explain our needs more fully in later issues.

The Home is an institution belonging to the Church. It is necessary to receive a considerable sum of money annually from our brotherhood to maintain and sustain the Home. We have in the Home a group of elderly ladies with whom we have entered into agreement to furnish them a Home and the necessary care incident to old age. It is to meet this requirement in part that we must have the support of the Church. A second consideration is this: A considerable part of the money given to found the Home, erect the buildings and equip the same was given on an annuity agreement. It is to help pay the interest to these annuitants that we must ask the Church for an offering. This is really meeting a great need of the Church with a modest annual offering from all the churches. Pray that the offering for

First Call

Rev. Fred C. Vanator, President of Benevolent Board

February has come to mean Benevolences to the Brethren Church. It is now time to turn your thoughts in that direction. I realize that if I could come into every Brethren home and discuss this matter of Superannuated Ministers' support with you as individuals I would get a much larger response than can ever be gotten from an appeal through the printed page. But this, of course, is impossible. So we are coming to you in the usual way and we are hoping that you have not forgotten that one of the vital items in our offering program throughout the year is the care of those who have been compelled to cease active work and depend on the liberality of the brotherhood for their material support.

In a later issue of The Evangelist we will explain our plan for this year, whereby you can make a liberal offering, not on a quota per member basis, but on a real thank offering basis. Watch for the idea in next week's issue. And in the meantime be laying up your pennies, and nickles and dimes, yea even dollars, for this great cause.

Benevolences and the Support of the Brethren Home may be a good one and may bring blessings to all concerned and magnify the Name of our Lord.

same Christian may feel the desire to remember the days in which Christ made his last journey to Jerusalem and finally to Calvary. Our thoughts regarding Lent rest here and not in any Church tradition.

What should be the attitude of the Brethren toward Lent? We are not a people of outward form but people of the quiet life in Christ, hence Lent presents an opportunity for meditation and humiliation before our Heavenly Father. The people who can best humble themselves often pass this spiritual experience on to more pretentious Christian professors. Are the Brethren taking too much for granted? Shall we the people who practice the service of cleansing, humility, and Christian service, fail to give ourselves to a special time of penitence and humble worship and thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father? Brethren ought to lead in the divinest of human acts, the offering of ourselves as "living sacrifices" unto God. The days included in the Lenten season mark the time in which Jesus was "set steadfastly toward Jerusalem." They are the days of the actual offering of himself to God for the redemption of the world. These days certainly cannot pass without creating in the minds of earnest Christians a sense of thankfulness to God and shame for our own failings to faithfully follow the way of sacrifice for our Lord. St. Paul tells us that "we must suffer with him if we would reign with him" (Romans 8:17). There is here indicated some actual participation of the followers of Christ in his vicarious sacrifice. If Christian people ever come into the "fellowship of his sufferings" it can be only by means of some earnest meditation upon the days immediately preceding the death of Christ. Lent is the time in which we may give serious thought to true fellowship with Christ. The opportunity is ours to enter very really into the spirit of Christ's sacrifice. It is a sacrifice in which we may each participate and where we each may share. He denied himself, he walked alone many times, he never questioned or rebelled against the arduous task which the Father had laid upon him. Lent furnishes us the opportunity of looking into the very heart of our Lord's ministry as he "steadfastly sets himself to go to Jerusalem"—His purpose is not to be crowned King but to "offer himself a ransom for many."

Not only does Lent offer us the opportunity to seriously contemplate the meaning of the last days of our Lord on earth in relation to ourselves but Lent offers Christians the privilege to testify of the fact and meaning of their Lord's death before the world. There may be some question as to the value of special days, but some days mean more than we at once may imagine. The world is more tender at the season of the Savior's Birth and certainly there is reason to believe that some portion of the world will be more penitential at the season of the Savior's death. The result of observing these days is determined very largely by the spirit with which Christians observe them. We Christians must feel the spirit and meaning of Lent to properly observe it and convince the world. Perhaps the world would reverence the Lord's Day if Christians generally felt the meaning and importance of the worship of God through Christ. Do you realize the influence of Memorial Day and Armistice Day in the life of the nation? I am not interested in the effect the observance of these days have on the public mind save as an illustration of what the keeping of days may mean to human beings. If American youth can be fired with feelings of patriotic loyalty to the nation, why cannot Christian youth and every Christian be fired with love for the Master who heroically faced a task which only the Son of God could carry through and did it knowing full well the cost involved? I would not wish to rob anyone of the joy we feel at Easter time, but why should we forget, or pass so lightly, the contemplation of the cost of the glory of Easter? Our nation never tires telling of the cost at which our national freedom was purchased. Our citizens are taught to reverence the memory of the dead heroes who laid down their lives for national safety. What a privilege Christians have during the Lenten season of heralding the Supreme Sacrifice of our Lord on behalf of a sin embondaged race. This is a psychological moment to drive home to the hearts of the people the great cost at which our Christian liberties were purchased by our Lord Jesus Christ. Where can the words of the old hymn, "Love so amazing, so divine; demands my life, my love, my all" have greater meaning than during the period of the Master's last journey to Jerusalem?

The Lenten season illustrates the meaning of our Lord's words, "He that would come after me let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." The completeness of the self-emptying is here revealed. It is also in the going to Jerusalem that we see revealed the meaning of the "Suffering Servant of Jehovah" spoken of by Isaiah in the fifty-third chapter of the prophecy clearly set forth. Christ appears as the "lamb led to the slaughter and as the sheep dumb before her shearers." It was this extreme humiliation of Christ which baffled the minds of the people. How could one who claimed to be the Son of God humble himself to be the passive Lamb of God in the hands of sinful men? This is one of the mysteries hidden from the ages of men and revealed only to those who have entered the "fellowship of the mystery." The Prophet says, "In his humiliation his judgment was taken away, and his generation, who shall declare it?" A true servant never passes judgment upon his master's orders, Jesus never questioned the wisdom of the Father. Jesus "set himself steadfastly to go to Jerusalem." Jesus knew his task. Critics have had a great time with Mark 13:32, which is pointed to as evidence of the limited knowledge of Jesus. This passage is cited to throw suspicion on the Deity of Christ but again let the reader be reminded that we have the evidence of the "emptying of himself" that he might take "the form of man and become obedient unto death." Here is the secret of the Christian way of life with Christ. Lent can be a time of real deep unfolding of the mystery of the way of life in Christ. "Come down from the cross, if thou be the Son of God." Jesus did not come down from the cross, therefore the world concludes that he is not the Son from Heaven. We may look with dumb admiration at the Nativity and wonder at the Divine expression of love but if we would have the fellowship with Christ we must understand the meaning of "self-emptying." We need to know what it means to be a servant of God in Christ and here during the closing days of Jesus' ministry we see revealed that great secret so important to human salvation. Brethren, it is not enough to stand before this mystery in dumb belief; we must enter into the fellowship and walk with Christ to Jerusalem, be criticised, be persecuted, go through Gethsemane and perhaps to a Calvary in order that we may come into possession of the knowledge which makes us one with Christ and share with him the riches of his Glory.

The religion of the early Brethren pioneers was of the character just indicated. It was the religion of vital piety rather than the religion of formalism. We are not insisting upon the observance of Lent as a Christian obligation, but rather as a privilege and an opportunity of personal insight into the secret of Christ's glory and the way to human victory over sin. The Brethren people have apostolic example for the remembrance of Christ's sufferings and death. There is certainly very helpful material for deep Christian meditation afforded in the Lenten season, which with the practice of the Church since the apostles adds an impressiveness of no mean proportion. The question is not so much the method of the observing of Lent but the spirit with which Christians should pass the days of our Lord's Passion. Brethren are sometimes inclined to take too much for granted, that is, we rest on the facts of our faith and fail to remember that Brethrenism consists in the practice of our faith. In this we differ from many Christian bodies and present to the world the testimony of Christians who do not say, "Lord, Lord," and then rest satisfied; but Brethren strive to do what Christ commanded. Lent is one of the expressions of the heart of Brethrenism. As Christ became a Servant, though he was the Son, so true believers are ready to become servants of Christ doing his will from the heart in sincerity and truth. Let us follow our Lord in everything as he may give us the grace to do what his Word requires.

Going Forward, Phil. 3:13, 14

By N. W. Jennings

A New Year's Message delivered over Station KWG, Stockton, Calif., under the auspices of the San Joaquin Church of the Air: Sent by request to the Brethren Evangelist for publication.

"Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The old year has gone with all of its joys, its pleasures, its pleasant associations, its holy fellowship, its sorrow, its disappointments and heart aches. The sun of the New Year has already come up over the horizon, smiling upon the human family and bringing in untold millions of golden opportunities to do good, to worship God and to serve humanity.

We launch out upon the sea of activities of the New Year with a glorious Captain as our Guide, who will lead his army on to Victory. Two thousand years ago the world was without this Captain and mighty Savior. Can we imagine the gloom, the darkness of despair of a world without a Savior? He could be seen walking the high-ways of Scripture in the Old Testament through the eye of faith, but few lifted that telescope.

Our Savior's life was a battle from the cradle to the grave. Thank God, his life was victorious. Christ came to meet sin and to put sin away. "Behold the Lamb of God." He came to meet the Devil and to put him to flight; to meet death and to conquer it; to go into the grave and flood it with his own resurrection glory. I am not afraid of the grave since Christ went there and came out and left it open.

Christ came to clothe his church with a supernatural power. To finish the work of redemption's plan and to leave with men the everlasting Gospel.

Let us go forward this year practicing God-consciousness. Some people rush into the presence of God with undue familiarity, with a demand, with no spirit of solemnity, dealing with God as a mere man. Let us not forget that he is the Eternal One who stretched out the heavens; who walks upon the stars and rides upon the wings of the wind, whose path is through the deep.

Let us go forward this year in a deeper fellowship with God and man. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Life is a grand fellowship with God and man. Are you out of fellowship with God and Man? If so, you are in a deplorable condition. You are not walking in the light. You are not enjoying the saving and cleansing efficacy of the shed blood of the Son of God.

Life is an eternal success or an eternal failure. Right now we are climbing the golden ladder to success or we are going down in defeat. A young man said, "Three words ring in my ears like ten thousand silver bells; the last spoken words of my Father were, Son, live for eternity." Christ, the source of all life, the embodiment of power, promised, "Lo, I am with you always." And if Christ is with us on this restless, changing sea of life, then all power is with us, and all Heaven for us.

Let us go forward this year in the School of Prayer. Jesus says, If ye abide in me and my words abide in you ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you (Jno. 15:7). Let us feed the soul three times a day. King David prayed morning, noon and night. The Prophet Daniel prayed three times a day. The life of our Lord was a life of prayer. If we only spend three minutes a day with God in secret prayer, we will find ourselves growing in the beautiful and beautifying grace of Jesus Christ. Prayer brings a hush to the wallings of despair in the human soul and calms the storm.

Let us go forward this year as never before as we meet with God in the study of his Word, his Holy Bible. Let us believe it all, whether we understand it all or not. For those by whom God's Word is believed to them he will reveal his Word. The Bible is a revelation of the very Heart of God, and of the deceitful, sinful heart of man. The Bible is God's conquering sword. Yes, the Bible even has power over the tongue. The tongue is a sword sometimes dipped in poison: the poison of hatred, the poison of malice, the poison of slander, the poison of jealousy, the poison of reproach, the poison of coldness, the poison of lying. But the tongue is also a word of blessing: the blessing: the blessing of forgiveness, the blessing of love, the blessing of consolation, the blessing of song, the blessing as a gospel messenger, the blessing of peace, the blessing of praise and the blessing of prayer. The gospel is the power of God unto Salvation. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light to my pathway." If we are true to the word of God, it will give us courage to obey like Abraham, to suffer like Moses, to flee like Joseph, to stand like Elijah, to persevere like Daniel, to venture like Peter, to testify like Paul.

Let us go forward this year in the work of the Church. The church is dear to the heart of God and should be to us. Christ loved the church and gave himself for it. "Feed the church of God which he purchased with his own blood" (Acts 20:8). The church is glorious, its citizens are glorious, the saints of the most high God its founder, are glorious. He laid down his life and took it again. Its history is glorious, its privileges are glorious, its end is glorious—Heaven. "Where I am, there ye may be also."

Here we are today, we give back to the Author and Giver of life the volume of 1931. Time no power can undo; ah, that unalterable past! Listen, no word can be unsaid, no deed can be undone, no look can be recalled, no influence can be changed. Fixed forever is the immortal past. The slate of 1932 is clear and clean. God help me and help you to keep the slate of your life and mine clean through the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and thirty-two.

Let us pray much this year for the blessings of God to come upon our Country, upon our President and all our leaders, upon all our worthy institutions, upon all humanity. Let us open our hearts for a new baptism of the Holy Ghost power of love. And last, let us live this year in the expectancy of the coming of our Glorious King from Heaven. Three Resolutions: 1. Love God more. 2. Love self less. 3. Love neighbor better.

Turlock, California.

Changing the Subject

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Part III—How the Lord Jesus Changes the Subject

We have noticed that we have a scriptural duty to change the subject. We have found by precept those things from which to change the subject and also those things to which we are to change it. We wish now to go higher than precept, to example. We might cite human examples. We might speak of Paul at Athens as he factually changed the subject in his sermon to the Athenians; but we prefer to take as our example the Lord Jesus himself.

The Lord Jesus set us the example to change the subject from false religions. He came into a world where false prophets, false gods, demons and idols were the subjects of thought and the objects of adoration. He who knew no sin, poured out his blood, and from all these false religions, he changed the subject to himself. For all men he is the Way. It matters not whether that man be Mohammedan or Hindu, whether he be Brahman or Buddhist, whether he be Parcee or Theosophist, whether he be Confucianist or pagan, the Lord Jesus is for that man if he will accept him, a new subject of hope, a unique object of adoration.

And thne, he changed the subject from "evil doers." He came into a world where a woman was stoned in adultery. He calmly changed the subject by saying, "Let him who is without sin among you, cast the first stone." He came into a world where the Pharisee exalted his self-righteousness against his Father God. He calmly changed the subject by teaching men to pray—"God be merciful to me, a sinner." He came into a world where the Sadducee believed there was no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit. He calmly changed the subject by saying "I am the resurrection and the life," and then he laid down his life and arose again. He came into a world where all was sin and darkness and doubt and fear. He changed the subject to righteousness and light and hope and love. He came into a world where all was disease and suffering and anguish. He offered healing and comfort and rejoicing. The Lord Jesus changed the subject in his first coming.

And then, he changed the subject from "evil doers." He changed it for me. He came into my life and changed the subject from defeat to victory; from despair to hope; from self-righteousness to his cleansing blood; from my vain attempts to the godly life of his own precious keeping power; from the constant walking in the midst of perplexing problems to his own sovereign guidance; from seeking after knowledge for its own sake, to the desire to know himself; from the thought of earthly glory to the life of the mission field. I am so glad that for me the Lord Jesus changed the subject. And while I give my testimony I cannot but refer to a few of the many others for whom he has unalterably, irrevocably and completely changed the subject. Scripture is replete with the names of those who are familiar to us all. For others also, saints who now rest from their labors, now with the spirits of just men made perfect, he has changed the subject. Among these we may mention George Mueller, Hudson Taylor, Charles Hurlburt, Dr. Custis of Boston, Dr. Shipman of Chicago, Laws of Livingstonia, who followed in the footsteps of Livingstone himself, for all these God mightily changed the subject.

But not only has the Lord Jesus changed the subject from false religions, from evil doers. Not only has he changed the subject in and through his first coming for ourselves and for others; but he will mightily change the subject in his second coming. The world is in turmoil. Wars and rumors of war are everywhere. Men are agitated, hurried, anxious, depressed, fearful, ambitious, wondering, their hearts failing them for fear even now. Others are trying to change the subject. They are crying "peace, peace, when there is no peace." Disarmament is discussed and armament is increased. But there is One and only One who can and will change the subject. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" shall he come. For us who are his, he shall bring the peace of his own presence. He shall bring boldness and confidence that all others shall lack. He shall bring also with his manifestation a likeness of himself. And then, in that glad hour when he shall be manifest when we shall be like him, we shall see him as he is, we shall find the subject completely changed. Time for us shall be no more. Eternity and immortality shall be our portion. Our light shall be his presence, our pleasure to do his will. Do not we as Christians, too, thoroughly believe in changing the subject, and to live for that glorious moment when he himself shall change it from the vagaries of the world to the eternal verities of heaven? Meanwhile as we watch and wait, let us not fear to "change the subject."

When service is cradled in a true man's heart and conveyed by a true man's gentleness, service becomes the hall-mark of humanity's nobility.—Rhys Price Jones.

ence, and they have a right to ask and expect the support of every preacher and layman who considers himself a loyal member of the brotherhood. Let's all be loyal and do our part.

A really great revival meeting was recently closed at the church at Masontown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Floyd Sibert is the pastor and served as the evangelist. The pastor reports "one hundred souls won for Christ," only twelve of whom were reconsecrations, the rest being confessions made for the first time. Brother Sibert was ably assisted by Mrs. Sibert, who had charge of the music and opening services, and took care of overflow meetings, being assisted in this by other workers. We are told that only about twenty remain to be baptized, and their baptism was planned for, so it is apparent that practically all those who made confession did so with the intention of going into the church. The pastor states that he had the hearty cooperation of the church folks both in prayer and in personal work. It means a lot to have a large group of Christian people pledged to prayer for the saving of souls while the minister is preaching the word. The spirit of God was certainly in the meetings and brought victory to the glory of God. We congratulate the Masontown church and its leadership. It is certainly encouraging the way the revival spirit is spreading among the churches. And in practically every instance of victory, it is being demonstrated that "it is not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord almighty."

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

Phil. 3:20, 21. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."

Moffatt renders the passage thus: "But we are a colony of heaven, and we wait for the Savior who comes from heaven, the Lord Jesus Christ, who will transform the body that belongs to our low estate till it resembles the body of his Glory, by the same power that enables him to make everything subject to himself."

A long time ago, men were baffled by the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" However, trickling through the clouds of uncertainty, came little bits of light; then more light, as God could see that our enfeebled vision was able to withstand more light, until his chosen spokesman, Paul, let fall a great flood upon strengthened eyes. Alas, for eyes holden in sin, diseased vision, described as "having eyes but see not." St. Paul had already raised a great question in this language: "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" (1 Cor. 15:35). If our bodies were likened unto little barks floundering in the perils of a stormy sea, the text of Phil. 3:20, 21, would serve very well for a lighthouse. At least, the terrors of a grave in my pathway could be passed without many misgivings with the light of that great text shining all around me. "With what body do they come?" Paul's answer is, the Lord of Glory shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." (R. V.) Or as Moffatt expresses it, "who will transform the body that belongs to our low estate till it resembles the body of his Glory."

Oh, yes, I see. My body is to be transformed "till it resembles the body of his Glory." Get a picture of that transfigured body on the Mount of Transfiguration. Matt. 17. Get the picture as the Lord appeared after his resurrection: "And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. And he said unto them, why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." (Luke 24:36-39). "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you." (John 20:26). "And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven, this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1:11).

Then, with bodies "that belong to our low estate transformed till it resembles the body of his Glory," I can come and go at will, too. Had our Lord not already assured all that, "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also"? After that change "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" (1 Cor. 15:52) fashioned like unto his glorious body, what will hinder me from being "ever with the Lord?"

After this change, this meeting with my Lord, if I wish to know where I am going to be in this big universe, I will have to search the Word to find out where he is going to be after that meeting, for, "so shall we ever be with the Lord." After receiving his blood-bought throngs in that great meeting in the air, he is coming down to this old earth, and I am coming with him. He is going to reign here (and obedience to his will then, will mean more than do as you please about it now), and his faithful will reign with him. No longer to travel this sin-infested path alone, where I have stumbled and fallen so often, but with bodies like my Lord's, every longing for complete victory shall be satisfied.

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

Third Vision, The seven seals (Rev. 4, 5 and 6).

Comparing Rev. 1:19 with 4:1 many believe that with chapter four comes the rapture of the church and all thereafter corresponds to the reign of the antichrist (till chap. 19). If, however, the calling up of John represents the rapture of the church, then Romanists have reason in saying that Jesus made us all "sons and daughters of Maria" when he said to John, "Son, behold thy mother" (John 19:26). A study of the contents of this and the following visions shows that the events were future as to the time of John.

The setting of the vision is the throne of God the Father in this entire dispensation. See Ps. 110:1. The four living creatures were represented on the four standards of Israel. The twenty-four elders being redeemed (5:9) may represent the church which is composed of both Jews and Gentiles (1 Pet. 2:10; Eph. 2:14-21). The sealed book must be Revelation, for as it is unsealed the events of Revelation follow. As these are understood the book of Daniel is also unsealed (Dan. 12:4). Revelation deals with "things that must shortly come to pass" (1:1), that is, the beginnings of their fulfillment.

THE SEVEN SEALS

Course of age

1. The white horse. Not Christ, although he is seen coming on a white horse later (19:11), but the great imitator, filled with Satan, who transforms himself into an angel of light. In John's day there were already precursors (1 John 2:18).

2. The red horse. Red means war and bloodshed, but also anarchy. Compare the red dragon, the scarlet beast and the scarlet woman.

3. The black horse. Foretelling famines which follow war.

4. The pale horse, representing death from pestilence and other consequences of war. Some take these colors literally: the white robed pontiff who pretends to rule over kings, the red flag of communism, the black shirts of facism and the yellow hordes of the orient. It is true that these all figure prominently in the closing events of the age.

End time

5. The company of martyrs awaiting the consummation of the age to receive their reward (1 Thess. 4:14; Heb. 11:39, 40).

6. The great earthquake, the same as under the seventh vial (16:18 or Armageddon 19:17-21).

7. The seventh seal opens into the seven trumpets.

Fourth Vision, the seven trumpets.

The introduction to this vision is similar to that of the preceding one. First is seen a company of sealed Israelites and then a great multitude of the saved of all nations. Although they have come through great tribulation they have been preserved faithful. Compare 2 Tim. 3:12; 1 Cor. 10:13).

Course of the age, ch. 8.

1. First trumpet. Hail and fire burns one-third of the trees. Believed historically to represent the invasions of the Goths.

2. A burning mountain falls into the sea. Believed to be the conquests of the Vandals, who won great naval victories.

3. A star, wormwood, falls on rivers. Believed to be the terrible march of the Huns.

4. A third of the sun, moon and stars are darkened,—the fall of the Roman empire.

End time

5. First woe (ch. 9), locusts from the pit,—the armies of the Saracens.

6. Second woe, the Euphrates horsemen,—the terrible Turks. While these two woes began centuries ago, the plague of Mohammedanism still continues.

The Turks were the first to make war with cannons belching fire, and the number of Mohammedans is more or less two hundred millions. What these woes may represent in the future and final fulfillment we do not certainly know.

The second woe does not end until ch. 11:14 and includes the announcement of more terrible things to come, the voices of the seven thunders and the bitter contents of the little book (ch. 10), the treading down of the holy city, the testimony of the two witnesses, and the great earthquake which brings us again to Armageddon.

Is Evangelism Out of Date?

By Robert E. Spear, D.D., New York, Author of "Some Living Issues," Etc.

That depends on what we mean by evangelism. If we mean some particular method of making the Gospel known and of trying to win men to Christian faith, undoubtedly that method may become ineffective and antiquated. But if we mean not some particular method but the thing itself, then it will never become out of date. Men who believe the Gospel will proclaim it, and will do so with a view to leading other men deliberately to accept Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior and to become his disciples.

It is not to be denied, however, that there are many in the church and out of the church today who disavow or discredit the idea of evangelism and who do regard it as out of date, meaning by evangelism the effort to make men Christian, to get them to accept and confess Christ and to join the Christian church. A recent missionary magazine article declares of missionary policy in India, "Our primary aim is not to bring Indians to outward conformity to a rite or to membership in the visible church." Probably the writer or this particular article would give a meaning to the word "primary" which would still retain the purpose of true open conversion as a definite part of the missionary aim but there are others who have no zeal to do so. They say that it is no part of their effort to get Hindus to give up Hinduism and to become Christians, but that their desire is to see men become better men and to find God where they are. They wish to see Hinduism and Buddhism Christianized and not to see Hindus and Buddhists made Christians.

Mr. Gandhi has of late carried this idea to the limit. He declares that conversion from one religion to another is wrong and he is especially critical of Christian missions and of their schools and hospitals because they are trying to convert men to the Christian faith. "The Indian Social Reformer" has published a number of articles maintaining this position and its editor, Mr. Nat-arajan, one of the best men in India, has gone so far as to appeal for political prohibition of religious proselytism. Here are his very words in his issue of March 29, 1930:

"The conception of sovereignty in a monarchy is not a wholly secular one, and there must be something in the conditions attaching to it to indicate a spiritual contact between the sovereign and the subject. It is against the immemorial tradition of India to impose a disability on any religion. We cannot ask that the King of the Indian Dominion should not profess the Christian faith. But we think India may and should ask that the Coronation Oath should contain a solemn undertaking on the part of the sovereign to be the protector of the ancient religious faiths of this country. The present principle of religious neutrality must be replaced by a principle of active and appreciative protection. The most important consequence of the change will be that organized religious proselytism, having for its purpose the seduction of his majesty's subjects from their ancestral faiths will be barred, as the King being the protector of all religions, cannot let one of them wage war against another."

But the principles involved in this view are untenable. In the first place such a view freezes human thought. There can be no change. What one has believed or what one's fathers have believed we must continue to believe. In the second place, if it is replied that only religion is in mind, one answers that religious truth is not different from other truth. If we are bound to give up what is erroneous in our ideas of physics or geography or philosophy when we find the truth, we are bound likewise to exchange error for truth in religion. In the third place, if it is said that religious truth is unattainable or unprovable, we reply that our conviction is otherwise, but that if it is so then there can surely be no warrant for holding fast to our old religion just because it is old. In the fourth place this view is self contradictory, because all these religions had a beginning. If there can be no conversion from an old faith to a new, what warrant was there for Islam or Buddhism or all modern forms of Hinduism in the first instance?

As a matter of fact the issue really turns on what we conceive Christianity to be and whether we believe that we have in Christ something that every man ought to have. If we conceive Christianity to be the universal and unique and indispensable message of the salvation wrought for the world in Christ and in him alone, and if we see in Christ the only way to the Father, the only Light of the world, the Way, the Truth and the Life, then we cannot help ourselves. We must make him known with the urgent desire to have him accepted by all men and to have all men unite themselves to him and to one another in him.

This is the missionary aim. As several of our foreign mission boards have put it in their manuals:

"The supreme and controlling aim of Foreign Missions is to make the Lord Jesus Christ known to all men as their Divine Savior and to persuade them to become his disciples; to gather these disciples into Christian churches which shall be self-propagating, self-supporting, self-governing; to cooperate, so long as necessary, with these churches in the evangelizing of their countrymen, and in bringing to bear on all human life the spirit and principles of Christ."

And this ideal includes the definite association of men in the open and declared fellowship of the Christian church. All permeation of life and thought by the Christian spirit, all movement of the national mind toward Christ and acceptance of his ideals is to the good. All development of personalities Christward, whether they separate themselves from old loyalties and follow Christ openly and alone or not, is hopeful. But these are not enough. Some think they are. In some mission fields one meets with the idea that Christianity can exist without any organized body and especially without any local congregational organization. There are some indeed who think that this idea is to be one of the contributions of the "Chinese religious genius," which as one Chinese writer says, "insists that religion should be left to individual inclination and achievement without organized propaganda and public worship of any sort." The preface to the "China Christian Year Book" for 1926 calls attention to this tendency in the Chinese Christian mind. Summarizing the main features of the present situation in the survey of the year, it says:

"The chief note struck with regards to Christianity, where there is articulation at least, is the desire to understand and follow Christ's way of life. This includes another promising sign that, in spite of the comparative lack of cohesion in the Christian Movement as a whole, there is a slowly growing desire and effort to promote Christian fellowship as distinct from and above the claims and efforts of ecclesiastical, denominational or theological unity. It is felt by some that this higher and freer Christian fellowship is possible even though intellectual and ecclesiastical unity is hardly a practical question at the present time."

According to this view local self-supporting churches are not necessary; the church can exist as a disembodied national influence. Well, it can not. Alas! This kind of religious genius is not confined to China. It has been one of the hindrances and obstacles in the way of the church always and everywhere.

Albert Schweitzer deals with this idea of a partial evangelism in a striking passage in "On the Edge of the Primeval Forest." He is contrasting the Protestant and Roman Catholic missionary policies and says:

"If I had to distinguish between the aims which the two keep before them, I should say the Protestant mission puts in the first place the building up of Christian personalities, while the Catholic has in mind before all else the establishment on solid foundations of a church. The former object is the higher one, but it does not take sufficient account of realities. To make the work of training permanently successful, a firmly established church, which grows in a natural way with the increase in the number of Christian families, is necessary."

If we cannot be satisfied with a conception of evangelism, which stops with open Christian personalities and does not go on to the church, still less can we be satisfied with a view which stops short of open Christian personalities and is content with the permeation of society with Christian ideals, desirable as that is. It is desirable but it is not first and it cannot be enough.

It may indeed be that in some lands we shall have to wait for large open accessions to the church until there has been a deeper seepage of Christian truth into the national thought and life. Sir Charles Trevelyan, who lived long in India, thought that this would be the method of India's evangelization. He says:

"Many persons mistake the way in which the conversion of India will be brought about. I believe it will take place at last wholesale, just as our own ancestors were converted. The country will have Christian instruction infused into it in every way by direct missionary education, and indirectly by books of various sorts, through the public newspapers, through conversation with Europeans, and in all the conceivable ways in which knowledge is communicated. Then at last when society is completely saturated with Christian knowledge, and public opinion has taken a decided turn that way, they will come over by thousands."

It may be so. But our approach is by person to person. Let all the general influences operate and be operated that can suffuse national and racial minds with Christian truth and the Spirit of Christ. But at the beginning and throughout the centuries and today the primary and effective missionary method at home and abroad is the

JESUS AND THE MAN BORN BLIND

(Lesson for February 14)

Lesson Text: John 9:1-11, 30-38; Golden Text: John 8:12

MONDAY

A Blind Man Healed. John 9:1-12

Sickness and disease may indeed result from sin and wrong living, yet there are those today who need to be reminded of the fact that more frequently affliction is unrelated to any personal sin on the part of the individual. The speculative and argumentative discussion of the disciples over this point remind us of the tendency of many today who become forgetful of more vital things and spend their time in idle speculation over inconsequential and controversial points. After all, it mattered little what was the cause: the man was blind, he needed healing, and he found One who could heal. May we first find him ourselves, and then lead others to that Light!

TUESDAY

The Pharisees' Investigation. John 9:13-23

Throughout the questioning of the Pharisees it was apparent that they were unwilling to be convinced. They were unwilling even to believe that the man had ever been blind; that a man could heal him by the power of God was unthinkable! So we, many times, are skeptical about the power of God, and hesitate to believe even what we see. We wonder whether God really has brought these things about in answer to prayer, or whether, after all, they "just happened." May we ever be open-minded toward the things of God, ever willing to believe!

WEDNESDAY

The Healed Man's Testimony. John 9:24-38

The healed man had first-hand information, and was the only one, besides Jesus himself, who was qualified to speak. It is interesting to note the way in which the full comprehension of what had taken place, and of the One who had brought it all about, gradually dawned upon him. In reply to the first questions of his neighbors he said, v. 11, "A man that is called Jesus" had healed him. Replying to the questioning of the Pharisees, v. 17, he did not hesitate to declare that Jesus was a prophet. In verses 30 to 33 he boldly reasoned with them that Jesus must be of God; and in verses 35 to 38 he acknowledges Jesus as the Son of God, and worships him accordingly. So should we all grow in grace as we realize more fully the wonderful things Jesus has done for us. It is worth noting, too, that in these verses Jesus again definitely claims to be the Son of God.

THURSDAY

Jesus works in many ways: in the case of the man we have been studying Jesus used clay and bade the man wash in the pool of Siloam. Here he heals two blind men with a touch—why, we do not know. Many of us have been healed of our sins and have found our Savior in greatly different ways. Let us not despise the different experiences of another: in both cases Jesus healed!

FRIDAY

Spiritual Blindness. Eph. 4:17-24

Physical blindness is a terrible affliction, but many times worse is blindness of heart, the unwillingness to see, such as the Pharisees evidenced. It prevents one from beholding the most beautiful things in life, it shuts off the light of heaven from our earthly path in the dark hours when we need it most, and it robs us of a saving knowledge of our God. May we not be blind to the truths of God and to his Son!

SATURDAY

Spiritual Sight Restored. 2 Cor. 4:1-6

Just as the blind man could say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see," so we into whose hearts the light of the glorious gospel of Christ hath shined may declare that Christ hath healed us of our spiritual blindness. True, we do not yet see all things as clearly as we might, but the day cometh when our sight shall be perfect and we shall see him as he is!

SUNDAY

Christ the Giver of Light. Isa. 42:1-7

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Great is his power and majesty, yet he is gentle withal: even a reed that has been bruised he will not suffer to fall and be broken off; the smoking flax in which the tiniest spark remains he will not suffer to be quenched. He opens the eyes of the blind and leads us forth from the dark prison of sin into the glorious freedom and light of God, in much the same way that the angel delivered Paul and Silas. How can we best praise and serve Christ, the Giver of Light?

3. Principle vs. Policy

In the great struggle with evil two methods of warfare present themselves for our choice. We must choose between the two in every battle with the wrong,—the method of Principle, and the method of Policy.

Policy faces every crisis with a number of questions. What is wise? What is expedient? What is practicable? Principle simply asks, What is right? Policy has a sort of "ball bearing" system of proverbs with which to lessen the wear and tear of conscience and at the same time diminish the friction of life. But principle will have none of them. "Of two evils choose the less," says policy. "Of two evils choose neither," replies principle.

Principle is bold. It looks straight at the goal to be reached and permits nothing to turn it aside by so much as a hair's breadth. It takes no account of difficulty or danger; but thinks only of truth and righteousness. Policy is weak and cowardly. It aims at righteousness, too, but allows itself to be satisfied with something far short of righteousness. It accepts a half loaf, and of very poor quality at that, when there is an abundance of the best bread to be had for the effort.

Principle is fixed. It is the same for all men in all lands and throughout all ages. It is a simple standard and makes the path of duty clear and plain. Policy is fickle, changing with every new day and every new combination of circumstances. Much of the perplexity of the Christian life grows out of the worship of policy in the place of principle. The problems of bi-metalism are nothing to those of bi-moralism. A child can interpret and apply the Sermon on the Mount, but it takes an accomplished casuist to cut a life by the pattern of worldly wisdom and then make it appear to fit a Christian saint.

Principle is true and manly; but policy is treacherous and unreliable. Look at Martin Luther as he scorned the persuasion of friends and declares, "I will go to Worms, though there be as many devils there as tiles on the housetop."

Rashly impolitic, but true to principle, he overawes his persecutors and brings in the world's greatest reformation.

The men of policy have ever found their mistress a treacherous Delilah at the last. But the men of principle have led the world forward in the line of enduring progress. For their lives they are all richer. And if they have met with personal defeat and loss and even death, these have been but the portals through which they have entered upon a glorious immortality.

The true Christian must ever be a man of principle. Jesus Christ recognized no policy but the policy of principle, the policy of perfect righteousness. And he who accepts any other standard introduces base coin into the kingdom. A sturdy Scotchman has put the truth compactly and in most expressive form:

"Perish policy and cunning;
Perish all that fears the light;
Whether losing, whether winning,
Trust in God and do the right."

Argentina

Since writing last for the Evangelist of the Brethren missionary work in Argentina, we have begun a new method of working. During twelve years we have tried to evangelize the hundreds of towns that are without missionaries by means of the auto Bible coach. With this we go from town to town, selling Bibles from house to house and teaching as opportunity permits, distributing tracts and encouraging isolated believers found.

However, no great amount of preaching has been done. We have felt that as soon as possible this feature should be added, and now the time seems ripe for it. During the past year Brethren Yett and Pisani left this district where the drouth was severe, and labored in the towns to the north. With the proceeds of the sales during the year we have purchased a nice tent which will hold about 200. We have folding benches to go with it.

Until now we have conducted campaigns in Rosario, Tancacha, Perdices, Deheza and Cabrera. In all these places the tent has been full to overflowing in all the meetings and generally there are more people listening outside than inside. In some meetings we have had five hundred or more people.

More than that, we find that many of the leading people and even Catholics, who would not for anything attend a meeting in our regular halls, come to these tent meetings. They usually begin by listening from the outside, but many become bold enough to come inside.

In these smaller towns the entire town becomes aroused and the attitude of the people is greatly changed. Those who before were antagonistic become sympathetic and many profess conversion.

We have meetings for children in the afternoons and Bible studies for the workers in the mornings. Colportage work is done between times and Bibles are also sold after the meeting.

Times are very hard and most people must content themselves with the purchase of a Gospel or a Testament.

Thus far we have been in towns where we have a group of converts and have had good music both instrumental and vocal and this has been a great help, but we hope to have music also in the other towns.

The people however, show their interest in the preaching. We take advantage of the crisis to explain the prophecies and call the listeners to repentance.

From Cabrera the coach and tent will come on to Rio Cuarto, visiting three small towns on the way and then we hope to spend a month in Rio Cuarto. Ten more have been baptized in Rio Cuarto as a result of the Varetto meetings.

Our annual general conference is to be held here also February 15-18 and we are expecting a time of great blessing. We will be in the midst of the campaign with the tent and will have two meetings each evening, one in the hall for believers and one in the tent for the public.

Several more have been baptized in Tancacha since last report and more are in preparation in several of our missions.

The Vacation Bible schools have been very successful. Sisters Nielsen and Larson make a great team for such work. They are now at Huinca Renanco and will go from there to Tancacha, and then to Rio Cuarto to help in the campaign with the tent.

The crisis is very severe and many are out of work. Farmers say that they cannot pay expenses of harvesting, and business of all kinds is almost dead. Naturally it is hard to raise money from people who do not have it. We can only pray and trust the Lord to supply what may be needed. We believe that the Lord will honor the fidelity of the church again this year as he has done in the past, and that the Easter offering will be a proof of the noble spirit of sacrifice that still exists among God's people.

Work at Bellevue Station Continues to Prosper

Bellevue, Africa, Nov. 26, 1931.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

The month of November has been an eventful one to the Oubangui Chari Mission. Mr. Kennedy went to be with the Lord on November 5th, just two days past his 34th birthday. I don't think any of us could feel the loss more keenly should one of our own relatives be taken, for in many ways we, who have so many things in common, are like one big family. It is hard to understand why the Lord did not spare Mr. Kennedy who was so well qualified for usefulness in this land and especially since so much prayer was offered up in his behalf. But we dare not ask God "why," but some day we shall understand and in the meantime we have learned that the prayer of faith must be subordinate to the Divine Will.

November the 10th Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon and family with Miss Patterson went to Bassai, that being as soon as we could get there after the death of Mr. Kennedy. We returned to Bellevue on the 12th and Miss Patterson remained at Bassai for a few days' vacation.

Saturday, November 14th, Mr. and Mrs. Jobson arrived at Bassai after an absence of a little more than a year. November 18th Mr. Jobson brought Miss Bickel and Miss Patterson home from Bassai. Miss Bickel had been there for more than three months assisting in the work during Brother Kennedy's illness.

Now the work is going forward normally here. The roof is being put on the new brick dwelling house. Miss Bickel is caring for the dispensary and Miss Patterson is typing Doctor Gribble's book, "Undaunted Hope," for a French magazine. We have classes for the inquirers, also for the women and children. Mr. Sheldon teaches the Sunday school teachers three times a week.

Our attendance at Sunday school has been averaging around 400 lately.

The work in the village chapel at Sassara continues to grow, the Sunday school averaging 171 each Sunday. The native workers take turns going to the chapel and I believe it is helping them to grow. Usually one stays during the week too, to teach the inquirers and to hold a service daily for those who care to attend.

This is Thanksgiving day and we did justice to a fat duck with all the "fixings" at Miss Bickel's house. We do feel that we have much to be thankful for. Although we have suffered the loss of one of our workers yet we feel that the Lord is leading on and never before was the way more open for the spreading of the Gospel than now.

The Catholic priest from Bozoum passes here frequently. They have built a chapel at the Poste (19 miles away). Soon they will be placing catechists out in the villages and leading those astray who are not grounded in the faith. The native Christians have given enough for a chapel and we hope to get it built this season. We should sow the Word in every village before they come along to ensnare.

Yours in his Service,
HATTIE C. SHELDON.

PURGED OF HATRED—THEN BAPTISM

Dr. E. Stanley Jones of India has been conducting an ashram, which means a school in the woods. As in ancient days, the teacher called a guru, retired with his chelas or disciples, and there by personal contact indoctrinated them with his ideals. Dr. Jones writes that they have tried to be true to the ideals of the old ashram, with the exception that Christ is made the center. He says that one of the most beautiful experiences of the past summer was the coming to the ashram of a rather famous swami (leader).

"He has a very large ashram himself and has about 3,000 families who take him as their guru. When he walked into the room on arrival he fell at my feet and said: 'You are my guru.' He meant this literally, and was ready to do anything I said. It laid on me a very heavy responsibility. But he opened like a flower to Christian truth. The day came when he wanted me to baptize him. But just before the Sunday came on which he was to be baptized he revealed, as in a flash, the terrible hatred he had toward the British. It wasn't just the ordinary nationalistic feeling. It was bitter and fierce. I told him I wanted him to be a nationalist but I could not baptize him when his heart was filled with this fierce bitterness. It was a terrible disappointment to him. He had walked hundreds of miles to get to me and here I was refusing him. The tears rolled down his cheeks. He turned to me rather fiercely and said: 'How can I get rid of this hatred? Can I change my own heart?' He could not. But Christ did. Some time later he came to me and said: 'You will baptize me next Sunday. The hatred is gone.' It was! I have scarcely ever been in such a meeting as the one in which we baptized him. Every heart there was melted."—The Gospel Messenger.

To do something, however small, to make others happier and better, is the highest ambition, the most elevating hope, which can inspire a human being.—Avebury.

BRYAN, OHIO

I am very happy to bring a report of some of the activities, and how the work is progressing at Bryan. The work here is moving along in a deeply spiritual way, under the able leadership of our pastor, Rev. C. A. Stewart. One of the ways in which this is manifested is in the increased prayer meeting attendance.

Our Sunday school showed a marked increase over last year, with Brother Joe Kerr as our superintendent of the adult department, and Miss Hazel Keiser of the primary department.

The W. M. S. and the Senior and Junior Sisterhoods are working splendidly, and right here I think our Christian Endeavor deserves honorable mention. The C. E. interest and attendance is far better than it has been for some time.

The congregation was inspired by several missionary addresses the past year, given by Rev. and Mrs. Orville D. Jobson and Dr. Yoder. We were also fortunate to have with us Professors Monroe and Stuckey from Ashland College while our pastor was in a series of special meetings at Columbus, Ohio.

We observed Mother's Day and Children's Day appropriately. Our communion services are well attended and blessed. At Christmas time our young people gave a pageant, and the children sang carols. A Watch Night service was given New Year's eve in the church basement, with a social hour, followed with a very impressive candle service at the midnight hour.

December the 27th we opened our revival services. Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer very effectively took charge of the music, and Rev. Stewart bringing us stirring messages from evening to evening. Rev. Stewart is fearless and tireless in his efforts here in the Master's Name, and preaches his heart-searching messages as though it were his last one to preach. We have often heard him say in his sermons "I believe in the Old Book," and "I'm a stickler for the Word." These, backed up by a man who believes in prayer and a consecrated life of Christian service, makes the messages all the more powerful.

Rev. and Mrs. Stewart are greatly loved by our people and respected throughout the community where they are known.

Following is an article written by one who faithfully attended the revival services, but who is not a member of our church:

Revival Services Close on High Tide

Sunday evening, January 10th, brought to a close a very successful revival and soul-winning campaign at the First Brethren church on South Main street, conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. A. Stewart, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer of Peru, Indiana.

Mrs. Richer very efficient as pianist and violinist, also sang with Mr. Richer in many duets accompanied by Miss Hazel Keiser and Mrs. Howard Davis.

Mr. Richer has memorized a wealth of poems, and gave appropriate readings each evening as well as singing the Gospel hymns.

There has been a spiritual awakening not soon to be forgotten, not only in the church, but in the city and community as well. Rev. Stewart has proven himself among the strongest ministers, not fearing to preach the truth, always lifting up the Christ as the healer of broken and saddened hearts.

There were 32 who accepted and made confession during the two weeks. On the last day of the meetings baptismal services were held at the church in the afternoon when 21 were baptized.

At the evening service many, who were unable to get standing room, were turned away, proving that the people are interested in hearing the fundamental Gospel, both preached and sung.

We feel, while the services have closed, that seed has been sown, and that the revival will carry on in the hearts of many who were brought nearer the Master.

—A Friend Who Attended.

We are looking forward and planning to entertain the state conference at this place, next June. Our aim is to please him in all our work, and the people need your prayers.

MRS. HOWARD DAVIS,

Bryan, Ohio.

ACTIVITY AT GOSHEN

The Lord, whom we serve, always gives to us enough of the good things in life to keep us encouraged to go on. In spite of all the discouragements which we have faced, we go on to victory in his name. Our work at Goshen has been more substantial than ever before. I think this has been due to the moulding influences of difficulties. We began in the autumn time to lay stress upon our prayer meeting services, and for the last eight weeks of the old year we succeeded in having an average attendance of over a hundred at each meeting. All this culminated in our revival meeting. This meeting was led for us by Brother Arthur T. Wirick. We had planned to have him conduct a Bible Study for the first week, which he did, and also into the second week. Very little of the old type of evangelistic preaching was indulged in. Folks came in large numbers from the first night on. We never had such sustained crowds during a meeting from one end to the other. Weather conditions were perfect, and Brother Wirick was at his best. Folks came by the hundreds to hear the Exposition of New Testament Doctrines. No pomp or show, just plain preaching of the word. Brother Wirick proved himself not only a great preacher, but an apt Bible expositor. Twenty-one came forward during the meeting. Most of them have been baptized already and are happily finding themselves in our work. Three were baptized at the beginning. This increase with others who have come with us, makes our growth substantial and gratifying.

Our Endeavor was never larger or more efficient than it is right now. After a period of transition, a number of younger folks have taken hold in earnest and made this department of our work highly worth-while. Brother Herman Roscoe, who has so ably conducted the Sunday school of this church, felt led to relinquish that work, and refused to be reelected at the end of this year. Brother Roscoe had many years of outstanding leadership to his credit in our Sunday school. He is teaching one of the large classes of young people, and finds this change of work very satisfying. Such laymen as Brother Roscoe always finds plenty of worth-while things to do in the church. He is a staunch supporter of the new leader, Brother Weir Tritch. Just now we are having our first session of our Community School of Religious Education. Many of our teachers are enrolled in these courses.

Ere this letter gets too long, I must close. Will you not pray for us that with all our good things along the way, we may have the strength and courage to face the more disturbing problems, and continue to honor him?

H. F. STUCKMAN, Pastor.

HERE AND THERE

On the evening of November 22 the writer began a meeting at Louisville, Ohio, which continued throughout three weeks. The days spent with these people were pleasant ones. The afternoons were spent in a definite study of the Word and the evening services were given to evangelistic effort. The response on the part of the people was most excellent. A deep interest was manifest in the afternoon study and a very fine spirit of cooperation on the part of the membership made the evening services really worth-while. At no other place have I seen manifest such a real interest in Bible reading. The reading was done by young and old. Some folks who had done but little Bible reading before became interested and definite results followed. It was a real joy to work with the pastor, Rev. A. E. Whitted. He is a fine yoke-fellow and did everything possible to make the meeting a success. This was the second meeting of these people in two years in which I had the pleasure of leading and this second one was the more successful measured by outward results. The pastor has already given the results of the meeting. Rev. Whitted is doing a fine piece of work and has the support of the membership. These people, like a number of other churches, suffered greatly because of the financial depression and the fact that both the banks in the village suspended operations has made it exceedingly difficult for them, but they are carrying on in a most commendable way and the Lord is blessing their efforts. I was privileged to share in the Communion service the closing evening of the campaign. The largest attendance in the history of the Louisville church enjoyed a time of real spiritual blessing and uplift. With a continuation of the same interest and cooperation manifest during these three weeks there will be a continued growth in numbers and experience.

Just previous to the meeting at Louisville I was privileged to spend ten days with the Dayton church in a Bible Institute. During a part of this time Dr. Robinson, an expert in tithing, labored with me. Dr. Robinson ended his work on Thursday evening and from Friday evening until the close of the Institute, Sunday evening, Dr. Alva J. McClain of the Seminary, shared the work. It was a real joy to work with these men. The only difficulty in a work of this sort is that there is so little time for real fellowship. Rev. R. D. Barnard is pastor at Dayton. He has a man's job and is meeting the responsibility and doing a very fine piece of work. He is loved by his people. I enjoyed my fellowship with Brother Barnard very much. The days ahead should bring reports of a definite advance in the Dayton work. Much time is being given to Bible study and this can result only in the deepening of the spiritual life of the membership and in bringing them a real passion for the definite work to which they have been called.

Our work at Canton continues to grow. The Sunday school attendance continues to run well ahead of one year ago. The regular services are well attended and the Tuesday evening Bible Class continues to be a very definite part of our work. Confessions are being made in the regular services and many of our people are coming to the place where they realize that soul-saving is the all-important work to which they have been called. Many things of interest might be mentioned in connection with the Canton work but this will be left for our regular church correspondent. The situation at Canton needs your prayers. Only those who are on the field know what the financial depression has meant to us. Extra burdens have come but the Lord is able to give victory. We are trusting him.

J. C. BEAL, Canton, Ohio.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN ENGLISH

The Rev. John English, 77, organizer and builder of the New Troy Brethren church and its pastor for 40 years, died last night, (January 13) at the home of a son, Arthur English, where he had resided for 21 years. He had been ill about a year.

The New Troy pastor was one of the best loved and most prominent members of his community, where he had resided 60 years and had given active service to the advancement of many worthwhile projects.

Helped Build Church

When the Brethren church was established in New Troy 40 years ago, the Rev. English helped haul some of the lumber and lent a hand with the manual labor, besides directing the details of organization.

The Rev. English had been a member of the New Troy school board for 10 or 12 years, was secretary of the Citizens Telephone company at New Troy for 12 years and helped build the first line for this local company.

Funeral Saturday

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon, January 16th, at 2 o'clock for the pastor in the church where he had filled the pulpit for nearly half a century.

The Rev. J. W. Clark, Brethren minister of South Bend, Indiana, officiated, and was assisted by Rev. R. F. Porte, also of South Bend.

The Rev. English was born in Fulton, Oswego county, New York state, on December 8, 1854, and when about 11, migrated with the family to Minnesota, the trip being made on bob sleighs.

After about a two year residence in Minnesota, the family moved to Berrien Springs, and during a several years' stay there took part in activities at the Mt. Tabor church.

In New Troy 60 Years

About 60 years ago, the Rev. English moved to New Troy, residing until his death in that area. On December 25, 1878, he was married to Mary Field, who died May 29, 1908.

Of the five children born to the Rev. and Mrs. English, one, a daughter, Maude, is dead, and four survive.

Those surviving are Mrs. Bertha Kempton, New Troy; Edward E. English, Benton Harbor; Arthur English and Gerald English of New Troy.

As a young man, the Rev. English was ordained a minister of the Brethren church, and during his years in the ministry he divided his time between farming and pastoral duties, always finding time for many forms of community service.—Adapted from newspaper report.

MEXICO-CORINTH

It has been such a long time since I have written for these columns that I fancy myself somewhat in the position of the evangelist who had been away from home so long that he had to be introduced to his own family. However long may have been my absence and neglect in the past, I will endeavor to do better in the future.

Mexico

Our revival meeting, held by Brother R. Paul Miller, closed Sunday evening, January 17th with a crowded house. For two weeks Brother Miller preached the Truth boldly and without compromise. These meetings created widespread interest, extending far into adjoining communities. Four souls were garnered for the Lord and many others we have reason to believe are on the very verge of making the great decision.

We feel that the church has been brought much nearer to the Christ for on the last Sunday morning service about thirty surrounded the altar making a definite consecration to the Master's service, tears were shed, hearts were melted and the Holy Spirit's power was manifest. We believe and pray that the seed thus sown will continue to yield a bountiful harvest. We cannot say too much concerning Brother Miller's messages, everyone of them founded upon, and definitely substantiated by, the generous use of God's Word. We earnestly pray that God may continue to give him physical strength that he may be able to "hold forth the word of life" (Phil. 2:16).

Corinth

We held our Corinth revival meeting last October. The writer was unassisted in this meeting. The attendance was good throughout the meeting. We feel that some good was done through this effort as we had the largest attended communion service following the close of the meeting that we have had during my pastorate of this church. Nevertheless, we could and should have done much better. One young woman was baptized and received into the church, an indirect result of the meeting. This is a field that has great possibilities lying at its door. We hope to be able to report victory for the Lord in this church in the near future. Pray that it may be so. We covet the prayers of the brotherhood for the spiritual welfare of both of these churches, till he comes.

VICTORY AT MASONTOWN

One hundred souls won for Christ certainly spells victory in any church. Masontown has just experienced that victory in the Brethren church and is still praising God and marveling at his wonderful works with the children of men. Best of all, the spirit is still claiming victory.

As pastor, we were rather reluctant to accept the call to evangelistic work, for we have read of many good revivals at the Masontown church. But the Lord seemed to be calling, so we humbly answered, "Here we are, Lord, use us." Now we are as humbly thanking him for what he did. We do not hesitate to say that this was one of the best evangelistic services we have ever been in, and we are not boastful; for we realize that the only thing that made it great was the presence of the Lord in it.

The attendance was the largest in the experience of the church. The first week passed with a full house every night and many turned away on Sunday night. Beginning with the second week an overflow meeting was conducted by Mrs. Sibert and her helpers in the Sunday school annex. From one hundred to one hundred fifty were in attendance at these services. And still the crowds increased. Many stood, and some went home because they were unable to stand. Even on two or three rainy nights the church was more than filled to seating capacity. The church holds about four hundred, the way they "pack them in" in Pennsylvania. The rostrum holds a hundred and it was filled. On the nights of baptism people came at six o'clock to secure a seat and sat through the entire service that dismissed at nine or nine fifteen. In these days of apostasy this reminds us of the seven hundred prophets of the Lord hidden away in caves. Brethren rejoice! The night we baptized thirty-five converts by trine immersion before a packed house, nineteen came to the altar to confess Christ.

Hand bills were distributed for publicity. Six announcements were made over radio station WAIU at Columbus, for which we thank the Pocket Testament League.

No personal work was done except as the Spirit led friend to speak with friend. Simple Gospel messages were delivered along with appropriate gospel songs, special and congregational, and folks came to the altar confessing Christ in tears.

More than a score of people remembered the Lord's command to pray without ceasing at every service. While they prayed in silent supplication victory came. Cooperation was extended to us on every hand from these good people.

Mrs. Sibert took charge of the opening services and arranged the special numbers. An enlarged Sunbeam Choir of one hundred voices made up a part of the opening services the first two weeks. On the last Saturday night ninety-nine men sat on the platform and took charge of the opening service, singing among other numbers "The Ninety and Nine." While they were seated there, the pastor remarked that it would be a great blessing to know that the ninety-nine men were all saved. The Lord went one step further, not only saving the ninety and nine only, but he saved the lost sheep as well. It was a rather singular fact, too, that the one hundredth one to come was a little white headed boy eight years old, and bright as a dollar. He had pleaded with his mother for three weeks to let him come, but she thought he was too young; but he got so insistent the last night that she asked me if I would take his confession. I did, and every ear in that house heard his confession, too. He was the youngest. The oldest was seventy. About fourteen were Sunday school children, the rest were adults. There were twelve reconsecrations, and the rest confessions of Christ. About twenty who came out last, await baptism. The most of these will be baptized at the two baptismal services on Sunday following the third week of the meeting. Three or four were regular attendants at the local Sunday schools and will become members of their respective churches. The nights of the largest number of confessions were Saturday, Monday and Sunday, numbering sixteen, nineteen and seventeen. At two different services, folks were waiting to confess Christ when the speaker finished pronouncing the benediction. At one baptismal service, the invitation song was sung before baptism and four came: two men and two boys. The revival seemed not to be over, but the door of salvation is never closed in this church. Others will come in the near future, for they have expressed their desire.

Members tell us this was the largest number of converts in the history of this church. The Sunday school also established a new record attendance with three hundred and ninety present. The young men's class had forty-three present last Sunday and nearly all are now members of the church.

Our mid-week Bible study and prayer service is an inspiration. The highest attendance since we have been on the field was seventy-eight, and the average attendance is sixty.

The building is too small for the enlarged Sunday school and plans are being talked over to get more room. If business opens up a balcony will be opened up in the rear. If not, then a neighboring building will be used.

We are exceedingly happy in our new field and acknowledge and thank God, the Father, Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Spirit as the giver of every new success and victory. REV. FLOYD SIBERT.

THE WARSAW, INDIANA REVIVAL

The revival campaign in the Warsaw church, which opened the first Sunday of the year and continued for two weeks, was an outstanding success. Prayer meetings were held in the homes before the special services opened. The meeting was well advertised. Prospects were listed. Music was prepared, in fact the church was ready for an old-time revival, as it was called.

The regular choir did the singing, under the direction of Brother Albert Hartman. They were assisted a few times by friends who came and presented special numbers. One feature of this character was the Men's chorus from Nappanee Brethren church. The preacher for this revival was the same man who has occupied this pulpit for nearly five years, and during the five years has done the preaching in four of the revivals. The pastor accepted this vote and confidence on the part of the congregation with some considerable fear and trembling, yet it proved to be a wonderful blessing.

Not in years have there been such crowds of people to attend a revival service in this church, with two other meetings in progress in the city. Many times even during the week nights, the church was filled. There was not one single time when we could say, we had a small audience. One feature was a question box, which was used extensively. It gave an excellent opportunity to speak of doctrines of the church, moral issues and to discuss Biblical questions. The privilege was given also to the people to place in the box their favorite hymns or songs, which were used some time during the series at the most appropriate time.

During the series there were 20 confessions, one since the close. To date 20 have been baptized and received into the church. One young married man was baptized at the time of the fall communion, but not yet reported, so in all 21 have been received.

Several of these are young married people, heads of families who will greatly assist in the work of the church. One young woman is a faithful teacher in our church school. Others are boys and girls from the homes of the church and community.

The pastor's personal testimony is that in all his ministry he has never preached the Word of God with such liberty and power, and felt so absolutely free to rebuke sin and warn folks of the dangers of an ungodly life and with every warning, the exhortation and appeal to live for Jesus Christ and accept the gospel of salvation.

It was a real undertaking but in the Lord the dividends are real and wonderful.

The Pastor of the First Brethren church.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

It seems like old times to be reporting to the Evangelist again, and we will attempt to let you hear from La Verne three or four times a year, in compliance with the editor's request.

We feel that our church is going forward in a deeply spiritual way under the able leadership of our pastor, Rev. A. L. Lynn. The Monday evening cottage prayer meeting, the Sunday evening (6:30) adult prayer band, and the women's Friday afternoon prayer band explain the reason for this perhaps. Such fellowship, such leading of the Spirit, and such victory as we experience in thus uniting our prayers for definite needs in the Lord's work. Every Sunday or so, sees someone saved. And we praise God that we are dispensationally taught! The pastor concludes next Sunday evening, a series of enlightening sermons on the Book of Revelation.

A Bible Study Class flourishes under Brother Lynn's instruction on Tuesday evenings. We are following Dr. W. P. White's outline on "Thinking Through the Bible" and are in the New Testament now, having finished the Old Testament last year. No church should be without a Bible Study class in these last days. There is a good Bible Study lesson given also in each Wednesday night prayer meeting as well as time given for testimony, prayer requests and prayer. From 50 to 70 attend these meetings.

Our efforts and prayers are centered now on the two weeks' evangelistic services to be held from February 7 to 21, with Dr. W. S. Bell of Ohio as the evangelist. There are many unsaved about us as well as some indifferent among our own number, for whom we are in earnest prayer. The congregation voted to release our own pastor to hold evangelistic services near the first of March in Manteca, California, at the urgent appeal from that people and pulpit.

The reports read at the annual meeting showed the church in the best working and praying condition in its history, according to T. J. Steves, church moderator for many years. The pastor reported 41 accessions to the church during the year without the aid of any revival meetings, and reviewed the year's mountain-top experiences. The Sunday school superintendent found that the year's Sunday school attendance average had been right at 200, while the church treasurer reported an average of $9,000 a year raised, for the past nine years. The Board of Deacons was found to be active and doing much relief work, seventeen boxes of food having been placed in the last month. Excellent reports were read from the organized Sunday school classes, and the four Christian Endeavor societies, as well as the Women's Missionary Society. A new Beginners' Department is functioning and 45 new Cradle Roll members were enrolled during the year. This latter department is active and we have witnessed some conversions recently among Cradle Roll parents.

Four unusually good Sunday school programs were held during the year, with the church being completely transformed through the decorations in keeping with each occasion. The semi-annual communion services have been most impressive. The next one will be held March 25, the Friday before Easter.

We praise God for victory in his Name and pray that we may walk prayerfully and humbly before him, and that each church in our beloved brotherhood may keep at work under the power of the Holy Spirit that we may not be ashamed at his coming.

Yours in that Blessed Hope,
MRS. HARRY L. GOOD,
Church Correspondent.

THE FILLING TIDE

I HAVE sometimes stood by the seashore," once remarked Phillips Brooks, "and noticed in some parts deep depressions and holes in the sand and rock, just beyond the surf. By and by the tide has come in and all those depressions and holes have been filled. Yet I have noticed that there always seems to be plenty of ocean left. I like to think the love of God is like that."

The figure is both beautiful and expressive. One of the wonderful things about divine Love is its inexhaustibility. It can fill every empty heart, appease every longing of the hungering and thirsting soul, and yet there will be plenty left for the next who calls upon God—

"For the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

verses, as quoted by Marinus from a lost part of his History.

Aphraates (A.D. 337), a Syrian bishop, quoted vv. 16-18 in his first Homily (Dr. Wright's ed., 1869, i, p. 21).

Ambrose (A.D. 374-97), Archbishop of Milan, freely quotes vv. 15 (four times), 16, 17, 18, (three times), and v. 20 (once).

Chrysostom (A.D. 400) refers to v. 9; and states that vv. 19, 20 are "the end of the Gospel."

Augustine (fl. A. D. 395-430) more than quotes them. He discusses them as being the work of the Evangelist Mark, and says that they were publicly read in the Churches.

Nestorius (cent. 5) quotes v. 20, and Cyril of Alexandria (A.D. 430) accepts the quotation.

Victor of Antioch (A.D. 425) confutes the opinion of Eusebius, by referring to the very many MSS. which he had seen, and so had satisfied himself that the last twelve verses were recorded in them.

Those who would like to go into further details we recommend Dean Burgon's "The last Twelve Verses of Mark."

At some future time we may write some suggestions as to the root cause of the doubts which have gathered round these verses.—Glenn Gardner, New Jersey.

ROANOKE AND HUNTINGTON, INDIANA

Roanoke

It has been some time since we last reported through the church news column of The Brethren Evangelist, but we are still with the living and are attempting to do our Master's service. On the last Sunday in September, we closed our four years as pastor at Oakville, Indiana. The following week we moved to the pretty little city of Roanoke, Indiana, and took charge of the First Brethren church. We found a fine loyal group of folks on this field. They have not had a pastor to live on the field for several years, and they seemed glad to have us locate in their midst. They have shown their appreciation in many ways. At Thanksgiving and at Christmas they walked in and gave us a surprise and a very liberal donation. Thanks, Brethren.

The Brethren here have a good standing in the community, and we have often heard remarks about their loyalty to their church. Our services are well attended for the size of the membership. One of the very noticeable things is that most everybody stays for church after Sunday school. This is a big encouragement to the pastor. It helps him to feel that his efforts are worthwhile and that the preaching service is not a mere adjunct to the meeting-house.

Our Sunday school superintendent is Kenneth Kreamer. He and his loyal helpers are seeking not only to build up a larger Sunday school but also to have a more efficient school in teaching the way of life. We have a fine class of young folks of high school age. They recently organized a new Christian Endeavor society. They also have a fine chorus under the direction of Sister Myrtle Bois. The girls have organized a new Society of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. They hope to be a banner society in the near future. This church is fortunate to have two old Ashland students in its membership, Brother and Sister Vern Stoffer. Brother Stoffer has done a fine piece of work in putting us on the Brethren Evangelist honor roll this year.

On the first Sunday in December, we held our Homecoming. It was an ideal day and we had a large attendance. The speakers of the day were Brother J. Fred Andrew, now a high school principal from near Bluffton, and Brother Adams of our church in Fort Wayne. Both of these Brethren brought us good inspiring messages, and we hope that we may be cheered with their presence again.

Huntingdon

This city is just ten miles west of Roanoke on Federal Road 24. It is one of the beautiful county seat towns of Indiana with a population of 12,000 people. We have a fine church building well located, two blocks east of the courthouse. When Brother Mark Early received a call to Iowa, the Brethren at Huntingdon gave us an invitation to supply their pulpit every two weeks. The past of the Huntingdon church has had its ups and downs. They have lost some valuable opportunities. But that is now ancient history. As far as I can discern, the church is now working harmoniously and looking for a brighter day ahead. At present the depression is being felt in the city of Huntingdon and many people have been out of work for months. The hours of labor and wages have been cut down to the lowest notch. It is hoped that with the return of better times that this church will be in better shape to meet its financial obligations.

They have a good Sunday school with Brother Ed Derf as superintendent. He is doing a fine piece of work and has some noble helpers. He not only asks folks to Sunday school but takes his car and goes out after them. This sort of a spirit helps a school to grow. The school has almost doubled since October first. They are now planning to have a Sunday school orchestra, which will add interest. The Sunday school gave a fine Christmas program that was rendered to a crowded house. Since coming to this church we baptized three into the church. Just before Christmas a number from this church drove to Roanoke and surprised the preacher and his family with a good donation, for which we wish to say thanks. We ask your prayers for the work at Huntingdon and Roanoke. We feel that each church is making a contribution to Christ and his kingdom.

S. C. HENDERSON.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Trying to "catch up" after an absence of nearly two months, is the excuse offered for the delay of this report. The good people of the church granted us a two months' vacation last fall during which time, we rested, visited and attended General Conference and Board meetings. So we have labored strenuously to make up for the absence. We found the membership awaiting our return which they manifested in a series of "Welcome Home" meetings. This fine expression of appreciation on the part of the membership, encouraged us to put forth our best efforts and we rejoice in things accomplished. We are not overlooking the failures and shortcomings for it is these that remind us that we need to wage the good warfare, to offset the aggressive, relentless campaign of Satan.

The first event of special importance, after the summer vacations, was Rally and Promotion Day. The usual promotions were made and indicated by proper exercises; the rallying found expression in a fine attendance and gathering of forces in renewed determination for future work. The success of the effort is registered in a steady growth in Bible school and church. The Christian Endeavor societies also observed a Rally service and have made their contribution to the successful carrying on of our work. From the school and societies have come six additions to the church by confession and baptism. These visible results give evidence of Spiritual victories which we cannot record. Our Communion service was held at the usual time; the attendance was not as large as some former services, but it was conceded to have been pervaded with a deep spirituality that gave much joy and comfort to the participants. There are always some who cannot partake of these sacred ordinances, for various reasons, and they entail spiritual loss.

Our Christmas activities consisted of a program given by the school and a Cantata by the young people of the church. A program was arranged which was representative of the entire school. A large audience was present and helped to pay tribute to our King. A Cantata: "The Manger Glory" directed by one of our girls, Helen Deibert, delighted an appreciative audience. The offering was taken and given to the National Sunday School Board. Then also there was an offering of food for the needy in our immediate community. Through our Bible school, we come in touch with many who are in need. We help as many as we possibly can. Cheer was brought into homes that otherwise could not have had a Christmas dinner. We are continuing to aid some families that are in want because husbands are out of work. Our Women's Missionary Society is functioning regularly and effectively. They make their contribution to all of the work. Our Sister Stella Meyers was with them in one of their meetings and her message was much appreciated. The brotherhood has elected officers for the year, and are looking forward to a good year in the Lord.

The reports at our Annual Business Meeting indicated progress in our work despite financial stress and other problems that confront a city church. Officers for the year were elected and formally installed by the pastor. So in all of our work, we are planning to do our best and let God lead us. The writer just finished reading the reports of this week's Evangelist. We rejoice with every victory and sympathize with others in their problems and difficulties. We ask your prayers in our behalf, for we realize the strength of the forces of evil arrayed against the forces of righteousness. To stand firm requires courage, as Moses advised Joshua, but the Lord of Hosts is with us still; so it behooves us to be encouraged and press on.

A. B. COVER, Pastor.

IS EVANGELISM OUT OF DATE?

contact of individual with individual. This is the evangelism of the New Testament and it never has been and never will be out of date.

On the contrary, this is the supreme need everywhere today. The national churches in China and Japan have discerned this and have launched their own movements of evangelism which are directed primarily at the winning of individuals to Christian faith and discipleship. These churches are not content to remain in old numerical trenches. On the other hand they are making it their primary aim to bring Chinese and Japanese "to membership in the visible church." They are not content to "pervade and transform present-day interpretations of Confucianism and Buddhism" or to pervade society with Christian conceptions. These things indeed they rejoice to see. But they are driving straight at the conversion of men and women to Christ, believing that this will be the most effective way to permeate and uplift the life and thought of the land.

Methods of evangelism come and go. Whitefield and the Wesleys found the methods that were effective in their time; Finney and Moody in theirs. We must find those that are effective in our own time. But the essential thing is the same. And we need today in the church at home, as well as in all our missions at home and abroad, to see this, and to go after men and women, one by one, or in the groups and companies in which they are accessible, and to relate them to Christ and Christ to them in the elemental reality of the Gospel of the New Testament and of all time.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

What date do reverent Bible interpreters set for the creation of Adam, when they reject the evolutionary hypothesis of man's origin, and yet are faced with the antiquity of Egyptian and Chaldean and Chinese civilizations? W. S. C.

When I first read this question Brother C., I thought I would not make any attempt at a reply. I have just this week had the rare privilege of again hearing Dr. Kyle, the noted Archaeologist and Biblical scholar. He told us in one of his lectures that so far as dates were concerned we could with a considerable confidence speak of the dates from Abraham on. But that prior to Abraham we were quite unable to speak with any certainty and that so far as the Bible record is concerned we have all the time that we reasonably need to account for whatever facts we may certainly know of any of those ancient civilizations. It is true doubtless that man has been here for a considerable length of time. But just to fix a date for the creation would with our present knowledge be little more than a guess. It may be said with confidence that we may reject the evolutionary hypothesis of man's creation and yet have all the time we need in which to account for the civilizations referred to by Brother C.

Since Paul was an outstanding missionary and evangelist, why does he not emphasize these ministries of the believer more in his Epistles? W. S. C.

The answer to this question is plain if we keep in mind several very simple facts. The first of these is that the Epistles grew out of local conditions for the most part. Take as an illustration of this fact First Corinthians. Evidently this Epistle is a reply, first, to a verbal message sent to Paul from the Church itself by the mouth of Chloe. Then in the second place it is the reply to a series of questions raised in a letter to Paul from the Church. The first part is introduced by the words, "For it hath been signified unto me concerning you, my brethren, by those of Chloe . . . 1:11. The second part is introduced by the opening words of chapter 7. "Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote."

Accordingly the subject matter Paul treats in his letters is thus quite easily discovered to be such as relates to the problems or questions of the life and conduct of the churches or the members hereof. However we have no difficulty in tracing Paul's consuming passion for souls and the missionary enterprise even if he does not mention it in so many words. The Epistles everywhere reflect Paul at work in this very way suggested by the question. So he writes the Thessalonian Epistle from Corinth. Corinthians while on the prosecution of one of his journeys and others from behind prison walls. But each and all of them may be said to have in mind the "care of all the churches," to use one of his own phrases.

If one who will not accept and confess

Christ prays "In Jesus' Name," does he not practice a kind of spiritual "forgery"?

I shall pass no judgment upon such a man's praying. I have my own opinion about what it is worth. All I care to say is that any prayer offered to be heard of God must be offered in Jesus' Name. We are to pray to the Father in the Holy Spirit and in the name of Jesus Christ. Whatsoever we ask of the Father in Jesus' name he will give it us. Read John 14:13-14; 15: 7, 16; 16:23-24 and 26. The other verse to be read is Jude 20. "Praying in the Holy Spirit."

Sinners must learn to pray the first prayer that God promises to hear from them. They must cry out in penitence and in faith for mercy and forgiveness and God will graciously save them. Then they shall have access to the throne of grace without let or hindrance. Until then it must appear fruitless to invoke the name of Jesus Christ.

What Made Lincoln Great?

There isn't much to tell about Abraham Lincoln that has not been told over and over again. If any new things were revealed it would be the result of accident or the most persistent, painstaking research. Every place Lincoln lived, everything he touched, every foot of ground his feet have trodden has become familiar, if not sacred, to the American people. He was a great man, and America is greater because he lived, and especially because it had his services at a critical time in its history.

What made Lincoln great? That may seem like an idle question. To the academic mind he does not seem to fit into the laws of our universe, physical, philosophical, or psychological. He came from the lowliest parentage, and yet seemed possessed of inherent greatness. His environment was the most unfavorable, yet he rose above it as the eagle spreads its wings from its perch in the rocks and soars above the clouds. Without the means of education or any outward incentive to education, he developed the mind of a master, so that almost every recorded utterance of his has become a touchstone of literary excellence. He had no money, and yet he became the formidable rival in the political field of shrewd men with almost unlimited financial resources. Heredity, environment, means of education, money—mighty leverages of ambitious men of all ages—were denied him. He became what he was without the aid of a single one of them.

And yet Lincoln was only a man. He was not a contradiction of the universe in which he lived. Nature bestowed upon him no special favor, with the possible exception of a capacity for development beyond that of the ordinary man. He gained nothing without effort. He toiled for every seeming favor that came to him, and paid full price for every achievement that is recorded to his credit. He was by no means an exception to the law of cause and effect, but rather a fulfillment of that law, and as such is an example to every young man of the present time, and of all time.

Lincoln had a strong body, And even that was not a chance possession. Physical strength was developed in his battle with the primitive elements amid which his early life was spent. His body was not weakened by any of the forms of dissipation that were common then and are common still. He made nature his friend and ally, and thus laid the foundation for strength of body and mind.

Intellectual development came by hard and persistent study. It is to be noted that he did not reach the zenith of his powers until well advanced in years. At an age when young men are now graduating from college, he was splitting rails or keeping a cross-roads store out on the edge of civilization. His was a long, rough, and lonely road to intellectual maturity. Speaking of the conditions under which his youth was spent, he said: "There was absolutely nothing to excite ambition for education. Of course, when I came of age I did not know much. Still, somehow, I could read, write, and cipher to the rule of three, but that was all. I have not been in school since. The little advances I now have upon this store of education I have picked up from time to time under pressure of necessity."

Lincoln advanced, not merely because he had potential ability, but because, in addition to that, he had aspiration. We may even term it personal ambition, for we are dealing with a human being who possessed natural human traits, some of which we may think of as weaknesses. He becomes a bigger man when we see him in the mighty struggle to break the bands that circumscribed his early life. He seemed to feel the urge to political power, and he pressed his claim in the face of discouragement and rebuff. Without that impelling ambition he never could have arisen above the drab life of his earlier years.

One thing that always was as a saving grace to him was his sound common sense. He knew people. He could interpret their emotions and voice their desires even when they themselves scarcely knew what they wanted. He never lost faith in folks. He never lost the human touch. He believed in genuineness, cultivated it, and embodied it in speech and action. The common people recognized this, and they loved and trusted him accordingly.

Giving for Benevolences in These Hard Times

It is not easy to make an appeal for funds when times are hard, especially when one knows that many of those to whom he must appeal have suffered real financial loss. Our first thought was to shy from the task. But it takes only a second to think twice, and in that time we were brought to the conclusion that such an appeal was not only necessary, but right, and that it should be made more strongly, more urgently, than ever before, if that be possible. And the reasons for such a conclusion are so clear that they fairly itemize themselves, and so numerous that we can record only a few.

1. The Lord's work ought to be taken care of, even in hard times. When men sin against one another until the fruitage of their greed and dishonesty begins to descend upon their own heads, should the church of Christ be required to absorb the loss? That, in reality, is what they demand, who in times like these cut off their gifts to the church or so reduce them as to cause her to curtail her program.

2. Providing the necessities of life to the Lord's people is a part of the work of the Lord, and a kind that cannot be postponed or neglected during hard times. "Contributing to the necessities of saints" is mentioned by Paul as among those things which they will do who are dedicated to the will of the Lord. Still more strongly does he put the duty in his letter to Timothy—to refuse to provide for one's own is equal to denying the faith and becoming as an infidel. The Apostle John also identifies such charitable acts very definitely with the Lord when he says: "But whoso hath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him" (1 John 3:17).

3. The Lord's work must be taken care of by the Lord's people. Only those who acknowledge the Lordship of Jesus can be expected to give of themselves and of their funds to the carrying on of the work of his kingdom. But it is expected that they can be depended on to do such things, and it is a shame when they cannot. It would be a disgrace upon us if we could not be depended on to provide individually and collectively food and clothing and a home for those of our own number who are in need, and particularly our aged ministers, but should leave them to be taken care of by the public charity agencies of the communities in which they live.

4. No doubt many of our people are in straitened circumstances, but even those who have little are duty bound to share with those who have none.

5. But still more does the responsibility rest upon those who are young and strong, or in the full vigor of life, even though they have not much goods laid up for many years, to help those who are weak, or infirm, or enfeebled by age.

6. Moreover the opportunity of giving, as they may be moved, should be afforded to those even who are in close circumstances that the blessing of sacrifice be not denied them.

7. And there are those who, though having little in the way of possessions, are in need of being faced with the challenge to deny themselves of some non-essentials for the sake of helping those who are in real need, or a cause whose need is urgent. It may be only the price of a gallon of gasoline, or of a ticket to a movie show, but the denial will be profitable to self and the sum contributed, though small, will go far when added to vast numbers of other similar gifts of self-denial.

8. But most of all does the responsibility of answering such appeals of the church rest upon those who have scarcely felt, or have felt not at all, the hardness of these times. There are those who have not even been pinched by the depression, and they number more than we might think. They are not confined to the very wealthy. There are large numbers of people who have been enjoying steady employment and at wages that have been little or nothing reduced. They, along with all those whose wealth enables them to live in plenty, if not luxury, must bear the burden of the church's responsibility to the needy, as well as every other interest and activity of the church. Let no such person say he bears no responsibility for the situation, that he has no duty to those in need. Every man is his brother's keeper. And the farther up the economic scale men find themselves the more responsible are they, as a rule, not only for the relief of those who are in need, but also for the conditions that have brought about such need. And every man who steels himself against the appeal of such need and passes by on the other side is a liability to the church and the kingdom of God. Surely there is no time like this for Christian men of wealth and competence to prove their worthiness to wear the name of Christ.

How Would You Campaign Against Sunday Movies?

One of our pastors informs us that his town is to have a "movie battle of the ballots" this coming spring to decide whether the movies shall commercialize the Lord's Day or not. He says he was benefitted by the report of the methods used in Ashland and he would appreciate further suggestions. The editor is far from being an authority in such matters, but, being good-hearted, he is venturing to accommodate his friend to the extent of the following. Then we will call for volunteers to continue the discussion.

First, let us say we sincerely hope our friend and his fellow-pastors shall be able to lead the good people of their town to take the movie fight more seriously than did the church people of Ashland. Honesty compels us to give the Brethren group credit for taking a strong stand. But taken as a whole, the church folks here did what has been done in numerous other places,—caused disappointment by the way they laid down on the job. Many lacked conviction on the matter; some were compromised by business and social relationships; some feared the scorn of the worldly crowd; some simply did not have the nerve to fight, they said, 'It's no use'; and many others were just plain movie-lovers, Sunday and week-day alike. And right there—with the church crowd—we suggest to our inquiring friends, they will find their greatest cause for worry. If they can bring the nominal church members to realize the vicious influence of the movie upon the popular mind and the really harmful effect of Sabbath desecration, and particularly the commercialization of the Sabbath, they will not need to fear what the rest of the community may do. But, of course, that is the problem.

If we were to participate in another Sunday movie fight, and had the authority to determine just what should be done and the funds with which to do it, we would begin an aggressive campaign as long before the time for the election as possible. We would have the sanctity of the Lord's Day and the harm of its desecration proclaimed from pulpit, Sunday school platform and classroom, in Christian Endeavor meetings and other church auxiliaries and organizations until the entire membership should become stirred and convinced. We would have frequent union meetings and the distribution of printed matter from house to house throughout the town. We would have run paid advertisements in the local paper. We would have a canvass of the entire town made early in the campaign, and just before election time we would make another canvass to pledge the church folks to vote and to vote right. We would keep up the fight with growing intensity to the very last. And undergirding and overtopping all this, we would organize prayer groups to meet frequently, importuning God to give victory for his name's sake.

But no one person ever has all the say as to what shall or shall not be done, nor sufficient funds to do what needs to be done. In such a community undertaking there is usually a more or less representative committee directing affairs, which, of course, is the proper thing. But one prevalent weakness, is that there is seldom enough centralization of power to make for effectiveness. If there is a general policy and planning committee that is large and representative of all the churches, there should be a small executive committee, composed of men who have strong convictions and are aggressive fighters, empowered and instructed to prosecute the campaign with vigor. And funds might be secured by apportioning the estimated cost of the campaign among the cooperating churches, or by raising it by private subscriptions.

Valuable help might be obtained through application to your state office of the Lord's Day Alliance, or to leaders in towns where successful campaigns have been fought.

Now, we have run off these few suggestions at high speed, and are proposing to throw the question open for discussion. We have done little more than open the subject, and that by request. Others who have ideas are invited to write them briefly. What would you do and how would you do it, if you were to engage in a campaign against Sunday movies? Or, write briefly your arguments against Sunday movies and in favor of a proper observance of Sunday.

Dr. Bame gives in this issue brief reviews of two books which he has found profitable. Other brethren are invited to send in brief reviews of interesting and helpful books, particularly the late ones, which they have read.

We are in receipt of the announcement and schedule of the seventh annual "Community School of Leadership Training," February 15th to March 3rd, at Somerset, Pennsylvania, and we notice the name of Brother C. J. Larmson as president of the particular district Sabbath School Association that is promoting this training school.

It is not likely that any church will forget, and certainly no one should neglect, to take the two-fold offering for the benevolent work of the church, on the last Sunday in February. Send your offering for the Brethren Home to Mr. Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana, and that for the Superannuated Ministers to Rev. G. L. Maus, Roann, Indiana.

The good people of the South Gate church, near Lost Angeles, where Brother Leo Polman is pastor, are staging their second annual Bible Conference, having begun on February 7th and closing on the following Sunday. The speakers are the pastors of the Brethren church of the Southern California district, with two non-Brethren speakers helping out on the opening Sunday.

We are in receipt of the announcement and schedule of the Christian Endeavorers of Peru, Indiana, observed Christian Endeavor Week, and the pastor, Brother F. C. Vanator, says the celebration went over big, particularly the first Sunday night program, when the closing feature was a playlet entitled, "What Barriers Keep People Away from Christ?" It might be of interest to Endeavorers to read some brief reports of how some of our Societies observed Christian Endeavor Week. Tell us about it, or about some other feature of your work. Brother C. D. Whitmer of South Bend will be glad to have a word from you.

The church at Listie, Pennsylvania, has experienced a great revival under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. We are told there were over sixty-five confessions, besides "forty or fifty reconsecrations among the church members." It is thought that only a few of these confessions will lead into other churches. Brother H. W. Nowag is the non-resident pastor of this church, but was prevented from leaving his home in Johnstown much of the time during the meetings on account of the illness of his wife. It is said this church is beginning to talk full-time pastoral care, which would indeed be a step forward and would count much toward the realizing of the greater possibilities which Brother Miller says the field possesses.

The loyal church at Washington, D. C., of which Brother Homer A. Kent is pastor, and which has been on the Evangelist Honor Roll for some time, plans to be on again this year, and the plan is for the church to pay one dollar of each subscription and the individual subscriber the other fifty cents of the regular Honor Roll price. Having the church paper come into the home is presented to the members as a means of showing "your loyalty and interest in your church and denomination." Would that every home in the brotherhood was pressed to look upon it in that manner! And besides, the Washington church is offering this same special subscription opportunity to friends of the church. That is good missionary work.

Our good correspondent from Roanoke, Virginia, says the church there is experiencing a steady growth in numbers and spirituality. The Sunday school attendance has increased from an average of 81 during last summer to an average of 105 during January. And new faces are being continually seen at the church services. A pre-Easter revival will be conducted by the pastor. It is through the aid given by the Home Mission Board that this church is able to save its property, with its heavy indebtedness, and the people are grateful for this aid, and as an expression of their gratitude they made an offering to the Home Board of nearly twice the size as on the previous year. Would to God that all the church could realize the great work of our Home Mission Board and the still greater work that is possible if it but had the funds!

We have a letter from Brother Romanenghi this week, telling about the serious financial state of the Baptist missions in the Argentine, stating that it has been found necessary to cut all salaries fifty-six per cent. He anticipates financial difficulties all along the line, and urges that we should be prepared to meet them with sacrifice and devotion. Whether the future shall, or shall not, prove to be as disturbing and irremedial as he views it, yet it is likely to call for greater sacrifice than we have been required to face in recent years. Even now the necessity for such is upon the horizon. But maybe, as a result, Christian people will become more serious, a great spiritual revival be brought about, and the cause of Christ throughout the world be thrust forward with new zeal and thoroughness. And truly we need to be prepared to make the most of these serious times.

Brother Claud Studebaker, pastor of the church at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, writes that they have cause for encouragement at that place. The last year realized a net gain of twenty per cent in attendance over the preceding year. Twenty-two new members have been received into the church since last September, adding nine new families and a number of substantial workers. The various auxiliaries are said to be doing good work, special mention being made of the Christian Endeavor, the W. M. S. and the Brotherhood of Alexander Mack, the latter being a new organization. Pittsburgh deserves credit for its observance of the special days and its support of the special interests of the brotherhood. It is apropos to mention that its support of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund was especially commendable. The Home Mission offering, too, was larger last fall than on the preceding year. The pastor has been retained for another year of service. On January 22, the forty-second anniversary of the establishment of the Pittsburgh church was appropriately celebrated. This church has a history that may well be an inspiration to the accomplishment of still greater things for the kingdom of God. We congratulate it, and may the blessing of God be upon it in abundant measure in the coming days.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

For Roanoke, Virginia, Pre-Easter revival, the pastor, Brother H. W. Koontz, doing the preaching.

For meetings on prophecy and evangelism at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, now in progress, the pastor, Brother R. I. Humberd, doing the preaching.

For revival at Berne, Indiana, beginning February 15th with Brother W. E. Ronk as evangelist and Brother John Parr, pastor.

February is the time to Support the Old Folks' Home and the Superannuated Ministers

Practical Christianity and The Brethren Home

By Dr. Martin Shively

"If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled,' notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful, to the body, what doth it profit?" James 2:15, 16.

The truth expressed by this portion of the Word, no doubt impressed Aunt Lydia Fox and her brother, John Early and his good wife, all members of the Miamisburg Brethren church, under the ministry of Brother J. M. Tombaugh, and led them, with others to take definite steps, looking toward the erection of a Home in which those overtaken by the infirmities of advancing age, too largely dependent on such help as they might be able to furnish, might receive the loving care which no one seemed to feel that he alone should supply. No doubt but that the matter was prayed over, and, maybe, quietly discussed with friends, for at any rate, those mentioned above set aside sums of money to be kept safely until others should add their bit, and thus finally their dreams would become reality. Old age is often a tragic thing, and more often than the younger folks realize, there are heartaches without number as memory recalls the days of abounding strength,—days when loved ones now gone, made life and work a joy. The memory of such days, as compared with the decrepitude incident to advancing years, with the consciousness that youth too often takes little if any account of the gray hairs and the tottering steps, is not to be lightly regarded by those who too often do not take time to think. For either old age or merciful death is the lot of all, and The Brethren's Home stands as an expression of the desire of the thoughtful, the kindly, to smoothe the path of those whose feeble steps are finding the going hard. You may never need its friendly shelter, and I hope that you may not, but it cannot be otherwise than a satisfaction to all to know that if need should arise, there is food and shelter and warmth awaiting you. In the meantime, that Home has come to you asking for such cooperation as you may find it possible to give, that the food and shelter and warmth you not now require, may be provided for others who have been longer on the way, and being thus practically mindful of them, you may be assured that if need arises in your own life, others will be mindful of you, for "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

Will You Do It?

By Rev. F. C. Vanator, President Benevolent Board

Our first call for the Benevolent offering has been in your hands for a week now. We told you that we would explain our idea of an easy way of bringing your Benevolent offering. Here it is!

We are in the midst of the month of great personages. It was in these days that both Lincoln and Washington first saw the light of day. We will all be thinking of the meaning of these lives to this land of ours. We will think of Washington at Valley Forge and of Lincoln, who finally gave his life for the cause he loved. They gave and sacrificed much that this nation might live. Two Sundays fall between the birthdays of these benefactors of our country, February 14th and 21st. On one of these two Sundays we are asking that you lay aside for the Benevolent offering YOUR BIRTHDAY OFFERING, doing it not in honor of these men, but in honor of YOUR AGED AND INCAPACITATED WORKERS. With some of us pennies will not do: we must go higher. Let's make it a real offering. If you but knew what the support of this Board meant to those who are under its care, you would GIVE. We are but the servants of the church, dispensing the funds which you place in our hands. MORE WE CANNOT DO. IT ALL DEPENDS ON YOU. Send all offerings to Rev. G. L. Maus, Secretary, Roann, Indiana.

Peru, Indiana.

The Tithe for a Purpose

By Frank Roscoe

The tithe is holy unto the Lord. Bring ye in all the tithes and I will pour out a blessing.

The financial needs of your church and mine would never suffer if all of us, as faithful stewards, would observe the tithe. You probably are familiar with the paradoxical question, "What is it, the more you take away from it the larger it gets?" The answer, a hole in the earth, and strangely enough by the diminishing process you can increase your blessings many fold.

The Circuit Rider

By Mary Carolyn Davis

(Prize Poem Read at the Dedication of the Statue of "The Circuit Rider," on the State Capitol Grounds at Salem, Oregon.)

God tramps on through the scouring rains,
God vaults into the saddle,
Rides alone past the dusty plains,
God's back bends to the paddle—
Cedar branches and sunlight through!
And on, still on, speeds the lone canoe!

God rides out on his ancient quest;
Healing, saving, commanding,
Here is the savage, unknown West,
Settlement, cabin, landing—
Well, they know the steady beat,
In the stillness of God's horses' feet.

God leads to grace the pioneers,
Who walk each hour with danger;
Knows these grim men for his peers;
Gives his bread to the stranger—
Doing all that a neighbor can,
God rides still, a weary man.

God rides out! And founds three states:
Their scourger, their defender;
Guides their loves and tones their hates,
Leads them into splendor!
God—in the Circuit Rider's breast—
Once more, God built a world—Our West.

—Zion's Herald.

Before you get a mistaken idea I am not endeavoring to write a sermon on tithing but want to impress upon your minds the necessity of a generous offering for the aged ministers. Our needs this year are even greater than they were last year and if it were not for the generous special offering authorized by our last conference, this Board would be facing a very serious condition. There prevails, in a small measure at least, the opinion that the Laymen's special offering was intended to replace the annual February offering of the church. This emergency assistance was intended to augment the 1931 offering which showed a large deficit.

Let us provide for those of our own spiritual house and thereby embrace the faith.

New Paris, Indiana.

That Reminds Me

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

"Slowing down for the junction."

Some friend one day asked Dr. John Brown how he was and with a happy smile the aged Christian answered, "Slowing down for the junction." It was one of those homely parables of speech which would have delighted the soul of John Bunyan himself. What a glorious thing it is that Christian people can think of the latter years of this earth life in that way and withal have no fear of the junction. The junction is the door into the Father's house, the meeting point of earth and heaven, the "uniting of the richer things of earth with the nobler things of heaven."

Many are familiar with Browning's noble challenge in "Rabbi Ben Ezra,"

"Grow old along with me!

The best is yet to be,

The last of life for which the first was made;

Our times are in his hand

Who saith, 'A whole I planned;

Youth shows but half; trust God; see all, nor be afraid.'"

One good Christian man, approaching old age, said, "I have always hoped that when I would come to the sacred seventies or the aching eighties I would not be one always talking about the 'good old days' and the awful present."

And that reminds me—

The Brethren church has a real and definite obligation toward the aged ministers of the Gospel who have spent their lives preaching the Gospel, thus helping our Lord to build his church, and especially toward those who have served with very limited remuneration and have come to old age without sufficient of this world's goods to insure the necessary food and shelter and comfort. No argument should be required to induce the church to make the best possible provision for these faithful servants who have served the church so faithfully and with so little thought of self.

Similar care should be exercised toward the aged laymembers of the church who have need of a home in old age.

The church we love has made adequate provision for such care. The Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana is just what is needed and it is being used to capacity. However, the present support is not sufficient. The offerings should be increased. These dramatic and trying times should call forth increasing self-sacrifice on the part of all the members of our churches to the end that none of the aged shall suffer but rather that they shall be assured of the proper care and provision for all their needs.

May all the members of our churches from coast to coast bring for the Brethren Home an offering that they will not be ashamed to lay in the hands that were pierced on Calvary's cross for them. And may the joy of the Lord in increasing measure fill the hearts of all the aged as they slow down for the junction.

Smithville, Ohio.

The Abundance of Sin through Adam versus the Superabundance of Righteousness through Christ as found in Rom. 5:12-21

By Leslie E. Lindower

(A brief condensation of a former paper. The translation is a comparison of the Greek with the various English versions.)

This passage of Scripture is so packed full of meaning and deep truths that many fear "getting in over their depth" if they were to make a close study of it. But when carefully analyzed and examined it becomes one of the most interesting studies in the Word of God.

The origin which sin had in the human race, which is considered under the present subject, is not its origin in the absolute sense. The account of man's fall in Genesis states that the temptation came through another creature of great cunning, who through deceit, caused the introduction of transgression with the first pair of humans. This other creature is the one identified with the person addressed in the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah and the twenty-eighth chapter of Ezekiel, who may be recognized, by a careful study of all Scriptures concerned, as the one who through his fall became Satan. Sin, therefore, had its origin in Heaven, and came into the race through Satan, its originator.

The Passage Outlined and Interpreted

I. Sin and righteousness imputed; immediate imputation. vs. 12-18.

1. The effect of Adam's sin. Vs. 12.

"Therefore, as through one man sin passed into the world order, and through sin, death; and so death passed through into all men, because of whom (the one man) all sinned."

The result of Adam's sin was death, physical and spiritual. His spiritual death was shown in his hiding from God; his physical death is recounted in the fifth chapter of Genesis. But the effect of his sin was twofold:—

a. Upon himself—death, physical and spiritual.

b. Upon the race.—"Death passed through into all men."

"Because of whom all sinned"—actually, because all men were in the loins of Adam at the time of his sin (according to the Biblical principle given in Levi's paying tithes to Melchizedek, because he was in the loins of Abraham when it was done, Heb. 7:9-10); and representatively, since Adam was only demonstrating what God knew every one of us would have done under the circumstances.

2. The evidence and proof of the imputation of Adam's sin. Vss. 13-14.

"For until law sin was in the world order, but sin is not put to one's account, there not being a law; but death reigned from Adam until Moses, and upon those not sinning after the likeness of Adam's transgression, who was a type of the (then) Coming One."

This evidence and proof is twofold:

a. In the absence of law and transgression between Adam and Moses.

These had not transgressed any law because there was no law during this period.

b. In the presence of sin and death from Adam to Moses.

Death, the result of Adam's sin, was indisputably present, because all died. Sin, not transgression, but the fruit of the sin nature, was present. From Adam to Moses men were suffering the penalty of Adam's transgression, not their own, therefore, Adam's sin was imputed to them.

3. The estimate of the greater value of the free gift over the offence. vs. 15-17.

These verses introduce three ways in which the free gift through Christ is different from the offence through Adam, not in character, but in value. They are similar in character, but the free gift is much greater in value.

a. In abundance. vs. 15.

"But not as the offence, so also the gift; for if by the offence of the one the many died, by much more the grace of God and the gift in grace by that of the one man Jesus Christ abounded unto the many."

b. In reason or cause. vs. 16.

"And not as though one sinning (is) the gift; for on the one hand judgment (issued) out of one unto condemnation; on the other hand a free gift (issued) out of many offences unto justification."

c. In reigning power. vs. 17.

"For if, by the offence of the one death reigned through the one, by much more shall those receiving the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness reign in life through the one, Jesus Christ."

According to this verse the reigning of death began in the past and extends into the present, but the reigning in righteousness is definitely future. Death is still reigning in spite of the fact that we have already received abundance of grace. The gift of righteousness in its absolute sense may be also considered as future.

4. The extent of the one act. vs. 18.

"So, therefore, as through one offence (it came) unto all men unto condemnation; so also through one (act) of righteousness (it came) unto all men unto justification of life."

One act in the case of each man, Adam and Christ, is said to have a universal extent. This universality is not actual, however, but POTENTIAL. This condemnation is the word indicating the final sentence which is passed upon men for sin. All men are not actually condemned, even as all men are not actually saved. But the condemnation issuing out of Adam's offence was sufficient to engulf all men, the same as the RIGHTEOUSNESS FURNISHED BY CHRIST IS SUFFICIENT TO INCLUDE ALL MEN. But by the voluntary exercise of their own choice (under the sovereign direction of the Spirit of God) some men have escaped condemnation, even as some have separated themselves from righteousness. Therefore the extent of each act may be stated,—

a. Of offence unto a condemnation for all.

b. Of righteousness unto justification of life for all.

II. Sin and righteousness imparted; mediate imputation. vs. 19-21.

1. The character of the nature determined. vs. 19.

"For just as through the disobedience of the one the many were rendered sinful, so also through the obedience of the one the many will be rendered righteous."

Notice that the comparison now is not universal, but expressed by "The many." The analogy is now between natures imparted.

a. By the one act of disobedience, sinful.

By inheritance through the members of the race, from Adam, the sin nature has been carried.

b. By one act of obedience, righteous.

Notice that the verse states this in the future,—the actual imparting of a righteous character through the one act of obedience on the part of Christ. The Scriptures do not teach that a saved person becomes righteous by nature in this life.

2. The conduct of the nature revealed and a remedy provided. vs. 20.

"But the Law came in alongside, that the offence might increase; but where sin increased, grace superabounded."

a. Revealed by the Law.

The purpose of the Law is to reveal sin. It transforms sin into transgression.

b. The remedy provided by grace.

The payment for sin by grace was not an exact commercial exchange, but a superabundance. If every man of the human race would accept the grace of God, it would not be exhausted.

3. The ruling force of the nature gratified. vs. 21.

"In order that, just as sin reigned in death, so also might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

a. Sin unto death.

The ruling force of the sinful nature is sin; it is gratified in death.

b. Grace unto eternal life.

The ruling force of the righteous nature is grace; it is gratified in eternal life.

Paul has not presented this analogy merely as a beautiful literary picture and illustration, but because there is a vital principle of theology here. This is, in a sense, the key to an individual's theology. The extent of the interpretation of the imputation of life through Christ is determined by one's interpretation of the imputation of sin. If a person is condemned merely because of his personal sins, as Adam was for his, then a person is saved because of their personal righteousness, not by Christ's. But if we are dependent upon the one offence in Adam for our sin, then we must be dependent upon the righteousness of Christ for our salvation.

These two things go hand in hand. To minimize the one means also the minimizing of the other. Therefore, the stronger the doctrine of sin is made the greater becomes the doctrine of grace through Christ,—“Where sin increased, grace superabounded.”

It is in the inner chamber, in secret with the Father, that sin can be conquered, the holiness of Christ can be imparted, and the Spirit of holiness take possession of our lives.—Andrew Murray.

We thank Thee for this place in which we dwell; for the love that unites us; for the peace accorded us this day; for the hope with which we expect the morrow; for the health, the work, the food, and the bright skies that make our lives delightful; for our friends in all parts of the earth, and our friendly helpers in this foreign isle. Give us courage and gaiety and the quiet mind. Spare to us our friends, soften to us our enemies. Bless us, if it may be, in all our innocent endeavors. If it may not, give us the strength to encounter that which is to come, that we be brave in peril, constant in tribulation, temperate in wrath, and in all changes of fortune and down to the gates of death, loyal and loving one to another.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

CHURCH ARCHITECTURE

The Presbyterian says: "We have noticed discussions of church architecture in several religious and other papers. Of late there has been a strong tendency in the wealthier churches to change from platform and pulpit desk in front to a chancel effect. Going into many newer churches, one will scarcely know whether it is Presbyterian, Romish, Episcopal, Congregational, or what not. The older evangelical churches were designed for preaching, but the later ones are more for ritualistic effect. The new ones are very beautiful and appeal to many. The real question is, how much does architecture affect the spiritual and which form will do the most to cultivate the proper spiritual results? We know what we think."

And we think the same thing, because we believe in keeping the preaching pulpit of Protestantism.

STUDENT VOLUNTEERS AT BUFFALO SHIFT TOWARD THE RIGHT

A reporter to the Christian Century says in regard to the Student Volunteer Convention recently held at Buffalo:

This year's convention represents a further shifting towards the right, speaking figuratively. The first day's program was calculated to "shatter complacency" as one of the leaders expressed it. Aside from the morning given to the discussion of disarmament, the remainder of the platform addresses were increasingly conventional, with John R. Mott offering as "forward-looking" a program as anyone. One missionary even confessed that one of his ambitions was to prepare men to die! There were not a few indications that the movement had got back into the general region from which it departed in 1920!

For this return to normalcy substantial reasons can be advanced. The radicalism of most American college students exists largely in the imagination of their admirers. As one of the speakers put it, our youth are "serious about indifferent matters, and indifferent about serious matters." The strongest appeal of the Student Volunteer movement is to the small college rather than the great university, and to young people of orthodox traditions.

COLLEGE GAINS

Well, suppose we talk about more pleasant matters.

Surveying 444 approved colleges and universities, the dean of Swarthmore College reports that there are, in this year of lean finances, 3,721 more students enrolled than last year and twelve per cent more than in the heyday of prosperity five years ago. It's pointed out, however, that when anybody's kept out of college it's generally the daughter, not the son—for woman's enrollment, this year, decreased 2,044. Gains are largest in eastern colleges. In size, the University of California, including the Berkeley and Los Angeles branches, outranks all others with 18,342 enrolled, with Columbia second, at 15,100, and Minnesota third with 12,539.

In Germany there has been an increase of nearly 71 per cent in the number of students attending college in the past eighteen years. In 1918 there were 77,000 college students in Germany, while today there are 132,000.—Christian Herald.

THE MUKDEN INCIDENT

The ugly incident which occurred at Mukden, the assault upon Consul C. B. Chamberlain by three Japanese soldiers, affords but a peep into a scene where the war spirit reigns. Those individual soldiers had imbibed the arrogance that evidently has quite generally prevailed in the Japanese army in Manchuria, and revealed that their warfare is a matter of prejudice and hatred rather than a matter of principle. The ignorant soldiers could not read the Consul's credentials and when he spoke to them in the Chinese language their brutal prejudice simply overflowed. Such things tend to disillusion the minds of those who believe in the "high idealism of warfare" or the "sacred sense of duty" supposed to prevail in the profession of the warrior. Japan is in a peculiarly unfortunate position in the fact that her army is an almost independent arm of the government. It largely orders its own course and makes warfare with but little restraint or direction from the recognized governmental authorities. In a situation of that sort the government may have much apologizing to do, but its apologies are largely for a department for which it has so little responsibility. It is indeed an unfortunate condition, a condition which makes it especially difficult for Japan to take very definite steps toward disarmament or in cooperation with other governments in movements looking toward world peace. Her military department has her by the throat, something that is by no means a remote possibility with some other nations. We rejoice that our Government, in this instance, is magnanimous enough to accept Japan's feeble apology, and that we have risen above that plane of civilization where an incident of this kind is made a pretext for war.—Religious Telescope.

NOTABLE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE

Eve, the woman of curiosity (Gen. 3:6); Hagar, the discarded wife (Gen. 21:14-19); Miriam, the ambitious woman (Num. 12:1, 2); Deborah, the patriotic woman (Judges 4:4); Ruth, the woman of constancy (Ruth 1:16); Hannah, the ideal mother (I Sam. 1:20; 2:19); Abigail, the capable woman (I Sam. 25:3). The Shunammite, the hospitable woman (II Kings 4:8-10); Esther, the self-sacrificing woman (Esther 4:16); The Syrophenician, the woman of faith (Matt. 15:28); Mary Magdalene, the transformed woman (Mark 16:1, 9); Elisabeth, the humble woman (Luke 1:43); Mary, the woman chosen of God (Luke 1:30-38); Mary of Bethany, the woman immortalized by Christ (Matt. 26:13; Luke 10:42); Martha, the worried housekeeper (Luke 10:40); The woman evangelist (John 4:29); Dorcas, the benevolent seamstress (Acts 9:36); Lydia, the business woman (Acts 16:14, 15).—Gospel Herald.

WHAT TURNS FOLKS "RED"

A rich family in Dayton had a "coming out" party during the holiday season for a daughter who had not yet "come out" of her teens. But she was making her debut into "society." The party was for the exclusive set—which meant those who had money, for no others could afford to go. An orchestra from New York City was secured for the occasion. The magnificent home—or house—was magnificently decorated. Bright lights shone upon scantily and daintily clad dancers, and the dancing continued until four o'clock in the morning—Sunday morning—when the guests "enjoyed" a breakfast which of course was in keeping with the occasion. Uniformed servants kow-towed to the attendants, responding to the slightest wish, obedient to every command, ignoring every discourtesy. They were paid for all that. It was an elegant, magnificent, high-caste affair, representing an expenditure of many thousand dollars. It is to be hoped that those who paid the bills got their money's worth. Our heart goes out in sympathy to the daughter; our pity, mingled with contempt, to the parents. And it is hard to refrain from a secret sympathy with the resentment of multitudes under the very shadow of this place of luxury and revelry who are unable, especially during these days of tragedy, to provide the common necessities for themselves and their dependent loved ones. Dayton failed to reach the goal set for the Community Chest. We must punish "reds" and anarchists and others whose spirits rise up in some form of unlawful demonstration under such provocation. But we must stand idly by even when the most prolific incentive to anarchy takes place right under our eyes. Old Nero who fiddled while Rome burned had nothing on some modern fiddlers.—The Religious Telescope.

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

Fifth vision—The Seven vials

The last three trumpet judgments are called woes, perhaps because they are more terrible and supernatural than others. The seventh trumpet opens into the seven vials.

These, however, are preceded by an introductory review of the entire age of grace, showing the justice of these judgments, which are acclaimed in heaven.

First, the announcement is repeated that with these judgments (in their final fulfillment) the age will end (10:7; 11:15-18). Then appear in order seven personages whose activities cover the church age. (1) The woman (12:1). As the imagery of the book is Jewish the woman appears to be Israel (certainly not the virgin Mary, as Romanists are taught. See vs. 17). However, Revelation was written for and delivered to the church, not to Israel. The woman appears "in heaven" but flees "to the wilderness" therefore "in heaven" means the sphere of prophetic vision, or communion with God as in Eph. 2:6; Phil. 3:20. If the woman represents the church then (2) the child is the group of overcomers, martyred by the scarlet woman Jezebel (Rev. 2:26, 27). (3) Satan wars against the true church but (4) Michael and his angels cast him out. He may not prevail in the body of Christ. "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world (1 John 4:4). Still allowed in the world, he persecutes (5) the remnant of the woman's seed, or believers not martyrs, incarnating himself in (6) the beast out of the sea (imperial Rome revived) and in (7) the beast out of the earth (ecclesiastic Rome).

Before pouring out the vials the group of overcomers is seen in heaven (ch. 14), final warnings are given by messengers represented by three angels while, three deceiving spirits gather the nations for Armageddon (16:13-16). Then the wheat and tares, which are to grow together until the time of harvest, are separated. The son of man thrushes in his sickle twice and reaps. The first harvest seems to be the gathering of the saved and the second the Armageddon of the wicked.

The world has rejected Christ and his Gospel, but must now be judged by his words (John 12:48). The group of overcomers are seen in heaven singing their songs of victory (chap. 15), but during Armageddon the day of grace is closed for the world (vs. 8). The golden vials of wrath are now to be poured out.

As the seventy years of captivity were caused by four hundred and ninety years of sabbath breaking (2 Chron. 36:21) so the judgments of the seals and trumpets and vials are caused by the preceding years of sin, and have their precursory fulfillment.

Course of the age

1. The first vial causes a grievous sore on the worshippers of the beast.

2. The second turns the sea to blood.

3. The third turns the rivers and fountains to blood.

4. The fourth causes the sun to scorch the world.

I take it that this is the fulfillment of the generic prophecy of 2 Thess. 2:10-12. Whenever man rejects the truth they prepare themselves to believe a lie. In this case the article is definite (vs. 12 Gr.). Th world rejected the truth of Christ's messiahship and now is abandoned to the lie of the antichrist, whose religion is pantheism (Dan. 11:38), putting a man in place of God (2 Thess. 2:4).

Under the seals a fourth of the world had been evangelized and a fourth is affected by the judgments, under the trumpets, a third; and now under the vials all the world has had a chance, and when believers are gathered out all the rest are affected.

The withering effects of unbelief, rejecting the truth of the Reformation, began to be manifested in the atheistic French revolution and have continued to undermine both church and state with pantheistic theology and materialistic science until today the world as a whole is in the chaos of unbelief. The grievous sores of immorality follow. The sea of pagan nations and the fountains of teaching are stagnated and the scorching tyranny of dictators is preparing for the terrible superman soon to be manifested.

The end time

5. The fifth vial is poured on the seat of the beast and his empire becomes darkness.

6. The sixth dries up the river Euphrates to prepare the way of the kings of the east.

Thus Rome the ruler of the west, and Mohammedism the scourge of the east, having run their course, meet at last with the forces of the orient, together with the "king of the north" and the "king of the south" (Dan. 11:40). The Russian God and the British lions (Ezek. 38) shall meet together in battle. The stage is already set and the preparations almost complete.

7. The seventh vial brings us again to this great earthquake and opens out into the seven "dooms" of Rev. 17-20.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

(Discussion No. 1)

St. John 19:30. "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost."

Moffatt reads, "And when Jesus took the vinegar, he said, 'It is finished,' bowed his head and gave up his spirit."

"It is finished." The scholars tell us that this is but one word in the Greek, and it has been called "the greatest single word ever uttered." In this dying expression of our Lord, what did he mean? What was finished?

I used to believe it was the gospel that was finished. I had heard others say so. But it was not the gospel, for as yet there was no resurrection, and there was no going away in the ascension. It is not presuming to say, there could be no gospel without the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus. I Cor. 15:3, 4. Besides, if the gospel were "finished" at that point in our Lord's life, why the 21 Epistles? Why the last book of the Bible? Jesus had told his followers that there was more to follow; that his revelation was not complete. "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth:" (John 16:12, 13). How could words convey more plainly the fact just stated, and the provision made for carrying it out? He seems to say, "The Spirit of truth will finish what I have been unable to set forth." And this method of additional revelation is just what his apostles claimed. This is concisely set forth in 1 Pet. 1:12,—“Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.” In other words, "But holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. 1:21). And let us never forget that, men unaided might forget in giving us the Epistles, but the Holy Ghost never forgets, for he is of God. In the light of these truths, to try to bolster up the trustworthiness of the facts set forth by Luke, or John, on the grounds that they must have been present with the Lord and heard him teach certain things, else they would not have known about such particular teaching, is about the most absurd position one could take. I take it that the Holy Ghost got into the inspired Record just what he wished put into it. If he did not, what is the worth of the above quotations? and why mention "inspiration?"

Well, then what was finished? Jesus had something in mind when he uttered this sixth word from the cross on which he was expiring. Some one has said, "It is first, the Worker's Cry of Achievement; and, secondly, the Sufferer's Cry of Relief." To those more or less familiar with the scene, our hearts seem to be relieved with the feeling that HIS SUFFERINGS WERE FINISHED.

From the beginning of his ministry the shadow of the cross was ever over him. He knew he was to hang on that cross as an exhibition of the greatest injustice human beings ever looked upon. He was to be disgraced by hanging there, tortured unto a slow death as a common felon, knowing HE WAS THE SON OF GOD! He had heard John announce, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." He knew this to be true; but "in the likeness of sinful men," as a man he recoiled from death—especially a criminal's death. He was more full of life than any other man; hence, his delicate nature, how tense the situation became as his last days drew on. In the eyes of kindred and men the shame and disgrace was haunting him. As the last hour drew on, it was a relief when he could say, "It is finished."

Do you want to think more of that dreadful hour? Of that hour in Gethsemane when the agony was so great that drops of blood stood for common perspiration? The mockery and scourging? The crown of thorns with their sharp points lacerating the fairest brow his tormentors ever looked upon? The swaying body as he tries to bear the cross up yonder hill? Then there are the rough, hand-made nails sent tearing through his hands and feet; six hours of hanging in the scorching heat of the sun; bones drawn out of their sockets—this scene of all ages, at last over, all culminating in the cry of relief, "It is finished"! His suffering was finished.

Outline of Suggestions for the Layman's Organization of the Berlin Brethren Church

OBJECTIVES

Local objectives:

1. That we secure at least twenty-five (25) members for our organization this year.
2. That fifty percent. (50%) of the members read the books of John, Acts, Romans, Ephesians, Hebrews and James during the year, preferably in the order suggested.
3. That we have twelve regular meetings during the year.
4. That tithing be practiced by fifty percent (50%) of the members for at least one week during the year.
5. That we assist the pastor in two special Sunday night services during the year.
6. That some definite report be given by each commission at each regular meeting.
7. That every member have a definite task either as an officer or on one of the commissions.
8. That at least ninety percent (90%) of the members have the Brethren Evangelist in their homes, and that we seek to get seventy-five percent (75%) of the homes of the church to receive the Brethren Evangelist during the year.
9. That twenty-five percent (25%) of the members read the four reading circle books on Devotions, Missions, Evangelism, and Stewardship.
10. That some definite evangelistic project be undertaken under the direction of the pastor and the Evangelistic commission.

District Objectives:

1. That we endeavor to establish a Layman's Organization in at least one other Brethren church in our District this year.
2. That we lead in asking for a time and place for a Layman's program during our next District Conference.

National Objectives:

1. That definite contact be made with each of the National Boards of the Brethren church and some type of cooperation attempted with each.
2. That we take the special offering requested by the National Layman's Organization each year.
3. That we encourage the promotion of the National Layman's Organization in every way possible.

COMMISSIONS

Let the committees be called commissions instead of Committees and by this means identify more closely our organization and activities with the idea of accomplishing our part in the great COMMISSION.

1. Executive Commission:

To be composed of the elected officers of the Layman's Organization.

To have general supervision of the organization.

To appoint all other commissions.

The president to preside at all meetings of the organization.

2. Devotional Commission:

To take care of devotions at all meetings, not to exceed ten minutes.

To encourage the regular prayer meeting of the church.

To note and report on answered prayer.

To make requests for special prayer.

To choose the devotional book for the reading circle.

To check up on Bible books read.

To interest all in the regular worship services of the church.

To prepare two programs each year in cooperation with the Executive Commission.

3. Evangelistic Commission:

Seek to culture personal evangelism at all times.

Provide program for the study of evangelism.

Cooperate with the church, Sunday school classes, C. E. and other interests in the church.

Choose book on Evangelism for reading circle.

Write Prof. M. A. Stuckey, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio, asking what this Layman's organization can do to foster Evangelism through the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren church, and otherwise be of service to the Association.

Provide two programs each year in cooperation with the Executive Commission.

4. Stewardship Commission:

Provide program for the study of stewardship.

Present tithing literature and tracts.

Make worthy appeals reminding the men of the regular church offerings.

Write Dr. J. Allen Miller, Ashland, Ohio, concerning the relationship of our Layman's organization in cooperation with the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana.

Write Rev. F. C. Vanator, Peru, Indiana, concerning the relationship of our Layman's organization in cooperation with the Superannuated Ministers' Fund.

Write Dr. Jacobs, President of Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio, concerning the relationship of this organization in cooperation with the college.

Provide two programs each year in cooperation with the Executive Commission.

Choose book on Stewardship for reading circle.

5. Missionary Commission:

Provide programs for study of missions.

Write Dr. L. S. Bauman, 1925 E. 5th St., Long Beach, California, concerning the relationship of the Layman's organization in cooperation with the Foreign Missionary Society.

Write Rev. R. Paul Miller, Berne, Indiana, concerning the relationship of the Layman's organization in cooperation with the Home Missionary Board.

Make it a point to visit some Home Mission church.

Call attention to striking missionary articles in our publications.

Choose book on missions for reading circle.

Secure and distribute missionary tracts.

Provide two programs each year in cooperation with the Executive Commission.

Write some of our missionaries and read their replies.

6. Publication Commission:

Secure subscriptions to the Brethren Evangelist in cooperation with the regular church solicitor.

Take advantage of the Loyalty campaign.

Call attention to the value of our own church paper.

Have charge of circulating books on Devotions, Evangelism, Stewardship, and Missions.

Write Dr. R. R. Teeter, Business Manager of the Brethren Publishing Company, Ashland, Ohio, concerning the relationship of the Layman's organization in cooperation with the Publication Board.

7. Fellowship Commission:

Seek to culture the friendly spirit at all times.

Welcome newcomers.

See that all men are remembered in times of trouble, illness and bereavement.

Seek new members to this organization.

To provide the sociability fellowship parts for all programs.

(Editor's Note: Just recently the above outline was received from Brother Leatherman. It has many interesting things in it which will commend themselves to others. For that reason it is being printed on this page.—M. A. S.)

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON at the Family Altar With Thoburn C. Lyon

JESUS THE GOOD SHEPHERD

Lesson Text: John 10:1-16; Golden Text: Ps. 23:1

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Parable of the Lost Sheep. Luke 15:1-7

The story of the lost sheep has inspired not only artists, but all men everywhere. After all, we all like sheep have gone astray, and if we are in his fold today it is only because Jesus has sought us out and brought us back. As we praise him for the great love that will not allow him to forget even one sheep out of a hundred, let us remember that we are also his under-shepherds, and that there are undoubtedly many sheep that are sick or straying that he would have us search out and bring back to his fold.

TUESDAY

The Promised Shepherd. Isa. 40:9-11

Isaiah brought his people good tidings of the Shepherd who should come and tenderly care for his sheep. Verse 11 is one of the most beautiful in the whole Bible, expressing something of the loving care with which the good Shepherd watches over those who need it most. Today in many places throughout the world God's sheep have been scattered by false shepherds, and it is blessed to know that ere long the true shepherd will return and rule over his flock. Let us not only pray, but work for his coming!

WEDNESDAY

The Parable of the Shepherd. John 10:1-6

The principal point of this passage is simply to emphasize the fact that there are false shepherds as well as true ones. The false try to gain access to the fold by trickery, where they may plunder and feed upon the sheep, and Jesus does not hesitate to brand them thieves. It will be well to meditate as to what it is such false shepherds steal from the sheep, from the real shepherd, and from themselves. What comfort in the thought that the true shepherd goeth before! He has gone before us into suffering and death; he has also gone before us into the resurrection and the glory of his Father. We need not hesitate to follow where he has gone before.

THURSDAY

Jesus the Good Shepherd. John 10:7-18

In the preceding passage Jesus contrasted the good shepherd with the false; here he points to himself as the true shepherd. In John 13 we especially like to read v. 3: fully conscious of his mission, that he was come from God and went to God, he yet humbled himself, and became obedient even unto the death of the cross. Exactly similar is v. 15 of today's passage: fully conscious of his intimate fellowship with the Father, he yet gladly lay down his life for the sheep. And how we need to consider v. 16: other sheep, not of this fold, I must bring, one fold, one shepherd. Let us ask God to help us think these things through aright.

FRIDAY

Jesus and His Sheep. John 10:22-30

What wonderful blessings he brings to his sheep: not only daily care, but eternal life, so that we need never perish. And his power is so great that no one or no thing can pluck us unwillingly out of his hand. Compare Rom. 8:35-39. Those who say that Jesus never claimed to be the Son of God, are pointed to v. 30, and to the Jews' evident understanding of his claim, in v. 33. What man could say, "I and my Father are one?" Yet we may be one with him, even as he is one with the Father. What a privilege!

SATURDAY

The Heavenly Fold. Rev. 7:9-17

What blessed comfort in this familiar passage also! Here we see the "other sheep" all gathered together at last into "one fold," with "one Shepherd" over all. How we need the spirit of John, as evidenced in v. 14, when standing before the things of God: let us ask HIM to make them plain to us! And for our prayer this morning we can scarcely do better than read again v. 12.

SUNDAY

The Shepherd Psalm. Ps. 23

It seems that the lesson committee has picked out most of our favorite passages for this week's reading—or perhaps it is just that so many beautiful passages center around the thought of Jesus, our good Shepherd. We will not comment upon this wonderful Psalm, other than to say that we never fail to find some new and precious thought, each time we read it. If you have not tried it before, repeat the phrase, "The Lord is my shepherd," five times, each time placing the emphasis on a different word of the phrase, and see what a wealth of different meanings you find!

him doing nothing, when a neighbor came along. "Why don't you go to work?" asked the neighbor. "I am waiting till I begin to perspire. If I could only perspire, I would go to work," replied the farmer. "Why," said the other, "you old idiot, go out into the sun and swing that scythe for a half hour and you will perspire all you want to." The parable interprets itself. The Christian who is waiting for feeling should go to work for the Master in earnest, and the feeling would come fast enough. Faith before service, but feeling after service; that is the order. Omit the faith, and everything is lost. But it is no great matter if you omit the feeling. The first is the hot fire in the engine that makes the train go. The other may be the hot box on the axle that sometimes makes the train stop.

David, the Tamil evangelist, was speaking at Roundtop, East Northfield, about the relation between faith and feeling. Just then the supper bell rang. "Ah, there it is now," he said. "You hear the bell, and you start for the boarding house. That is faith. When you get there you find the supper. That is fact. After supper is ended, you experience a sense of satisfaction. That is feeling."

Activities of the Jr. C. E. of Harrah, Washington, Brethren Church

The Junior Christian Endeavor society of the Harrah Brethren church, Harrah, Washington, was organized with 25 members in February, 1929.

The first Sunday of each month was consecration Sunday; Second Sunday Efficiency Sunday; Third Sunday, memory work review; Fourth—Missionary. At Consecration meeting each one gave a Bible verse when their names were called. Those who wished to make known their desire to accept Christ did so. Efficiency Sunday, Junior C. E. efficiency was studied. Memory work Sunday was devoted to review of the memory verses; Missionary Sunday to the study of the Brethren Missionary workers and their fields of labor. The offering was saved for missionary funds. Offerings on other Sundays were put in the Junior C. E. treasury for supplies or whatever was needed.

The committees were Lookout Prayer Meeting, Social, Missionary, Sunshine and Music. The devotional service was conducted during the opening exercises with songs, Scripture reading and short prayers by Juniors. Then the older Juniors assembled into a different room for their meeting while the younger ones remained to continue their meeting.

Easter, Mother's Day, Children's Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas were observed on their respective Sundays in some special way. Parents were invited to visit the Jr. C. E. meetings. Children's Day was a week late so as to give the first Sunday the new pastor, Rev. F. V. Kinzie, and the family a rest day. In the evening the Jr. C. E. put on the service "An Evening with the Juniors," during the church hour. An August Christmas tree was observed for Krypton, Kentucky at the home of the Superintendent. The girls and boys decorated a small shade tree in the yard and the gifts were hung thereon. After the business meeting the boys and girls made picture books of

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

4. "Faith vs. Feeling"

Faith is the inspiration for Christian work. Feeling is the perspiration from Christian work. The difference ought to be self-evident; but some persons fail to discern it. We pray for enlarged spiritual experience and opportunity of service, and then we hold back because we lack the proper degree of feeling.

It is astonishing how much importance the average disciple attaches to this matter of feeling. For want of feeling multitudes more inside the fold hesitate to undertake all manner of duty and service. One will not pray because "he does not feel in a prayerful mood." Another will not accept the Baptism of the Spirit because he has experienced no wonderful ecstasy of feeling like that of Pentecost. And others refrain from deeds of kindness to the needy because they do not feel that deep sense of Christly love for such persons which they think they ought to feel.

Jesus never said anything about feeling as a condition of acceptance or of highest blessing. Everywhere it is faith, and only faith! "According to your faith be it unto you," is the word. And many of those who fulfilled this condition evinced very little feeling till after the blessing came. There was Peter. He had been fishing through the night in vain. The Master comes and bids him to push out and let down the net. What was Peter's reply? We have toiled all night and taken nothing. I do not feel like trying again; for there are no fish there; nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." There was a direct conflict between faith and feeling; and faith triumphed. Peter had feeling enough when he saw that bursting net.

And that is the cure for lack of feeling. Do the Master's bidding, even though it seems to contradict the plainest teachings of your own common sense. Push out into the deep and let down your net, even though you are morally certain there is not a fish in all those waters. The service that is begun in cold and even dogged faith often ends in warmest rapture.

Sam Jones used to tell of an old farmer who sat one day in the comfortable shade of a great oak tree with his scythe beside pictures from Christian calendars, Sunday school papers with Bible verses, poems and stories. When everything was ready for the box and all packed to be sent with the clothes bag from the Missionary society, ice cream and cake were then served.

Several wrote letters to Dr. Gribble who was then in Africa. $4.50 was sent as a White Gift Offering for foreign missions at Christmas time.

Are We In the Same Track

Rio Cuarto, Argentine,
January 7th, 1932.

The Baptist Mission, which has been one of the strongest and most consecrated down here, is passing through a very critical period, financially speaking. The national workers in the Argentine Republic are to receive, beginning the year 1932, 56% less salary than before. Can the reader imagine what the poor pastor will do who only receives 39 dollars a month? He will have to adjust himself to less than half of that. Some of the workers have already been dismissed on account of lack of funds. Several halls have been closed and I have been told by some missionaries that the Seminary will probably not be opened next year. Dear readers, the world is stubborn and so is the Laodicean church of this period, but they will both have to pay for it. Nevertheless the Christians need not be afraid in these hard times. The Lord, in his intercessory prayer, promised to keep his own. The end of the year 1931 brings us to 1932 confused and with little hope of freeing ourselves from the chaos of the present hour. The closing of some banks and houses of commerce should not frighten us, for worse things are to come. The spark of the next great war does not seem to be put out. Japan put the League of Nations aside with a frivolous "yes" and turned to the United States, with whom she does not sympathize much to tell her to not bother because she is only doing in China what the Americans do in Nicaragua. In this China-Japan affair the League of Nations has shown how little she CAN do in cases of war. The exploited money has gone to a handful of men, the harvests, although plentiful have no price, and unemployment is taking on alarming proportions. In view of this our mission should be prepared for a situation similar to the one mentioned above. As our church is not so large, perhaps it will be able better to withstand what all denominations are up against. The situation will not change for the better until our Lord comes, and so, brethren, we should be willing to sacrifice to the utmost in order to go ahead with the Lord's work. My prayer is for more zeal in the cause of Christ. The other things will then work out all right.

E. ROMANENGHI.

A Volunteer for Portuguese East Africa

"Not Charity, but a Chance"

A good man offers himself for one of the Board's most alluring yet discouraging fields. He is no recruit, but a missionary of eight years' standing. He feels the tug of Portuguese East Africa because the mantle of Dr. Fred Bridgman has fallen upon him. After the latter died, our volunteer went to Johannesburg and there fell among the Inhambane boys converted at the mines. The rest was almost a foregone conclusion: his interest was captured; his heart too. He found that he had to follow his friends back to their homes and stand by them in their effort to build up Christian communities in the midst of almost unbelievable heathenism.

The need undoubtedly has gripped him. Visiting the field just before coming home on furlough, he saw with his own eyes the gross heathenism, the pitiful ignorance, the dire poverty of Portuguese East Africa. "I saw nothing," he tells us, "in Natal or Zululand to compare with practices which are openly to be seen daily among the natives of Inhambane. Witch doctors ply their activities right by the side of the road. I have seen men and women trembling with fear in the hands of one of these witch doctors as a bird trembles when fascinated by a snake. Degrading customs are so powerful that our native Christian friends feel that they must establish separate villages if their lives are going to conform to the principles of the gospel."

"Then, too, there is the pitiful ignorance of the people of Portuguese East Africa. With the exception of the few trained leaders, like Likumbi and Yingwani, the most educated man among those we are responsible for is but a graduate of a Johannesburg compound night school. Unless we can do something for them, helping them train teachers, for example, they will continue ignorant; for they cannot raise themselves by their own boot straps. They are too poor to provide their own means of education. The average monthly wage of a man is only a dollar, if he gets it. The women have practically no means of earning money for themselves."

As our volunteer talked of the economic, intellectual, social and religious poverty of those hundreds of thousands of people in Portuguese East Africa, we could see why he felt that he must give them whatever assistance lay in his power. It was the appeal of weakness to strength, of helplessness to competence, of poverty to wealth, of ignorance to enlightenment; in short, the appeal of the man left for dead on the Jericho road to the Good Samaritan. His response was not an emotional reaction to a high-power platform address, but a settled determination based upon first-hand observation and experience.

Our friend is assured that in Portuguese East Africa his life by no means will be wasted. He has seen enough of the few native Christians there to believe that they are real leaven, and that given time—and support—they will introduce into their country a much better state of affairs. He likes the marvelous use that they make of the resources that they happen to have. He admires particularly their aggressive, belligerent spirit against evil.

But our friend does not refer alone to men like Mazibe or Likumbi and Yingwani, the acknowledged spiritual leaders of the people, but to men like Elija and to many of the rank and file who have brought back their Christian zeal from Johannesburg and are serving as soldiers of the Living God under rather untoward conditions.

"But you don't need to doubt the welcome that missionaries will receive from the natives of Portuguese East Africa," he added. "Just remember the joy of the Christians at Inhambane when the Tuckers arrived. It was one long series of thanksgiving services. After nine years of prayer to God and to the American Board for missionary supervision, they found their petitions answered, at least in part. Sometimes the joy took the form of applause. Sometimes they leaped into the air with delight. At other times they showed their gratitude in gifts of fowl, produce, goats and wild antelope. The seventy-five Christian villages that had sprung up all over the Inhambane district, the fruit of the evangelistic work at Johannesburg, could now have personal touch with the Christians of America, could have a powerful representative at court, as well as a chance to educate their children and to lay deep, abiding foundations for the future. If any people ever wanted missionaries, they are to be found in Portuguese East Africa, and I desire to be one of those missionaries. This is not charity, but a chance."—Excerpts from Missionary Herald for 1929.

THE BAPUNU MIND

Dr. Albert Schweitzer writing from his now famed hospital in Lambarene, West Equatorial Africa, has some interesting thing to say about the primitive mind. One evening he appealed to a native whose brother was receiving treatment at the hospital to give him a hand at the stretcher which was carrying in a new patient. At first the man addressed pretended not to hear. The doctor spoke a second time, this time very sharply. The native shook his head.

"No, the man on the stretcher is of the Bakele tribe; I am a Bapunu."

This Bapunu mind may be more universal among primitive people but it is also found among nations of culture. It is the philosophy of me and mine, my people but not your people, my lodge, my church, my nation. It is the mind who actuates those who refuse to lend aid in the days of adversity or food in the time of famine. It is the self defense line of the selfish and sectional minded.

Happily the world is growing past it. There are fewer Bapunu minds in the world today than in the past. Charity has expanded its boundaries. But we are still a long way from that ideal state which was prophesied by the apostle when "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one."—Church Management.

Run away from work, and you will find that work can run, too.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA

No doubt it is longer than we would like to admit since a report of the work from this place has found its way to the department of church news. It is a task that can be put off till tomorrow, as so many cannot be. We read the church reports with interest and rejoice in every victory. We also feel sympathetic for every church and pastor in the solution of the problems that are continually presenting themselves. We have cause for encouragement here. The last months have been the best for some time. The last year gave us a net gain of more than 20% in attendance over the previous year, and with a number of new workers, working together in fine cooperation we anticipate a greater gain for this year. Twenty-two new members have been received since September and with this number nine new families have been given a vital interest in the church, and some very substantial workers. The different groups and auxiliaries of the church are carrying on in quite a commendable way. Our Christian Endeavor is worthy of special mention, accepting definite responsibility in sponsoring various meetings and carrying them through in a very creditable way. The W. M. S. is becoming quite active and no doubt you shall hear some good news from their work. An Alexander Mack Brotherhood has been organized which has been doing some splendid personal and visitation work. We are expecting this group to increase in its scope of labor and be a great asset to the pastor in carrying on the work of the church. The special days and interests of our church are observed. Though this church had given quite generously in her regular offering last year for the superannuated ministers, I think more generously than any other church, yet on Layman's Day she increased her gift quite substantially. The Thanksgiving season was observed, an early morning praise service was held at the church, followed by a fellowship breakfast. Also at this early hour we baptized a mother whose husband had been shot down by a bandit, with apparently little chance of recovery; he recovered. The wife said she had so much to be thankful for, she wanted to acknowledge her Lord and be baptized and come into the church. The husband was a member of this church. The Home Mission offering was larger than last year, the Christian Endeavor gave $25. We held a two weeks' meeting in November, which brought a blessing to the church. The Christmas season gave us two splendid programs, and a White Gift offering. I think, a little less than last year.

The time for election of officers, receiving reports, calling a pastor, etc., was the first of the year. This meeting was a very pleasant affair. Even the financial report was very commendable. The pastor was called for another year and we only hope our service may in some way measure up to the words of commendation spoken. Watch Night service was held and the beginning of the year found quite a group of our people on their knees at the altar. May the Lord give us wisdom, love and strength to carry on his great work. Anniversary night was celebrated on the evening of the 22nd of January, and though quite a bad night, we had a large crowd, a splendid program and a happy time together.

Forty-two years of service have seen many things accomplished and probably many things left undone. The heroic souls who undertake the organizing of a church and purchasing property and building are the salt of the earth. Elder D. K. Bole was the leading spirit in the organization, his wife and son are faithful members. Only two of the first organization live in Pittsburgh. Misses Bella and Annetta Reynolds, very faithful members indeed, another, Mrs. D. J. Bole, lives in Johnstown. Three are living out of twelve constituting the first organization. Several charter members are with us, for a charter was not secured for several months. I. C. Wilcox is a charter member and moderator, H. W. Bole, another charter member, was only 10 years of age at the time, but has been living away most of these years. He has lately come back to Pittsburgh and has placed his letter in the church.

Of all the gains and losses that have come to this church in the past years, with due appreciation for the labors of those who have made possible the work, we believe the earnest wish of every one is that this 43rd year shall be the greatest in blessing of all her history. One of the hard tasks of the city pastor is to find the Brethren people in the city soon after they locate here, and interest them in the church. If we had all the Brethren people in Pittsburgh in our church, we would have one of the outstanding churches of the city. Those who read this may have friends or relatives in the city, who are Brethren in faith and would appreciate our interest in them. Just send their name and address to 5000 Dearborn Street and we shall be so glad to find them. Pastors should not neglect this important item which is so vital to conserving our strength as a church. We have firmly resolved that if people do not come to the Brethren church when they come to Pittsburgh, it shall be their fault and not ours. They who believe in the whole Gospel message of the Brethren church dare not violate their conviction of faith for convenience or congenial environment or anything. Visiting Brethren are always welcome. Take an 88 street car from downtown or East Liberty. May the Lord bless every pastor and church.

CLAUD STUDEBAKER.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

Dear Readers:

Just a word to let you know that by the grace of the Lord and the help of the Mission Board we are still struggling along and happy in our work. We want to take this opportunity to personally thank each one in the brotherhood for their gifts to the Home Mission Board, without whose help we believe we would lose our church here and with it the Brethren cause in Roanoke.

We are thankful that the Editor of our interesting Church paper is restored to health and his place in the Church. We are also thankful that a small but disastrous fire, a few weeks ago, did not destroy our pastor's car. The garage where Brother Koontz had kept his car most of the winter was burned one night about two weeks ago, destroying the two cars in it, but a kind Providence caused Mr. Koontz to have left his car in the parsonage driveway that night, instead of putting it in the garage, as usual. We now have a garage under roof but not quite completed.

The interest at all our services is exceptionally good and the attendance seems to be gradually increasing. During the last three months of the summer our average Sunday school attendance was 81. The past three months it averaged 97, and during the five Sundays in January the average was 105. So you see we are headed in the right direction. The church attendance has increased to a larger degree. There has not been a service in the past three months in which we haven't had from five to thirty visitors, and it has all come about through natural growth—there having been no "drives" or "stunts" to promote a temporary influx.

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor, so recently organized, has grown much faster than we had anticipated and its leaders are now seeking for other leaders so that a Junior Society can be organized.

Despite the depression, our Thanksgiving offering was nearly twice as much as last year. The Christmas season was celebrated with a pageant given by about 25 members of the church and Sunday school on Sunday preceding Christmas, and the following Wednesday night the children gave their program when the White Gift offering was taken.

We are now preparing for a pre-Easter revival to be led by the pastor and an outside Song Leader. We invite the brotherhood to pray for us that this will be the most blessed service of its kind ever held in our church. We have planned for a visitation week, cottage prayer meetings, committees, etc., and hope through the workings of the Holy Spirit to have the revival already started in our hearts by the time Brother Koontz definitely starts them in the pulpit.

We have begun to look forward with pleasure to the coming Southeastern District Conference. With the close of our Easter services, we will begin to definitely lay the Conference before the Lord in prayer, and hope by the aid of the visiting delegates to make this one of the best Conferences yet had in this District.

Brethren, pray for and with us that we may be so guided that we will be able to overcome all our difficulties and have victory in this portion of his Kingdom.

MRS. J. HAROLD PUTT, Secretary.

THE REVIVAL AT LISTIE PENNSYLVANIA

Upon closing at Mexico, Indiana, we came direct to Listie for our second meeting in this church. We held our first meeting here last year. We were glad to return for we had many pleasant memories of our last visit.

On the opening night we had a full house and it was full every night throughout the entire meeting and many were turned away night after night. We could not ask greater support and interest in a meeting anywhere. There was a wonderful spirit manifest among the people. Many of the folks attended from towns around, some driving thirty-five miles to the meetings. God surely has "much people in that section." From first to last it was evident that the unusual interest was the result of the especial working of God's Spirit in that community.

There were something over sixty-five confessions during the meetings not counting forty or fifty reconsecrations among the members of the church. A few of the above confessions were from other churches, but not many. The many victories wrought in these two weeks in the lives of some of the members of the church were rich and fine. The testimony service on the last night gave full account of the way Christ became more precious to his people's hearts.

Due to the fact that the pastor, H. W. Nowag, lives in Johnstown, thirty-two miles away, and that he works there, and that Mrs. Nowag was severely ill during most of the meetings, he was unable to be present very often during the meetings. We missed him very much as his genial spirit means much to any service.

There was a definite move on foot before the meetings closed to arrange for full time pastoral care. This certainly should be done for it is easily possible if the members of the church will but sincerely try. It will mean sacrifice for many, but this is what makes our Christian faith the more precious to us. We trust that word shall soon be received that this has been accomplished. There is a great field right at the door of this church waiting to be reaped. But it can not be done without a full time pastor to care for the work.

Our home was with Brother and Sister Elsie Mostaller while in Listie, and it was surely a blessed time. Here are two folks who know and love Jesus Christ and who know of no sacrifice they would not make for him. God give us more such.

The Listie people shall always have a warm spot in my heart and I shall never forget to pray for them that they may lay hold of the great opportunities that God has graciously laid at their door.

R. PAUL MILLER.

GOD'S SUNSHINE

*Never since the world began
Has the sun ever stopped shining;
His face very often we could not see,
And we grumbled at his inconsistency;
But the clouds were really to blame, not he,
For behind them he was shining.
And so behind life's darkest clouds
God's love is always shining;
We veil it at times with our faithless fears
And darken our sight with our foolish tears;
But in time the atmosphere always clears,
For his love is always shining.*

—Jno Oxenham, in Western Christian Advocate.

An aged minister, on being asked if he did not rejoice that his time was near when he would be called home, bluntly replied, "I have no wish about it. I have nothing to do with death. My business is to live as long as I can, and serve my Master as faithfully as I can, until he shall think proper to call me home."—Religious Anecdotes.

SOME BOOK REVIEWS

RULING LINES OF PROGRESSIVE REV- ELATION

By Rev. W. Graham Scroggie

This is not the newest book but it is very valuable for any person who desires to read after one of the sanest and at the same time, one of the most interesting Bible teachers who believes that the Scriptures are dispensational and are so to be interpreted.

The chapters treat The Advents, The Dispensations, Prophecy, The Types, The Kingdom and the Church, and a Conclusion. Each of these chapters treat simply, understandingly and quite fully, the subjects indicated.

The author is not guided by the dangerous principle that some Scripture is not for us; but claims that all Scripture has a spiritual value for us. If some is for us and some not, who is to tell?

At a time when this subject is of commanding interest to the Brethren, I could wish that every one interested could read this book which it seems to me, helps wonderfully to "rightly divide the word of truth." The book is an English publication but doubtless any book store like Revell or Blessing has it or would be glad to get it.

THE JESUS OF THE POETS

Who would have thought of a title like that? Well, Leonard R. Gribble, editor of "A Christian Treasury" did. There is a "Jesus of the Poets," and this editor has brought together in a little volume a most splendid collection of poems from Cynewolf, Chatterton, Cooper, Coleridge, Alice Carey, the two Brownings, Richard Baxter, Matthew Arnold, Lanier, Charles Wesley, Sir Walter Raleigh and many others.

Such titles as "The Heavenly Babe," "He Came All so Still," "A Passion Song," are as old as from the thirteenth century. Some are quite modern but all breathe a spirit of reverence for Jesus.

The index is quite full making the poem available without painstaking hunting for it. Any Primary or Young People's Worker or any other person with a love for poems about Jesus not usually quoted, will find this book of poems quite a valuable little book to have and use. It is published by Richard R. Smith, Inc., New York.

WHAT MADE LINCOLN GREAT

The one thing that was as a keystone to his greatness may be designated as simple goodness. How many people, think you, would be singing the praise of Lincoln today, had not goodness been a conspicuous element in his personality? In fact, the qualities that inspire the poet, the orator, or the biographer as they proclaim his virtues are the qualities of his heart rather than those of his head. His tenderness, his plain honesty, his unswerving fidelity to the right, as it was given him to know the right—these are the qualities of his character that touch the heart of humanity. No man who is lacking in such heart qualities can long be a hero to the American people, let his head qualities be what they may. When dominated by a passion to do what is morally right, one is not likely to make any serious mistake.

And the person who is thus earnest in following his convictions will find himself growing in moral and spiritual discernment. Was not that true of Lincoln? In his earlier life he did not class himself as a Christian, and he never identified himself with any church. To the writer, there seems a natural reason for this. The church that Lincoln came into closest contact with in the formative period of his life was far from representing what he must have considered true character ideals or the true spirit of service. The dominating church influence in the community where he grew up, in Spencer county, Indiana, was that of the Old School (Hardshell) Baptists. Certainly its practices and teaching could not appeal to a mind like his. In his later fight for human freedom he often was disappointed to find church leaders arrayed against him. He lived ahead of his time.

Still we find him a constant reader and student of the Bible. Its ideas and language saturated his thinking and his spoken and written utterances. With his sincerity, it is to be expected that he would have an increasing respect for and faith in the teachings of God's Word, for those who sincerely follow the light they have will ultimately come to him who is the "light of the world." Lincoln's life is a wonderful commentary upon that tenet of our faith. He trusted God in the trying ordeals through which he passed, and believed that out of the strife and bitterness of those dark days truth and right would rise triumphant. The problems he faced so gripped his thought and consumed his energy that he must have had little time to turn his attention to his own personal needs. But when he heard a statement of what constituted a personal Christian experience he bore testimony that such an experience had become to him a blessed reality. Thus Abraham Lincoln blazed the way for even the humblest life to realize the elements that constitute true and abiding greatness.—Religious Telescope, 2/12/27.

OUR LITTLE READERS

OUR AMERICAN KNIGHT

He was not born in a castle—our American knight; no, indeed, far from it. He was born in a little log cabin in the wilderness. He was not clothed in shining armor; nor did he ride about on a great horse. No, he was dressed in a homemade suit—the shirt was of homespun, while the coat, trousers and moccasins were of deer-skin—and on his head he wore no helmet, but a cap of raccoon skin, with the tail of the animal hanging down his back. He had no shield or spear or sword with which to defend himself, and he was born into a fighting life of hardship in those pioneer days in the wilderness. But he had great strength and he used this strength for the good and the right.

It is not the shining armor or the castle home, however, which makes of man a knight; it is rather the spirit of knighthood—the feeling of brotherly love and tenderness for all those who are in sorrow or distress, the courteous care for those who are weak and oppressed, the desire to right their wrongs and protect them in every way. And this knightly spirit was early shown by him when he was but a boy in the backwoods.

They tell a story of how he came into the schoolyard one morning and found a group of his playfellows torturing some poor turties by placing red-hot coals upon their backs to make them crawl faster, when suddenly our young knight came into their midst. He was only one among many; but he forced those boys to brush away the coals and let the turtles go.

And later, when he went into the school-room, he wrote his first composition on "Showing Kindness to Dumb Animals"; and all his life he did this.

At another time, when he was helping his father to move the family over into the wilderness of Illinois, in the excitement of crossing a stream swollen by the ice and snow his little pet dog was forgotten. Suddenly they heard a loud barking from the bank opposite. "Yer, yer, yer; don't leave me here!" yelled the poor doggie.

It was too much for the strong young knight; but his father refused to recross the swollen stream with his oxen and heavy load.

"Then I must go!" said the young man, and pulling off his shoes and socks, he waded through the icy water. Shaking with the cold he returned triumphant, holding in his arms the poor little shivering dog.

When he put the dog down upon the ground the little fellow bounced about, wagging his tail and trying to lick the feet and hands of his friend, as he barked his thanks. Long afterward, in speaking of this experience, the young man said:

"His frantic leaps of joy, and other evidences of a dog's gratitude amply repaid me for all the exposure I had undergone."

Later we hear of our young knight, no longer as the pioneer backwoodsman, but as a young lawyer. One time, when he was dressed in his best clothes and was riding from one country town to another in order to make a speech, he suddenly heard by the roadside a pitiful squealing and as he looked he saw a poor pig sinking in the mud.

"Eee-eee-eee!" cried the poor pig. As much as to say: "Aren't you going to help me out?"

"I really am sorry for you, piggy," said the young man to himself, "but I cannot help you, I am dressed in my best clothes."

He started to ride on, but the feeling of pity for anything in trouble came to him; so he jumped from his horse, waded out in the mud and pulled the pig from the mire. When his friends teased him as they heard the reason for his mud-stained condition, he said:

"I couldn't help it. I just had to do it. I could not stand the look in that pig's eyes as I rode by. It seemed to say to me, 'There goes my last chance.'"

Another time, when he was riding with a party of friends, he was missed, and when they turned to look for him there was the tall, ungainly knight bending over in the road. When he rejoined his friends they asked impatiently: "What caused your delay?"

The kind knight smiled gently upon them and answered: "Two young birds were blown by the wind from their nest. I could not have slept unless I had restored those helpless little creatures to their mother."

The hand that lifted the baby birds and restored them to their nest was the hand chosen to lift up a broken people and free them from the curse of slavery. Truly, when we read his life story, we know of no knight of old who ever gave to the world more deeds of valor or showed a more heroic devotion to the cause of duty than has our American knight, Abraham Lincoln.—Our Dumb Animals.

IN THE SHADOW

KREPPS—Mrs. Sadie Krepps was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, July 12, 1879, and died November 27, 1931, at the age of 52 years, 4 months and 14 days. Sister Krepps has long been a member of the Raystown Brethren church, having been active in the work of the church for over twenty years. May his comfort abide with the husband, B. F. Krepps and the daughter Pearl, who will greatly miss her. Services at the Raystown Brethren church, in charge of the pastor. E. S. FLORA.

FROHMUTH—Mildred Arlene Early Frohmuth was born Nov. 3rd, 1911 in Plymouth, Montgomery county, Ohio. On January 17th, 1931, she was united in marriage to Harrison Frohmuth. Up to a few months ago she has resided in Dayton, Ohio. Since then her home has been in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Her death came as a result of being struck by a hit-skip motorist in that city on Jan. 1, 1932. Surviving her are her husband, H. H. Frohmuth, her father—Carl Early of Dayton, two brothers—Robert and Clifford and a sister, Margaret, all of Dayton, Ohio. In 1923 she became a member of the Brethren church at West Alexandria, at which place her membership remained till her death. Funeral services were conducted by the church by the pastor and burial was made in Sugar Grove Cemetery. GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

KELLY—John Matthew Kelly, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Dayton Kelly, was born on a farm near Eaton, Ohio, May 13, 1893, and departed this life Dec. 22, 1931, at the age of 38 years. He was married to Emma Wood in 1884. He leaves to mourn their loss his wife, one daughter—Mary, two grandchildren—John and Donald, one sister—Mrs. Jennie Trunk, and one brother—Norris Kelly, both of Eaton. Mr. Kelly had served as marshal for the town for the greater part of twenty-five years. In his position he proved both efficient and faithful to his duties. The high regard in which he was held was evidenced by the beautiful floral tributes and the fact that during the hour of the funeral places of business were closed and the officials of the town attended in a body. He will be greatly missed by his many friends. Services were conducted by the pastor. GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear sister, Mrs. Eliza Holm, who passed to her eternal reward Dec. 22, 1931.

She leaves one invalid daughter, a sister, a brother, and many friends to mourn her departure.

Knowing that he doeth all things well and that all things work together for good to them who love his appearing, we bow in our grief to God and cheer to his loved ones.

BRETHREN W. M. S., Rittman, Ohio.

MOCK—Elsie Pearl Summers Mock was born February 16, 1881 on a farm located four miles northwest of Louisville, Ohio. She was the oldest daughter of Sylvanus and Angeline Summers. The home in which Mrs. Mock was born was blessed with six children, two of whom, Raymond Leonore and Clinton Eugene, preceded her in death. The parents likewise have passed to the Great Beyond. She is survived by her sisters: Mrs. Zolpha Summers Sutton and Miss Inez V. Summers, both of Canton, Ohio, and by one brother, Melvin B. Summers of Seattle, Wash.

At an early age Mrs. Mock united with the Louisville Progressive Brethren church, having received the rite of baptism by Rev. J. L. Kimmell. She remained a faithful member of the Louisville church until Sept. 28, 1924, when her membership was transferred to the First Brethren church at Danville, Ohio. Since being a member of the Canton congregation her life has been marked by real faithfulness and devotion.

On Dec. 26, 1900 she was united in marriage to Elmer Mock of Louisville, Ohio. To this union was born one daughter, Beulah Irene of the home, who together with her husband mourn the loss of a devoted mother and wife.

Mrs. Mock departed from this life on Dec. 29, 1931 after an illness of but one day. The deceased had frequently expressed the desire that a deep sleep might mark the end of her earthly pilgrimage. Her desire was fulfilled.

Funeral services were held from the Louisville Brethren church, Jan. 1, 1932. The services were in charge of the writer, assisted by Rev. A. E. Whitted, pastor at Louisville.

Mrs. Mock will be much missed in the home, and her husband and the example of her life has not only touched other lives but should be an incentive to faithfulness in Christian service. J. C. BEAL.

FRESE—Mr. Leo W. Freese departed from this life on October 2, 1931, at age 37. Funeral services were conducted at the First Brethren church in South Bend, Indiana on Monday, October 15, 1931 by the undersigned. R. F. PORTE.

HARMAN—Mr. Harry Hardman departed from this life on October 2, 1931, after a long period of illness. He was in the 38th year of his life. Funeral services were conducted in his home in South Bend, Indiana by the undersigned. R. F. PORTE.

MULHAUPT—Mrs. Sarah Mulhaupt departed from this life on November 1, 1931 at the age of 80 years. Mrs. Mulhaupt was a member of the Baptist Church but for many years had attended the First Brethren church in South Bend, Indiana. Funeral services were conducted from the church by the undersigned. R. F. PORTE.

KROFT—Mrs. Charles Kroft departed from this life on Dec. 12, 1931, after a long period of illness. She was 78 years. Mrs. Kroft was a faithful member of the First Brethren church in South Bend, Indiana. Funeral services were conducted by the undersigned pastor of the First Brethren church, South Bend, Indiana. R. F. PORTE.

BOCKOVER—Mr. Charles LeRoy Bockover departed this life at his home in South Bend, Indiana, November 27, 1931, at the age of 50 years. Brother Bockover united with the Brethren church at South Bend under the ministry of Brother A. T. Wirick. The funeral services were conducted at the church by Brother Wirick. R. F. PORTE.

MAYNARD—Mrs. Harriet Elanore Phillips Maynard was born March 27, 1863. She departed from this life Jan. 7, 1932, making the length of her earthly pilgrimage 68 years, 8 months, 10 days. She is survived by her children, Virgil A. Phillips, Quentin A. Phillips, Walter W. Phillips, Mrs. Leona G. Wiggins and Mrs. Clara L. Newman, also by one sister, Mrs. Jane Steffey, and two brothers, Harley Smith and Tom Smith of Ulrichville.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home of the daughter with whom the deceased had made her home. J. C. BEAL.

LOWMAN—The life of John Lowman, a Civil War veteran, was ended Jan. 27, 1932, at the age of 88 years, 4 months and 6 days. He was born Sept. 21, 1843, in Miami County, Indiana, to Abraham and Jane Lowman and was the last of nine children.

On May 10, 1868 he married Miss Elizabeth Alldredge, who died 7 years later. Two years after her death he married the former's sister, Miss Anna Alldredge. She passed to her reward in Sept., 1928. Mrs. Lowman united with the Brethren church about the year 1880 under the ministry of Rev. Jonathan Swihart. He became a pillar in the church, giving his faithful service at all times.

The funeral service was held from the First Brethren church in Henry, Ind., conducted by the District Conference pastor, assisted by Rev. G. M. Maus, Interment in Roanoke Cemetery. MRS. CLYDE RAGER, Cor. Sec., Roanoke, Indiana.

BROWER—Elmer Brower, son of Samuel and Telitha Hudleston Brower, was born in Wabash county, Indiana, Nov. 9, 1865, and died Jan. 29, 1932, aged 66 years, 2 months and 20 days.

On Sept. 22, 1894, he was united in marriage to Miss Maggie M. Needham. To this union were born three children: Creth, Glenn, and Hubert. Hubert departed this life Jan. 18, 1910, at the age of 6 years.

In Jan., 1894, he united with the Roanoke Brethren church under the pastorate of I. O. Ditch. To this faith he remained true. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. G. L. Maus. Interment was made in the I. O. O. F. Cemetery. MRS. CLYDE RAGER, Secretary.

BURD—Mrs. Walter Bard, mother of a splendid family of children, was called to her rest after about a year's affliction with paralysis. She was a faithful member of the Mt. Olive Brethren church in Virginia, and was a respected citizen of the Mount Olive community. She was survived by her invalid husband and her sons and daughters. Funeral was by the writer, assisted by Chumbley of the nearby Presbyterian church, on January 4, 1932. Interment was made in the McGheysville cemetery. JOHN F. LOCKE.

CROWE—Samuel H. Crowe, 75, well-known Rockingham farmer, died suddenly while sitting in a chair at his home near Cross Keys. Death was due to heart disease and complications. JOHN F. LOCKE.

Funeral services were held on Sunday, January 31 at 3 o'clock from the Mt. Olive Brethren church. Services were conducted by his pastor the Rev. John F. Locke, assisted by Rev. E. L. Long. Interment was made in the church cemetery nearby.

Mr. Crowe, who was born and reared in the community in which he died, was well known and highly respected to that section of the county. He was for many years a faithful member of the Mt. Olive church.

Besides his wife, who he before married, Miss Ida Gardner, he is survived by one daughter—Mrs. Ann Streger, of Dayton, Ohio, five sons—Harry and Joseph Crowe, also of Dayton, Ohio; Ernest Crowe of near Harrisonburg, Charles Crowe of West Chester, Ohio; and two daughters, one son, two brothers—W. L. Crowe, of Keokuk, Iowa, and Robert Crowe, of Goods Mill; two sisters—Mrs. Julia Kryger, of Grotesque, and Mrs. Mary Gikerson, of Mossy Creek.

JOHN F. LOCKE.

THORLEY—Hannah Catherine McFadden, daughter of Henry and Mary McFadden, was born in Mifflin County, Pennsylvania, April 6, 1851, and passed to be with her Lord on December 27, 1931, at the age of 80 years. She had spent more years of earthly pilgrimage. She passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. W. Firestone, at Ashland, Ohio, through whose unusually loving and faithful ministries the six and one-half years of semi-and later complete invalidism which closed her earthly career were made as pleasant as human love and thoughtfulness can make them.

While but a small child the parents of Hannah McFadden moved to Wayne County, Ohio, where she grew to young womanhood. In 1870, Hannah McFadden and her husband were united in marriage to S. W. Thorley, and for more than forty years these two shared life's joys and vicissitudes together. Death brought parting for the two by the home-going of the husband on October 2, 1919.

Bartholomew H. Hartman, who united with the Brethren fraternity and has remained true to her profession through all the years, and for many years—at the time of her death—was a member of the Fair Haven Brethren church, near Laton, Ohio. Sister Thorley very faithfully exemplified the Golden Rule in her life and relations in her home and the community in which she spent the greater part of her life.

Sister Thorley is survived by two daughters, two sons, two grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, two sisters, one brother, two half brothers and three half sisters, besides a host of friends and acquaintances. A granddaughter, Gladys McQuate, preceded her in death. The spacious home of the Mrs. W. W. Firestone, was filled to capacity at the funeral services in her home, on January 27, 1932, manifesting the respect and esteem in which those who knew her best held her. The services were conducted by her pastor, Elder Raymond Gingrich, assisted by the undersigned. But we made it our duty to repeat this message to her, beside the body of her husband. Brother Gingrich brought a most comforting and helpful message to the assemblage from Psalm 23, and the Scripture and the message were especially so because each evening during her illness it was the custom of the mother and daughter to repeat this beautiful Psalm together as their evening devotion, and when she could no longer repeat it because of weakness the daughter repeated it to her. May God give us all the quiet faith to dwell thus with the great Schoolmaster of the heaven and earth, until he shall lead us too through the valley of the shadow into the fullness of joy in his presence to meet the loved and lost awhile. DOTTIE BELTOTE.

for the SUPERANNUATED MINISTERS and the BRETHREN HOME

As to the Aged Ministers' Need, Consider this —

NO MINISTERS—NO CHURCHES

Events march with irresistible tread. We must keep pace with our age or pay the penalty. The law is inexorable, whether we are operating a grocery store, a bank, or a church.

Just now we are thinking of churches.

Somewhere, sometime, it may have been possible for churches to thrive without ministers, but not in North America since the year 1800.

Emphatically and increasingly, the church's one problem has been to get and keep a minister of sufficient power and devotion as to meet the needs of its community.

There is no question about the Gospel, and there is no question about human nature, but they must be brought together. That's the preacher's task, just as digging coal is the miner's, and raising corn and wheat, cotton and hay, is the farmer's.

SALARIES NEATLY ADJUSTED

Three sons followed this pioneer in the ministry. The churches had so grown, both in numbers and in financial ability, that they demanded the entire time of their ministers and paid them regular salaries.

These ministers have served their churches with single-minded devotion and with unusual success. Not one of them has laid up a competence, and not one of them has any hope of ever doing so.

Their salaries are neatly adjusted to the scale on which their churches require them to live. If by extraordinary thrift they get a few hundred dollars ahead, the balance is soon wiped out by sickness or death in the family, or by the mounting cost of education for their children.—Extract from "Pension Plan" booklet issued by Disciples of Christ.

There is no permanent margin.

A SQUARE DEAL FOR THE MINISTER

Our Savior said, "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

Paul said, "Even so did the Lord ordain that they that proclaim the Gospel should live of the Gospel."

"If any provide not for his own, and especially those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

What Some Leaders say about the Brethren Home —

PURPOSE AND GREATEST NEED

The Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, is an institution founded and operated for the purpose of making a home for the aged and infirm Brethren who have no home or family and are unable to care for themselves....

The Home and its officials want more than anything else that the churches and their members shall realize that this is their responsibility. The officers are interested and doing all that they can, but if they are not backed up by the churches and membership they will but fail.—The Evangelist, February 14, 1931.

EPHRAIM CULP,
Member Brethren Home Board.

OBJECTIVE AND PRESENT NEED

The object of the Brethren Home Board is to make the institution self-supporting. No one who knows the facts will deny but that we have gone a long way in bringing this about in the few years since this task was undertaken. However, it will require a few more years to get to this point entirely, so in the meantime we must depend on the gifts that come to us from the churches, therefore we urge that this be made a matter of prayer and a matter of giving, so that these funds may be sufficient to meet all the need.—The Evangelist, February 15, 1930.

A. V. KIMMELL,
Member Brethren Home Board.

SUPPORT WILL MAKE PROGRESS POSSIBLE

An opportunity to do a real piece of constructive Christian service that will honor our Lord and bring untold happiness into the lives of many who need just such a home. There are many things that are yet to be done, and the only way to finance these is to depend on your gifts. Let us therefore give as unto the Lord.—The Brethren Evangelist, February 17, 1926.

FRANK G. COLEMAN.

In that great twelfth chapter of Romans, Paul appeals for a complete dedication of self to God and a thorough transformation of mind and heart that will result, among other things, in the habit of "CONTRIBUTING TO THE NECESSITIES OF SAINTS, GIVEN TO HOSPITALITY." If that is the spirit that characterizes the Brethren people, the aged saints of God in the "Home" at Flora, and the needy retired ministers will not, even in a time of depression, be allowed to suffer for want of the necessities of life.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Ministry of Dr. Kyle

Dr. Kyle has completed his series of eleven lectures and has brought real blessings to all of us. All who heard were impressed by two things; first, his high intellectual scholarship; and second, his unwavering faith in the Bible as the Word of God. He has taught us all the value of faith, humility and work. No wonder that God has blessed his ministry, and that he always has more speaking and teaching engagements than he can possibly fulfil. For nearly half a century Dr. Kyle has been studying and working to know more of the Inspired Word and to vindicate its Divine Authority. His mind has become a great treasury of useful information. And now past the age when most men retire, he is planning further expeditions for archaeological research in Palestine.

If you want to be used of God, believe his Word, study it, work and keep on working. There is no virtue in either unbelief or ignorance.

Brother Monroe will report the ministry of Dr. Kyle in detail.

AN Encouraging Sign

In the midst of our financial losses and disappointments and general pessimism, we have sometimes forgotten that God often makes his greatest progress in times of apparent disaster. Think of the gloom and discouragement into which the little group of disciples were plunged when the one in whom they had trusted as the King of Israel was nailed to a Cross of shame. Yet out of that hour of darkness, God came forth with the Redemption of the world wrought by his own Holy Arm. It is hard for men to see in the hour of darkness, but we can at least trust God if we remember what he has wrought in the past.

One of the impressive things about the present situation is a reemphasis upon evangelism as the great work of the church. In foreign missionary work, I have noticed a tendency among nearly all the Boards and Societies away from institutionalism back to evangelism. And in the homeland, there have been some striking instances of this tendency. Reports in our own church show that there has never been a better time for intensive campaigns for soul-winning. As I write I recall the great ingathering at Long Beach under Brother Bauman's preaching, the remarkable meetings held by Brother Clough at Uniontown, and those under the leadership of Brother Paul Miller. Various pastors have written me about the same thing in their own churches. One of our Seminary students reported twelve confessions recently in one evening. He was so happy he could scarcely talk. A burden of prayer for the lost has come into our prayer meetings here spontaneously.

Now is the time to pray and work for all souls. All our correctness of belief, all our institutions, all our conferences, all our preaching will go for nothing unless there is upon us a deep concern for the lost. No church can ever meet defeat as long as she goes on winning souls for Christ. "The gate of hell shall not prevail against it."

ARE you Over-worked?

Yesterday afternoon I drove to Cleveland to hear my dear friend, Dr. Lewis Sperry Chafer, President of the Evangelical Theological College at Dallas, Texas. One thing in the address I shall not soon forget. He said, "I have never seen a Spirit filled man who was not overworked."

The Spirit-filled man never needs to worry about having a job. He will find jobs laying around loose everywhere. He does not blame other men because he has nothing to do, but is grieved because there are not more hours and more men to do what must be done. He has no time to waste fighting other Christians in order to win a place for himself. If he is Spirit-filled he will have a place, for the Spirit never fills a man unless he has a definite place of service for him. If a Christian finds nothing to do, he should not blame others, but examine himself.

The great difficulty is not a scarcity of jobs, but a scarcity of men who can do them. There has been a great outcry recently that there are too many preachers. Not so. The real trouble is that we have too many who want to be preachers and who sit around doing nothing waiting for God to create the kind of a job which they want for themselves. It is impossible to have too many preachers. Every local church can use dozens of them. A preacher in the New Testament sense need have no official call, need not be the pastor of a church, need hold no office in the church at all. Mr. Moody saw this clearly. He waited for nothing but started to work bringing children into Sunday school.

The trouble today is that the church has too many men looking for positions, but not enough looking for work. Positions may be scarce, but there is always enough work. And there are no easy places.

Lord, fill us more and more with thy Blessed Spirit, and open our eyes to the need around us, that we may "redeem the time."

THE Ignorance of Dr. Cadman

Brother Koontz, pastor of the Roanoke church, sends me an interesting clipping. It contains one of Dr. Cadman's answers to the questions which come to him. Among other things, this prominent Modernist says, "Doubtless, there are benighted ministers who dodge the issues you name and talk about their sole business of 'soul-saving.' But I would like to know how any soul can be saved or stay saved, as long as the man who owns it is damned by injustice, fraud and oppression."

Brother Koontz wonders whether Dr. Cadman really knows by experience the Power of the Gospel. If he did, he would know that the Blessed Gospel of God's Grace is able to save the souls of men, not through the righting of social wrongs, but in spite of them. Dr. Cadman should read the record of Church History. There he will find that injustice and oppression have never been able to prevent the saving of souls. If the salvation of men had to wait on the righting of social wrongs, then the world is beyond all hope; for such wrongs will continue as long as men are unregenerated.

It is the tragic and fundamental error of Modernism that it tries to redeem society by changing things instead of changing men.

Some men are beginning to see this error. A leading pastor of Cleveland said yesterday, "We cannot conquer outside until we have conquered inside." And he adds that "matters of moral and social reform are at a practical standstill today because we have lost the inner impulse which originally prompted these movements."

Dr. Cadman and his ilk are discredited prophets, and should be treated as such.

BULLETS and the Peace-makers

Carefully preserving the fiction that there is no official war, the armies of Japan and China continue to fight desperately around the city of Shanghai. The nations of the earth go on writing notes to the combatants imploring them to cease.

It is pointed out in the morning papers that England, while demanding on the one hand that hostilities stop, is at the same time giving governmental consent to its largest munition makers to sell and ship to both Japan and China. Doubtless, much has already been shipped by our own country.

Perhaps the efforts of the "peacemakers" would be more successful if they were more interested in peace instead of profits.

One small life in God's great plan,—
How futile it seems as the ages roll,
Do what it may or strive how it can
To alter the sweep of the infinite whole!
A single stitch in an infinite web,
A drop in the ocean's flow and ebb,
But the pattern is rent where the stitch is lost,
Or marred where the tangled threads have crossed.

And each life that fails of its true intent,
Mars the perfect plan that the Master meant.—Susan Coolidge.

There are regions beyond the most nebulous outskirts of matter; but no regions beyond the divine goodness. We may conceive of tracts where there are no worlds but not of one where there is no God of mercy.—J. W. Alexander.

Japanese Military Arrogance a Warning

Japan is furnishing a striking example of what militarism will do when it is in the saddle. This leader of the Orient has been talking peace and consenting to peace proposals and plans, and at the same time has been building up a great war machine and watching and waiting for the opportune time and place to use it for the realization of selfish ends. That time has come, so the Japanese military powers have decided, and while the world is struggling with a depression of unprecedented severity and universality and when no great nation, nor yet the League of Nations, seems willing or able to make effective protest, they have launched, under the guise of driving out Chinese banditry, an expedition to take Manchuria from turbulent, disunited China. Such hypocrisy is not unique among the nations of the world, but the bold, audacious disregard for their pledged word has scarcely a parallel since the days when Germany made a "scrap of paper" out of a treaty and invaded Poland. Even now, after these months of fighting, Japan disclaims having broken faith, or having any designs upon Manchuria, but her every move belies her word.

Such duplicity may not have been as purposed as it may seem, that is, the government may have been sincere in the peace talk and agreements in which it has participated, but found itself unable to make good on its promises because of being hamstrung by the military regime. Certainly it is that there has been a strong element in Japan's political leadership that believed in peaceful procedures, and there are many even now who are opposed to the course mapped out by the militarists. But these peace proponents have been shelved and a recent assassination of one such leader shows how dangerous it is to seek to exercise such leadership at the present time. And the Japanese parliament is powerless to do anything about it, even if it were so disposed. There is no way whereby it can hold a check on the executive branch of the government, which is responsible to the emperor only. Not even the parliament's power to vote finances can effectively check the emperor-appointed ministry of the government. Dr. Raymond W. Bixler, head of the History Department of Ashland College, recently said, "The Japanese parliament is little more than a debating society. If it refuses to vote appropriations the cabinet can go ahead collecting and disbursing funds on the basis of previous appropriations. The army and navy are practically independent of any effective means of control or restraint outside the emperor himself, except as public sentiment becomes too strong to be ignored."

A government thus guided and controlled by militaristic ideals and aims is a menace to the peace and welfare of the world, and is an enemy to its own perpetuity and power. People have short memories, but it is not so long since 1918 that they have forgotten the solemn lesson learned by that awful debacle of death and destruction, which was brought about by the exaltation of militarism and economic imperialism. And now comes Japan to teach us anew the danger to the peace of the world of the predominance of selfish nationalism and dollar diplomacy supported by bullets and bayonets. As a result of Japan's running amuck in China, "the peace of the world is threatened as at no time since the fateful summer of 1914," declares the Methodist Protestant-Recorder. "The sparks are flying and none can tell where or when the next conflagration will break out."

Not only is militarism a constant threat to the peace of the world, but it is a source of weakness to the nation it would make strong. Let our own militarists take warning by this fact and consider their folly as they, taking advantage of the situation, are setting themselves with renewed zeal to press for a resumption of the race for armaments and are talking with much bluster about the United States making itself so strongly furnished for war that other nations will be cowed by its strength. Let them be reminded that from the days of David and Goliath down to the time of Poland and Germany, no bully was ever so strong as to effectively intimidate a little fellow who believed that life and self-respect and a righteous cause were at stake. And in almost every case the bully has eventually, if not immediately, been brought down to defeat. Let them be warned by the folly of Japan, who, as the Religious Telescope predicts, "is riding to a fall. She has shown contempt for the opinions of other nations, while pursuing a ruthless course of aggression in China. She talks one way and acts another. She already has suffered almost irreparable loss in the world confidence and esteem. Her attitude can but react unfavorably upon herself. She will lose much and gain nothing by her brazen course." With this opinion the Christian Standard is in agreement, saying:

"The one thing that is certain in the whole mess is the almost irreparable loss that Japan has suffered. It will require generations to win the goodwill of the Chinese no matter what is done to stop the boycott. It will require years and some brave effort to win back the good opinion of the people of the world.

"That is one of the deceptive things about the making of war. While the Japs were blowing the flimsy houses of the Chinese to pieces, they were blowing to pieces their own reputations. When they thought their show of force would create respect for themselves, they were really destroying respect."

Let the people of America take warning from this latest example of what militarism gone to seed will bring forth. The militarists of our own country do not have quite so free a hand as do those of Japan, yet they have become brazen enough to attempt to rebuke the President when he seeks to restrain extravagant naval expenditures while half the people of the world are suffering want and when the nations of the world are meeting to talk disarmament. They have invaded the field of education in an endeavor to bring up a generation that believes in the institution of war and is ready to resort to war to gain their ends, and the situation has come to such a pass that teachers who have conviction and courage to oppose their policy are finding their positions in jeopardy in state supported institutions, not only in colleges and universities but in high schools as well. And this militaristic attitude of mind has crept into the very requirements for citizenship and has denied the long cherished right of the individual to a conscience and a devotion to God that precludes the bearing of arms. Surely it is time to be thoroughly aroused over the progress of militarism in our own country, and to see in the conduct of Japan a timely warning as to the arrogance, the disregard of individual rights, and the destruction of life and property to which it inevitably leads.

Washington's Greatness and Wise Counsel

Some one has said that "the preacher who turns away from preaching Christ to preaching Lincoln or Washington ought to resign his pulpit and take to the lecture platform. But the preacher who fails to see in the lives of these illustrious men a wealth of fine illustrations for sermons on Jesus Christ is dead at the top, and will soon be removed from his pulpit." Indeed there are few men in history who more worthily and truly illustrated in their day many precious truths of the Gospel than did these great American heroes. They were in a very special sense God's men, raised up in the fullness of time and equipped in the secret place of the Most High to do a great work. It is God's way. "From time to time, at the heart of great crises, or at the birth of new eras of enlightenment, a great soul steps forth, with wisdom that was never learned, with foreknowledge that was never studied, and saves the established good, or inaugurates new good that is to be" (Dearborn Independent, Feb. 20, 1926). Thus Moses was prepared, and David, and Isaiah, and John the Baptist. And so also, Lincoln and Washington. There is no other way of accounting for them.

Whatever may have been the strength of their physical heritage and whatever their education or lack of it, they cannot be explained on any other ground than that they were specially called and endowed of God for the work he had for them to do.

It is worth our while to look into the lives of such men, and on this two hundredth anniversary of the birth of the immortal Washington, not only Americans but men throughout the world will be profited much by surveying with new interest the great work that he accomplished and contemplating the virtues he embodied and the ideals he envisioned.

No greater thing has been said of Washington than that he was "the father of his country," and nothing else indicates so truly the outstanding achievement of his life, and the seeming absolute necessity of his presence at the time the new nation was being born. His great contribution was not that he did this or that particular thing, but that for the lack of him the Revolution would scarcely have been successful. It would have collapsed during the hard winter at Valley Forge had he not been there. He was the staying power and moving spirit. Everybody was discouraged, and there were deserters, would-be supplanters and traitors. Congress had practically abandoned the army, and would neither buy food nor transport it. Yet Washington held on tenaciously, maintained his army through those trying months and brought it out in the spring with a finer morale than when it went into winter quarters. There is but one human explanation, and that is the man Washington. So Dr. S. Parkes Cadman thinks. He says, "Our Revolutionary War had its desperate winter at Valley Forge, but the army also had George Washington. His confidence and tenacity enabled the troops to hold on until victory came." If ever there was a man who was indispensable, Washington was to the beginnings of our national existence, and it is the growing realization of this fact that is calling forth such an unprecedented measure of genuine gratitude and honor to his memory.

But we shall do well not merely to stir the pride of our hearts at the thought of the greatness of his life and work, but to give heed to the wise counsel that has come down to us from his lips, wisdom that was as much a bestowal of divine grace as was the greatness of his leadership. There is need of a wider exemplification in the life of our day of the ideals with which he counselled the people in his remarkable Farewell Address.

For one thing, he urged the necessity of obedience to government. Said he, "The very idea of the power and the rights of the people to establish government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government." Then he warns that "All obstructions to the execution of the laws . . . are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency." How much we need that warning today!

He stressed the importance of the education and enlightenment of the people. "Promote then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that the public opinion be enlightened."

He believed strongly in the necessity of religion, in national as well as individual life. Warning against the loss of "a sense of religious obligation" in oaths, he declares that "reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle. And again he insists, "True religion affords government its surest support."

And not least in importance, he urges justice and benevolence in international relations. To quote again: "Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct; and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and (at no distant period) a great nation, to give mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence."

Superannuated Ministers to Rev. G. L. Maus, Roann, Indiana. Times may be hard, but the task is ours, and those of us who have, must share with those who have not. Duty leaves no choice in the matter, but duty calls for only what we can do.

On Mission page this week you will find the first installment of a very splendid article written by Dr. Florence N. Gribble and previously published in the Missionary Review of the World, also the first of a series of West African Folk Stories written by Mrs. Orville D. Jobson and to be published monthly. The latter will be of special interest to our young readers.

Harrah, Washington, has a splendid Junior Christian Endeavor Society, and we had a good report of its program of activities published in last week's paper. Now that you have enjoyed reading it, suppose you send in a report of yours, or see that some one else does so, if you have a Junior society. If not, tell about your Senior, or Intermediate work.

Brother H. A. Gossard, our Lanark, Illinois correspondent, has written a letter this week, and it is apparent that the church at that place under the enthusiastic leadership of Brother C. C. Grisso, is not experiencing a spiritual depression. From previous communications we know that there is progress in numbers and interest in this church. The Christian Endeavorers continue to prove their worth by their activity.

The Eleventh World's Sunday School Convention will be held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, July 25-31, 1932. This presents a fine opportunity for Brethren Sunday school workers who are able to attend to get the inspiration of a really great convention in a missionary setting, and then proceed on to visit our mission work in Argentina. If any one should be planning to go, we would be glad to learn of it.

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of the Fort Scott, Kansas, church, says his people are still enjoying benefits from Brother R. Paul Miller's meeting and from the district conference that convened there last fall. They rejoice in the fact that their church building is now free from debt, the mortgage having been burned at a public service. A new mission is being conducted by this mission church at a point five miles in the country and as a result of a revival meeting conducted there by the pastor eight have been baptized into the church and four are awaiting the rite.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, editor of the Sunday school lesson publications, spent several days in Chicago attending a meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, where the aims and problems of the task of religious education and of making the necessary literature to promote such education are discussed and light thrown upon them by men of learning and experience. Such a gathering is a good place for a Sunday school editor to go, and the many members of our Sunday schools are likely to reap benefit from it just as pupils in public schools do from the attendance of teachers at teachers' institutes and conventions.

Not only the students of Ashland Seminary and College were privileged to benefit from the very excellent lectures of Dr. Melvin G. Kyle, recently concluded, but many members of the Ashland city churches as well. Most of the ministers of the city were regular attendants. And from all who attended, much or little, were heard expressions of appreciation of the very instructive, interesting and sane lectures of this noted archaeologist. Besides possessing a great fund of information and being a staunch defender of the integrity of the Scriptures, he is also a man of kind, charitable spirit. More conservative scholars of the spirit of Dr. Kyle would make for more harmony among the lovers of the Word.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for a revival meeting to begin at Fort Scott, Kansas, February 21, Rev. C. C. Grisso, evangelist and Rev. L. G. Wood, pastor.

For an adequate Benevolence Day offering, to be lifted February 28th.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We are stressing again the importance of the Benevolence Day offering. Read the articles by Dr. Miller and Rev. Maus. And remember that the offerings are two: the one for the Brethren Home to be sent to Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana, and the one for the

Enduring Characteristics of George Washington

By Homer A. Kent

Few characters in all history have been the subject of more writing than the illustrious George Washington. Historians have extolled his achievements, biographers have vied with each other to most accurately present him to succeeding generations and philosophers have endeavored to interpret his intellectual and spiritual qualities. On every hand we see memorials which speak of the endearment and honor that the American people would shower upon his memory. Truly no other American citizen has held such an esteemed place in the hearts of the nation. And the nation has not ceased to honor "the Father of his Country."

The latest memorial to his name, the newly constructed Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, has just been opened to the public. A more delightful drive would be difficult to describe. Leaving the beautiful Capital City, which bears the immortal name of Washington, the traveler crosses one of the most elaborate and imposing bridges in the world. Several years have already been consumed in its construction and several more will be required before all the ornamentation has been added. The placid waters of the Potomac river form the attractive border of this highway. Winding in and out among the wooded vistas, the traveler is charmed and delighted with the natural scenery for a distance of about twenty miles. He passes through historic Alexander, Virginia, past the old church where Washington was wont to worship. As the highway approaches Mount Vernon, traces of Colonial days are evident. Old estates with homes bearing earmarks of colonial architecture are still to be seen. Many are of recent construction, of course, but the historic beauty is in a measure preserved. However, the home of Washington at Mount Vernon surpasses all one's expectations as to what the termination of this Memorial Drive will be.

The estate is situated on a wide bend of the Potomac which flows by the foot of the spacious lawn and wooded hillside. Surely George Washington had a keen sense of appreciation of the beautiful to select such a superb location for his home. The house was a great house in Washington's day. Its elegant proportions and its architectural excellence excite the admiration of artists of the present day. The curved colonnades at each end, the noble porch, the formal landscaping of the grounds with historic trees planted by George Washington and others were all according to the General's own plan. Such is Mount Vernon.

We would also call to your attention the familiar shaft of 555 feet of solid masonry—the Washington Monument. Towering above every other structure it is one of the first sights to greet the traveler as he approaches the City of Washington. A thing of beauty and a lasting memorial to one who gave himself unselfishly to his country.

We might go on indefinitely and tell you of local monuments, parks, and various types of memorials within the nation's Capital and in surrounding territory. In fact we could go across the nation and everywhere we would meet a testimony to the regard in which the memory of George Washington is held.

We are made to question, Why all this honor to one man? Why spend fabulous sums of money to perpetuate the name of a mere mortal? Surely there must have been some qualities of character of sterling worth that have fastened themselves upon succeeding peoples.

Let us think first of the man Washington and pick out a few of the most dominant and familiar characteristics. He was a man of indomitable courage. When he was possessed of a deep conviction which involved a principle of right and wrong he permitted no obstacle to keep him from fulfilling the right. Recall the stand he took during the stormy pre-Revolutionary days. He believed it to be the inalienable right of every people to be free and independent. It took courage to propose such views with vigor in the face of a powerful controlling power. He was a man of extreme wealth and able to afford every luxury, yet he chose to courageously cast his lot with those less fortunate that freedom might be won for all.

As a young man, he had won the admiration of leading men of the colony and they entrusted tremendous responsibilities to him. It required courage of the most genuine variety, amidst physical hardship and danger, to carry Governor Dinwiddie's message to the French commandant at Fort le Boeuf. But he accomplished it, and at the age of twenty-six.

We would mention the foresight of this great man. Many times have we heard extolled his vision of the future. And when we re-read his admonitions to the American people, we are led to believe he had a tremendously unselfish interest in the welfare of future generations. No doubt you have seen the painting by the artist Conroe which portrays the majestic figure of General Washington peering into the distance. Beneath are inscribed these words, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." He held the confident hope of some day seeing the young nation a completely united people, unhindered in their enjoyment of liberty. This clear vision, kept often amidst the most discouraging circumstances, had no little to do with the birth of our free republic.

When we search personal diaries or intimate records of the General's home life at Mount Vernon, we recognize at once that hospitality within that home was a virtue and an art. Friends and guests were many and cordiality was enjoyed at all times. Yet undue extravagance was never permitted and servants were constantly instructed to be wasteful of nothing.

Not only was the wealth of George Washington lavished upon his family, relatives and invited guests. But he was not unmindful of the needs of the poor. Regular and frequent bequests were made to the needy. When he took command of the Army in 1775, he wrote his agent in charge of affairs, "Let the hospitality of the house, with respect to the poor be kept up. Let no one go hungry away. . . I have no objection to your giving my money to charity, to the amount of forty or fifty pounds a year, when you think it well bestowed." One of the overseers wrote, "I had orders from General Washington to fill a cornhouse every year, for the sole use of the poor." He also maintained a fishing station with necessary apparatus for taking herring which the poor might use free of expense.

One might go on at great length and speak of the estimable moral and altruistic characteristics, but we as Christians are much concerned with the spiritual side of this great man. Did he, who possessed such remarkable poise and self-control, and who sought to incorporate within himself the best there is in culture and refinement, neglect the nurture of his soul? Actual records reveal that he was most faithful in his attendance at church in Pohick or Alexandria. In the latter congregation, he was an honored vestry-man. His rector writes that the piety and reverence of George Washington, who never missed church except when stormbound at Mount Vernon, was an inspiration and example to rector and people. When we realize that highways and conveyances were unlike those of today, we are led to admire this man who drove ten miles to church every Sunday morning. If forced to remain at home, Lord's Day observance was kept. Secular music was never permitted. Not a game of chess was indulged in. But sermons and religious literature were read aloud and family worship was the regular practice. Visitors were never invited on Sundays.

Robert Lewis, a nephew, writes of his accidentally witnessing Washington's private devotions in his library both morning and evening, and of seeing him kneeling with an open Bible before him. Such was his daily habit. We quote from his diary dated June, 1774, "Went to church and fasted all day." Unless a clergyman was present, Washington always asked the blessing at his table.

Not only was the subject of this sketch a deeply pious individual and a firm believer in God, but he was also a scholar. A pocket note-book has been preserved containing Bible references in his handwriting. All entries in the family Bible were made by his hand also. In 1794, he wrote Charles Thomson that he had finished reading the first part of his translation of the Septuagint. He often quotes, from the Scriptures and expresses the wish that "swords might be turned into ploughshares and spears into pruning hooks and the nations learn war no more."

The Bi-centennial Commission of the United States is launching a stupendous celebration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington. It is the hope of the Commission and all co-operating thinking citizens, that by bringing before the youth of America, the enduring characteristics of this great man, they may be greatly benefited by the wholesome and powerful effect of his example.

Our Aged Retired Brethren of the Ministry and Our Responsibility

By Rev. G. L. Maus, Secretary of Benevolence Board

The time is at hand when we are faced with the sacred responsibility of making provision for the care of the aged and incapacitated ministers and their wives. Our National Conference each year sets aside one Sunday in which we are asked to make an offering to this great cause and the time this year is the last Sunday in February.

This is the month when the people of our country are thinking of the birthdays of two of our greatest men in the history of our nation: namely that of Washington and Lincoln. It is only right and fitting that we should think of these great men. Our high schools are planning on making much of the birthday of Washington this year when it marks his two hundredth anniversary. Speeches are being made and papers are being written about him. The name of Lincoln, our martyred president, will also be recalled. To these great men we owe a debt of gratitude, and the examples they set before us have helped our nation to become what it is today. But while we are thinking of the birthdays of these two great men, why not let us think of the birthdays of our aged brethren in the ministry whether they be during this month or some other month during the year.

Speaking of these veteran ministers who entered the ministry forty or fifty years ago, let me quote: "There were no pastorates to be had worthy of the name; no one was sure there ever would be. But many of these men, leaving a wife and children behind them to share in their hardships, went out to preach in the face of the fact that probably not even the railroad fare would be paid . . . Through the sacrifice of noble souls like these splendid pastorates have been built up. . . ."

The immediate need is for an offering that will help provide the necessities of life for these aged brethren and their dependents. Every person who belongs to the Brethren Church anywhere has a responsibility resting upon him to give something, whether it be little or much. Our General Conference voted to organize this board, authorized it to collect funds sufficient to take care of these dear people. Our loyalty to our church and denomination demands that we do our very best in this worthy cause. New members have knocked at our door this year and asked to be admitted. Others are knocking right now and the question is, what will your board do with them? We began this year with but very little in the treasury and we would have been placed in a very embarrassing position if it had not been for the laymen of the church in sharing their offering with us last fall. THANKS BE TO THAT BOARD.

As I am writing this article I have been brought face to face with the divinely enjoined responsibility resting upon the church to provide for the needs of these brethren. To all my fellow pastors and the laity, let me say, the thought that our superannuated ministers and their dependents are living on charity, ought never to be tolerated. Paul says: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the Word and in doctrine" (1 Tim. 5:17). Again: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel shall live of the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:14). This same writer says again: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things" (Gal. 6:6). Hear again what this great preacher had to say: "But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel" (1 Tim. 5:8). These words are sharp and they pierce like an arrow and should remind us of our responsibility to these brethren.

During the last year we have received letters from various representative brethren over the brotherhood asking why this board did not work out some plan to present to Conference for something permanent to be done aside from the immediate needs. A committee was appointed last year for that purpose and will report this year. But our sacred obligation is NOW. May we ever keep in mind that we are the beneficiaries of the spiritual labors of these brethren who are now in need. They were our teachers and leaders in spiritual things. They were our spiritual fathers, who led our souls to accept Christ as our Savior. They went out and preached in the school houses at the cross-roads and established churches, and left us the religious heritage we enjoy. Gratitude demands that they, who poured out their lives in service for us, shall now in their days of feebleness receive our loving and tender care. Certainly these brethren have been true to the faith and the principles of the Brethren Church. Let us make this the largest offering ever. Will you do it?

The Brethren Home

By Dr. J. Allen Miller, Chairman Board of Trustees

It falls my duty by virtue of the position I happen to occupy to make this final appeal for a good offering for the Brethren Home support this year. This offering is to be taken on the last Sunday of February.

It is the same day upon which also the offering for the support of the Superannuated Ministers and their widows is taken. General Conference has joined these two benevolent institutions of the Church. I want to stress the obligation the Church owes both of these Boards. However the members of the Board of Benevolence can speak for themselves.

We have mailed to all the pastors a limited supply of collection envelopes, a brief statement of the Home's workings and purposes, a resume of the financial report for last year and a letter of direct appeal to the pastors and through them to the churches. If we have missed any pastor will you not please write me at once and I will gladly send you a supply of collection envelopes. You will send your offering directly to Brother Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana. He is the Treasurer of our Board.

I have in mind to make a few interesting statements relative to this Home. It was many years ago when in the midst of my busy and heavy duties connected with the College I received a telegram one day asking me to come to Miamisburg, Ohio, to see Sister Lydia Fox. I did not know what the purpose of the call was but in answer to it I visited her in her home. I was there only several hours. During the time she served dinner and while eating together she told me her plans. Briefly she said that she had it in her heart to begin, and so far as she could, to carry out plans for the financing of a Home for Old Folks and Orphans. To that end she went with me to the bank where she had all arrangements made to turn over to me a considerable sum of money for this purpose. I may add that at the same time she gave me a thousand dollars for the College. As yet there had been no action by the Ohio Conference to receive such funds and to meet the exigency at the next Ohio Conference the formation of a Corporation to be known as the Brethren Home for Old Folks and Orphans was authorized. I was made chairman of that committee. We incorporated as instructed. Other gifts then were added to this fund already started. These gifts came chiefly from two sources, namely from Sister Fox and her brother John Early. It was the money thus received and accumulated during many years that became the foundation of the Home.

The second chapter to this story comes in from the time that our esteemed and most liberal philanthropist among us, Brother Henry Rinehart, became interested. This led to the transfer of the Ohio Conference control of the funds so far collected to the control of the General Conference and the authorization of the building of the Home. It should be said here that at the time the Home was definitely decided upon to be built at Flora, Indiana, we had sufficient funds to make the purchase of the farm where the Home now stands. That was only a small beginning. At this point the munificent gift of Brother Rinehart made the erection of the Home possible. I need only to add that the Trustees accepted the offered support of Brother Rinehart very cheerfully and with gratitude. Brother Rinehart made the offer of his support entirely unsolicited on the part of any member of the Board and, so far as we know, of any one else. It was his own carefully thought out plan and when he was ready he came forward of his own accord with his support. We really owe the Brethren Home now to three chief donors and supporters, namely, Lydia Fox, John Early and Henry Rinehart. Others have given also and we are most grateful to all of them. A considerable amount of the money for buildings and equipment has been given on the Annuity plan. So long as these donors live we are under obligation to pay them a stipulated rate of interest. However it should be remembered that this alone has made the Home possible.

I could write much more as the story is an interesting one. But for this time what has been said must suffice. We do earnestly appeal to all who may read this little historical sketch to make a liberal offering for the maintenance of the Home and for the payment of the annuity interest charges to those who have made the Home possible.

We invite any one who can do so to visit the Home at Flora. When you plan to do so write the Superintendent. Pray for all who are entrusted with the responsibility of the administration of the home and its affairs.

Ashland, Ohio.

One Thing I Do

By J. L. Bowman

What a wonderful impress the apostle Paul left upon the hearts, minds, and literature of his age! His wonderful messages live today and re-enact themselves in the church life of this generation. His marvelous power and keen insight into the existing conditions of his own day and into conditions such as they exist today gave him, and still give him, such a grip upon the hearts and minds of men as few men ever attain but large numbers earnestly covet. To project truth twenty centuries in advance of your day is no small achievement. These truths that Paul proclaimed so many years ago have the vigor and virility of youth. Masses are moved and swayed by the influence of these truths today. Men love the stirring sentences that fell from his lips so many years ago.

Paul's words serve as a timely New Year's resolution for the whole church. If I had the ear of the entire church and was asked to give them a message for the New Year I should unhesitatingly say, One thing let us do this year. Let us harness all our forces. Let one thing be pre-eminent in our church life this year. Let us focus upon one object. Let us stop our fussing and fretting and fuming and getting nowhere. Let us all pull at the same time and in the same direction. Let our object be for this year, "For Christ and the church."

The past with its mistakes and failures is gone and beyond recall. Christ never meant that his church should be the weak, divided, crippled institution that confronts the twentieth century. He did mean and he did say that his church should possess power, power to cope with, and to settle the most vexed questions of this age. And by the way, the real live question in this age is, How can we bring the unchurched masses to the church? Go after them. If the church gets awake and stops wasting precious time, and gets a vision of her God-given opportunities, and unless she lengthens her cords and strengthens her stakes she is guilty before God for gross negligence and carelessness and must answer to him in that day. One thing, God's work must be first. What a precious harvest of souls awaits the Brethren church if she confesses and forsakes and comes back to the source of her power. If she confesses her shortcomings—and she has had them, God knows—and forsakes them and gets a vision of the Christ who stretched his hands towards Jerusalem, and said, How often would I have gathered thee together but ye would not, then he will empower her to do a work that will abide. Brethren, one thing let us do, let us build for eternity.

How many opportunities has the Brethren church had for real distinguished service but she passed them by because she did not have a vision of real service, and what it would mean to Christ and the church. Let us concentrate, dedicate and consecrate our churches and our lives anew to this one high and holy purpose this year—for Christ and the church. And as we yield, we will become a channel of blessing to multitudes of unsaved.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

Shantung Christian University has dropped the word "Christian" and changed its name to Cheeloo University, in order to comply with the registration requirements of educational institutions under the Nationalist Government of China. All missionary schools which conform to the law are really repudiating their distinctively Christian character. Not by the wildest stretch of the imagination can one see how missionary societies can be justified in investing funds, given for the spread of the gospel, in such secular enterprises.—Christian Standard.

AN INVITATION

The Pope has invited us all to come under his sheltering wing. According to the report we saw, there was invitation without concession. We think we will decline. One thing we have noticed with admiration. The Romish teachers and preachers do not quibble and evade concerning essential doctrines as so many Protestants do. They come out clearly and boldly as to the Virgin Birth and Deity of Christ, the atonement for sin in his crucifixion, and the reality of his resurrection, and we like that. They are not afraid of miracles. If Rome could eliminate tradition as authoritative, the ecclesiastical hierarchy and the mixing so deeply in civil politics, we could see more to admire. As it is, we cannot see our way clear to return to the "Mother Church" or do obeisance to Mary the "Queen of Heaven."—The Presbyterian.

JESUITS EXPELLED FROM SPAIN

It is reported that President Alcalá Zamora, of Spain, had signed a decree dissolving the Jesuit order and confiscating its property in the state. The amount of Jesuit property subject to confiscation is reported as totaling about $30,000,000, consisting principally of churches, schools and their contents. This will end about 400 years of virtually uninterrupted existence of the order in Spain, it being founded there by Ignatius Loyola, in the Sixteenth Century. They were expelled once in 1767, by Carlos III, who believed that they were inciting public disorder. This being proved false, they were permitted to return after seven years. The significant thing in connection with this is that it is in keeping with a clause in that part of the new constitution dealing with the separation of church and state providing for dissolution of any religious order which placed allegiance to the pope before allegiance to the state.—The Presbyterian Advance.

LLOYD GEORGE WELL AGAIN AND IN THE FIGHT

It is known that Lloyd George had a serious illness and a great many things happened while he was incapacitated. But he has come back and is putting in telling strokes for the success of the Disarmament Conference. I could wish he were more optimistic; but his plain words are like hammer strokes, the kind we believe ought to be spoken. Hear him:

If some statesman at the conference shows the courage and plain-spokenness to shake the nations out of their cocoon of humbug and equivocation and forces them to face the facts, something may be achieved to lay the foundation for true progress in disarmament at a later stage.

Immediate results would not be obtained and much unpleasantness would be generated. But facts which are now suppressed under the shining tarpaulin of politeness would be exposed to view and public opinion everywhere would have a chance of operating on right lines.

Otherwise, I fear the results of this conference may only give final proof to the charges of bad faith which Germany raises and warrant her in embarking upon wholesale evasion of her own disarmament obligations under the Treaty of Versailles with consequences for future civilization of a most disastrous character.—The Christian-Evangelist.

THE STATE AND HUMAN PERSONALITY

A petition urging the withdrawal of the War Department from the field of education was presented to Congress on February 2, by Dr. George A. Coe, retired professor of education at Teachers' College Columbia University, New York. It was signed by 327 college presidents, deans, professors and other educators, and it urged the withdrawal of the War Department from the field of education, and that it limit its training activities to military work.

It was charged in this petition that the Reserve Officers, Training Corps and the Citizens' Military Training Camps were being promoted as general educational agencies in violation of the national defense act and the traditional American policy of leaving education to state and local authorities. It was also charged that War Department courses were used to teach particular views on economics, peace, history, government and education.

This is one of the most important matters that has been brought to the attention of Congress for a long time. Little by little the State seems to be trying to take over every aspect of the lives of individuals and of institutions. It is time to call a halt on this, and to put the work of teaching back in its true field. The state must not destroy individual personality.—The Christian-Evangelist.

Sixth Vision, the seven "dooms"

Six is the number of the world and 666 is the number of the beast who rules the world. But it is the number of incompleteness. The beast is doomed. "The world passeth away . . . but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

Six thousand years of sin have ripened its harvest and the reaping time is imminent. "Blessed are they that are called to the marriage supper of the lamb," but woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea when the devil is left unrestrained!

The sixth vial brings the seven dooms and when they are over the Lord shall have gathered out of his kingdom all things which do offend, and it becomes the new heaven and the new earth.

Course of present age

The first four dooms are connected with the end of the present age.

1. The doom of the scarlet woman, called Babylon (Rev. 17:5, 18)," the great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth."

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

John 19:30. "It is finished."

God, our Father, had sent his Son on a special mission to this sin-cursed earth. That mission was finished. His task is clearly set forth in 1 John 2:2. "And he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Paul is declaring the same thing in Rom. 3:25. "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God." Thus, according to some scholars, Christ became the mercy-seat and also the victim whose blood was sprinkled upon it. O, what a propitiation! And, for our sins. Think of the work laid upon him by the Father—work of ages! At last that work stood out completed. Jesus looked at the perfected work, all laid down, and said, "It is finished." Just the night before, in that wonderful prayer, he said to the Father, "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

What was finished? The prophecies concerning the sufferings and death of Jesus, were finished. Peter says (1 Pet. 1:11-13) angels and even the prophets themselves desired to look into, but were unable to understand; "Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." The Old Testament prophets, centuries before, had set forth step by step the suffering the Messiah would meet in redeeming his people. But as Peter says, "the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow," puzzled them. Suffering and glory both was beyond their understanding. So, "not unto themselves, but unto us," is the explanation. He had been pierced through hands and feet. See Ps. 22:16. The mob had hurled the very words of derision that had been predicted. The soldiers had cast lots so as not to divide his garments. One prophecy yet remained: "In my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink" (Ps. 69:21). But listen! Do you hear that half suppressed cry made hoarse by approaching death? "I thirst!" Immediately a sponge is pressed to the lips of the dying Son of God, and with a cry of relief he exclaims, "It is finished." Relieved, too, that this prophecy is fulfilled.

Another thing was finished, the Mosaic Law gave way to the way of grace. The Law, as such, was no longer to be bound on the Christian. Paul says in Rom. 10:4, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." And Paul knew what to write down. He wrote to the Colossians this: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." A higher law was given, and given by One who was clothed by all authority. In sharp contrast with what had been required in the old dispensation, HE WHO WAS LAW said again, and again, "But I say unto you;" "For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Matt. 7:29). The Ten Commandments, as such, are not of grace. They have all been transferred into the New Covenant in almost their original form, with the exception of the 4th: "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." This has never been enjoined in the New Testament. The early church, therefore, did not keep the sabbath, but worshipped on the first day of the week. They celebrate the day of the "empty tomb," marking the day of the greatest victory the church of God ever knew. John, on the Isle of Patmos knew this day as the Lord's Day.

The Galatians in Paul's day forgot the supremacy of Christ's law, and would bring the Christians under the old law; but Paul stops the attempt to mix covenants in these words: "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by works of the law shall no flesh be justified" (Gal. 2:16). Legalists in our day can fare no better. Mixing covenants is like "putting new cloth on old garments," or "new wine into old bottles;" the word of Jesus for it, it will not work. And "ye are complete in him."

There is only one city that makes such a pretension and that is "The City of the Vatican," and it has made it for twelve hundred and sixty years. She sits upon the "waters" which are "peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues" (vs. 15) and rides the beast with seven heads and ten horns whose seat is on the seven hills. But the ten horns are already beginning to destroy the woman (17:16, 17) and when the day of burning comes it will be swift and terrible (18). She "sits a queen" and says "I am no widow," but when the bridegroom comes to claim his pilgrim virgin the idolatrous harlot will be desolate. Her riches will be confiscated and her tyrannical hierarchy abolished. Let the good people in her heed the Lord's call "Come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her plagues." Following this call the Lord himself rides forth from heaven with his saints to judge the nations gathered against him, deliver his people Israel and establish his kingdom (Rev. 19:11-21).

2. The beast. The four beasts of Daniel's vision (Dan. 7) are combined in the beast of Revelation (13:2). The present is heir of the past. As the scarlet woman in this way includes all false religions (as their elements are included), so the Roman beast includes the "cosmos" the world system of selfish competitive government, based upon might rather than right, and brought to a climax in the reign of the antichrist, who will be the incarnation of the whole diabolical system. Naturally it is a persecuting power for it is the contrary of the kingdom of heaven. Its doom is the lake of fire which is eternal death.

3. The false prophet. This much discussed being is thought by many to be the antichrist, typified by the little horn of Dan. 8 and 11:36-45, and identical with the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. This is only an inference, but may be correct. But Satan (the dragon) the beast and the false prophet form the unholy trinity in which the dragon usurps the place of the Father, the beast that of the Son, and the false prophet that of the Holy Spirit, while the scarlet woman usurps the place of the virgin bride of Christ. These four represent the total of the "present evil world,"—Satan the prince, and the political, moral (or immoral) and religious life. They come to their end together.

Satan is represented as having seven heads and ten horns because, being a spirit, he becomes incarnate in another,—in this case the beast, which is undoubtedly the Roman power in all its forms from its foundation to the end of the age. In the time of John five kings (forms of government) had fallen and the sixth, the imperial form, existed. This head was wounded to death in the fall of the empire, but was resurrected in the political papacy, the seventh head, which in the political empire now being revived by Mussolini, becomes the eighth, which is of the seven (Rev. 17:18-13).

The false prophet must be coeval with this resurrected head, the political papacy, and seems to me to fit in perfectly as the religious pope, who blasphemously usurps the place of the Holy Spirit, pretending infallibility and divine authority. If it seems that it is too much to make the pope the representative of the entire false trinity, it must be remembered that the triple crown he wears is the symbol of that very pretension, and the inscription upon it in Latin, "Vicarius Filii Dei"—The Vicar of the Son of God" has the numerical value 666. Filled with Satan in the end time he will fulfill all that is said of him. Some think however that the "black pope," the head of the Jesuits is the real power behind Romanism.

4. The armies of antichrist perish in the battle of Armageddon. Rev. 19: 21; Ezek. 38; Zech. 12, etc.

The end of the kingdom age

5. Following Armageddon comes the repentance and restoration of Israel and the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth, during which time Satan is bound, but at the close he is loosed and gathers the armies of Gog and Magog which meet their doom by fire.

6. Then Satan himself is finally consigned to the lake of fire (20:10).

7. Finally comes the judgment of the unbelieving dead. Their doom is the second or spiritual death, separation from God (John 8:21-24). This is exactly what they so long have persisted in choosing. Let those who believe in a future repentance be warned. Character tends to become fixed. The longer one continues in sin the less likely he is to repent and the less able to leave it.

This brings us to the glorious seventh vision, the seven new things.

Are Mission Boards Worth While?

By the Rev. Arthur Judson Brown, D.D.,

Secretary Emeritus of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

World evangelization being the supreme work of the Church, the method of administration should be commensurate with the task to be performed. Such a work cannot be done properly by individuals or congregations acting separately. It is too vast, the distance too great, the single act too small. Local churches do not have the experience in dealing with missionary problems or the knowledge of details necessary for the proper conduct of such an enterprise. Moreover, the individual may die or lose his money. The single church under another pastor may become indifferent or discouraged. In any case, the work would lack stability. It would be fitful, sporadic, too dependent upon accidental knowledge or temporary emotion. A chance newspaper article or a visit from some enthusiastic missionary might direct a disproportionate stream of gifts to one field, while others perhaps more important would be neglected. The wise expenditure of large sums of money in distant lands, the checks and safeguards essential to prudent control, the equitable distribution of workers and forms of work, the proper balancing of interests between widely scattered and isolated points, the formulation of principles of mission policy—these require a strong administrative board.

The Christian missionary campaign is spiritual warfare on a vast scale, and it cannot be adequately prosecuted by individuals operating independently, however conscientious. There must be a central organization with breadth of plan, unity of movement, and persistence of purpose. A local church or conference can, with comparative ease, supervise the work within its bounds and therefore under its immediate oversight; but foreign missionary work is remote, in many different languages, and among diverse peoples. It is a varied and complex work, including not only churches but day-schools, boarding schools, industrial school, normal schools, colleges, universities, medical and theological schools, inquirers' classes, hospitals, dispensaries, translating, publishing and distributing books and tracts, the purchase and care of property, the health and homes and furloughs of missionaries, fluctuating currencies of many kinds, negotiations with governments, and a mass of details little understood by the average home congregation. Problems and interrelations with other work and workers and questions of mission policy are involved, which, from the nature of the case, are entirely beyond the experience of the minister of a home church, and which call for an expert knowledge only possible to one who devotes his entire time to their acquisition. Missionary work has long since passed the experimental stage, and an apparently simple question may have bearings that even friends do not suspect. The experiment of having each state control its own regiments in a national war has been tried, and with such disastrous results that it is not likely to be repeated.

It is neither safe nor sensible for the Church to leave such a large and important undertaking to individuals or to local congregations. The whole Church must take up this matter. It must form a responsible agency, whose outlook is over the whole field and through which individuals and churches can work together and to the best advantage. There must be some lens which shall gather up the scattered rays of local effort and focus them where they are needed; some institution whose stability will not be imperilled by changes in personnel.

Recognizing these needs, each of the leading denominations has constituted a Board of Foreign Missions as the main channel through which it may unitedly, wisely, and systematically carry on this work for humanity and for God. These mission boards are composed not only of leading clergymen, but include bank presidents, successful merchants and lawyers, directors or large corporations, and women of eminent ability and devotion. They are trusted leaders in other spheres and their judgment is of no less value when they deal with the extension of the Kingdom of God. These men and women devote much time and labor to the affairs of the boards, leaving their own work, often at great inconvenience, to attend board meetings, in which they earnestly and prayerfully consider the work committed to their care. The churches owe much to their boards, which are unselfishly administering their great trust. Though they make occasional mistakes, their loyalty, devotion, and intelligence are a reasonable guarantee that they will wisely serve the cause that is as dear to them as to others.

In the handling of missionary money great care is taken by these mission boards. Some years ago a Buffalo banker and a Pittsburgh merchant made a thorough examination of the financial methods of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, and bore "testimony to the complete and business-like methods that are followed in the office management, which we believe are fully up to the best practice in the leading financial and industrial institutions of the country, and give assurance that the business entrusted to this office is promptly, efficiently, and economically conducted." No doubt the same is true of other boards. The editor of a leading religious weekly declared that "no trust company handles more money at a less expense, with a smaller percentage of loss, than the benevolent agencies of the Church."

Since the members and officers of the boards are or have been pastors and contributing members of churches, they know that the money they receive includes not only the gifts of the rich, but the self-sacrifice of the poor. They regard these gifts as a sacred trust to be expended with more than ordinary care.

There are, of course, necessary expenditures for administration. A board must have offices and facilities for doing its work efficiently. The churches wish to have their missionaries adequately supported for a life work, so that an administrative agency must be maintained commensurate with the obligations assumed. Still, the proportionate cost of administration of denominational boards is low. The percentage varies, as some have free rentals and unpaid agents, and the cost of stimulating interest in the churches is not always included in administrative expense. In general, the cost of administration proper, compared with the total expense of maintaining the work, ranges from four to seven per cent. That is, it takes but little more than the value of a foreign postage stamp to send a missionary dollar to Asia or Africa. What mercantile concern, doing a great business and requiring the services of a large number of persons scattered over the world, can show as low a percentage? Dr. Henry Van Dyke once made inquiries of several large corporations, railway, manufacturing, and mercantile, and found that their average administrative cost was 12.75 per cent; in one establishment it rose to twenty per cent.

It is more difficult than many might imagine to avoid debt. The world-wide work, being conducted on so large a scale and over so vast a territory, cannot be hurriedly adjusted to financial changes in the United States. A board is responsible for maintaining the work on a stable basis and cannot radically change its program without warning. It operates in distant lands, some so remote that several months are required for the interchange of letters. Plans and pledges must be made far in advance. Moreover, missionaries are sent to a distant field for a life service and cannot be summarily discharged as a merchant may discharge a clerk. The board reserves the right of recall, but should not exercise this right save for serious cause. Foreign missionaries are working among people of a different race, often unsympathetic, and must receive their salaries promptly. The home churches do not want to send a "forlorn hope" into Asia and Africa and then desert it. This policy, however, involves financial risks to the boards because of the uncertainty of income. Churches do not supply the funds in advance. Most of them do not even make pledges. The result is that the boards must often borrow money to meet their responsibilities, especially since many local church treasurers do not forward offerings till the last days of the fiscal year.

WORLD'S CONVENTION PREPARATIONS IN BRAZIL

Influential leaders compose the committee in Brazil that is making local preparations for the Eleventh Convention of the World's Sunday School Association which will be held in Rio de Janeiro, July 25-31, 1932. Rev. Herbert S. Harris is General Secretary of the Brazil Sunday School Union. Dr. Benjamin Hunnicutt is Executive Secretary of the Convention Committee. Many centers in the various states in Brazil are being visited by the secretaries in advancing Sunday school work in general and Convention plans in particular. Regional meetings were held in Parana and all the principal Sunday schools of the State of Rio Grande do Sul were visited. Bahia, Recife (Pernambuco) and Sao Paulo were also included. As a result of these contacts many are registering as delegates to "Rio-1932."

Missionaries throughout South America have recently received a letter informing them of plans for this Convention. They were asked to join in daily prayer for the Convention as is done by the workers in the office in Rio de Janeiro. Many local church members and Convention officials attend regularly if not daily. A similar daily prayer service is held at the office of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

Formal announcement has been made that the Mayor of Rio de Janeiro has granted the free use of the Municipal Theatre for the general meetings of the Convention next July. The Minister of Education has also been gracious in allocating the Escola de Dellas Artes (eight large rooms) for the exhibit which is always a leading feature of a World's Sunday School Convention.

JESUS RAISES LAZARUS FROM THE DEAD

(Lesson for February 28)

Lesson Text: John 11:32-44; Golden Text: John 11:25

MONDAY

The Death of Lazarus. John 11:1-16

There are many great lessons that might be drawn from this passage. In verse 5 we are plainly told that Jesus loved Mary and Martha, and Lazarus. So confident of Jesus' love were the sisters that when Lazarus was taken seriously sick the message they sent to Jesus was simply this: "He whom thou lovest is sick!" Yet Jesus tarried and permitted one whom he loved to die. Obviously, it was not that Jesus did not care: he cared so much that he was willing to risk his own life that he might restore his friend. Is there not a real lesson here for us all? Perhaps that sorrow or affliction that has come into our own lives is also "for the glory of God," if we will but trust our great Friend!

TUESDAY

Jesus' Conversation with Martha. John 11:17-30

We have heard much about "busy Marthas," as though she had always been too busy to learn of Jesus as he might. However, we can only admire her firm confidence and faith in her Master, as evidenced here. Her statement to Jesus, in v. 5, I believe, was not all by way of upbraiding Jesus, but simply an expression of her trust in his great power. Verses 25 and 26 are among the most precious of all verses to us. Evidently they were precious to Martha too, although we know that she fell far short of realizing what Jesus was about to do, even as we fail by far to realize all that God will certainly do for them that love him. Read 1 Cor. 2:9.

WEDNESDAY

The Raising of Lazarus. John 11:31-44

There are many points here that give us some little insight into the love of God as shown through our Savior. He deeply loved Lazarus, and his love was apparent even to the unbelieving multitudes. He was deeply sympathetic with sorrow, and when he saw his friends sorrowing, he was himself greatly troubled, and sorrowed with them; there are few verses more touching than v. 35. Even today we must still marvel at the mighty power that could call the dead to life! How we ought to love and serve a God of such love and power!

THURSDAY

The Raising of the Widow's Son. Luke 7:11-17

A young preacher, having his first funeral sermon to preach, thought he would see just what Jesus said and did on such occasions; but as he read through the various accounts he realized that Jesus broke up every funeral procession he encountered! And how we look forward to the time when he shall finally and forever break up all funerals, and death shall be no more!

FRIDAY

Spiritual Death. Rom. 8:5-13

A scientist recently stated that man might live forever if it were not for his mental processes. The statement is at least suggestive of v. 6, that "to be carnally minded is death." Of course, spiritual death is meant, but we need to remember that one may be very dead and still walk about in the flesh. Our only hope in such cases is to send a message to him who can restore the dead.

SATURDAY

The New Life. John 3:1-16

When Jesus restored Lazarus, he had them loose him from the old trappings of the grave, so that Lazarus might be entirely free. It is even so in the spiritual world. Jesus taught Nicodemus that he must be born again, and later records indicate that he subsequently was born again, and was as fully freed from his old life as was Lazarus. And just as Lazarus must have rejoiced in his fully restored strength and vigor, so did Nicodemus, and countless thousands since, rejoice in their new-found life in Jesus.

SUNDAY

Victory Over Death. 1 Cor. 15:50-58

Perhaps the best part of it all, as we read of Lazarus and the widow's son, is that we too may have perfect confidence that Christ will some day raise us all, and our beloved dead, from the grave. If it were not for this hope we should of all men be most miserable. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory over sin and death through our Lord Jesus Christ. As for our duty to him, in conclusion, read v. 58.

5. "Liberty vs. Laxity"

"Are you a Republican or Democrat, Pat?" asked his employer one day. "Sure, I don't know, sir," was the reply; "but I am agin the government ivery toime." There is a great deal of religion in this world that is just like Pat's politics. Having no definite belief or principle of its own, it delights in attacking all creeds at once under the banner of "liberalism."

When a man says of himself, "I am a liberal," beware of him as you value your peace. There is no bigotry under the sun so hopelessly bigoted as the bigotry of a self-styled liberal. Thomas Paine and Robert Ingersoll were immeasurably more bigoted than John Calvin and others of his class whom they delighted to ridicule. And there is more tolerance today in the so-called liberal churches than in those which they dub narrow and conservative.

Nothing is more common at the present time than to confound liberality or intolerance with indefiniteness. To have a clearly defined creed or a fixed standard of action is commonly mistaken for narrowness or bigotry. To measure one's life and conduct by the plumbline of unvarying moral principle is looked upon as old-fashioned. The clamor of the age is for liberality, progress, tolerance. And we are very much afraid of the word intolerance.

Now spiritual breath or intolerance does not imply utter mistiness of spiritual vision.

It does not involve ignorance or indefiniteness. Least of all does it necessitate the absolute lack of a creed. Every man who has a mind and who uses it to think with, must have a creed. It may have never been put into words, it may not accord with any of the accepted symbols of the church; but it must exist in his own mind. And he is the truly liberal man who, having a very definite creed of his own, can be perfectly tolerant of his neighbor who has a creed equally definite, but different. By the same token, moral breadth does not imply laxity of moral standards, nor carelessness in their application. It rather implies strictness toward self with the utmost charity toward others. It uses the plumbline in its own building, not to show the poor workmanship of its neighbors.

That is a spurious liberality that stultifies the mind with unbeliefs, and that weakens the conscience with low standards of life in the name of charity. By all means, let this be the age of liberality and tolerance; let us pride ourselves in the fact that it is such; but let it be a true liberality, not an empty sound. Let it be the positive growth of Christian charity, not the negative drift of an unchristian carelessness.

Do not let overindulgence dull the keen edge of your mind.

Money! Money! Money!

By Rev. Harry Thomas Stock

The use of our money and the division of our time constitute two of the most practical tests of our Christianity. They also determine the future course of our lives, whether we are going to be spendthrifts, misers, or good stewards of the family income, whether we are going to make the most of our abilities or waste our days on unimportant matters. Life habits are determined during youthful days. Most of us already have fixed habits of spending time and money; let us examine them; if they are good, they should be re-enforced; if they are bad, they should be changed.

1. What are our guiding principles? The money problem resolves itself into four major divisions: getting, spending, saving, and giving. Our life course depends upon our standard of success. Shall we try to get all that we can in any way that we can, or is there a Christian principle that should guide us? The happiness of our homes (of our wives, husbands, children) will depend in no small degree upon the habits of spending that we are now developing. When should we begin to save money? How can we save? To what shall we give, and to what extent? These problems, and others of a similar nature, must be determined in the light of Christian principles.

2. How much do we give to the church? Young people frequently complain that the church is "always asking us for money." The church ought not "always" to be asking for money. It should expect gifts from its members and friends; it should make its case definite, and should concentrate its appeals. The young people should give regularly; they should understand the objects for which their gifts are needed; their contribution should be voluntary and heartily given; and it should represent a definite proportion of the income. They usually agree with this statement. In summer-conference courses they themselves recommend amounts or percentages which encourage the adults (or shame them!) But their practice at home often does not correspond with the theory they advance. Both for the development of right habits among youth and for the sake of the local budget every church should give sympathetic and intelligent guidance to its young people in the formulation of a policy of giving.

3. Would you like to have an efficiency expert check up on the business methods of your young people's group? You ought to be willing to have one do it. It would be a good plan to have such a person come in and tell of some of the ways in which your business affairs should be conducted. This would involve a regular method of collecting funds, a budget according to which money is expended, careful bookkeeping, a regular audit of your books, fixed business and committee sessions, meetings conducted in an efficient way. Many of our church groups should be ashamed of the shabby way in which financial and business matters are conducted. And a guilty conscience should produce "fruit worthy of repentance."—Young People's Bulletin.

out of its case that expensive instrument the microscope. "What a waste of money!" someone may say. "Better to put our money into the direct preaching of the Gospel!" But the medical missionary remembers that the Lord said, "As ye teach, heal." The microscope finds that the trouble is not malaria. He discovers Leishman Donovan bodies; and so he knows the child has kala-azar, and if it had remained in the vermin infected hut, whole villages might have succumbed to the deadly epidemic. Over 90% of these cases left untreated would have died. Because the microscope revealed the nature of the disease the child must have not quinine for malaria, but antimony for kala-azar. So the villages are saved. To what purpose? To hear the Gospel from the lips of the doctor, his colleague or both.

If the doctor has no hospital he cares for his patients as best he can. Sometimes he is obliged to leave them in the native village in spite of teeming vermin and rapidly spreading infection. Sometimes he brings them to a hastily improvised hut, the kindly proffered home of a native Christian, or to his own veranda. But this course may expose the native Christian and family to infection which may be fatal. The missionary's child, like an exotic plant, often succumbs in the tropics to diseases to which the native children show a marvelous resistance. When there is no hospital, the effort to care for a patient on the station may result, according to the method used, in the loss of the patient and consequently reflections upon the work; in the loss of the life of a valuable native worker, or even in the death of a member of the missionary's family.

If he has a hospital and equipment, he may lack nurses and other trained assistants. So his time is consumed with complications which should be shared by others. He may have the responsibility both for the operation and for the anesthetic; or, the ordeal safely over, the patient succumbs to a complication which an untrained colleague failed to recognize.

If you could come into our churches in this dark land, we might say to you as the congregation files slowly out, "Do you see that man there? He had sleeping sickness in its worst form. He was a focus of infection and doomed to a lingering death. But God has blessed the administration of tryparsamid and he is healed."

Come home with us to lunch and we will tell you the story of B., a former polygamist who gave his heart to Jesus Christ and who passed the great test by the surrender of his supernumerary wives. Yet after his conversion and baptism, there clung to him that dread disease syphilis. He grew worse in those early days when we had neither hospital, nor nurse, nor satisfactory equipment. Then one day the long ordered Neosalvarsam arrived and, praying to God to help, we gave him one-half a dose. He could neither walk or even turn his head. The next morning, returning from an emergency case, we were asked by a colleague if we had seen B. "No, but we are going at once," we responded breathlessly, believing the end to be not far away. "Wait," replied our fellow missionary, "B. was here to see you. He walked all the way. He feels so well, and is praising God for this wonderful deliverance." The reaction is more than we can bear. Surely God has worked wondrously in our midst!—Missionary Review of the World.

Why Medical Missions in Africa?

By Florence N. Gribble, M.D.

If John 3:16 is justly and properly considered the world's golden text, then 1 John 3:16 may be considered the golden text of the Church. "Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." If "the brethren" include those for whom Christ died and who would become his true brethren if they had an opportunity, then an illuminating ray to one called to be a medical missionary is found in the 17th verse.

"But whoso hath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?"

None who have not seen with their own eyes the extent of the need in non-Christian lands can fathom the depth of the extremity of these sufferers.

For nearly twenty years a pioneer medical missionary in Africa, no physical need has made upon my heart a more profound impression than the unspeakable filth and squalor in which the heathen native lives. Crawl on your hands and knees through the low aperture which forms the only door into the hut of the East African Mukikuyu, and avoid, if you can the filth and soot. You do not find a stool or even a mat on which to sit but you must stoop for volumes of smoke have no other exit than the interstices in the grass which forms the roof. Your brother in need is dressed in an old blanket. His wife wears only the skins of animals. Layers of filth are mixed with daubs of red ochre and castor oil—not only on their skins and in their hair—but on their meagre clothing as well. The light is too dim to see the abounding vermin, the well-known carriers of disease. A sick child may be lying close to the fire upon the filthy floor. Here the medical missionary has an effective stepping stone to present the Gospel of Christ.

Happy is the medical missionary who has a simple but sanitary hospital to which he may remove the sick children. With simple faith those children may accept the Lord Jesus, daily preached and practiced in the wards, and may carry the story of Jesus to their parents.

The sick man, woman, or child whom we remove from the hut to the hospital may have any one of a variety of diseases. We may find liver and spleen enormously enlarged, limbs emaciated, vital processes arrested, death imminent. Then must come

West African Folk Stories

By Mrs. Orville D. Jobson

1. Farmer Mybrow and the Fairies

(When Brother and Sister Orville D. Jobson were in the States on their furlough, Mrs. Jobson was frequently asked for African stories. She promised to write some after her return to the field. The following is her first story, which she got from a West African Folk Book. Some that she sends will be gotten direct from the natives, as she goes among them with the story of the Gospel. She promises to send us at least one a month. We shall be glad to hear from any of our little readers, telling how they enjoy these stories.—THE EDITOR.)

Farmer Mybrow was one day looking around for a suitable piece of land to convert into a field. He wished to grow corn and potatoes. He discovered a fine spot close to a corn field which latter was the home of some fairies. He set to work at once to prepare the field.

Having sharpened his great knife he began to cut down the bushes. No sooner had he touched one than he heard a voice say, "Who is there, cutting down the bushes?" Mybrow was too much surprised to answer. The question was repeated. This time the farmer thought it must be one of the fairies, and so replied, "I am Mybrow, come to prepare the field." Fortunately for him the fairies were in good humor. He heard one say, "Let us all help Farmer Mybrow to cut down the bushes." The rest agreed. To Mybrow's great delight the bushes were all rapidly cut down, with very little trouble on his part. He returned home very well pleased with his work, having resolved to keep the field a secret even from his wife.

Early in January when it was time to burn the dry brush he set off to his field, one afternoon with the means of making a fire. Hoping to have the fairies assist once more, he intentionally struck the trunk of a tree as he passed. Immediately came the question, "Who is there striking the stump?" He promptly replied, "I am Mybrow, come to burn down the bush." Accordingly, the dried bushes were all burned down, and the field left clear in less time than it takes to tell it.

Next day a similar thing happened when Mybrow came to chop up the fire wood and clear the field for digging. In a very short time the fire wood was piled ready while the field was bare.

So it went on. The field was divided into two parts—one for corn and one for potatoes. In all the preparations—digging, sowing, planting, the fairies gave great assistance. Still the farmer had managed to keep the whereabouts a secret from his wife and children.

The soil was carefully prepared. The crops promised to be good. Mybrow visited them from time to time, and congratulated himself on the splendid harvest he would have.

One day, while corn and potatoes were still in their green and milky state, Mybrow's wife came to him. She wished to know where his field lay, that she might go and get some firewood from it. At first he refused to tell her, but she being very persistent, finally succeeded in obtaining the information—but on one condition. She must not answer any questions that should be asked her. This she readily promised, and set off for the field. When she arrived there she was utterly amazed at the wealth of the corn and potatoes.

She had never seen such crops. The corn looked most tempting, being still in the milky state, so she plucked an ear. While doing so she heard a voice say, "Who is there breaking the corn?" "Who dares ask me such a question?" she replied angrily, quite forgetting her husband's command.

Going further into the field of corn she plucked another ear. "Who is there picking the corn?" came the question again. "It is I, Mybrow's wife. This is my husband's field and I have a right to pick my corn." Out came the fairies. "Let us all help Mybrow's wife to pluck her corn and potatoes," said they. Before the frightened woman could say a word the fairies had all set to work with a will, and the corn and potatoes lay useless on the ground. Being all green and unripe the harvest was now utterly spoiled. The farmer's wife wept bitterly, but to no purpose. She returned slowly home, not knowing what to say to her husband about such a terrible catastrophe. She decided to keep silence about the matter.

Accordingly, next day the poor man set off gleefully to his field to see how his crops were going on. His anger and dismay may be imagined when he saw his field a complete ruin. All his work had been ruined through his wife's forgetfulness of her promise.

THE SOUTH SEAS TODAY

Modern missions scored their first conspicuous success in the evangelization of the islands of the Pacific, and it was this victory which encouraged our fathers to send missionaries to larger and more difficult lands. In recent years Micronesia has not loomed so largely on the horizon of the missionary-minded. But the South Sea Islands are still there, and retain much of their early charm. After a recent trip through the islands, Harold W. Hackett of the Japan Mission writes: "From the time of entering the islands until leaving them I was constantly aware of the strong position held by the American Board as the result of its more than eighty years of service. Because it has had no power of government it is regarded as a trusted referee and a protector of the best interests of the people. During the many interviews which I had with the native people of the islands, almost invariably the first question asked was, 'Is the American Board going to leave us?' Usually this was followed by a plea for more missionaries. I never expected to see a large area where almost the entire population was nominally Christian. The social life is built around the church. The people look to the missionaries for guidance as though they were father and mother. The native of highest social, religious, and civic influence on the various islands is the teacher who has been trained in the mission school and sent out to be the shepherd of the people. He conducts the religious services, marriages and burials, teaches the little island school, and is general adviser to the people. We might expect that in eighty years of work a strong native church would have been built up. There are many strong congregations, and the people give most generously of their time, labor, native food, material, and money, but there is not yet a sufficiently trained leadership. These people have made great strides in eighty years, but we should remember that they started from savagery. To conserve the work of the past we have a responsibility for the future."—John R. Scottford in "The Congregationalist."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

LANARK, ILLINOIS

It has been some time since the Evangelist has been offered anything from the Lanark church correspondent—not because of lack of interest, or of lack of things to write about, but thought best perhaps that I should not ask to receive too often space that should be available for something more important. We are still alive; the depression or any other CREATURE will find it impossible to stop the church. So long as God and his Son remain on the throne the Church will go from victory to victory, or from conquest to victory, if you please. Heaven is for US; therefore Hell cannot prevail against US. Organized mobs of infidels and atheists can howl and take their prey, but they never have taken, nor can they take of God's ELECT as their spoil! We'll stay here, pray, work and trust, and endure until that DAY when God shall again send his Son, who will say to US (his church), "Come With Me!" Then the conquest will have ended in an unprecedented victory.

I'm glad (and I would say this for all of God's children) to belong to an order which is guaranteed victory against all odds. We read in 1 John 4:4, "He that is in you is greater than he that is in the world." I believe I'm not misjudging or overestimating when I tell the churches that we are accomplishing more in the present crisis, proportionately, than we had accomplished in more favorable times (if there have been such times). In this I'm inclined to doubt my own statement, for, I believe that God has made it more favorable now for us by making a test of us, so that our reward or, rather his reward, might be proportionately greater.

I believe one needs to stretch his optimism out of its religious altitude to see that all church activities are moving forward with as much confidence, and success, as at any time one hundred years this side of Pentecost (numbers not considered). While apparently fewer are being converted, it is evident that they have a great degree of fire, or, as a brother puts it in the EVANGELIST, "a Hot Heart." It must be that, or it will be COLD; or, LUKEWARM, which is worse.

It is but logical to conclude that opposition NOW as ever tends to call forth from the church the highest possible degree of spiritual service for humanity. Sermons are as scriptural, preachers as earnest and fearless, and, in the main as heart-cultured as any recorded since one hundred years after Pentecost.

And now I know some of my brethren will disagree with me on the statement I make without reserve or qualification, viz., that young church-folks are advancing in church work far beyond that known in the days of us who agree with, or deny, the statement. If you think I'm wrong, I ask your pardon, but my conviction stands. I am amazed to know of the high standard of the work accomplished in Christian Endeavor societies; also the effective work shown, and the very commendable attitude taken toward ending the possibilities of wars. While acting in the defense of self, home and nation, or nations, in every way, they are likewise standing in self-defense against sin, their chief enemy.

Our pastor, Brother Grisso, will be engaged in an evangelistic effort at Fort Scott, Kansas, the forepart of March. Hope with us that he finds a ready field to harvest for his Master, and that upon his return he shall find that his flock has been faithful. The church and Sunday school forces are combining their efforts to vitalize the community, so as to enable all to see that the church stands dauntless, though all else fail.

Brother and Sister Grisso have been instrumental in organizing a splendid and forward-going Christian Endeavor Society. This, we are glad to say, fills a long felt need. Pray with us for its continued success; it's one of the biggest things we have.

H. A. GOSSARD, Church Correspondent.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving along with some increasing interest. It is evident, to us on the field, that our meeting a year ago under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller is still bearing fruit. Also the district conference which convened here in October has furnished much inspiration. Our people are still talking about how they enjoyed the visitors and delegates in their homes as well as the services of the sessions of conference.

The "burning of the mortgage" was a wonderful thing to behold, and now our people are saying, and we can announce to the brotherhood: THERE IS NO DEBT ON THE FORT SCOTT PROPERTY.

If this would not cause a group of people to rejoice, I do not know what it would take to stir them. Godfrey is a mission point five miles out of the city, on a good road, where I have been preaching every two weeks for some time, but without missing any regular service at the church. In January I conducted a revival there and as a result have received eight into the church by baptism and have four more to be baptized in the near future. Of course these are received into the membership of the city church.

We are scheduled to begin our revival here on February 21st, and we are to have Brother C. C. Grisso with us to take charge on the 23rd and we are trying to have everything ready for a great and successful time under his leadership.

We are conscious of our need of Divine leadership, therefore we ask an interest in the prayers of all. Thanks to every one who has had a part in making this work what it is, and as there is so much yet to be done, we crave your prayerful interest and consideration.

L. G. WOOD.

TRAVEL FLASHES

En Route

It may be that some are not interested in what I do; but a good many are. The one thing that had been longest planned in my activities for this year was the attendance at the International Council of Religious Education which meets yearly in Chicago. Hence, the greater part of this week has been spent in the journey to, and around Chicago. Leaving home, our first stop was at Gary, Indiana, where temporarily resides our daughter Dorcas, well-known to our people through her service of song with her father in evangelism and at National Conferences. I was glad to find her busily and contentedly engaged in furthering her studies with the famous Sacerdote who professes a very high regard for her talent in, and devotion to the art of music. I was glad to find her well and improving with each visit I make. With her, I journeyed on to the great windy city of where she went to her studies and I, to the meeting of the editors of Sunday School Literature from the distant parts of our country, but mainly from St. Louis, Nashville, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and such smaller places as Ashland, Ohio. Very interesting and illuminating were the sessions. Men who had like problems and tasks struggled together to know how best to get across to their constituencies, the living lessons of the great revelation in the Word of God.

A Very Big Thing

One unacquainted with the organization of this affair would not suspect how complicated it is. Once each day, all "sections" came together for a worship period and then they all separated to their various tasks with sometimes speakers and sometimes discussions. These are some of the "section" meetings: Children's Work, City Executives, Directors' International and National Executives', Leadership Training, Missionary Education, Negro Work, Pastors', Professors', Publishers', research, Young People's Work, and several more.

At once, any one can see that any people who separate themselves from such a meeting is losing much. One does not need to agree with everything that is offered nor with every speech to get good from such association and serious study. The promotion of religion and especially Christianity is more and more a problem; and it would be silly folly to say that one could not learn much from any meeting of serious-minded people attempting its propagation.

Housing

The magnitude of a modern hotel (The meetings were at the Stevens) is known only when one finds how places for all sorts of meetings are within its bounds—under one single roof. One might have been there the entire eight days of the sessions and never been compelled to go out into the city.

Several conventions are usually going at the same time in this hotel.

My meetings were with the editors. Problems attacked were, "Peace and War," "Prohibition," "Curriculum and Future Courses," "A Study of all kinds of Courses." Reports on the different kinds of courses, whether they are growing or decreasing in use, "Editors and Christian Education of Youth," and several others. It must be easy to see that such studies are vital to the knowledge of any one grappling with these problems.

Besides, there was the splendid fellowship and acquaintanceship that one feels is necessary to successful work. Whatever our denominational affiliations, there was the common tie that bound us—we were all editors trying to get the Word of God to those who come to study in our Sunday schools. Your editor, less than two years in this service, sat a delighted pupil with those who had met problems for half a century. All must know that that was worth while.

Friends

Besides, we had the opportunity of renewing friendships with those whom we had known for many years. One such was the visit with Dr. P. B. Fitzwater, dean of Moody with whom we stayed all night. He has helped me with constructive suggestions which will be noticed in future quarters.

Let me say that the general spirit of the meeting was very good. I did not get the impression in these meetings that the officers were trying to promote any sort of theology. It had to do with methods. Hugh Magill, the International Secretary, said that was not in their scope: their duty stopped before theology put in its claim. He said just what I said a few weeks ago in my argument for the International lessons: these leaders of all denominations together, do not get what a single one desires, in full. It is the composite result of all the leaders together just as most things Christian have to be.

No republican gets all he wants in politics, neither does any democrat. All movements are the result of give and take. So is the common lesson course which becomes the International Lessons. When the course is offered, it is the business of the denomination to interpret it. Strange as it may seem, some Brethren would like us to allow some other denomination to make an interpretation than our own. Some actually do use and promote the sale of others' materials.

Home

Home is a wonderful place to be. Friends, loved ones, neighbors' all help to make home and home is next to heaven. Real love and sympathy and friendship is found only when we return home.

CHARLES A. BAME.

SIMPLE FUNERALS, OR NONE AT ALL, SAYS DR. HARKNESS

Christ was buried without a funeral. The only time he had anything to do with one was when he broke up the funeral procession at Nain and restored the widow's son to life. It may be that "the last sad rites" were as distasteful to him as to Dr. Samuel Harkness, who inveighs against them in a recent issue of Scribner's.

Dr. Harkness, who is minister at the Congregational Community Church, Winnetka, Illinois, says that he has a "flutter of panic" whenever he is asked to conduct a funeral service. He has visions of the grotesque and nauseating antics of commercialized undertakers, endless and useless rites, parading secret societies, long-winded preachers presuming on an emotional audience, gorgeous and wasteful displays of flowers, hollow grief, and curious crowds "viewing the remains."

Describing a service he recently attended he says:

"The drama which had been woven around their sorrow during the last hour and a half is still too vivid. The minister had read from the Scriptures the usual brave words. With no thought of the circumstances in which they were first spoken, he had blotted out their beauty and adventure with a fog of tonal mannerisms so that they were as dull and pontifical as himself. Then with an untutored reserve for the phrase, he had invited the assemblage to prayer. Medieval theology and modern vulgarity had blended in the songs. And the liberties taken so cocksurely with the august mystery of death in the minister's address had added to the sense of unreality. But the climax of imbecility, from which the thoughts of the family most wished to recoil, had to do with the parade by the open casket.

"It is no wonder that those facing such a slow distillation of agony invariably say to ministers: 'Please make your service as brief and impersonal as possible. But the lure of an audience with many strange faces in it is difficult to resist. Even though eulogies are passing out of funeral procedure, lengthy extracts of poetry and Scripture still obtain. And many ministers have simply transferred their panegyric gifts to a written prayer which they read with subdued gusto. I listened to such an invocation recently which blew like sweetened wind for twenty minutes through the gloomy nave of a crowded church."

Then he concludes:

"Is it beyond reason to ask that funerals be no longer open to the public, but restricted to such relatives and friends as may be desired? That music of saccharine flavor and unsound speculation be barred? That flowers be sent to hospitals—better, milk and toys to day nurseries—in memoriam, with a note to the family that it has been done? That ministers omit fulsome eulogies and sublime guesses and confine themselves to the reading of an appropriate Scripture or poem and prayer? That cremation become the method whereby the body is re-identified with the earth? And that undertakers be restricted to the care of the body and have no part in the service? Revolutionary? Yes. And civilized. The experiences of a bereaved family ought not to deepen the wound of their sorrow."

This plea for simple funerals or none at all seems to me very well made. And this further word might be added: Christian ministers ought to see to it that the all-pervading spirit of the occasion is in harmony with Christ's teaching and not a combination of pagan practice and Christian words! —James DeForest Murch in "Christian Standard."

A CLOSE-UP OF CANADIAN "GOVERNMENT CONTROL"

"Perhaps the main difference between so-called 'Government Control' in Canada and Prohibition in the United States, is, that across the border, brewers and distillers protested by law, have just one steady pay-as-you-go customer, the Government, while here in the U. S. A. the liquor makers deprived of legal protection, have to get along with furtive distribution to the precarious individual trade," declared Alonzo L. Baker, editor of Signs of the Times, after a two-months' trip through the Dominion, in an interview with a representative of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation, in Chicago.

"Mr. Baker who has completed a sixty-day intensive investigation of Canadian conditions in every one of the eight provinces of Canada in which some variety of this plan is now in operation, declares that the claims, widely made, that the liquor question has been solved under the Canadian systems now in vogue, fade into thin air as rapidly as close-up inspection reveals the facts regarding actual conditions throughout the Dominion.

"The entire trip, made at the direction of my paper, was to find the facts and, en route I visited every state and capital and many other cities interviewing executives, editors, officials, merchants, industrialists and a host of individual citizens," continued Mr. Baker. "My journey embraced some 5,000 miles of traveling between Victoria on the west and Halifax on the east, and I went with eyes and mind open to learn at first hand the results of what we, in the United States, have been calling 'Government Control.'

"Comparing official figures for 1923, the beginning of the 'Government Control' period, with the latest Government reports for 1930, we find that the increase in population was 10 per cent; increase in liquor consumption—80 per cent; increase in absolute alcohol consumed—105 per cent; increase in convictions for drunkenness—51 per cent; increase in violation of liquor law—92 per cent; increase in vagrancy and disorderly cases—115 per cent; increases in offenses against childhood—115 per cent; increases in felonious assault—91 per cent; increase in other major crimes—77 per cent.

"Briefly, here are some of the outstanding facts I have found:

(1) "With the exception of a period of a few months in 1918 and 1919, neither Canada, nor any province in the Dominion has ever had a Prohibition law in the sense in which we speak of it in the United States.

In other words, in all the years before Government Control, with the exception of wartime restrictions, Canada's anti-liquor statutes never had, nor do the laws now in operation have any power over the manufacture, importation or inter-provincial shipment of liquor.

(2) "'Government Control' systems came into being in the provinces as the direct result of this condition of affairs.

(3) "There is no system known as 'Government Control' throughout Canada, but, instead, eight provincial systems, each one differing from the others, with one common feature, namely provincial government monopoly of liquor sales only.

(4) "The making of liquor in Canada is not a Government affair, but is in the hands of private brewers, distillers and wineries. All these concerns sell to the provincial governments at figures which guarantee first class profits to the manufacturers. There is, of course, no risk to the liquor maker involved in this arrangement.

(5) "Liquor taxation by both Dominion and Provinces nets the Canadian Government approximately $50,000,000 annually.

(6) "The direct liquor cost annually in Canada under provincial monopoly auspices, aggregates approximately $190,000,000.

(7) "An indirect cost of many millions is indicated in the steady increase in crime, drunkenness, traffic accidents due to liquor, deaths from alcoholism, and other causes.

(8) "The prosperity of the liquor business throughout the Dominion is sufficiently evidenced by the fact that in 1920 there were 4 distilleries and 57 breweries in Canada; now there are 27 distilleries and 86 breweries. In 1920 Breweries and distilleries were capitalized at $49,000,000; now $128,000,000; moreover, stocks in these concerns have increased as much as 200 per cent in value since the repeal of Prohibition laws in Canada and the coming of Government sale, even despite world-wide depression.

(9) "Facts recently revealed show that the liquor makers spent millions of dollars in propaganda to discredit Prohibition and delude the Canadian people into voting for the 'Government' monopoly.

(10) "Facts also show that the Moderation league, militant opponent of Canada's erstwhile mild brand of Prohibition, was heavily financed by the liquor traffic. One liquor company alone, contributed $425,000 to the league for campaign purposes which it entered upon its own books as spent for 'sales and promotion.' When put on the witness stand, the president of this distillery corporation frankly defended the motive of their contribution by saying: 'We figured that investing nearly half a million dollars in the cause of the repeal of Prohibition, and adoption of a government system of sale, would greatly increase our business and that we are quite justified ... Time has proved us right. ...'

(11) Even under the Government sales system, the brewers and distillers are constantly working for an extension of hours in which government liquor stores may be open for business.

(12) "Recently there has appeared in some of the provinces maintaining beer parlors and taverns, strongly backed 'wet' propaganda for enlarging their business to include hard liquors.

(13) "Bootlegging is everywhere in evidence. Officials and others confirm the statement that there are hundreds of blind pig joints in Montreal as well as in other cities.

(14) "The liquor makers are now more and more generally using their affluence and influence to exercise political power and instances of honest and able law enforcement officials being deposed by the dictation of the big brewers and political bosses are increasing. The Vancouver Daily Province, by no means a dry paper, editorially summed up the situation in these words:

"We thought we had made John Barleycorn respectable, rigging him out in store clothes, and setting him decently at a table instead of allowing him to lean against a bar, in his customary grime and disrepute; but the old reprobate seems to have double crossed us, dirty, sinister, menacing as ever. He is leering at us again and in his leer is more than a suspicion of triumph, for it is well known that he has plans afoot for poisoning our public life and besmirching our good name. To put it briefly, beer is once more taking an interest in politics, and there is good reason to believe that politics is not uninterested in beer."

"The Canadian 'Government Control' systems are a boon to the bootlegging fraternity for it is exceedingly difficult to convict violators of the law. In the United States the very possession of liquor is evidence enough for indictment; in Canada, possession is no crime for the possessor may have purchased the liquor at a legal place."

BIRTHDAY WAS "LOST" BY WASHINGTON

It is generally known that George Washington was born on February 11, instead of the twenty-second of that month. What is not generally understood is that the great man lost a birthday when the calendar was changed in 1752. In order to avoid the confusion attendant upon this change, historians have accepted February 22, 1732, as the simplest way to express the date of Washington's birth, and have made no attempt to explain the situation, according to the Division of Information and Publication of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

Prior to the year 1752, the Julian calendar was used by England and the rest of Europe. The colonies, of course, followed the example of Great Britain, and time was marked here by the same measure. Under this calendar, the new year began on March 25. The practice of observing New Year's day on January 1 is, therefore, comparatively recent except in Scotland, where the custom began in 1600. The difference in these dates is due to the fact that they were arbitrarily fixed—perhaps future generations will observe the beginning of the year on still another date.

The manner in which Washington lost his birthday is not universally known, but a brief consideration of the situation will make it quite clear. Under the Julian calendar, as has been stated, the new year began on March 25 until 1752. By an act of Parliament, the year 1751 ended on December 31 instead of on March 24. The act also states that "the first day of January next following the said last day of December shall be reckoned, taken, deemed, and accounted to be the first day of the Year of our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two." Therefore, the months of January, February, and March were completely dropped from the calendar of 1751. This change occasioned a great deal of confusion which was avoided by those who were born between January 1 and March 25 by merely skipping a birthday, and Washington was among these people.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE WASHINGTON BIRTHDAY PARTY

Carl and Emily Herren were much excited over the Washington Birthday party, for they had between them a wonderful secret. They were going to dress like George and Martha Washington and tell stories to the other children and afterwards help pass the refreshments. These would be ice cream with a chocolate hatchet in the middle and cherries sent all the way from California.

The three-cornered hat for Carl had already come from the city and was stored away in the wardrobe upstairs, but the dressmaker did not finish the rest of the costumes until the afternoon of the party.

Emily and Carl went to the dressmaker's house early that afternoon and put the big package on their sled. They then started for home as fast as they could go. Since there had been a thaw and a freeze the day before, the streets were slippery, and sliding down the hills was great fun. Carl sat in front to guide, and Emily sat behind, holding the package in her lap.

They passed a boy and a girl walking along the road and talking so earnestly that they did not even look up when Carl guided the sled around them.

"I do wish that we could go to the party, George," the little girl was saying.

"I do, too, but my trousers are nothing but patches and your dress is faded."

Carl and Emily heard no more because the sled reached the top of another hill and swept down it with a swoop.

"George Keller and his sister Martha can't go to the party because they have nothing to wear," Carl said when the sled had finally come to a stop.

"That must be the reason why they never come to Sunday school," said Emily, thoughtfully.

"I don't suppose it would do to tell them they could wear our best clothes," suggested Carl.

"No, it wouldn't," his sister answered.

Then Carl looked at Emily, and Emily looked at Carl. There was a way, but they did not want to think about it. Carl picked up the sled rope, and they started for home.

But all of a sudden Emily stopped. "I'm going to let Martha wear my Martha Washington dress," she said with a little catch in her voice, for it was hard to give up the chance of wearing the pretty flowered dress and of powdering her hair. "I'll take it to her now."

"I'll go with you and give the George Washington suit to George. He and Martha can tell the stories just as well as you and I could," said Carl.

They turned around and started to go up the long hill to the Kepper home. The hill was slippery and hard to climb, but at last, much out of breath, they turned into the Keller yard. George and Martha were just at the door of the house.

"Here are the suit and the dress," Carl called to them. Then he stopped, not knowing what to say next.

"This is a Martha Washington dress and this is a George Washington suit," Emily said, and began to untie the package. "We want you to wear them."

"To the party?" asked Martha, much astonished.

"Yes, to the party. You are to tell the story about the cherry tree, and George is to tell about the colt. Then you must help pass the ice cream. It has hatchets in the middle and cherries that came from California. Will you?"

"Oh, of course we will!" Martha cried, delightedly.

"Meet us at the corner by the drug store," said Emily.

"I'll bring you the hat that goes with the costume," Carl added to George.

That evening the four children met at the corner and George put on the little three-cornered hat that had come from the city. Together they climbed the steps of the house where the party was. When they went into the living room the children laughed and shouted: "Look at Martha and George!"

"Martha and George are dressed up like Martha and George Washington!" exclaimed the youngest girl in the room. Then everybody laughed again.

"Why, I never thought of that," Emily whispered to her brother.

"I didn't think of it, either," Carl whispered back. "Aren't you glad that we did it?"

Emily nodded her curly head happily. "Doesn't Martha look sweet in that dress? And with his hair powdered George looks exactly like George Washington. Sh! Martha's beginning my—her story."—Youth's Companion.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE

The Sunday schools of Northern Indiana will meet for an all-day and evening session at the South Bend church, March 8th, for an Institute. Many laymen will be used in the discussion of the most striking problems confronting the schools of Indiana. Every church in this section is expected to be represented. Bring your own dinner if you choose. Luncheon in the evening will be served at the church.

MY PRAYER

By Emma Thomas Scoville

My prayer is this, "In harmony with thee."

I do not know what's meet for those I love,
Nor if what I would ask is right for me—

I'm prone to make my prayer the echo of

Desire—I would have faith in your high plan,

And weave a little place in its design,

With grateful words and deeds,
through life's short span,

Assured your way is best for me and mine.

O, give me grace to say, "Thy will be done,"

Forgetting self in services I do,

That you may count each day I live as one

For you. The darkest cloud your Light shines through

Dispelling gloom, and lifting weight of care—

"In harmony with thee," this is my prayer.

THE Voice that we Need

I have just listened (for the first time) to the voice of Dr. S. Parkes Cadman in his question hour conducted over the radio. Two things in particular impressed me; first, his apparent assumption of omniscience in dealing with questions in the various fields of human knowledge; and second, his dogmatic and authoritative manner of speech.

Which suggests that dogmatism may be found among Modernists as well as among Fundamentalists. The main difference is that the latter finds the source of his dogmatism in an objective revelation from God, the Bible, while the former is subjective.

I thought, as I listened, how wonderful it would be if the questions of a sick and harassed humanity could be put directly to the Son of God. He could tell us how to deal with the "depression." He could instruct the nations in the solution of their problems. The world needs the Voice of the Eternal Son. And it will be heard one of these days. Read Psalm 50:3.

CRIMINOLOGY Discovers Something

Dr. Franz Alexander, noted criminologist of Berlin, Germany, recently declared that criminal tendencies and not moral ideals are inborn in all children; that children have to learn to be good, but do not have to learn to be bad.

Dr. Alexander's statements were regarded sufficiently startling to make a headline in the newspapers. But to the student of the Bible he said nothing new. Three thousand years ago David wrote the same thing in his Psalm of confession, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." (51:5) Do not miss the interpretation, as some do. The writer does not say that the act of procreation is sin, but that the sinful nature and inclination of the race are transmitted to the child in the very process of procreation. This is an inexorable fact which no supposed personal holiness of the part of the parents can prevent. Children do not have to learn to do evil. But, thank God, a Way has been provided to redeem them from evil.

The science of criminology can only suppress the evil impulses, or at most strive to turn them in new direction. But the Power and Blood of Christ "cleanseth us from all sin."

THE Last Argument of Kings

Note after note has been written and dispatched, protest after protest has been duly made, plan after plan has been suggested, but the guns continue to roar and pour their rain of destruction upon the Woosung forts. To all suggestions, Japan answers that she will withdraw when her objectives are accomplished.

As a result a petition is being sent to President Hoover and Congress asking that this country with other nations join in an economic boycott of Japan. The petition is signed by Newton Baker and various prominent men who are known to be life-long advocates of peace. The petition states that experience shows that "protests by other nations and the public opinion of the world will not alone restrain the use of armed force to attain national ends."

This is a frank recognition that the final argument against evil men and nations is FORCE. For an economic boycott is force, and will finally bring war. You cannot control wild beasts with moral suasion, and the nations of the unredeemed world are wild beasts. Read Daniel the seventh chapter.

The Christian should lend his every effort and energy to the preaching of the Gospel of redemption of this lost world, and pray for the Coming of the King who shall rule the nations "with a rod of iron."

THE Laughter of Derision

Frank H. Simmons, noted foreign correspondent, describing the opening of the Peace Conference for which the world has been preparing during the last ten years, writes that when the Japanese ambassador arose to ask for international intervention to protect the Japanese in Shanghai from the Chinese aggression suddenly a "low shrill laugh was heard." In a moment this "laugh" had swelled into what was almost a "hysterical outburst of derisive laughter" which swept the entire assembly. Doubtless, the devils also laughed.

What a tragic setting for a "Peace Conference!" Little wonder that men grow discouraged. Perhaps this is the beginning of what the prophet Isaiah saw when he wrote, "The ambassadors of peace weep bitterly. The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth, he has broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities; the earth mourneth and languisheth" (Isa. 33:7-9).

But the Christian cannot be discouraged, for the next verse declares our hope, "Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself." Blessed be his Name, he will rise, "The Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his Wings." (Mal. 3:2)

Fighting the Sunday Movie

Dear Brother Baer:

Your request for ideas to fight the Sunday movie menace recalled to mind the successful campaign waged here in 1923.

The campaign was backed by the Ministerial Association, one of the ministers being the Publicity chairman. Short advertisements were run in the local papers interspersed throughout the local items. The pastors proclaimed from the pulpit the duty of Christians at the polls. Cards were printed with the following information and were distributed over town:

If you believe in the things that are worthwhile and for the betterment of Falls City, then mark your BALLOT as appears below.

Be sure and make your X opposite the word "AGAINST." Remember Election Day is TUESDAY, APRIL 3rd when this question will be voted on.

Aside from all the good work that was done by this organization and co-workers the opposition had an "eleventh hour" factor to reckon with which, undoubtedly, had great weight in bringing the overwhelming victory. The motive was to appeal to the loyalty of Catholics and other Lent observers. The plan was heartily endorsed by the Publicity chairman, who procured the 1000 postal cards and had them printed and delivered. They were addressed to practically every home in town and mailed the Saturday preceding the election day. The appeal the cards carried, follows:

WHAT DOES PASSION WEEK MEAN TO YOU?

Jesus during Passion Week said: "If any man serve me, let him follow me."

Can I serve him acceptably and vote for Sunday Movies?

Will I, too, betray him for money or pleasure?

Will he hear me and help me if I fail him Election Day?

HE NEEDS MY VOTE AGAINST SUNDAY MOVIES ON APRIL 3RD. IF WE DENY HIM, HE WILL ALSO DENY US."

The opposition bided their time, however, and after a period of several years we were shocked at the audacity of the managers of the movies, advertising that they would be open Sunday. The Ministerial Association got busy but could do nothing, as the City Council had neglected to pass the necessary ordinance, following the election.

Growing Churches are Praying Churches

Prayer plays a large part in the growth of the church. There has never been a time in recent years when we have observed more evidence of that fact than now. That is both an explanation and a challenge. Wherever you find a growing church there you will find a praying church, and where the people do not pray the church does not grow, for prayer is essential to spiritual growth. The more earnest and the more extended prayer is among the membership of a church, the more certainly and rapidly will growth be realized.

There are many kinds and places of prayer, and none of them ought to be neglected. There is the private prayer, the prayer of the closet, where no one hears but God. Nothing can take the place of such prayer for personal enrichment and empowerment. He who daily resorts to a secret place with the Most High, or even in the midst of the hurried ways of men finds sweet fellowship with God in the sanctuary of his soul, will not fail to stand forth as a strong tower in the church and contribute to its growth and power.

There is the family prayer, that blessed means of building up the Christian spirit and inspiring Christian conduct in the home. The Christian home is the seat of the church's most abiding influence and most effective power. To guard that sacred institution and to keep the saving leaven of prayer within its precincts is a most urgent and also a most difficult responsibility which the church must not fail to undertake. Where there is no spirit or desire for prayer in the home it will not be easy to build into the heart a sincerely prayerful attitude in public worship.

There are prayers for times of health and happiness and prayers for the sick room and the death chamber. There are prayers for prosperity and victory, and prayers for poverty and defeat. There is no time when we may not call upon him, and when we ought not to desire him. We should thank God for a divine-human Savior who enters into our heartaches and sorrows as well as our gladness and joy, and for the desire he has awakened within our hearts to have him with us at our wedding feasts as well as with us at the graves of our loved ones.

Then there are the stated prayers,—the pastoral prayer at the worship hour when the shepherd of the sheep seeks to voice the praise, the concerns and the needs of his flock before the great Shepherd of all; the prayers at baptism and communion and the consecration of life and of substance to some special service or sacred use; and the prayers of invocation when the blessing of God's special presence and guidance is sought for some particular occasion or undertaking, that whatsoever we do in word or in deed may be done to the glory of God. All these, and many other occasions for prayer are good and proper and help to bring into our lives the spirit of reverence and worship and divine dependence. But there is yet another very special occasion for prayer—the prayer meeting of the church—which affords the most tangible evidence of the prayer spirit and habit of the people, and nothing gives more encouragement to the average minister than to see these meetings well attended.

The prayer meeting is unique in many respects. There is no other occasion for public prayer that tends to effect so strongly and directly the lives, particularly the prayer spirit, of the people as does the church prayer meeting. It is at this service that many voices are customarily heard aside from that of the preacher. Here is to be found a certain informality that encourages prayer on the part of timid souls. Here opportunity is given to pray for, and to request prayer for, definite needs, a thing that adds to the appeal of the service and to the effectiveness of prayer. Here we learn to sympathize with one another in prayer, and the uttered petition becomes the petition of every uplifted soul and the prayer before the Throne is strengthened by the number and intenseness of all who pray. The larger number uniting together in prayer increases the spirit of zeal and strengthens faith on the part of those who pray, and consequently gives them greater power with God. That greater power makes for larger growth. And invariably where marked growth is experienced, there prayer abounds.

When a church grows in numbers, there is found back of that growth a campaign of agonizing, persistent, believing prayer. The people of God have learned the priority of prayer in any Christian undertaking. Before they do anything else, they must pray. They must get that God dependence that will cause them to avail themselves of that divine power without which all human effort will be fruitless. God wants men to work together with him in many ways, but the first thing, and the most important thing, they can do is to pray. And realizing that, the servants of God have gotten in the habit of launching every campaign for the saving of souls with a strong emphasis on prayer. And where they have succeeded in winning many souls to the Lord Jesus Christ, we can be sure that they first succeeded in winning the church members to earnest prayer.

When there is growth in spirituality and vision on the part of a church there is certain to have been a turning to God in prayer on the part of the members. If men have grown worldly and indifferent to spiritual things, the way back to vital godliness is by prayer—the prayer of repentance and faith. If men have become blind to the beauty and goodness of God, the way to get a new vision is by prayer—"Ask and it shall be given unto you." Prayer intensifies the spiritual life and clears the vision for the larger things yet to be attained. Where carelessness and unconcern in these matters prevail, there has been a lack of prayer.

Growth in sacrifice for the building up of the church and the spread of the Gospel is preceded by prayer. When a man begins to pray definitely and earnestly for an object, he is likely to ask himself what he can do about it, but until he becomes concerned enough to pray, he is not likely to do much of anything else. It is thus, therefore, that the wisdom of the Lord Jesus becomes plain when he placed as the first requirement for the extension of his kingdom, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will thrust forth laborers into his harvest." If prayer is sincere and earnest, all the rest that may thereafter be required will be supplied.

In whatever particular we may inquire, where there is found growth, there will also be found prayer as a preceding casual condition—prayer that is real and vital, prayer that shows itself in the yearning of the heart and in the yielding of the life, and prayer that is expressive and effective enough to join itself with other voices about the church's altar of prayer. This is no mere theory, but a statement of fact arrived at by observation on the part of many Christian leaders. Even from our own limited observation a goodly number of citations could be made to prove the case, but we must be limited to a few, which however are modern examples.

One church with a brief history and with less than a hundred members is having an average of thirty-seven in attendance at its prayer meeting. That means over a third of its membership in the prayer meeting. It is a mission church, is growing in a splendid way, has a Sunday school of over one hundred and fifty, is evangelistic in a large degree, gives of its finances to the point of sacrifice, and is soon to be entirely self-supporting. Another church of slightly over two hundred members has thirty-one per cent of its members regularly at the prayer meeting services, and this church too is a growing, vigorous church, winning souls to Christ as a part of its regular program and exercising an influence on the community that is commendable. Some unusual revival meetings have been reported recently and in every instance credit for success was given to the active presence of the Spirit of God.

And the means whereby this outpouring of the Spirit was accomplished was declared to be a mighty turning to God in prayer on the part of Christian people. These churches won their battles on their knees before the revival ever showed itself in sermon, song or personal work. The growing churches are everywhere churches of prayer.

The very encouraging spirit of revivalism that has taken hold of many of our churches will continue to spread and bring forth fruit only by means of a mighty emphasis on prayer and a deeper spiritual life. Prayer does count. It vitalizes spiritual deadness. It makes weak churches strong. It gives vision and courage where once there was blindness and timidity. It is prayer that brings victory,—prayer, not of the lazy, do-nothing type, but prayer that is so dead in earnest that it could wish self a castaway for his brethren's sake, prayer that is willing to go to any lengths of sacrifice, if only the Gospel is thereby preached unto the ends of the world, and if the souls of men are saved and the hearts of men are built up in the grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the kind of prayer that has been the forerunner of every great revival and missionary movement the world has known. And the church right now needs that kind of prayer more than anything else.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

It is not too late to remind you that the offering for the Superannuated Ministers and for the Brethren Home should have been taken up in February, and in case you are late about it, you should not overlook it or be careless about it. Send offerings for the Home to Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana, and for Ministers to Rev. G. L. Maus, Roann, Indiana, and do it as promptly as possible.

There are no doubt many wrongs practiced and perpetuated in our governmental life, and there are also not a few that have sprung up within the machinery of the church, but no sensible person believes in calling in the anarchist or the bolshevist to correct governmental wrongs, and much less should we think to resort to the iconoclast or the yellow journalist to set things aright in church affairs.

A personal communication from Brother E. M. Riddle informs us that Brother D. A. C. Teeter has successfully undergone an operation on one of his eyes and the doctor says it is "very good." It will be remembered that announcement was previously made in these columns to the effect that an operation was contemplated and we are glad to learn of its success. Prayer is requested for his complete recovery.

Our good correspondent from Canton, Ohio, where Dr. J. C. Beal is pastor, reports twelve confessions of Christ since the first of the new year. Brother Beal continues his intensive Bible instruction to his growing classes. The Sunday school is growing and the Christian Endeavor societies are doing good work. Dr. Beal goes to Sebring, Ohio, once in two weeks, conducting a class in Bible study there, where there is a nucleus of Brethren people.

From Allentown, Pennsylvania, comes a report that shows that the membership under the pastoral care of Brother S. E. Christiansen, are making a hard fight to maintain their work in spite of the depression which has hit that city unusually hard. The pastor is nobly sharing with his people in the sacrifices they are making. The various departments of the church work are keeping up well, the Sunday school and church attendance increasing.

In response to recent editorial invitation for suggestions for fighting the Sunday movie menace, we have this week a response from a correspondent in Falls City, Nebraska. We appreciate her report of methods formerly employed in that little western city. If others have suggestions to offer, or a report of methods used elsewhere, or a statement that might be effectively used against Sunday movies, we shall welcome it. Remember, this grows out of a request for suggestions to meet a real situation, and while you are helping one, you may be helpful to many.

Brother Frank Gehman, Christian Endeavor's missionary to Kentucky, writes of the work at Krypton, where, we are informed, the same natural hardness of men against the Gospel is manifested there as is found elsewhere, but there are certain advantages due to the fact that some of the modern detractors from the church have not yet entered there. Among the various departments maintained are two Christian Endeavor societies—a Junior and a Senior. He asks the prayers of the brotherhood, and doubtless the young people will respond to this request with special earnestness, because it is largely their work.

A revival is now under way at Muncie, Indiana, where the first unit of a beautiful new church has been completed under the pastoral supervision of Brother M. L. Sands. Brother Charles H. Ashman is the evangelist and the campaign was launched on Washington's birthday. Prayer is requested for these meetings. Brother Sands informs us that they prepared for the revival by means of special home prayer meetings, four each week for several weeks. He also says he has the consent of nineteen members of the old Maple Grove congregation to place their membership with the Muncie church, and that others are expected. We are promised a description and a picture of their new building.

Dr. K. M. Monroe writes this week concerning items of interest related to the work of the Ashland Seminary. Concerning Dr. Kyle's splendid lectures we have previously made comment. The many friends of Prof. M. A. Stuckey will rejoice with him in the honors that have come to him, honors that, as Dr. Monroe says, are "well deserved" because of his prodigious reading and research. We congratulate him on these honors, and all the more because they came to him unsolicited and have been received with such becoming grace. We note also that among the seminary students there are some deserving of special mention because of the high order of work being done. Such students not only reflect credit upon the institution in which they are enrolled, but also upon their friends and home churches.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh makes his first report of White Gifts received for the support of the work of the National Sunday School Association, and the total amount thus far contributed is $1,960.39. It seems that the number of schools reporting thus far exceeds the number at this time last year, but there is a falling off in the amounts given, due, doubtless, to the increased severity of the depression. If every school is doing or will do, its best under existing conditions, that is all that can be asked, but it is hoped that all will do that, as it will take the best all can do to meet the budget. Those schools not yet having reported should do so as promptly as possible, and remember that Prof. Puterbaugh is to be addressed at Ashland and not Evanston, as last year.

Brother Charles H. Ashman reports a very successful evangelistic campaign in the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he is the pastor, and is now in his eleventh year of service. There were seventy-six confessions, only seven of which were members of the local church renewing their allegiance to Christ. Fifty-six have been received into the church membership, forty-six by baptism and ten by letter and relation. These make a total of 723 persons received into the church during Brother Ashman's pastorate. This revival continued over four weeks, twenty-five making the confession during the last week. Very thorough preparation was made for the campaign, and through the entire effort he had the hearty cooperation of the membership, both in attendance and work. The average attendance for the series was 313.

From President Jacobs' College News we learn that the enrollment for the second semester is still above the three hundred mark. The depression does not seem to have hit the ambitions of youth for a college education. But the finances of many colleges are effected, and, as Dr. Jacobs points out, it is likely to result in some wholesome economies in many educational institutions throughout the land. While some schools are being made, or will be made, to suffer, others will need only to curtail some of their non-essential "overhead" expenses, or perhaps increase the teaching hours to more nearly a man's size job. From our knowledge of conditions at Ashland College we judge that the financial situation has never been so flush as to make possible the extravagances suggested. Possibly a little economizing on the part of some of the wealthier colleges will result in making the way slightly easier for some of the financially weaker colleges, such as Ashland, which colleges represent a type of service that could not well be dispensed with.

The Church's Crime

By Dr. Louis S. Bauman

"No man cared for my soul!" (Psalm 142:4). Such was David's cry and complaint to God, as he, an exile from King Saul's court, lay in the cave in the wilderness of Engedi.

The Complaint of the Heathen

And, in the day of judgment, this will be the complaint of the heathen against the Church of Christ! As you read this, 5000 souls will pass up to stand before the Judge of all men, and declare, "No man cared for our souls!" As the story of salvation is told to the heathen for the first time, the great mystery is that we could have had this "good news" in our possession for 2000 years, and then withheld it from them for so long!

"How is it," asked a Peruvian, "that during all the years of my life I have never before heard that Jesus Christ spoke those precious words?"

"Why," cried a Moor on the streets of Casablanca (North Africa) in speaking to a Bible seller, "have you not run everywhere with this Book? Why do so many of my people not know of the Jesus it proclaims? Why have you hoarded it to yourselves? Shame on you!"

"You have been many moons in this land," said an old Eskimo, on the icy shores of the farthest Northwest Territory, to the Bishop of Selkirk: "did you not know the good news then? Since you were a boy? And your father knew? Then why did you not come sooner?"

"How long is it," asked an old Mohammedan woman in Bengal, "since Jesus died for sinful people? Look at me! I am old! I have prayed, given alms, gone to the holy shrines, become as dust from fasting, and all this is useless! Where have you been all this time?"

These questions have been asked by the heathen over and over and over again, say our missionaries! Put yourself in their place. Think what it would mean to you if your father and mother, and your children, were lying in their graves without Christ and without hope,—all because some one failed to deliver the message entrusted to him! All because some one failed to bring the bread he was ordered to carry to the dying!

A Universal Salvation

Remember, IT IS A UNIVERSAL SALVATION! Christ died that ALL men might be saved (John 3:16; Luke 2:10, 11). "The same Lord over all is rich unto ALL that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in Whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of Whom they have not heard?" (Rom. 12-14). CHRIST IS THEIR ONLY HOPE! Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

It is not enough to shrug your shoulders and say, "The heathen are not worth saving—those filthy, ugly, naked, black people!" You give the lie to God who says in his Word (Acts 10:34), "God is no respecter of persons." The early Christian Church was made up of the poorer people, regarded in their day as belonging to "the scum of the earth." In fact, nearly 90% of the earlier Christians were slaves. The Gospel has ever appealed first to the poor. Before you criticize, remember, "The kettle always boils from the bottom up!"

The Great Commission

THE GREAT COMMISSION

THE GREAT COMMISSION was given to the Church as the Master's last words prior to his ascension: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15, 16). And, apparently the very last words that ever fell from his lips while yet on earth were: "Unto the uttermost part of the earth!" (Acts 1:8). How precious to us are the last words and the last requests of our loved ones who have gone on before! And, how precious to those who truly love him should be the Master's last request. He was thinking of them—the lost ones of Africa and of South America,—yea, those in "the uttermost parts of the earth"—in those last sacred moments, just before his feet left this earth and "a cloud received him out of their sight!"

Ambassadors Are We!

And we are his ambassadors,—according to Paul's idea of a Christian as expressed in II Cor. 5:18-21. An ambassador is one who represents his King in a foreign land.

Robert Wilder, General Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, tells of stopping at a hotel in India, and there meeting a British Infantry Major and his wife, together with another Major and his wife, and a few civilians. It was at the time of the Armenian massacres, and the Naval officer said: "Why don't these missionaries stay at home and mind their own business? Why do they worry these people in India?" There were rumors at that time that the British fleet would have to go to the Bosphorus. Robert Wilder said: "Suppose you were ordered to go tomorrow to the Bosphorus. And, suppose I should say, 'Why don't you mind your own business? Every

WHY CHRISTIAN MISSIONS?

The Christian missionary stands under the indictment of turning the world upside down. When preaching the Christian message means interfering with business that makes gain by exploiting the people of pagan lands, let him plead guilty. The gospel everywhere does disturb and ought to disturb a social and economic order founded on unrighteousness. Giving to the Orient the truths of modern science is completely revolutionizing the domestic and industrial life of people who were satisfied with the primitive tools and the superstitions of past ages. Just so certainly is Christianity making a new world in standards of physical living, in social ideals, in political rights, and in national aspirations. Jesus' is the one voice that is raised in every land in behalf of the poor and the downtrodden. He is the friend of men. The only power that can cope with racialism is the touch of Jesus. National prejudices cannot live in his presence. Christ, and Christ alone, is teaching men the secret of living together. In him is life.

Why missionaries in China? There are not many answers. Only one—Christ, Christ, Christ.—Bishop George Richmond Grose, in "The New Soul in China." Published by The Abingdon Press.

The same answer holds for sending missionaries to Africa and South America—it is Christ, Christ, CHRIST.

ship will be sunk!" The Major's eyes flashed fire: "I'd tell you to mind your business! If we were ordered to go, we would go even if every ship is sunk!" "You are quite right," said Wilder. "I, too, have my marching orders: not from any earthly government, but from the divine government. 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.' And, the primary question is not whether I get converts at one rupee or fifty rupees a head; the primary question is whether I am going to be loyal to my marching orders."

Christian, he had it exactly right. As ambassadors from the Court of Heaven, we have our marching orders!

Necessity is Laid Upon Us

Paul understood this, for he said, "NECESSITY is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me if I preach not this Gospel" (1 Cor. 9:16). Some years ago, before the days of the auto or the telephone, a man under sentence of death was found to be innocent. A messenger was dispatched with a pardon from the governor. The messenger, thinking there was time enough, lingered too long at a wayside inn for refreshment. Suddenly, being made to realize his error, he dashes his horses along the road, renewing them at every post, until, at last, covered with foam and perspiration, he dashed up to the court-house square, yelling and waving the pardon. Too late! Just a minute before the innocent man had been sent into eternity by the executioner! How must this messenger have felt? How will we feel when we face men and women in eternity, doomed to eternal death, knowing that we had their pardon in our pockets and failed to deliver it! Think it over now.

The Crime of the Church

The crime of the church is that she carries a message of pardon from the eternal God, which concerns the eternal salvation of every soul on earth, and the church has failed to deliver that message to 8,000,000 souls!

If a city the size of Long Beach (150,000 souls) were to have the earth open beneath it, and it were to sink into the hot fires of the earth's interior, it would horrify the world! If this were to occur to some such city every day, what would we think? And yet, a population equal to that of Long Beach sinks out of the pagan world into Hades every 24 hours! Who is responsible?

Not only does the darkness of Hades face them in the world to come, but they have known (the most of them) little but the torments of hell in this world! As you sit here, African villages are being pillaged by slavers,—a family is being led forth,—one to go to Tunis, one to Arabia, one to Persia, and one to Turkey. Two babies are coming into the world in Africa,—twins. Because of African ignorance and their peculiar belief in evil spirits, one of those babes will be carried forth in the forest, either to starve or to be eaten by wild beasts. Sick children over there are being gashed with knives to let out the evil spirits. Hundreds of little girls in China this day are being sold to all the torments of the immorally damned! And, as you read this, hundreds upon hundreds of little girls are being dedicated in India's unholy temples to lives of awful shame!

I was recently reading a missionary's story of a little girl in India, 11 years old, sold by her father to marry a man whom she had never seen. As she parted the veil from her little face to look upon this husband, her future master, can you imagine her horror when she saw he was a leper! Sold by her father, she must go to this man, with her healthy young body,—sold to a life of misery and disease! The story went on to tell how this old man cursed and damned that little girl for all the torture and agony he was enduring! What if that were my girl? I would consider her salvation from the horrors of Hindu womanhood worth the lifetime of service I have to give! And, who shall say that this little girl was not as precious as my own in the Master's sight?

And, while heathen lands are filled with sorrow and woes unspeakable, all of which the grace of God can heal, American Christians are spending literally hundreds of dollars for themselves,—much of it for luxuries,—to where they are spending one dollar to carry the Bread of Life to the famishing millions of the earth, for whom Christ died! The members of the Brethren Church gave above the average for foreign missions last year, and yet that was the magnificent sum of $1.50 per member! You go to buy a pair of shoes. One pair is $5.00 and another is $6.50. You take the more expensive pair, thinking it suits you better,—and what is $1.50? A few months later, if any one should ask you what you paid for those shoes, you would not know whether it was $5.00 or $6.50. And yet, that difference of $1.50 is the amount of the average annual offering of the members of the Brethren Church for the healing of a soul-sick world, for whom Christ died!

(To be concluded)

The Flag of the Cross

By H. H. Smith

Many of our readers—but not all perhaps—are acquainted with the following naval custom: "There is one flag, and but one in the world which can ever fly above the Stars and Stripes. That is the flag of the Christian Cross—a white flag on a blue field—which is flown every Sabbath morning on shipboard at the hour of divine service. The national standard comes down; the flag of the Cross goes up the halyards, and the Stars and Stripes ascend again to a place just beneath the emblem of worship."

Our sailors and soldiers are taught great veneration for the Stars and Stripes, and this custom of elevating the flag of the Cross above the flag of the country has no doubt impressed them with the incomparable value of the religious truths for which the Cross stands.

The Cross stands for justice and good will toward all mankind, and the daily practice of the golden rule. The observance of these tenets of the Christian faith by all nations would mean the abolishment of war from the earth. The recent trouble in Manchuria has revealed a fine spirit among the Chinese and Japanese Christians of the countries involved. A telegram sent by the Federation of Chinese churches of Peiping to the National Christian Council of Japan says: "Whole Chinese nation greatly disturbed by present Manchurian situation. Chinese Christians appeal to Christians of Japan to make common cause advocating that their respective governments take peaceful means to settle Chinese-Japanese questions, preserving friendship between two neighboring peoples."

Let China and Japan become thoroughly Christian, and war between them would be impossible. The same would be true of every other country. Wars have occurred because even the most moral and religious countries of the world have not always acted toward each other in a thoroughly Christian manner. These Chinese and Japanese Christians give every evidence of being true Christians when, in such a trying crisis, they make an urgent appeal that "peaceful means" be employed to settle the vexed questions, and thus "preserve friendship" between the two nations. That is the spirit of Christianity.

The flag of the Cross stands for the sacredness of man

—every man. A thoughtful writer has said: "Jesus brought the idea of the sacredness of man to the world when he became man; he exalted humanity. Tacitus tells us that because a slave killed his master, 600 innocent slaves were killed. Plutarch says Flaminius put a slave to death for the entertainment of his friend who had never witnessed a death scene, and Pollio, the stoic, fed his fishes with the limbs of his slaves."

Westminster Abbey holds the dust of a man whom England delights to honor, because he believed in the sacredness of man—even the African savage. It was not solely as an explorer or geographer that England honored David Livingstone. His zeal and sacrificial labors in behalf of the oppressed savages of the Dark Continent, who were hunted like wild beasts and sold into the most barbaric forms of slavery, touched the hearts of his countrymen. In every African native, however vile and degraded in the sight of civilized man, Livingstone saw a brother man. There is no puzzle as to why this man of such eminent talents sacrificed his life for the benighted tribes of Africa. He knew Jesus Christ and all that the Cross stands for. "I am a missionary, heart and soul," he said. "God had an only Son and he was a missionary and physician. A poor, poor imitation of him I am, or wish to be. In this service I hope to live; in it I wish to die."

Let us pray that "the flag of the Cross may fly above the flags of all nations, and that he whose conquering sign it is may rule the earth."

An Editor's Call to the Church

By William T. Ellis *

This is not an essay, but a bit of reporting. I am not responsible for the sentiments expressed, although I share them. They are all up to an editor friend, who fairly drove me to this little task of carrying his message to the preachers. I took no notes, so his sentiments are a bit paraphrased—but the views are accurately his.

It happens that I am looked upon by many daily newspaper editors as representing the Christian Church; and many an intense hour I have spent in editorial offices, defending her. At the same time, quite a few churchmen regard me as representing the press, for journalism is my calling. So I am regularly kept warm by two fires.

On this occasion, the editor of a daily newspaper, upon whom I was paying a social call, had barely greeted me before he began to challenge the Church in the present crisis. He is an old-school editor, blunt, forthright, a crusader with a strong sense of infallibility. His desk is a heaped-up clutteration that would make an orderly housewife or an efficiency expert despair. He works in his shirt-sleeves; and looks like a farmer—is, indeed, a dirt farmer, out of office hours. This time he had scarcely a word to say about his wonderful crop of grapes; he wanted to know what the Church is doing in this period of depression and emergency.

Pointing an indicting finger at me, he demanded, "Doesn't the Church know that it is all up to her? She should be the rallying center of all real relief. She has the Word that will make things right. Every preacher in the land ought to be hot about his own business these days, which is preaching a Gospel for the people. This thing that has happened is all within the Church's province. It is her business to help people see straight and hold steady. And if she doesn't care for hurt human hearts now, she'll never get a chance to do so later."

I steered my friend on to the subject of the plight of the press in these times. In a few minutes, though, he was off again on his "concern." "Every Church ought to be a relief center. The churches are closest to the people, and know their real needs. The very genius of religion is brotherliness and helpfulness. People instinctively turn to the Church when in trouble. This is your chance; this is your chance: look out that you don't miss it."

We were interrupted by the arrival of other newspaper workers. After introductions and general talk, I arose to take my leave. The old editor followed me to the door. He laid his hand upon my arm, and looking into my face with eager, earnest eyes, he insisted, "Don't forget! Tell the churches that this is their hour. Every church should rally to the job. The most important aspect of this depression is the need that people should get back to God, and to all the essentials of real religion. Nobody but the Church can make plain the will of God to the people; who need comfort and guidance and inspiration. Mark what I say: this is the Church's chance. You tell them so."

So I have done as directed.

CONVERSION OF AN INFIDEL

Some years ago a gentleman in New York met a young friend of his who had just returned from South America. The young man's father had left him very rich. His money had led him into all sorts of wickedness, and he had become an open and avowed infidel. Now he was a humble, earnest Christian. His friend was delighted to find what a blessed change had taken place in his views and feelings since they had last met, and he asked him what it was that had led to this great change. "I'll tell you gladly," said the young man. "You know I'm very fond of hunting, and while in South America I spent much of my time in that way. One beautiful Sabbath morning I went into the woods in search of game. After a while, feeling weary with roaming about, I sat down on a log to rest. While seated there my attention was drawn to a neighboring tree by the cries of a bird, which was fluttering over her nest, apparently in great distress. On looking round I soon found the cause of this trouble. I saw a venomous snake creeping along towards the tree, with his eye fixed on the bird and her nest. Presently I saw the male bird fly quickly away, as if anxious to get something. In a little while he returned with a twig, covered with leaves in his mouth. Perching near the nest, he laid the twig very carefully over his mate and her young, entirely covering them, and then taking his place on one of the topmost branches of the tree he awaited the arrival of the enemy. By this time the snake had reached the spot. Twisting himself around the trunk, he climbed up the tree; then gliding along the branch till he came near the nest, he lifted his head as if he were going to dart upon the poor bird. He looked at the nest for a moment, and then, suddenly throwing back his head as if he had been shot, he made his way down the tree as fast as he could and went off. I felt very curious to find out the explanation of this strange conduct on the part of the snake; and so, climbing up the tree, and examining the leaves of the twig, which had been such a shield and defence to that helpless bird, I found that it had been broken off from a bush which is poisonous to the snake, and which it is never known to touch. In a moment the question arose in my mind, Who taught this bird its only weapon of defence in such an hour of danger? And quick as thought came the answer, None but God Almighty, that great Being whose very existence I have denied, but in whose pardoning mercy, through Jesus Christ, I now find peace and joy."—Newton.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

It takes more than bullets to convince the public of the justice of a cause. This seems to be one of the lessons the Japanese are beginning to learn in their drive on China. At least so far the net results have been the crystallization of anti-Japanese feeling in China and world sentiment unfavorable to Japan. It is reported that many thinking Japanese are bewildered and hurt to find Japan suddenly becoming "the world's most unpopular nation." All of which is but one more evidence of the futility of bullets as effective instruments in the settlement of international affairs.—The Gospel Messenger.

The South Carolina General Assembly on January 27 adopted a joint resolution asking Congress to call on the President to designate a nation-wide day of prayer. The resolution asks that a day be set apart in the near future for the assembling of the people in their respective places of worship "to join their voices in prayer and supplication to Almighty God for a higher conception of duty and responsibility on the part of the individual citizen; for renewed faith and confidence in organized government; for a realization on the part of the people of this and all other lands of the utter futility of force unless sustained by justice and right, and finally for the realization that God will heal and bless his people when they exalt him above selfishness and greed for gain and godless pursuits."—C. M. Elderdice in The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

PUBLICATION OF DRY DAILY DELAYED BY DEPRESSION

The establishment of a dry daily newspaper in New York City has been indefinitely postponed because of business conditions. Stanley High, former editor of the Christian Herald, who for more than a year has been promoting a new newspaper which would be devoted to prohibition and other causes, announced February 2 that the venture had been suspended. Plenty of enthusiasm had been raised, he said, but not sufficient capital.

An advance subscription list of nearly 60,000 names had been built up, Mr. High said, and more than half of "the necessary total of $5,500,000 had been pledged," but in recent weeks persons who had been making contributions to pay the incidental expenses of promotion reluctantly were compelled to stop doing so because of the pinch of hard times.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

TESTIMONY AS TO LEGAL BEER

Amos W. W. Woodcock, director of prohibition enforcement and Dr. Joy Elmer Morgan, editor of the journal of the National Education Association, recently appeared before a senate committee considering a bill to legalize 4 per cent beer. Director Woodcock has manifestly learned a good deal in his enforcement work, for his observations fit in with others who are in the best position for judging the matter under consideration. His first observation was that beer did not decrease the consumption of hard liquor and could not be expected to make the task of enforcement easier. He also said that "any place where 3 or 4 per cent beer was sold on draft would be a guise for selling hard liquors there also, and every one who thinks carefully must agree that that is true. Dr. Morgan said that from the standpoint of the educator conditions have improved greatly under prohibition. "Conditions among students by and large," he said, "are infinitely better than they were before." He said that it was a general observation of school people that conditions of health and home life have greatly improved during the past ten years. Of 312 college presidents questioned, only nine had any serious doubt as to the improvement of conditions under prohibition. He denied that 4 per cent beer would be harmless and non-intoxicating. These are men who have had large observation of the things of which they speak.—The Presbyterian Advance.

IMPLEMENTING THE KELLOGG PACT

When the government of the United States declared to China and Japan that it "does not intend to recognize any situation, treaty or agreements which may be brought about by means contrary to the covenants and obligations of the Pact of Paris," it took a step, the importance and significance of which may easily be overlooked. A principal criticism launched against the Kellogg Pact for the outlawry of war has been from the first that it lacked all means of enforcement. Here we have, however, a promising beginning in implementing and making effective the ideals and purposes expressed in that instrument. If it is understood that there is nothing permanently to be gained by that "recourse to war for the solution of international controversies" which the nations signatory to the Pact have solemnly renounced "as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another," the motive for resorting to it in moments of stress and excitement will have largely disappeared. If Japan can gain nothing from her military campaign in Manchuria, but must in the end submit her case to those judicial processes to which it might have had recourse at the beginning, the methods of military violence will lose some of their prestige.—The Baptist.

LET PREMILLENNIALISTS BEWARE

We are bound to say that we believe in the return of the Lord before the millennium. The Bible so teaches and even if it did not we could not conceive of man's being able to bring in a millennium without his help in a very direct fashion. It is a hope that all Christians should enjoy, one of the privileges of the gospel.

There is a peril involved in this blessed hope, however. It is akin to the peril that appears with every hope, the peril of sitting down to gloat over the anticipation. There is the danger that the premillennialist spend his time in nothing else but talk about his Lord's return.

Jesus spoke very clearly about his return. And we point out those passages in proof of the doctrine of the second coming. It should be noticed, however, that where he teaches this he is also very definite in saying two things: (1) That the return will be in an hour that the servant does not expect, and (2) that what the master wants is that the servant shall be about his work when the master returns.

What if the Master should come back and find the servant either sitting dreaming of the blessed time when the Master shall return or spending his time talking and arguing with the servants about that return? Is that what he expects? The Lord's own words indicate that what he hopes to find is servants busy at their tasks, the responsibilities he left them.

Let us talk of the second coming, but let us prove it as much by our nervous energy at the Master's work as by our words.—The Christian Standard.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Prophecies

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

Seven Parallel Prophecies: Revelation

Seventh Vision,—The Seven new Things. Rev. 21, 22.

"The long, long night is past
The morning comes at last."

Surely after going through the book of Revelation, even hurriedly, it is with a sense of relief that we leave behind the sad scenes that men by their sins bring upon the world, and turn to the new heaven and new earth prepared in God's plan for those who love him and love one another.

1. A new heaven.

It is so common to think of the new heaven and new earth as literally described in Revelation that I hesitate to even suggest that the description is symbolic, lest I spoil a beautiful dream for some one unable to see the even more beautiful vision of the spiritual application.

Let us begin by remembering that the spiritual world is not of such a nature as to be seen by natural eyes (1 Cor. 2:14), and though Paul in the spirit had a glimpse of paradise, what he heard it was unlawful for him to utter (2 Cor. 12:4).

Let us remember next that we receive "a kingdom that cannot be moved" (Heb. 12:28), and a "house eternal in the heavens" (2 Cor. 5:1), but the new Jerusalem of Revelation comes down to earth (21:2). It is heaven on earth and not the heaven of heavens.

2. A new earth.

Some think that we are now living in the new earth and the new Jerusalem will come as the world is converted. We might imagine the holy city as being here after millenniums of progress, but the Lord himself taught us that he will return in judgment to a faithless world and then establish his kingdom. The new earth is not new because Christ is being preached to it, but because it will be renovated by the fire of judgment (2 Pet. 2:10-13). The "creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21).

3. The new peoples (21:3-8)

It would be worth little to have a bright world with the same old wicked people in it. Sin will make a den of wild beasts out of a palace while Christ will make a paradise out of a hovel. The new peoples of the new world will be the overcomers, and they shall know no more death nor sorrow nor pain (Rev. 2:7, 11, 17, 25; 3:5, 12, 21; 21:7).

4. The new Jerusalem (21:9-12).

After reading in Eph. 5 of the church as the bride of Christ, and in Heb. 12:22 of being already come to the new Jerusalem, we should be prepared to find in Revelation the new Jerusalem again called the bride of the lamb, and to think of it, not as a material city, but as a spiritual people, the people of God. It is not a Jewish city because the names of the twelve tribes are on its gates, any more than it is a Gentile city because the names of the apostles of the Gentile church are upon its foundations. The people of God are they who have the spirit of God. The cubical form means perfection. The jewels of the foundations are the Christian virtues. The golden streets are paths of righteousness. Its gates are open to all nations, day and night, but nothing shall enter that defileth. It is the holy city, the true bride of Christ, reigning with him forever.

5. The new temple (21:22).

As the church is the bride, and also the body, so is it the temple of the Lord in this dispensation (Eph. 2:20-22), but in that day "the Lord God Almighty and the lamb are the temple." Here God dwells in us, (Eph. 3:17), but then we shall dwell in God. Now we are drinking at the fountain, but then we shall sail the wide river (Ezek. 47). There shall be no more of the ordinances of the old covenant, no more of the rites of the new. The description of the temple by Ezekiel (ch. 40-47) and of the new heaven and new earth by Isaiah (65 and 66) are symbolic, as are these chapters in Revelation. Having come to the substance we shall not go back to the shadow.

6. The new light (21:23-27).

The light of the spiritual life is not the sun. It shines for the physical world, but the Spirit of God illumines the heart. The nations of the saved shall walk in that light. Christ shall reign in society and government as well as in individual hearts.

7. The new paradise (ch. 22)

The holy land seems to have been purposely so formed that its various features might be symbols of the spiritual life. So the first paradise is typical of the second. But no physical paradise can be equal to the spiritual life with its fulness of joy and eternal peace. Christ is the tree of life. The Holy Spirit is the river of life and the last call of the Spirit and of the bride is to whosoever will to come to the beautiful city and drink of its living waters and feed on its perennial fruits and reign with the Lord forever.

The book closes as it began with the clear statement that it treats of things which must shortly come to pass. From Pentecost forward true believers have been sealed with the earnest of the Spirit (Eph. 1:13, 14), who reveals to the heart what eye hath not seen nor ear heard, but which God hath prepared for them that love him. What has been coming to pass in its beginnings in individuals comes to pass in all the world in its consummation in the kingdom of Christ. His last words are "Behold I come quickly." Let us pray without ceasing, "Even so come, Lord Jesus."

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Eph. 4:30. "And grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

Moffatt has this: "And do not vex God's holy Spirit, by whom you have been sealed for the day of redemption." In this outstanding text from an outstanding Epistle, it is assumed by the writer that men may grieve the holy Spirit, but the command is not to do so. Since the entire revelation of God to man can be summed up in "facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promises to be enjoyed," we are related to this command of Paul, "and grieve not the holy Spirit of God." The Holy Spirit through Paul's writing, had just reminded men of "heavenly places in Christ Jesus;" and "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." It is Holy Writ which we are discussing, or we might say that here is the Epistle of extravagant statements—statements which thrill. How fine it would be to live in this Epistle for an entire year!

If GRIEVED, then the Holy Spirit must be a person; for how could we grieve an influence? Why, at once personality is assumed. Then, this same attribute is predicated of the Father and the Son. What an array of scripture speaks of the Father as being GRIEVED. Of the Son it has been declared that he is "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief" (Isa. 53:3). In fact, I am not much given to this fanciful effort to separate the great work of the Triune God in our redemption, as though the day of God was past, and the day of the Son was over. In many circles we hear the Spirit mentioned ten times where the Father and the Son are not mentioned but once. We forget such teaching as found in John 16: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine, and shall show it unto you."

Why not try to be fair in our representation of the part the Triune God is exercising in our redemption? When he, the Spirit of truth is come, "he shall not speak of himself," says Jesus; "but whatsoever he shall hear." Is not the Spirit but representing the Father, and the Son in these days "when at such an hour as ye think not" the Son of man cometh? He does "not speak of himself." He does not glorify himself; "he shall glorify me," says Jesus. Jesus is not to be eclipsed. I have heard the Book of Acts referred to so many times as "The Acts of the Holy Spirit," until it has become actually misleading. Such speculative theology does not appeal to me in face of the fact that Jesus said, "therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you" (John 16: 15). And that is how, "when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." And herein you find harmony; not a contradiction, when we remember "these THREE are ONE."

Think of it! The triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, planning our redemption; Christ coming from the throne to put in execution that plan; and the Holy Spirit coming to this sin-blacked earth to reveal that plan; and actually grieving at man's blindness. Therefore, the Holy Spirit must love us; for only those whom we really love can grieve us very much. None but a mother can understand the depth of grief when a son or daughter falls in disgrace. Mother's love is second only to God's love, only his love is infinite. A station agent on one of our great railroads was found in a drunken stupor. A hind hearted man, waiting for a train undertook to assist him into his station, when he whipped out a gun and fired at his friend. Upon his return in a few weeks he found the agent still at his job. He asked a merchant why the road would keep such a character in such a responsible position. His reply was that the superintendent was his uncle, and he held on to his relations. But a much nearer relationship have we than that. God is our Father. The Son went so far as to die to set us free from our sins, and the Holy Spirit GRIEVES at the hardness of our hearts. How the triune God bears with his wayward children!

Are Mission Boards Worth While?

By the Rev. Arthur Judson Brown, D.D.,

Secretary Emeritus of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

Keeping in Touch with the Workers

It is a very important part of the work of mission boards to keep in close touch with the workers on the field. The secretaries give much time to correspondence with individual missionaries and to conferences with those at home on furlough. Their views are eagerly sought in making decisions affecting the work. Most boards send a secretary or a deputation to the field at intervals of a few years, for the express purpose of becoming more fully informed regarding the work, and to discuss the problems on the field. Many board members have also personally visited the field and have become experts in handling mission problems. We doubt whether even the most reckless critic will challenge the mission board secretaries with any lack of knowledge of missions or incompetence as missionary administrators. Many of them have served as missionaries on the field and know the problems from long experience. It is the policy of the boards to attach great weight to the judgment of the missionaries and to give them liberty of action consistent with prudent administration. The presumption is always in favor of granting requests of the devoted and trusted workers on the field. Annual appropriations for current work are ordinarily made for each mission in a lump sum, leaving the mission wide discretion in determining how the funds available can be expended to the best advantage.

Missionaries do not always appreciate the difficulties that beset an effort to ascertain their views. They represent so many different types that there is certain to be divergent opinions. The same difficulty is experienced when several hundred ministers and laymen meet in their home church. A proposal from a board reaches three or four families at some remote station. They do not know the views of workers in other lands, nor do they have the benefit of opinions expressed in a debate. The result is that the missionaries cast a vote which they might not cast if they could have profited by the views of their associates in other countries. Each mission is apt to suggest some amendment so that the returns to the board are a chaos of conflicting views.

A medical missionary once wrote to me proposing certain changes in the manual rule affecting the medical missionaries. A copy of his letter with a request for an opinion was sent to every medical missionary connected with the board, so that a general policy might be formulated. Three years later, only about half the medical missionaries had been heard from. Men and women, scattered over Asia, Africa, and Latin America, who seldom see one another and who do not have intercommunication except through the board, cannot be made the unit of missionary administration.

Some missionaries have protested against the policy of consulting missionaries on matters that cannot be discussed in a mission meeting without embarrassment and fear of personal offense. In such cases the mission vote is apt to represent the sentiment of those personally involved rather than that of the mission as a whole. One missionary frankly said: "We have difficulty enough to keep harmony on the mission field without the board throwing firebrands into our meetings. What is the board for if it cannot decide such questions? Your knowledge of the missionaries and your acquaintance with missionary problems are such that you ought to know what should be done."

It should be borne in mind that the decision of many questions by a board is required, not only by the necessities of the case, but by the board's relation to the church which has assigned to it the duty of directing the missionary enterprise. Certain questions must come to the home office for final decision, because they must be decided by somebody and the board has been formed for that purpose. The board is held to strict account for the supervision of the work, and it assumes responsibilities for the maintenance of missionaries and their work that are inseparable from a degree of administrative control. If anything goes wrong the home church blames the board rather than the missionary. The board is also aided in forming its decisions by its relations with all the missions, by conferences with boards of other denominations, and by long experience in dealing with similar missionary problems.

Missionaries and the Home Church

The Mission Boards are important and essential means of contact between the missionary on the field and the Church at home. They seek to be channels of communication through which information may flow to and from the field. Missionaries are asked to write quarterly letters home, which the Board duplicates and mails to the interested friends and supporters whose addresses it can secure. Learning by experience that many missionaries are irregular in writing such letters, the Board asks each station to designate one of its members to write these letters describing the work of the station, and widely distributes these letters. Many Boards maintain a special department for transmitting such letters of missionaries to the home constituency, and also sent to missionaries copies of a leaflet urging the importance of letters and suggesting the kind that are most effective in arousing and maintaining the missionary interest of friends at home. Pastors, in turn are asked by the Board to keep in touch by correspondence with the missionaries in whom their churches are particularly interested and for whom they assume some responsibility.

When a missionary returns on furlough, the Board expects him or her, if physically possible, to visit the church which is particularly interested, and in all the educational and inspirational campaigns which the Board conducts among the home churches, furloughed missionaries are used. Indeed, those who are good speakers have sometimes said that they are asked to do more itinerating at home on furloughs than they do on the foreign field. The anxiety of a Board Secretary to prevent the unwise diversion of gifts from the authorized budget, upon which the stability of the work rests, occasionally leads to an objection to individual appeals for an object that one missionary may deem very important but which has not been approved by the Mission or the Board. But the policy of the boards is to facilitate in every practicable way the closest personal relations between the missionaries and the supporting constituency and to keep the channel wide open for all reasonable intercommunication. The earnest desire and endeavor of Mission Board secretaries is to keep the Church at home fully informed as to the work and to cultivate true fellowship in prayer, intelligent interest and adequate support of the great work of Christ in which we are all partners.

Every board would admit that, in deciding numerous and perplexing questions, some of them delicate and difficult and on which good men differ, errors of judgment sometimes occur. It is probable, however, that if any one were to make a list of the real defect in present administrative methods, he would learn that the boards already are earnestly striving to remedy them. Dr. William N. Clarke expressed the following opinion:

"The sharpest criticism usually comes from those who know the work only from the outside, and have no idea either of its real magnitude or of the immense complications that it involves. Large parts of the work of missionary boards imply matters that are confidential in their nature. A certain amount of reserve is absolutely required by justice and by the interests of the work. Matters that can be openly discussed are often fully intelligible only to those who know great classes of surrounding facts. When a board is blamed about some occurrence on the foreign field, there is almost sure to be involved some personal matter in which prejudice for or against someone may easily mislead an outside judgment, and even in the inner circle a just and wise judgment requires the utmost caution. All administrative work is, of course, justly open to candid and reasonable criticism, and no missionary society expects or asks to escape it; but there are comparatively few persons who are thoroughly qualified to criticize the administration of the great missionary organizations except in a very general way. Even for those who have intimate knowledge enough to be capable of intelligent criticism, it often proves far easier to see faults in the policy of the great societies than to propose radical improvements upon their general method of administration. It is a case where correction even of acknowledged faults, though it be ever so much desired, is often beset with unsuspected difficulty. Hence, the case is one that evidently calls for mutual confidence and loyal cooperation among those who are interested together in missions. The fact ought to be taken more closely home to the popular Christian heart that a missionary society is conducting a work of exceptional magnitude and difficulty, under conditions that render misjudgment of its doings extremely easy, and that its officers deserve sympathetic and respectful judgment from all their brethren."

Mission boards are giving increasing attention to the principles of an intelligent and comprehensive policy. They are not merely conducting a crusade but a settled campaign, and they are planning it with all the skill and prudence they possess. They study the broad principles of missions, read

JESUS WASHES HIS DISCIPLES' FEET

(Lesson for March 6)

Lesson Text, John 13:1-15; Golden Text, Matt. 20:28

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Jesus Washes His Disciples' Feet. John 13:1-11

As Brethren, we believe that this was not merely the performance of a menial task by Jesus as a lesson in humility to his proud disciples, but rather that it was the institution of a new ordinance which some of them, especially Peter, did not yet understand. It is to be feared that there are still many, even among the Brethren, who do not yet understand the significance of the ordinance. Let us pray for the cleansing from the daily walk which it symbolizes, and let us pray with the whole-hearted earnestness of Peter when he cried: "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head!" And may nothing ever come into our lives that will take away our part in him!

TUESDAY

A Lesson in Humility. John 13:12-20

Entirely aside from the institution of a new ordinance for his church, the incident did furnish a perfect lesson in humility. If we stop for a few moments to consider the person of Christ, his pre-existence with God, his deity, his power and authority, and holiness, in contrast with the ambitious pride and selfish misunderstandings of his disciples, his own created beings—and then stop to picture the Son of God stooping before them to perform the humblest service, is there any service, or any place of service, too lowly for any of us to accept? Let us pray for humility, that we may follow his example in all things.

WEDNESDAY

Greatness Through Service. Matt. 20:20-28

"The servant is not greater than his Lord," and if the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, surely we can do no less. Jesus teaches here that greatness comes through service, and even in a worldly sense we may readily see that this is true by noting that the greatest men of history are those who have rendered the greatest service to their fellows. In our worship of the Master, let us beware lest our worship become the false bowing down for favors, as in the case of the mother of Zebedee's children.

THURSDAY

Humility Commended. 1 Pet. 5:1-11

Peter had learned to value humility, for he had had to learn it by himself, from the Master. How the proud, boasting Peter had been changed by the gentleness of Jesus! Having learned the value of humility, he commended it to all, and especially to the elders. Even when in a position of leadership we are not to behave as lords over the flock, but are rather to be as examples for them. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

FRIDAY

Paul's Humility. 2 Cor. 12:1-10

Paul the Pharisee had many reasons for pride, from a natural standpoint. Since he had become a Christian, wonderful revelations had been given unto him, which have blessed the whole world, even unto this day, but which might well have turned the heads of some. To keep Paul humble, he says, he was given his "thorn in the flesh," to remind him that, after all, he was flesh. May we, like Paul, be willing even to be counted as fools for Christ's sake!

SATURDAY

Jesus' Humility. Phil. 2:1-11

Verses 6 to 8 are as nearly beyond human comprehension as any passage in the Bible but they will well repay as much time for meditation as we can give them; we should ponder them often. And the oftener we meditate upon them, the humbler we ourselves will become, and the more willing to serve the humble servant, Christ Jesus, whom God hath now highly exalted. Let us bow before him, and praise him, to the glory of God, the Father!

SUNDAY

The Man of Sorrows. Isa. 52:13-53:6

It was the vision of the suffering Messiah that the Jews seemed never able to grasp. While we may say we grasp it today, we are still unable to understand it. But whether we understand or not, we know that he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all—what suffering for the Savior, and what blessed peace and salvation for us!

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

6. "Law vs. Luck"

Many persons seem to look upon the religious life as a sort of fairy tale in which all sorts of wonderful things are liable to happen without any cause whatever. God is to them only a greater edition of the kind genii who, at the most unexpected times and in the most unlikely circumstances, brings about uncaused marvels for the benefit of his specially favored children. But, like the fairy tale, this ideal of spiritual life never gets translated into reality. It always remains an unsubstantial illusion.

Such are the persons who look for some extraordinary experience like that of Saul on the Damascus road, or of Jacob at Bethel or Peniel to convert them or transform them into saints while they are living in utter indifference and frivolity. Such, too, are the disciples who pray for the baptism of the Holy Spirit, or for a great revival in the church, and then sit quietly down and wait for something to turn up.

We are continually telling our children that the outcome of their lives and actions depends not upon chance but upon certain definite laws and conditions which they must regard if they would not invite failure in all their plans. And then we bemoan our spiritual failures and disappointments as though there were no laws and conditions in that realm, and we were the victims of an unkind Providence. Some very intelligent persons who would scorn to talk of luck and chance in their daily work, will talk and pray about spiritual gifts as if they were wholly matters of caprice. Is it strange then, that the average religious life is so childish? Is it strange then that after so many centuries of Christian teaching we are still most of us babes in Christ?

To make religion a realm of chance while the remainder of life is woven with the threads of order and system and law is to keep the spiritual part of life ever in the shadow of the material and the intellectual. We need have no fear for the freedom of divine grace on the one hand nor for the liberty of the spiritual life on the other. As the discovery of the universal reign of law in the natural world has at once exalted God and made man a greater being; so the recognition of the same reign of law in the spiritual world deepens our reverence for God while it stimulates us to more intelligent endeavor in his service.

"Luck" is the catch word of thriftlessness and ignorance. "Law" is the talisman of thrift and progress. Luck paralyzes intelligent effort. Law is a continual inspiration to study and labor. To the child or the savage most things happen; that is they come by chance. The mature and intelligent mind sees in every event the natural working of some fixed law. The growth of science has been a steady progress in the recognition of a divine order in the universe, and in the discovery of the relations of cause and effect. There could be no science in a world where things just happened. Stable commerce, too, is based upon fixed laws. The gambler and the speculator, the dealers in chance, hamper the progress of trade. The reign of chance would involve confusion and the perpetual infancy of the race.

The reign of law means harmony and makes possible the perfection of mankind.

The Christianity of the 19th century has discovered the reign of "Natural law in the Spiritual world." It remains for the 20th century church to live up to this discovery, to cease making Providence a synonym for chance and instead to lay hold of it as a reliable source of power, to see in all life

"One God, one law, one element,
And one far off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves."

Krypton, Kentucky

The work at Krypton is a characteristic work of the Lord, with God for it, most people here indifferent to it, and the devil dead set against it. It is only to the glory of God that the first outweighs the last two characteristics.

One feature of our work here is the fact that we come more directly into contact with the unsaved. This is partly so because of the proportion of the unsaved, and partly because often the unsaved, young people especially, come to our services for the reason that there is no other public place to which to go. This makes for opportunity. But justice must be done by saying that reaching these same folks with the Gospel is a task which has not its likeness in any other section of our land. This hardness to the Gospel appeal is colossal.

The usual departments of church work are maintained, worship services, Sunday school, prayer meeting and both Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor. We might almost dare to hope that lately there has been an increased attendance which, we hope, is also an indication of an increase in interest. Only the Lord can bring fruit and we wait on him for it. Pray for faithfulness in the sowing of the Word. With the faithful sowing we must rest on his promises that his Word shall not return to him void.

Mountain work presents some peculiar problems. Not that we mean to say that other places have not theirs. Rather it is to say that those here are peculiar to the mountain sections. As it would be neither polite nor discreet to indicate the nature of these special phases in a public utterance, attention is called to them to warn others against making unfair comparisons between a mountain work and a work in a northern city. Success in a mountain work cannot be measured in terms of so many contributing members or of self-supporting churches. To do so makes us all, with our fields, a failure.

Kentucky can be won only by faithfulness in prayer, in the sowing of the Word and in waiting. Ours is the sowing of the Word. The praying and the waiting is mutual. In that we join. Together let us storm the gates of heaven for answered prayer in this field.

Thus, you see how much we are counting upon you out there in the other Brethren churches to help here. We feel sure you will not fail us and the Lord's work. He will reward your faithfulness.

Why Medical Missions in Africa?

By Florence N. Gribble, M.D.

(Concluded from last week)

We might tell you of our first fracture case years ago when we were young. Kihika, under treatment for a tubercular limb, nevertheless working in his garden, fell and fractured his femur. We had no hospital, no nurse, no trained assistant of any kind, but the treasurer of the mission knelt on the ground beside the man to administer the chloroform and the inexperienced doctor reduced the fracture and applied the splints. In those days a man with a broken bone in that tribe was considered hopeless. How we prayed, how we worked, how we massaged! What consultations with our books, what inaugurations of anti-tubercular treatments! And, oh, what joy when Kihika walked, when the fracture not only was healed, but the last vestige of tuberculosis had disappeared. But the healing was not all. There followed that rapid establishment of confidence so familiar to the medical missionary after a hard but successful fight with disease, confidence of the people, not only in the mission, but in the Gospel as well.

What a wonderful boon and seeming magic chloroform is in a heathen land! "Give me some of that medicine in my nose," said a patient in the Yaloke hospital the other day, "and you may cut me open and see what is the matter with me!"

The day of miracles is not past and we may be called upon to exercise the gift of healing in a miraculous way. I believe that God heals every patient who is cured in our work. Who can deny him the use of the means he has himself created? Who can refuse to cooperate with him? Who can turn a deaf ear to the call to be a medical missionary? Happy is he who is privileged to be so called.

We went to preach one morning in Jougous village. The crowd was great around the fire. Several of the audience accepted the Lord Jesus. As we were about to depart our attention was called to a man lying by the fireside and hitherto hidden by the crowd. He was a hideous mass of filth intermingled with recent burns. The chief told his story. The night before the man had left his hut, and presumably in a fit of epilepsy had fallen in the fire, where he remained unconscious until morning. Deep burns were on the face, the side, the chest, the thigh, while the arm below the elbow was a charred mass. We brought him to the mission station where we then had no hospital, no nurse, no trained assistants and but little equipment. Our surgical instruments had been burned in a recent fire and had not been replaced. All wounds but the arm healed without surgical interference. We decided to amputate the arm at the elbow joint. But our patient refused. We prayed for his consent and on Sunday morning our table boy who was also our medical helper, whispered: "Mesengaili wants his arm off." The only other missionary on the station consented to try to give the anesthetic. The operation was performed on the veranda of the dwelling house, on a native-made table, with a hunting knife and a carpenter's saw. My assistant fainted. The natives stood outside with cries and groans of "He will die, he will never wake up, Alas, Alas!" Finally the operation was finished, and the patient made a perfect recovery. Nobody in all this tribe had ever lived before through such an accident. No one had ever heard of an amputation. Few had heard of chloroform. But Mesengaili gives his simple testimony—"They put me to sleep. They took off my dead arm. I am well again." To the native it is more wonderful and produces greater confidence in his mind than a perfect restoration.

At Mahagi in the Belgian Congo the region is peculiarly susceptible to thunder storms. Lightning often strikes a native hut, and men and women and children are killed. Sometimes however, they are only stunned, and alas, buried alive. One night a little Christian boy living in one such village came to the doctor during the storm. "A man has just been struck by lightning," he said. "I don't know whether or not he is dead, but they are going to bury him." The doctor went in all haste. The man was unconscious but words were useless. They laughed at the very suggestion of life. They were completing their preparations for his immediate burial but the doctor quickly drew from her case her hypodermic. A quick injection, a speedy response! The man moved slightly, then stirred perceptibly and sat up. One premature burial was interrupted. One more step had been taken toward winning confidence in that difficult field. For a time the doctor was supposed to have raised the man from the dead.

The medical missionary will never forget the first time she entered a hut where a child was being born. A woman who had been in labor four days was unable to deliver her child. At last the husband was persuaded to send for the mission doctor. There was no time to be lost and fifteen minutes after the doctor entered the hut the child was delivered. There were cries of "God, 'tis God," throughout the village. Then we preached unto them, Christ, whose we are, and whom we serve. It was the beginning of a turning to him in that obdurate village.

All around us in our present field we have the leper. He is sometimes helpless, often deformed, but sometimes curable. We may manifest the love of God, we may cure the body, and we may have the joy of knowing that Christ is preached, not only to, but often by the leper. Without treatment we must pass by, like the Levite—on the other side—while the poor human bodies continue to be mutilated and destroyed by the ravages of the disease, and contagion is rapidly spread.

Without such treatment souls are not won to Christ for the "Son of God is not manifested unto them" and the "works of the devil are not destroyed in their midst."

Our medical ministry is also blessed to the ungodly white man in Africa, and much more to our fellow missionary who suffers from disease. They are burned by the tropical sun, they know the anguish of African malaria, and thank God they know the mitigating effects of scientific healing. Happy is the medical missionary or the nurse privileged to minister to some dear missionary mother in her hour of need.

And never shall I forget those days when my own life was saved by a fellow physician. For that boon I traveled three hundred miles, carried on a cot by natives, and after two operations recovery came in three months.

By increasing medical missions workers can be protected, lives saved, and the ministry of healing can become an effective stepping stone to the Gospel. "Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."—Missionary Review of the World.

preached one Monday night, Brother Shaffer one, and Brother Paul Miller one. Then as a "surprise," we preached one. These Monday night "surprise nights" drew fine crowds.

We rejoice with all pastors and churches whom God is blessing in the winning of souls!

CANTON, OHIO

Once again we come with some news regarding the work at Canton. We are happy to report that twelve people have accepted Christ since the first of the new year. Most of these have been brought to the saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ through the personal efforts of a few consecrated laymen. Truly the harvest is great but the laborers are few. No doubt when more of us learn that outstanding truth taught in Acts 8:1 (drawing our attention to the fact that it was the witnessing of the scattered disciples together with the faithfulness of the apostles who stayed in Jerusalem) we will awaken out of our lethargy and indifference and more of the unsaved will be brought to the one who alone can give them life eternal.

The Tuesday evening Bible study class continues with increasing interest as we get into the midst of the study of THE REVELATION and provides real "meat" for those who desire to grow in grace. Another class has been begun which meets each Thursday afternoon. This was primarily started for the benefit of those who were unable to get out to the other services. An average of about 20 folks have been coming out the past six Thursdays and are enjoying a detailed study of the Gospel of John.

We are also happy to report that through the efforts of our members in Sebring, Ohio, a class has been formed which meets every other week, to study the Word under the leadership of our pastor. Much interest has been shown here and we are trusting that this may prove to be the nucleus of a real work in that city sometime in the future. The Sunday school as a whole is growing noticeably, and the Endeavor societies are coming along very nicely too. At present, plans are being made for an Easter cantata which will be presented on Easter night as an appropriate conclusion of a series of sermons which our pastor, Dr. J. C. Beal, is now giving on "The Six Miracles Surrounding the Crucifixion." We read with interest the work that is being accomplished in our Brethren churches and send our heartiest greetings and sincere prayers to those who are fellow-laborers in the Master's service.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The Brethren church of Allentown, Pennsylvania, is bravely holding her own in spite of handicaps, although we could not give as largely for missions as we would have liked. The mills and shops have been on short shifts for over a year and a half and then when working longer hours gave a 10% cut. The city put the sewage system through our streets and the bill, which had to be paid, cleaned out the treasuries of all auxiliaries of the church. Many of the members are back in church dues as it was impossible to pay without work. We are hoping and praying that normal times may

VICTORY REVIVAL, FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

One of the greatest challenges that has ever come to us in our ministry was that of conducting this Victory Revival as pastor-evangelist. This is the eleventh year as pastor here. This would be the twelfth revival we have enjoyed with this church. During these years we have made our mistakes and some folks never forget the mistakes of others. We have incurred the enmity of some by "earnestly contending for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." It was with some misgivings that we entered into this revival.

More thorough preparation was made in the church than ever before. There were ten different committees, including over 60 different members. These committees worked nobly. Never have we known this church to rally to preparatory plans as this year. There was not a phase of evangelistic methods that we felt God would honor but what was employed and faithfully supported by the church. The opening date of the revival was delayed one week so that everything could be in readiness, especially the preacher's sermons. No definite limit was set for the revival. We announced that it would run until the Lord led to close it. At the close of the third week, he led definitely to continue for the fourth. Over 25 of those who came confessing, came during this fourth week.

The attendance was excellent, averaging 313 per service for the series. There was not one poor crowd. The large volunteer choir was most faithful, averaging 28 per service. Our local Choir Director was sick for three of the four weeks, but the assistant stepped in and we had wonderful singing. The organist was sick for about a week and the assistant stepped in and the Lord blessed her playing. Delegations came from Brethren and Church of the Brethren churches around us and from organizations of the local church. The Question Box became a source of interest and helpfulness, although a professed infidel attempted to use it for "trouble-making." In this his questions became a boom-a-rang. There was marvelous unity and fellowship. The sweetest spirit prevailed that we have ever enjoyed in any revival anywhere. The Lord gave the pastor-evangelist health, liberty, and power to do his part. We never worked harder, felt better, and enjoyed ourselves more. Inasmuch as there was no remuneration to feel responsible for, we just let the offerings care for themselves and after all expenses were paid, there was a surplus to put into the current expense fund of the church. The Brotherhood of Alexander Mack had a surprise on the pastor-evangelist during the meeting on his birthday and presented him with a handsome Gladstone bag, although emphasizing that this was not intended as a hint for him to take his departure.

The visible results of this revival were as follows: There were 76 (seventy-six) public confessions. Only 7 of these were members of the local church renewing their vows; 56 of these have already been received into membership, 46 by baptism and 10 by letter and relation. Some have gone to other churches and a few are still "considering." We believe there will be additional members received soon. These confessions came from 48 different homes. There were a large number of husbands and wives. One soul is as precious as another, but these husbands and wives will mean much in service in the church. This brings the total number of members received into this church since we became their pastor to 723. The glory be- longeth unto him! "Without him we can do nothing."

A Brethren Night was held the week following the revival, at which time baptismal and membership certificates were given to all the new members. A welcoming service was conducted, introducing and welcoming these members. It was well attended and enjoyed by all. In this way we made the "new members feel at home."

An unusual interest was manifested in the three Prophetic Messages given during the revival, two on, "Signposts of Prophecy Passed During 1931" and one on "The Rapture." We have always taught the prophetic messages of the Word, but never witnessed so strong an interest and attendance to hear them as this time. Many came from other churches hungering for the Blessed Hope. What a challenge these days present to the minister! How thoroughly he ought to be prepared!

We almost forgot about "Surprise Night." This was Monday night of each week. No one knew what to expect. Brother Gingrich return so we can make up our deficits.

Our pastor saw the press on some of our people and also thought that there was a lack of cooperation and confidence in him. Last October he gave the secretary a letter to be read at the business meeting, asking the people to kindly be honest with God and themselves, so that those who thought him not to be a help unto them and the community to please not vote for him. After a unanimous vote to retain him, he was called in again and said, "I thank you for this confidence. I will also share the stress from lack of work and will serve you this year for a free will offering." This offer was rejected as we were afraid he would be compelled to sacrifice too much and cause his family to suffer. An agreement was reached to accept a cut of $5.00 per week salary.

For the last three months Brother Christiansen has given a series of discourses Sunday mornings on "The Life in Union with God" and Sunday evenings on "Prophecy," and no Wednesday evenings on "The New Birth." Brother Christiansen frequently gives Brother I. D. Bowman, D.D., credit for imparted Bible knowledge.

Our Sunday school, under Brother E. E. Fehnel had its high mark of attendance during January, being 20% higher than any month for the last few years.

The church attendance also, exceeded the total membership 12% during this month.

Our Christian Endeavor under Brother Carol Parks, who is not a member of our church, but a splendid Christian young man, is hoping for a fuller growth. He is deeply interested in Christian Endeavor work. Our former president, Sister Adele Silberman, served us faithfully and deserves credit for the fine work of last year.

The Junior Christian Endeavor under the leadership of Sister Iva Silberman is doing splendidly. The children are instructed in a way that they are anxious to go to their meetings. They have learned a great deal of the Bible which puts Christ in Christian Endeavor.

The W. M. S. under the leadership of Mrs. Christiansen is keeping on, trying to serve the Lord faithfully. We have our regular devotional meetings. We have read Dr. Yoder's book, also "Christ Comes to the Village." Our prayers go out for all W. M. S. societies of the brotherhood, that we as a band of women may pray fervently as well as faithfully support those who have so nobly heard and answered Christ's "Go ye."

MRS. JAMES KAMORE,
Corresponding Secretary.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The enrollment for this present semester shows a slight gain over the one just past. About 25 students did not re-enroll. Some did not have the money, others finished, and some were dropped for poor scholarship. But a few more entered for the first time than were dropped. So the enrollment now is 306.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the College has been tentatively set for Tuesday, April 12th.

According to all reports, not a few colleges are in distress now financially. Every report that comes to my hands speaks of economies and curtailments. Some colleges are meeting pay-day, as I knew they certainly would. When a college spends money which it does not have and which it can not get, pay-day is ahead. "Easy come, easy go," has been the philosophy in all too many schools, both public and private.

In not a few cases the cost of attending college was too high. Now it is impossible to lower the tuitions as that would be admitting that they were too high. Those colleges with low costs are now in a better position to raise them than those with high costs are to lower them.

A recent report of a well-known, mid-western university shows that they spent 60% of their income before they were ready to hear a single recitation. Others spend as much as 50% for what is fondly called "overhead", leaving the real purpose of the college to struggle along on the remaining 50%. Rents, projects, travel, athletics, food, enormous costs of upkeep, costly administration, take money away from the teachers, —where it rightly belongs, as only teachers make a school, teachers and books and laboratory equipment.

I know a school where the coach is the highest paid man on the staff, (and his athletic record is far from rosy), where not one out of 8 of the so-called administration teaches a single hour, and where others on full pay teach less than two hours a day.

This flush of money in the past has set the teaching load at 12 recitations a week, with not more than 16, and with classes of small size—all intended to spend money uselessly. Teachers ought to teach at least 16 hours and some of them would be better off if they taught more,—and they will in the future. One Ohio college dropped 40 teachers and it is a safe guess that the remaining teachers can do the work without suffering a nervous breakdown. They probably had 40 teachers too many. Men teaching a few hours a few days in the week, has in part helped to pile up deficits. Other extravagancies fostered and enforced by accrediting associations, will be cut in many cases all to the health of the institutions. Unless I am much mistaken, a re-adjustment is ahead of many colleges and expansion will be out of the program of many. And perhaps the time will come when school authorities will come to see that well-trained teachers, well paid, with a normal amount of teaching, and with the froth and fuss cut off and out, after all make a college. More than that, I think the time is coming when young people can expect to pay for their education instead of getting it for nothing. I do not expect to see in my time any return to peak prosperity where waste was the watchword of the hour.

It was a great pleasure to have Dr. W. H. Beachler with us recently to preach at the local church. Dr. Beachler, it will be recalled, was formerly Endowment Secretary for the College.

The College team recently defeated Kenyon College on our own floor.

In recent contests, the College Fencing team defeated Ohio Northern, Case and Fenn, the latter a division of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A. In fact, the Fencing team has not yet been defeated. Fencing is a good sport, neither dangerous or expensive.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

SEMINARY NOTES

The Seminary counts itself very fortunate this year to have obtained the services of Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle, who is a notable figure in the field of Palestinian Archaeology. During the last forty years, Dr. Kyle has made over twenty-five trips to Palestine. Biennially, since 1926, he has presided over a research staff which has worked in cooperation with the Jerusalem School of Oriental Research, excavating at Kir-Jath Sepher, mentioned in the 15th chapter of Joshua. His lectures were given over two week ends, February 5th and February 12th. He gave eight archaeological lectures on Israel's National Period, and three messages on the bearing of archaeology on the Bible. We feel that he did our Seminary young men a great deal of good, as well as all others, for quite a few evinced interest in his work by their attendance. From a number of sources, we have received thanks and compliments pertaining to his coming to Ashland. At this time we might say that next year we also hope to bring in some man, doubtless in a different field, who will give special lectures to our Seminary students over a period of days.

Because of the merger of two Seminary libraries we are given the opportunity by the Pittsburgh-Xenia librarian to purchase, at very small cost over 100 rare and valuable books. When they are recorded the accession number of our Theological Departmental library will be about 3236 books. We are using the money given to us this year by the National W. M. S. and Sunday School Board, which makes such a purchase possible. Unsolicited on his part Professor M. A. Stuckey has lately received two well-deserved honors. He has been elected to membership in the American Society of Church History, which was founded by Dr. Philip Schaff in 1888 and incorporated by Act of the Legislation of the State of New York. It is a Society for Church Historians of all denominations. Also Brother Stuckey has been informed that his name will appear in the Princeton Seminary Biographical Catalogue which is Princeton's "Who's Who." This catalogue covers 117 years. First edition 1815-1909. Second edition 1815-1932. Names of former Princeton Seminary graduates are given together with their denomination, ecclesiastical status, present position, titles, degrees, printed materials, etc.

The pre-seminary students have made a very good showing on the honor roll, considering their percentage of the student body. Of the two all "A" students on the campus, one is Willis Belcher, from Sunnyside, Washington, a pre-seminary student. Out of the 300 students on the campus 49 received A and B grades, and out of this group there are 5 pre-seminary men. They are, James Boyer and Herman Hoyt of Ashland, Everett Niswonger of Rittman, Ohio, Paul Dowdy of Roanoke, Virginia, and J. L. Leffingwell, of Los Angeles, Calif.

K. M. MONROE,
Secretary Seminary Faculty.

REPORT OF WHITE GIFTS

This is the first White Gift Report of the new year and even if the total is discouraging the large number of contributors is encouraging. When gifts shrink from $37 to 7; from $265 to $113; from $106 to $37 and from $71 to $25 it is very evident that every church in the brotherhood will have to do its best in order to make a good total. I have read in the Evangelist of two or more churches in which the Reporter stated that a White Gift Offering was taken, at Christmas time and yet the Gifts have not been sent in. Won't you please see that your church reports as promptly as possible?

The treasurer will appreciate it if you will call all mistakes in this report to his attention at once. Please do not forget to show clearly what organization or individuals should be credited with the gift reported and always give the address of the sender. Please report promptly if you don't receive an acknowledgment from the treasurer. There are instances where a White Gift is received from an individual to be credited to a church known by a special name such as "Bethel Church" located in a different town. Please make all details regarding your gift clear. Some continue to send gifts to Evanston, Illinois, instead of Ashland, Ohio. Likely all such have been forwarded but there is a chance for a gift going astray that way.

Let those churches that have not reported and whose names are not on this list do their very utmost to make this year's White Gift representative of 100% of our brotherhood.

Christ's Open Door. Rev.3:8

By J. L. Gingrich

(Moderator's Address before Pennsylvania Conference in Third church, Philadelphia, October 6, 1931, and voted published in The Brethren Evangelist.)

Part I.

Dear Brethren in the Lord—Christian Greetings:

Through the providence of Almighty God we are privileged to assemble in this, the forty-third Annual Conference of the Pennsylvania District of churches. For most of us it is a reassembling. Others are or will be greeted and welcomed as newcomers. First, we would express our heartfelt gratitude to our heavenly Father for his unfailing goodness and love exercised over us; for the gift of his Son, our Savior, who redeemed us from the power and guilt of sin as well as exercised his keeping power; for the Holy Spirit's unerring counsel in the administration of his church. Another year of accomplishments, successes and failures is now history. From all available records the successes, thank God, far outnumber the petty failures. As Moderator, it is my privilege to bring a message appropriate to the office.

There is no other motive in this address than that of endearing our hearts to Christ's church and causing us to become more loyal to the cause we espouse. We must, in all propriety, recount the past, take stock of the present and present for your prayerful consideration some recommendations for the immediate future. During the past year we rejoice in the splendid achievements attained in the district. There was a marked tendency among the various churches to put on a program for the deepening of the spiritual life. Many revivals were conducted during which church members were revived and let into a closer walk with their Lord and Master. Parallel with the revivals was a definite, positive and scriptural program of evangelism. A program of this nature is scriptural, logical and powerful. The church must get right herself, if she would become more efficient and effective in leading the unsaved to Christ. There is no greater and more deadly enemy to the cause than inconsistent living among the church members. One day of good preaching is no match for six days of inconsistent practice. God will never honor his church with complete success until it completely honors him. The church of Jesus Christ must be loyal, loving, faithful, obedient and true to her Master. Christ's church must be a glorious church, cleansed by his Word. She must be free from the spots of the world and untouched by the wrinkles caused by growing cold.

During the past year the ministry of the Brethren church has faithfully executed its duties in a most commendable manner. The preachers have preached God's message fearlessly and boldly—only fearing God. These preachers in question believe that through the foolishness of preaching many are saved to Christ. Jesus chose this method of extending the knowledge of himself throughout the world; he taught his truth to a few men, and then he said, Now go and tell that truth to other men. In reminding ourselves of the high standard of our ministry, we are not forgetful of the fact that these preachers of his Cross are not perfect. Remember, there are only a few model preachers. We have read of only one perfect model, and he was crucified many centuries ago for telling the truth. Brethren ministers during the past year, apparently took the position that they who would move and convince others, must first move and convince themselves. In our immediate district, there was but one elder who required any occasion for questioning character and moral integrity. In another report before Conference mention will be made of this and so we pass on. To the best of our knowledge there was no Brethren church to become disorganized or to disband. Even more praiseworthy than this, we rejoice that several, seemingly less active churches have been noticeably revived and are caring for full time pastors. During the past year there was an appreciable advance in the missionary program of the church. This, in spite of the financial condition, is very gratifying. We shall, purposely, refrain from recounting the activities of the church for the past year because the various records and reports will speak for themselves.

Permit us now to speak regarding the Lord's expressed desire and purpose relative to his true church. The church belongs to Christ. He claims her. "I will build my church." The Christian, quite frequently, gets into trouble with the possessive pronoun—"Mine." Christ not only owns the church but is also the head. The true church dare not fail to recognize the headship of Jesus. One can scarcely peruse the history, teaching and practice of the Brethren faith and her strict adherence to the Word without justly possessing a pardonable pride. At once we remind ourselves, however, that future success cannot be attained upon past reputation. Difficulties and persecutions are stepping stones to success. The Brethren church, if she will remain true, will face almost unsumountable difficulties and bitter persecutions.

To maintain a true relationship to the Head and Master, three things are worthy of note in passing. In all Christian work these three elements are absolutely indispensable. We must recognize the Holy Spirit of God as the power; the Word of God as the message and the man of God as the instrument. The Spirit of God is recorded in Acts as saying, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." The Spirit of God uses the message of God by means of the man of God. In the Church's biblical manual—"The Acts of the Apostles," we have these three elements in order brought before us. The first eleven chapters are full of the Holy Spirit of God. The next nine chapters have less of the Holy Spirit and more of the Word of God. The last eight chapters have more about the man of God. Eleven, nine, eight, that is the order and the proportion. The Spirit is first, the Word is second and the man is third. The successful preacher will hide behind the message. God wants men who are big enough to be small enough to be used in a big way.

The content of this address found its origin in a study of Christ's message to the Philadelphia church recorded in Rev. 3:8-12, "I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my Word, and hast not denied my name. Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of My God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of My God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from My God: and I will write upon him my new name." The message before us is appropriate for many reasons. We are not unmindful that this conference is held in a Philadelphia church. We trust that whatever will be presented in a discussion of this topic will be particularly impressive because of this fact. In the next place we observe that many doors are being closed by human agency apart from the Spirit and the Word. While, on the other hand, other doors of man's creation have been opened. In the Brethren church Christ's door is still recognized. The true church must recognize Christ as the door. A full and proper appreciation of this fact will completely revolutionize life in its relation to Christ. There is told a very beautiful story of a man who prepared a surprise for his wife who was about to return from a prolonged vacation. They lived in an old dilapidated cottage back in the woods. The husband purchased a mahogany door and spent much time and labor in installing it for the front door. After the arrival of his wife he took her to the front of the house to show her his surprise. Together, arm in arm, they beheld the beautiful door—for it was beautiful. At length the good wife broke the silence by saying, "Husband, that door is out of place. You will have to remodel the entire house." Brethren, when Jesus is recognized as the door of our life structure the entire life must be changed to harmonize. Let us pray that in Christ's true church the door will never be discarded nor disclaimed. May we add with a note of finality and positiveness that the door mentioned in our text will never close because Christ operates it himself. He holds the key. The church must represent Christ in this world. The Christian life is the outliving of the inliving Christ. A true child of God will never frustrate the Grace of God.

In this world of flux when one system of philosophy of life rapidly emerges into a succeeding norm of life, one stubborn fact stands out in bold relief, viz., the permanency and unchangeableness of Christ's Church. The Church is bound to endure and win. The church militant will be transformed into the church triumphant. The paramount need in the church is for saints to properly evaluate their relation to him who is their Lord and Master. Christ's church provides a spiritual meal which is no mean menu. Why cast wistful glances into the world's pasture or warm at the devil's fireside? A boy once asked his father what a peninsula was. The father answered, "A long neck stretched out to sea." The boy then remarked that when the factory whistle blew and the ladies went home that father stretched his peninsula out of the window,—yes a long neck stretching out to see. Fellow saints the church provides your needs while the world tries to supply your wants. The church, also, furnishes good protection. Christ is pictured as the good Shepherd, the great Shepherd and the chief Shepherd. The faithful ones of the church do not share many temptations common to those who have not yielded to their Master. There is a reason why God's faithful followers are not asked to dance, play cards and enticed in many other forms of temptation. They live too close to their Lord. They possess the courage of their convictions which are based upon the, "Thus saith the Word of God." Even if the world does not live according to God's plan and program it expects the church to live as becometh saints. The damsel knew that Peter was not where he belonged. She knew that he was out of place. We belong to Christ. We should always expose our colors. The church and the world have nothing in common. There is a mighty gulf between those who love and those who do not love God. Christians are called saints, for their holiness; believers, for their faith; disciples, for their knowledge; brethren, for their love. Thus we read "Behold, how they loved one another."

A WORD ABOUT A NEW BOOK

Investors and business men generally are the victims today of a vicious system whereby business is stealthily trapped for secret, unearned, and often dishonest profits." This is the thesis of John T. Flynn in his new book Graft in Business (New York: The Vanguard Press. $3.00). It is not a pleasant story he tells, nor a muckraking or sensational one, but a plain, unvarnished tale that needed to be told, just as he tells it—quietly, straightforwardly, emphatically. He does not write as a propagandist, but as a deeply concerned observer.—Clinton Rogers Woodruff, in "Teh Living Church."

Because we do not see the ministering messengers now as of old is no proof that God does not still send help to his people in need. The neighbor next door may be heaven-sent as well as a shining-winged angel.

ARE MISSION BOARDS WORTH WHILE?

the lessons that they have been taught by a hundred years of missionary effort, abandon plans that have been found defective, and adopt new ones that promise better results. Every year the officers and representatives of over sixty boards in the United States and Canada meet for conference as to the best methods of carrying on missionary operations, and an amount of care and thought is given to the whole subject that would surprise the average critic.

There is no ground for the assumption of some that the work of a church board is not a "faith work." At the beginning of each year the board makes its appropriations solely on the faith that God will move the churches to provide the necessary money. Since this work is supported by the gifts of his people, it is fair to assume that he will bless them when they move unitedly and prayerfully for the accomplishment of the chief work that he has laid upon them. He is quite as apt to guide the men whom the Church "looks out" as "of honest report, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom" and appoints "over this business," as he is to guide an individual, however, sincere or enthusiastic. These Board members reverently look to the Holy Spirit as the administrator of the enterprise, believing that their chief reliance must be upon his guidance. They realize that God is not limited to human methods and that the failure of a cherished plan may not augur injury to the cause but only defect in the plan. They feel that their only safety is to keep close to Christ and to seek to know his will. Prayer, therefore, begins and pervades all deliberations and wings every appeal for funds. Heavy as are the anxieties and responsibilities, every Board counts it an honor and a privilege to represent the Church of God in the administration of this noblest of all Christian activities.—The Missionary Review of the World.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WASHINGTON SEEKING UNATTACHED BRETHREN

The Washington Brethren Layman's League is seeking to secure the names of any Brethren people who are now living in Washington but who have not linked themselves with the Brethren church of that place. If you know of any such persons it will be appreciated if their names are sent to either Mr. Elmer Tamkin, 1018 F. Street, N. E., Washington, D. C., or the writer, 1542 25th Street of the same city. It is the purpose to seek to interest such persons in affiliating with the Brethren church where they are residing.

The Old Vocabulary of Missions

By Stanley High in "A Waking World."

I went out to the field a victim of the prevalent American uncertainty. It had been bred in me, as in many, by ignorance of the life of non-Christian people, lack of conviction of the power of Christianity, and an honest desire, above all things, to be tolerant. I was determined to eliminate "heathen" and "heathenism" from my vocabulary. I resented the "holier-than-thou" sentiments of many of our missionary hymns. It was definitely arranged that I should write a series of articles upon my return, which would indicate something of the fundamental unity of all faiths and indorse the idea of their eventual synthesis. But the articles were never written. "Heathenism" went back into my vocabulary and the missionary hymns, for the most part, are no longer offensive. For that the newspaper game will have to shoulder a good bit of the responsibility. I was sent out to write what I observed. As a piece of reporting it was a large assignment. I went at it in the best newspaper fashion that I was able to apply — to see, to hear, and to ask. It was not made a condition of my going that I should change my mind. But it proved to be the inescapable consequence of the things that I saw and heard.

Christ's Open Door. Rev.3:8

By J. L. Gingrich

(Moderator's Address before Pennsylvania Conference in Third church, Philadelphia, October 6, 1931, and voted published in The Brethren Evangelist.)

Part II.

God's children are living far below their privileges. The Book of Joshua showed how Israel might live—obedient, happy, prosperous and victorious; the Book of Judges revealed how Israel actually did live. This latter book is often referred to as the book of failure. Notice the following from the first chapter, "Judah could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley;" "The children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites." "Neither did Manasseh drive out the inhabitants of Bethshean," "Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites;" "Neither did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants of Kitron," "Neither did Asher drive out the inhabitants of Accho;" "Neither did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Bathshemesh," "And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountains," "And the Midianites forced God's people into dens." Joy, peace and happiness result from victory over sin. Grief, strife and sorrow constitute the state of those who are conquered by sin. The children of Israel were commanded to utterly destroy the Canaanites and possess the land. They failed and were forced to live in dens and caves of the mountains. That was a pretty place for God's children when they should have been more than conquerors through him who loved them and gave himself for their power and protection.

Passing on to the New Testament the Book of the Acts shows how the early church did live under the leadership of the Holy Spirit. Church history reveals how she actually lived apart from the Holy Spirit. One almost feels like apologizing for what the church tried to accomplish in the name of Christ. Not only should the Church properly evaluate her relation to Christ as Master, but she should so live that the world will come to appreciate the value of the church in the world. The Brethren church must continue to affirm her position as to her interpretation of God's Word and commands. If the Brethren church takes the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible as her only rule and practice of faith she must practice utmost vigilance and precaution lest she allows holes to be put into her Bible. The true church with the open door will recognize Christ as head. She can go no higher but must go that high. Christ is the foundation. She must build thereon and thereon only. Christ is the chief cornerstone. The boundary line is fixed by his, "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not." Where he speaks the church must speak. Where he is silent the church dare not speak forth. The church is the only divinely ordained meeting place where God communes with his children and where saints hold sweet fellowship with fellow saints. She is also God's only divinely ordained institution designed to save souls. We must uphold the value of Christ's church even to the exclusion of all other humanly devised organizations where these deter the progress of his program.

The true church, apparently, will always have, as a contemporary, the spurious church. For the Philadelphia church, Satan prepared a counterfeit organization which Christ names, "The Synagogue of Satan." They were liars, false, and untrue. These people of Satan are always attempting to block the progress of God and open up numerous avenues of temptation to lead away Christ's elect. We learn that Christ opens the obstructed passage and provides a way of escape to those grievously tempted. Following is given the average type of a counterfeit church: "A hammock, attached at one end to the cross and the other end is held and swung to and fro by the forefinger of mammon; its freight of nominal Christians elegantly moaning, meanwhile, over the evils of the times, and not at ease unless fanned by eloquence and music and sprinkled by social flattery into perfumed unheroic slumber."

How long must the church live before it will learn that strength is won by action, and success by work, and that all this immeasurable feeding without action and work is a positive damage to it—that it is the forerunner of spiritual obesity, gout and debility. A lazy, indolent church tends toward unbelief; an earnest church, in hand-to-hand conflict with sin and misery grows stronger in faith. There is nothing more pitiable than a soulless, sapless-shriveled church seeking to thrive in a worldly atmosphere, rooted in barren profession, bearing no fruit, and maintaining only the semblance of existence; such a church cannot long survive. The expression, "Holy" and "True" refer especially to Christ. He forever stands unscathed and diametrically opposed to false prophets and false teaching. The keys are still in his hands. To him God has delegated absolute power and authority, "All power is given unto me both in heaven and on earth" (Mt. 28:18). If the human element of the church proves incompetent, which is often the case, thank God the ruling, overruling and vetoing power is in his hand. The church can never open what Christ has shut, neither can she close what he has opened.

In keeping with his office as bearer of the keys, Jesus had set before the church in Philadelphia a great door of opportunity. The true church must be a missionary-spirited church. She must be a strong base from which should go forth Gospel teachers and preachers to evangelize the world. Paul's first missionary journey recorded in Acts 13 and 14, was the first organized effort to evangelize the world. The plan to evangelize the world did not originate in the mind of Paul, neither was it a scheme of activity proposed by the church, but it was an enterprise of God, conceived, and directed and blessed by the Holy Spirit. God used these missionaries as his instruments. God's plan of evangelization of the world has never changed, and those who speak against missions, home or foreign, are speaking against the greatest enterprise of God in this world.

The divine plan of evangelization under the leading of the Holy Spirit seems to be to plant the Gospel in great centers like Antioch, Corinth, Athens, Derbe, etc., that it might spread from there out to the surrounding country. The records show that in each city, regardless of the number of believers, an organized church was established. The churches of today, both large and small, need to be set on fire with a new missionary zeal. The door is wide open. The duty and privilege of the church is to recognize the open door and take the land for God. For the church to pray that God would open doors of service is, apparently, out of order. Christ is the great door-keeper. In the fullness of time God opens and closes the door. The logical prayer is, "Open mine eyes and ears that I may see the opportunity and hear the call, 'Who will go for us?'" Open the door of my heart that Christ may come in to go out with me in the particular field of service. He has opened. We repeat, the true church is a missionary church which recognizes the open door.

A noted artist was asked to paint on the canvas his conception of a dead church. He then painted the following picture: "An imposing edifice beautifully decorated and elaborately furnished. The choir and rector wore costly robes and gown. The parishioners, as they assembled, resembled a fashion parade. Faultless music which a very few could understand or appreciate was supposed to be used. In the vestibule, the artist placed a collection box facing every person as he entered with the superscription, 'Missionary offering.' A spider's web, unbroken, covered the slot." This was his conception of a dead church. The door that Christ opened was closed. One may declare that charity begins at home. This may be true, but if allowed to stay there, it will starve to death.

In a careful study of Christ's messages to the seven churches it will be noticed that the message to the Philadelphia church is the only one which does not contain a criticism. There are, however, several admissions. "Thou hast a little strength." What strength there is should be exerted to revive the dead Sardis church. Mere ceremonialism and much activity, minus the Spirit of God, is an indication of a spiritually anemic condition. There are many churches which will die because of over organization at the expense of the operation of the Holy Spirit.

A worldly program in any church organization to cater to the mixed multitude will

When the Spirit of Christ Dominates a Life

We talk much of sacrifice these days, and there is some of it to be found, but it is not nearly so common as the talk of it. There are some folks who have been put in positions of real hardship, as a result of this depression, while there are others who do not know what hardship means; they are only slightly inconvenienced. But they treat the church and every appeal for missions or benevolences as if they were hard pressed, and trouble themselves much about the sacrifices they must make, as if sacrifice were a thing that ought not to be required of them. There are not many who are really making sacrifices, but even if there were, it ought not to be thought a thing strange and extraordinary, as if one might rightly expect to be free from the necessity of it when conditions are adjusted. Sacrifice should not be the unusual but the common experience of the Christian, and it will be if the spirit of Christ dominates the life.

The spirit of sacrifice was never absent from the life of our Lord. It was with him from Bethlehem to Calvary. He came emptying himself, taking upon himself the form of a servant, continuing through all the months of his life in self-abnegation and sacrifice, until setting his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem, he went with grim determination into the very jaws of death. He deliberately laid down his life, no man took it from him; he willingly gave himself, offering himself up, a sacrifice for sin. And that is the spirit—a readiness to sacrifice—that should actuate the Christian. Jesus put the cross at the very heart of Christianity. It is love's necessity, and he who will not take it and bear it is not worthy of his discipleship. Sacrifice is not an accident, nor an emergency, but an inherent part of the Christian life. By example and by direct statement Jesus made it a universal requirement.

Yet we shirk it and seek to avoid it. And when conditions thrust it upon us we feel ourselves imposed upon and we complain and look anxiously to the time when we shall be relieved, and can again take our ease and enjoy the luxuries of life. When we consider how unwillingly we make any sacrifice, and compare the puny sacrifices we do make with the resplendent example of our Lord, we are made to hang our heads in shame, and we know full well that the spirit of Christ does not dominate us.

But there are here and there among the disciples of Christ a few who do glow with the beauty of real sacrifice,—sacrifice willingly, gladly made. They give themselves with complete devotion to his service. They have answered the appeal of Paul to present their bodies as living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God, and all that, they consider but their "reasonable service." It is on the mission fields we find the most striking examples of real sacrifice, and of lives dominated by the spirit of Christ. One such example, whose light shines with unusual brightness is Albert Schweitzer, one of the most remarkable missionaries of modern times. Remarkable, for the giving of himself "in an amazing degree to a life of humble Christian service," and yet little known to the rank and file of the Christian church. The Presbyterian Advance recounts for us the story:

Most Christian readers must know something about the life of this rare man. He was, and is, a great scholar and one of the world's foremost organists, an authority on the works of Bach. He became a Doctor of Theology, a Doctor of Philosophy and a Doctor of Medicine. Confronting a most distinguished career as teacher, author and organist, he learned of the great physical need in Africa and founded a hospital there. To the needs of the semi-savages of the primeval forest he has devoted his efforts since 1913, leaving the field only long enough to return to Europe and earn the money with which to enlarge his activities.

There's a thrill in the story of how Schweitzer has labored and saved for the sake of Africa. Contrast his attitude with the attitude of the minister who says "I cannot undertake any task without a salary—or an honorarium—commensurate with my recognized ability." It would be difficult to find a more versatile man than Albert Schweitzer. Musician, scientist, theologian, surgeon—what Dr. Karl Reiland calls, "a most remarkable combination of brain, brawn and spiritual brotherhood"—this man leans on no organization for support, but when funds are exhausted goes back home and raises more money by his own indefatigable effort! And he does not only raise money; he saves it. Dr. Reiland gives us glimpses of the man: "He would not dine at the hotel with me—it was too expensive;" "the doctor shouldered the luggage and carried it to the train;" "we must travel third class to save money for the Lambarene Hospital." It is no wonder that Dr. Reiland adds "Albert Schweitzer reminds me how Jesus took a towel and washed the disciples' feet." A truly great man can do anything. Only little men refuse." True, and how little many men are seen to be in contrast with Albert Schweitzer, to say nothing of the Master.

This man's marvelous patience and persistence in the face of almost overwhelming discouragements should make most of us ashamed of ourselves. He acknowledges that it is an "unsuccessful struggle to produce in these savages some notion of what is meant by value," a severe "trial of patience and nerves." But he adds: "Anyone who wants to do good under our African conditions must fight any tendency in himself to let his nerves and temper be upset by all the big and little difficulties of daily life." The workers "groan over" the almost hopeless savages with whom they deal, yet "we do feel that there is a link between them and us." Dr. Schweitzer admits that the Africans "do not even feel any gratitude for what we do for them." They even interpret the service rendered as "a sure way to get rich"—and nothing is harder to bear than such misinterpretation. He also admits that "we worry ourselves to death in acting as police and trying to insure a certain amount of obedience to rules which are designed to prevent the spread of disease." He tells of one native sitting in a white suit beside a patient he had brought to the hospital for free treatment. The doctor asked him to come and help haul some beams and planks. This was the answer: "I am an intellectual and don't drag wood about" an answer which might have come from some American "ministers" instead of an African savage. "You are lucky," was Dr. Schweitzer's reply. "I too wanted to become an intellectual, but I didn't succeed!" He became a servant for Christ's sake.

One day he was in such dark despair that he threw himself into a chair and groaned out "What a blockhead I was to come out here to doctor savages like these!" And it was a native helper who heard and quietly remarked: "Yes, doctor, here on earth you are a great blockhead, but not in heaven." Very incidentally this gentle six footer drops more than once a remark something like this: "I must not be too eager to get tangible proofs of gratitude." Just as incidentally he reveals how poverty-stricken and repulsive diseased men and women receive help and meet with tenderness among strangers "because through Jesus love has come into the world." Yes, and love proves itself only in the gift of self.

"Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."

Desperate Need Among Miners' Families

We have heard much of the desperate need among miner's families in the soft coal regions, and from reliable information we conclude not only that their condition has not been overdrawn, but that it has not been adequately set forth. The people in general do not half realize how serious the situation is. It is fast approaching a crisis, and it is only by an appeal to the good people of the churches that the emergency can be met.

The American Friends Service Committee has been acting as a collecting and distributing agency on behalf of the churches in general. Mr. James Myers, Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council, has recently returned from a tour of inspection of the child feeding stations set up by the Quaker committee, and states that "while the Quakers are doing an effective piece of child feeding and have distributed many tons of clothing which has been received from nearly every state in the union, their funds and supplies are insufficient for the heavy strain of the mid-winter crisis. ... Not only children, but thousands of mothers and fathers as well, are in need of food. Unless these needs are met and met quickly untold suffering and sickness will result, and no one need be surprised if acts of desperation and violence occur. The situation constitutes, to my mind, the most acute relief problem and the most critical social problem in the United States today."

It is reassuring to know that the American Friends Service Committee is not merely attempting to feed and clothe those in dire need, but is attempting to help those in need to help themselves in every way that they find possible. And they are inviting discussion of and suggestions for effective relief, and seeking to arouse an intelligent public interest in the problem.

Five cents provides a nourishing meal. Starvation is hovering very near many of these people, who are of our own national household. And when people are starving and without clothing, you know what sort of response is needed. Money may be sent to Miss Olive Van Horn, Treasurer of Coal Areas Relief, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City, or to American Friends Service Committee, Morgantown, West Virginia.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, church seems to have enough women actively interested in the Women's Missionary Society to keep two organizations going. The younger women of the church have organized themselves into a Junior W. M. S.

A revival is now in progress at the New Lebanon, Ohio, church of which Brother L. V. King is pastor. It began on February 23, according to a printed folder that came to our desk and Brother Claud Studebaker of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is the evangelist.

Christian Endeavorers will find two contributions of real worth in their department again this week. Brother Frank Gehman writes about the service of young people to the church, and Brother C. D. Whitmer gives another of his interesting series on "Coins and Counterfeits."

A note from Brother L. A. Myers, pastor of the church at Morrill, Kansas, says: "Church affairs are moving along very nicely, though very much embarrassed financially. The bank funds are all tied up, but we are hoping nevertheless to go through the year in fine shape and be ready for a good year next year."

The last Sunday in March is Easter Sunday, and that is the time set by General Conference for the taking of the annual offering for Foreign Missions. The time comes early this year, and prayers ought now to be ascending to God that the church may be prepared to make a sacrificial offering, that the work may not be hindered.

Dr. C. F. Yoder's report from Argentina is very encouraging this week. He says the use of their tent is proving a great boon, and that large crowds are had everywhere they go. Meetings are reported for Cabrera, Camerillo and Rio Cuarto, and an intense interest was manifested at each place. At Rio Cuarto tent meeting Brother Romanenghi has been doing a large portion of the speaking, for which he has splendid talent. The depression is there also, but conditions are ripe for evangelism and many are accepting Christ.

Among President Jacobs' interesting College news items this week is one announcing the receipt recently of an unsolicited annuity gift of $1,000. We commend that way of investing money and at the same time contributing to the continued service of the church. It is also to be noted that the present college enrollment stands at 310, the largest number in the history of the institution. It is not surprising that Dr. Jacobs calls attention to the crowded condition of the college, especially the chapel. Some generous-hearted man or woman of wealth ought to be found before many twelve months roll around to provide the funds with which to build a memorial chapel.

Brother Raymond E. Gingrich, pastor of the Fair Haven church, near West Salem, Ohio, writes that the Lord's work is progressing there in a quietly but satisfactory manner. Both preaching and Sunday school attendance is increasing, and, as is rather unusual, the attendance at the preaching services is above the attendance at Sunday school, at least part of the time. That speaks well for both for the quality of the services and the loyalty of the people. The young people are active and faithful, the Christian Endeavor meetings being continued through the winter months, which is unusual for this country church. The pastor announces an interesting pre-Easter week program, in which some of the outstanding talent of nearby Ashland will participate.

The church at Fremont, Ohio, has recently enjoyed a revival under the leadership of Brother R. D. Barnard of Dayton, and the Fremont pastor, Brother W. S. Crick, states that the church people were greatly aroused and the interest of the community in the church much increased, besides two being added to the membership, one by baptism and one by reconsecration. One of the most hopeful features of the campaign was the number of strangers and unchurched folks who became interested. It gives encouragement for the future. Doubtless this is one of the fruits of the intensive visitation work of the pastor and evangelist. Brother Barnard and his church both deserve the commendation and gratitude of the district for making this meeting possible. It is mission work of a real kind. It is a fine way for the stronger churches to help the weaker ones.

Brother Harold D. Fry in a recent communication to the business manager, said: "Some day, Brother Teeter, we must put the Outlook, the Witness, the Missionary, and The Evangelist into ONE EVANGELIST for every Brethren home. The reports of home missions, foreign missions, and statistics and conference minutes must be in one publication, The Brethren Minutes and the Work of the Churches. This is the only solution to our difficulties that I know; and these hard times compel it. Conference last year should have at least agitated it. Perhaps more of us can attend next year, and put our publications on an efficient, economical and popular basis." More and more widely the sentiment is growing for a merging of our news carrying publications. By and by we shall see the wisdom of placing brotherhood interests above group interests, and act upon the wisdom we have received, and it will redound to the glory of God and the welfare of the church.

Our readers will note one change in our Bible study department this week. Dr. C. F. Yoder, having completed with last week's installment his present plans for his studies in prophecy, Prof. M. A. Stuckey begins this week his series, previously announced, on the study of the books of the Bible, outlining his work and expressing words of appreciation of the work of Dr. Yoder and Dr. Rench. The writings of these two men are always highly appreciated and their views widely respected, and The Evangelist has received words of commendation for the work they have been doing this year, and as well for the splendid treatments of Dr. Yoder during last year. We are greatly indebted to him for his excellent and gratuitous service, and wish to take this occasion of expressing our gratitude to him. We anticipate on behalf of the Evangelist family real pleasure and profit in reading after Prof. Stuckey, who has already gained wide respect in the brotherhood for his leadership in religious education and his participation in Bible conference work.

Our good correspondent from the First church of Long Beach, California, gives us an interesting report of the work of that great church for the year 1931. A total of one hundred and forty members were added to the church during the year, sixty-five having been added by baptism, letter and relation since their very successful meeting of a year ago this winter. The average Sunday school attendance for the year was 806 and the largest being 1214, their Rally Day attendance. The offerings for the school increased over sixty per cent during the year, the grand total, including special offerings, being $6,945.50. Christian Endeavor work has grown with the growing of the church until now there are seven societies and all active. Among other things emphasized in the work of this church there are three that seem to deserve special mention,—they are evangelism, set forth by the work of "The Seventy" and the large ingatherings; missions, as witnessed by the continual activity and interest in their missionary societies and the generous gifts to missions; and the devotional life, expressed by the emphasis on prayer and the large attendance at the regular prayer meetings, the Wednesday night meeting being attended by from 150 to 200. Dr. L. S. Bauman is the pastor of this church.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Dr. Martin Shively

XXXIV. Elder J. L. Kimmel

In the autumn of 1886 I first met the subject of this sketch. I had been a student in Ashland College since the early spring of that year, and he came over from Berlin, Pennsylvania, where he was born and reared, to enter training for the ministry to which he had been called by his home congregation, and in which he had already exercised for several years. He had but lately been called upon to mourn the loss of the wife of his youth, and finding temporary homes for his four children, he came to Ashland with the intention of getting this further preparation for the ministry of the Word, and then devoting the remainder of his life to the preaching of the gospel. He was then a man in the early thirties, and one good to look at,—a handsome man, intelligent, courteous and kindly. From that time until his death, less than a year ago, we met often, and I counted him as one of my very dear friends. His first pastorate after leaving the college halls, where he had continued in training several years after my own departure from school, was in the state from which his Lord called him home,—in my own home church, at Edna Mills, Indiana. Afterwards, he served pastorates at various places in Ohio, among them being those at Middlebranch, Dayton, Gratis, and Bryan, and also pastorates at Goshen, Muncie, and Ft. Wayne, Indiana, his final break in health coming during his service at the last named point. He died at New Paris, Indiana, last July, at the age of 75 years, 50 years of which had been devoted to the Christian ministry, leaving behind thousands who knew and loved him, and who are better for having known him.

Brother Kimmel while a devoted lover of men, was never self-assertive, but inclined to be quiet and a bit reserved. He never sought preferment for himself, but was always ready to defend the Word, and what he believed it taught. I shall never forget one instance in which this was shown. At the general conference of 1887 a group of younger men in the ministry met one evening after the sessions to talk things over, and one of that group, who afterwards left the denomination, attacked the position of the church on the doctrines of Feet Washing and the Lord's Supper. Some of us, I suspect, were a bit stunned, and in the face of the brilliant attacker, we were more or less tongue tied, and at least one of the group seemed inclined to accept the view he offered. Not so Brother Kimmel, for perhaps because he knew the other man better than any of the rest of the group, he came at once, and valiantly to the defence of the Whole Gospel, and from that time until the end of the evening, the other man had less smooth sailing. To the end of his life, he stood as a Defender of the Faith. He had his troubles as have other men, and some of them were of such a nature as to wrench men's hearts, but I know his own unflinching faith helped him over many a rough spot in life, and smoothed the path as he approached the River of Death.

Most of the congregations he served as pastor, at least during the earlier years of his ministry, could offer but slight financial support to those who gave them the Bread of Life, and with his rather large family, careful management was necessary if even the usual wants alone were to be supplied; and in common with many another man in his position, the situation was such as would make a real parent worry, as he knew his inability to supply to his children the things which they wanted, and which he would be delighted to give, if it were only possible. In connection with such a condition, I recall a remark he made at Dayton, when the Sunday schools of the Gratis church, of which he was then pastor, and the one at Dayton, of which I was pastor, were having an outing together, in one of the city parks. He said, "There were times in the years gone by when I worried much over my inability to give my children such a boost in life as I had hoped to do when I was a younger man.

I wanted to give them a good education, and help them too in setting up homes, but now that the elder ones are grown up, I am rather inclined to rejoice because I could not do this for them, for they have developed a self reliance which would not have been possible otherwise, and are no doubt better for having had to depend upon themselves. I have tried to give them a good name, and set before them as good an example as I have been able to do." I remember little of the many words I have heard from his lips, but being a minister myself, and a father, I was powerfully impressed by this statement, and it remains fresh in my memory after the more than quarter of century since I heard it.

Few men, if any, in the ministry of the church, during the last forty years, were better known than Brother Kimmel, for he was always present at the conferences, both district and national, and for a good many of his last years, he had a place on the programs, if for no other reason than that he was an officer of the Board of Benevolences. How much concerned he was in behalf of the superannuated men in our ministry or the families of those who had gone on, is well known to all who attend these meetings. He served well, until the break in his health placed him on the list of the beneficiaries of that board. Younger men have succeeded him, and serve well, but not better than he, for he gave all he had, both of time and talent, to the cause he loved. His face we shall see no more in this world, but in the hearts of those who were associated with him in the work of the church, J. L. Kimmel still lives.

The Church's Crime. [Part II]

By Dr. Louis S. Bauman

Dives and Lazarus

A young man several years ago was asked if he were a Christian. "Yes, a sort of one." "How much do you spend for tobacco?" "75c a week." "How much for foreign missions?" "NOTHING!"

In the sight of God, America today occupies the seat of Dives at the table—"feasting sumptuously every day." The heathen world occupies the place of Lazarus,—and they are HARDLY GETTING EVEN THE CRUMBS! $29,000,000 a year represents the amount spent by the Christians of America in their foreign missionary work, while our Department of Justice recently gave out the following figures showing America's annual expenditures: Candy, 1,000 million dollars; Chewing Gum, 50 million; Soft Drinks, 350 million; Perfumes and Cosmetics, 750 million; Furs, 300 million; Tobacco, 2,110 million!!! Not to mention many other luxuries. True, that is not all spent by members of the church, yet a very large part of it is, and they give only $29,000,000 to foreign missions!

Some time back, a missionary secretary reported that though the Presbyterian Church was probably the richest church in the United States, yet her members were giving less than 2c a week to foreign missions! And at about the same time, a Methodist official reported that there were 2,000,000 Hindus who would knock at the door of the Methodist Church in India for admission, and that $70,000 a year would be needed to care for them. (A small enough amount surely). This called for 2c a year from every Methodist. At the latest report we could get, the sum had not yet been provided!

It will not help American Christians any to plead that they give, but it is being spent at home. For they are faced with the fact that a recent survey shows that Christians are spending at home on an average of but 9c a week for their own souls' salvation!

Doubtless, he had just reason for it, when a young clergyman complained that his congregation was made up of "tight-wads." "They are so stingy," said he, "that when I ask them to sing 'Old Hundred' they want to sing 'The Ninety and Nine.'"

Judgment Even Now

Now think of those figures again—$29,000,000 as against the thousands of millions spent for luxuries! Then you think of the story of Dives and Lazarus, and get its force! How infinitely more sinful it is in God's sight to deny bread for the soul than it is to deny bread for the physical body!

America gives four times as much for chewing gum in a year as she gives to missions. America has one city (New York) that puts more money into the treasuries of her play-houses in one winter than goes into all the missionary treasuries of the world. America gives more money for tobacco in one year than all the churches of the world have given to foreign missions in nineteen centuries!

The famous tragedian, Garrick, showed his friend, Dr. Johnson, around his beautiful mansion and grounds one day. The great moralist looked at the valuable property, but was filled with sad forebodings. He laid his hand kindly on the player's shoulder, and said: "Ah, David, David, these are the things which make a death-bed terrible!"

I tell you, America needs to think of coming judgment! Indeed, has not her judgment already begun? Our country is overrun with crime, sorrow and broken homes! No wonder there is a "Great Depression"! No wonder heathenism is establishing itself within our own borders, with its Buddhist and Hindu temples, and will bring with it its curse!

Listen to this—"If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? And shall he not render every man according to his works?" Prov. 24:11, 12) Excuse-making will not go there!

The Missionary Motive

Finally, what is it that sends forth missionaries to "suffer the loss of all things" earthly for Christ in these mission fields? Whatever it is, would to God that it could come to every member of the Church at home!

A foolish question is so often put to missionaries when they come home on their furloughs: "Do you like it over there? Do you like it better at home?"

"LIKE IT?" (!) Do you suppose they like the dirty inns; the squalid, greasy, smoky huts; the blistering heat; the constant menace of deadly fevers; the coarse foods; the lack of congenial companions; the pagan misunderstanding and hatreds; the oftentimes persecutions; the awful danger of moral and physical contamination to which they and their children are constantly exposed; the constant sight of rotting disease—"LIKE IT," as they oftentimes sit there beside their little huts, called homes, and dream of home faces, home firesides, home stores, home pavements, home gardens, oaks and elms! "LIKE IT?"

Then WHY are they there? Ask the soldier who stands waist-deep in the water of the muddy trenches, if he likes it! NO! He is there for his king and his country—he is there obeying orders, at the sacrifice of home, health, —yes, ready to give life itself in obedience to his orders!

James Chalmers, first missionary to New Guinea, cried: "Recall the twenty-one years, give it me back again with spears flying about me, with the club knocking me to the ground—give it me back, and I will still be your Missionary!"

Samuel Dyer said: "If I thought anything could prevent my dying for China, the thought would crush me!"

John Hunt said: "O, let me pray once more for the Feejee!"

Bishop Mackenzie: "If I had thousand lives to give, Africa should have them all!"

Our own beloved missionary, Brother Lester W. Kennedy, lay slowly dying at Bassai, in the heart of Africa. He takes his pen and writes his last letter. Hear him: "I say with Bishop Mackenzie, 'Had I a thousand lives to live, I would give them all to Africa!'" Later, and but shortly before he passed upward to be with the Lord he dearly loved and truly served, he turned on his bed of pain and said to his wife: "If I had the privilege of choosing again my life work, I would choose the same as I have chosen—to lay down my life in service to God for these in dark Africa!"

The Spirit of the Cross

What is back of this? THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST! And that means three things:

(1) OBEDIENCE TO THE COMMAND,—submission to the will of God! A missionary at Northfield a few years ago told how he began work in Africa, with companions as eager as himself. One by one, they succumbed to the terrible climate. Three, he buried. The others, he took to the coast and sent home. Then, he turned back, all alone, to stand in the midst of hundreds of thousands of those degenerate, black men and women who had never heard the name of God! Again and again, he trampled the blistering plains, with a tongue oftentimes so swollen that he could not speak! Thirty times he was stricken with fever, with no one to care for him. Lions attacked him; natives ambushed him. He ate everything—from ants to rhinoceroses. And here was his conclusion: "I know the great joy of walking with Jesus Christ in the midst of all this! I stand ready at this moment to go through it all again, for the joy I have had in flashing the word "Savior" into the darkness of a great tribe! Is it God's will? That makes the wilderness a garden; that makes the desert glow with the very presence of God!"

(2) "THE LOVE OF CHRIST CONSTRAINETH ME!" The missionary has been there! He has gazed upon the agonies of heathenism! He knows something of the appalling famine for the Bread of Life—the famine for a knowledge of God—that desolates the heathen hearts! He knows of the awful doubts, of the haunting fears, of the power of demons, of the consciousness of unforgiven sin that possesses them all! He has seen the "sheep without a shepherd." He has seen them die like beasts beside the roadway, alone in their misery, with no one to pity, to comfort or to help. A missionary wrote home to his father, after some years of contact with the heathen: "It breaks my heart to see the misery of these starving people, starving for want of Bread and for want of hope! I wish the Christians in America could be brought face to face with these people for a little while, that they might realize their duty. It breaks my heart to see the suffering. But, after once seeing it, I could not leave them if I would. They need me. I MUST STAY!" Verily, "The love of Christ constraineth me!"

(3) "THE JOY THAT IS SET BEFORE." (Heb. 12:2). "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, Who, for THE JOY THAT WAS SET BEFORE HIM, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God!"

It is this that sends them back, to point their black-skinned brothers and sisters in the fever-stricken jungles of Africa, the way to heaven!

Paul declared that those he had won from pagan night would be unto him a "crown of rejoicing . . . in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his Coming. For YE ARE OUR GLORY AND JOY" (1 Thess. 2:19-20).

A missionary was once asked to give a proof that the Gospel of Christ would eventually triumph. He said: "When I arrived at the Fiji group, my first duty was to bury the hands, arms, feet and heads of eighty victims whose bodies had been roasted and eaten in a cannibal feast. I lived to see those very cannibals, who had taken part in that inhuman feast, gathered about the Lord's table!"

What a "crown of rejoicing" he wore! Think what it will mean at the table above—at the Marriage Feast of the Lamb, when the Lord shall have come to claim his own!

Will you therein rejoice?

Long Beach, California.

Love of the World Censored

By Thomas Gibson

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lusts thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (1 John 2:15-17).

In the above statement, the word world appears six times, and in every instance refers not to the material world, but to the world of unbelief. God made this beautiful world for man's use, and filled it with every good thing that the heart of man can desire, and he has promised to "Not withhold any good thing from them that walk uprightly."

It is repulsive to our reason, that God would forbid his creatures to love his beautiful world, which he has made for man to live in, and to enjoy. God speaking through his servant David, said, "If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof" (Ps. 50:12). David confirms that truth by saying, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." All through the Scriptures, the word world, is used in two different senses. It is spoken of as the material world, and the world of unbelief. We will cite a few examples. First the material world. "This present world." The wicked will be "chased out of this world" (Job. 18:18). "All the Kingdoms of the world." "What profit to gain the whole world," and many other passages. Second, the world, the unbelieving people in the world "World cannot hate you but me it hateth, because I testify that the works thereof are evil." Jesus is speaking of the unbelieving world. The material world can neither hate nor love. John says, "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." These lusts, are characteristics of the unbelieving world, not the material world. "If ye were of the world, the world would (love his own), but because, I have chosen (picked) you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." Again we see the characteristics of the unbelieving world, "I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but them which thou hast given me, for they are thine." "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on their word." Here is one of the "hidden mysteries," why Jesus didn't pray for all the world of unbelief. Was it because having all wisdom, and fore-knowledge, he knew who would accept him, or reject him? Jesus commissioned his disciples to "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." They couldn't do otherwise, being finite; they didn't know who would accept, or reject the message. WE are to "deny ungodliness and worldly lusts."

The lusts of the worldly minded Christ rejectors. The unbelieving "world is not a friend to help us on to God." Conformity to the ways of the unbelieving world, is detrimental to the spiritual life. "The friendship of the unbelieving world, is enmity with God, whosoever therefore will be a friend of the ungodly world is the enemy of God" (James 4:4).

The love of the world is not conducive to the progress of the Christian life. "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world" (Paul.) It was the love for the ways of the unbelieving world, that induced Demas to forsake Paul.

God made man pure and upright, but he has sought out many inventions. Many splendid, useful inventions. But he has flooded God's beautiful world with many corrupt, and degrading inventions. Companionship with the unbelieving world is forbidden. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with the unbelievers. Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters" (2 Cor. 6:14-16). "Evil communications corrupt good manners." (R. V.—"good company" 1 Cor. 15:33).

"Blessed (happy) is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." Does God forbid his people to engage in the same kind of amusements as the unbelieving world does. God has made rich and abundant provision for the greatest possible happiness of his people. My Bible says, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Whether we wake, or sleep, we should live together with him" (Christ). There are many forms of amusements that the unbelieving world engage in that are in themselves harmless. The motive that prompts us to do many things, determines whether they be right or wrong, good or evil. The unbelieving people of the world don't acknowledge God in their amusements, therefore they don't receive his approval, or blessing. The Christian might engage in some of these same amusements and receive God's approval and loving benediction, because he has honored God in it. There never was a day or age when God was being robbed of the honor due him, as he is today. Man is taking all the honor, and the glory to himself for the inventions and discoveries of this day and age. There are many foolish and hurtful amusements that the unbelieving world engage in such as the card table, the theatre, the dance, and kindred amusements. As they contribute nothing to the building up of a noble character, they entail loss of time, and a needless waste of money. If one is soundly converted to God, there has been a transformation of life and character. The things they loved, now they hate, and vice versa. Having become new creatures in Christ, old things are passed away, and all things have become new.

It is not a question of whether this or that is wrong, the Holy Spirit regulates such matters by creating or destroying the desire. "If we live after the spirit, let us also walk after the spirit." I think it was Jonathan Edwards, that man of God, who, being invited to a public dance, accepted the invitation and appeared at the place appointed for the dance. Just a few moments before the hour for the dance to begin, he asked permission to speak a few words, which was granted. He said, he never engaged in anything without first consulting God about it and if it met with his approval, to grant his blessing on it. So he invited them all to kneel down with him on the dance floor and speak to God about it, and truly God verified his promise. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." For he prayed so earnestly, and fervently, that deep and pungent conviction came upon the entire assembly. When he finished praying, the whole company had gone, and left him alone, but like Jesus when the disciples had all left him alone, "he was not alone, for the Father was with him." "Go thou and do likewise." No, it was not the love of God's beautiful material world that Christ censored. It was the love of the things which Christ came to destroy, "the works of the devil," "the works of the flesh," the fruits of the carnal mind, which Satan planted in the bosom of our first parents, when he destroyed their love for their Creator.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THEY CAN'T BLAME IT ON PROHIBITION

Here in the United States nearly all our troubles, including crowded courts as well as crowded jails, are blamed by the wets on Prohibition. But many countries without Prohibition seem to be having worse conditions than we have. Even our neighbor, Canada, under the blessing of "Government Control," as the wets regard it, is having its crowded courts.

We take the following from the New Outlook:

The Montreal Gazette reported recently that the Recorder's Court in that city entered the New Year staggering under the unwieldy burden of upwards of four thousand two hundred cases in arrears, and with no immediate signs of relief. "Ninety per cent of the cases which clutter up the rolls at present are morality cases, involving disorderly house keepers and inmates. And as fast as one case is settled, the police have made three more . . . On an average day nearly two hundred cases are heard by the three recorders. But to keep up with the congested rolls of today, four hundred cases a day should be the regime."

Liquor flows freely in Montreal as in most parts of Canada, under Government auspices. It is impossible to say just how far that fact goes toward explaining the congestion in the courts. But this is certain, at any rate; even the Gazette cannot blame it on prohibition.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

PRESBYTERIAN REUNION

Final union of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the United Presbyterian Church of North America is expected in 1934.

This is the published announcement of a joint committee on organic union, meeting in Philadelphia.

The plan specifies, we read, that the name of the union shall be the Presbyterian Church of America. The "General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America" is to be formed two years hence.

The Presbyterian Church now has about 10,000 clergymen, 2,000,000 communicant members, and an annual budget of about $60,000,000. The United Presbyterian Church has 920 ministers, 172,000 members, and a budget of $10,000,000. More than 11,000 churches, it is said, will be involved in the union.—The Literary Digest.

WELL, WHY NOT?

There is a movement in the State of New York designed to get approval from the State Legislature for what is known as the pari mutuel system of betting on horse and dog races. The argument that is advanced is to the effect that by permitting this racing and betting the State could collect millions of dollars that would, of course, go far to care for expenses that must otherwise be raised by taxation of property and incomes.

Does that not sound familiar? Isn't it just too sweet of this gambling fraternity? Are they not blessed with a wonderful civic conscience?

If the church were to go back to the days of the sixteenth century and begin selling its members the right to engage in this or that sin, these "sporting" men would be the first to point at the hypocrisy involved. Yet they seem utterly unable to understand why we are not carried away by their argument that the repeal of prohibition would bring in so many taxes.

Civic-minded people need to be very much on their guard in times like these. There are many who are too high morally to sell their sons and daughters to debauchery for so much gold in hand, but will none the less be happy to sell their safety for an apparent reduction in the tax-bill.

There are too many Americans who will condone any immorality by public connivance, if only they can be assured that that immorality will yield a financial return. If that is not prostitution of the very soul of America, what is it?—Christian Standard.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Introductory

It is a happy privilege to receive an invitation from the Editor of The Evangelist to conduct a column in this magazine on Bible study. During the recent past Dr. Charles F. Yoder, our pioneer missionary to South America, has been favoring Brethren readers with his excellent and highly interesting studies on the Church, and, more recently, on Prophecy. It is to be hoped that this will not end the studies of our beloved missionary, poet, preacher, and scholar. To know Dr. Yoder is to love him; to read after him is a delight of lasting value.

Then, too, Dr. G. W. Rensch, one of the grand old men of our fraternity, has been favoring us with Studies on The Outstanding Texts of the Bible. Anybody who reads them with any degree of faithfulness will be greatly helped and inspired. They are characterized by a sanity and sobriety which result only from a long life of wise and tolerant observation of human nature and human affairs. To many of the younger and middle aged men of the ministry he has been of incalculable help. He is a pastor's pastor par excellence, Brethren to the core, doctrinally sound, and morally uplifting.

Now, the writer, an infinitely younger man with far less experience and observation, is sought to pen some articles on the sacred Scriptures. They are to appear in company with the writings of Dr. Rensch on this page from week to week. It is not to be expected that the new studies will do credit to the very worthy pace that has already been set. As a runner with Dr. Yoder and Dr. Rensch the present scribe does not feel competent, yet he is well aware that these two men will be those who will accept with gratitude and encouragement his poor fodder. Both of these Brethren have been a continual encouragement to him.

As the above title suggests, these studies will pertain to brief studies in the Scriptures. The Old Testament will afford a prolific background for our thinking. God began at the time of beginnings to reveal himself unto man, in his own way, through men providentially chosen to act as his representatives. What he had to convey to men through his servants is recorded and miraculously preserved and superintended for our reading in this twentieth century. His purposes and motives are oftentimes far past finding out, but never do we need to ask what he did. His movements and acts are a matter of sober and trustworthy history. We shall examine them as they appear in the grandest writings of antiquity.

"Let those who will, hang rapturously o'er

The flowing eloquence of Plato's page;

Repeat, with flashing eye, the sounds that pour

From Homer's verse, as with a torrent's rage:

Let those who list, ask Tully to assuage

Wild hearts with high-wrought periods, and restore

The reign of rhetoric; or maxims sage

Winnow from Seneca's sententious lore:

Not these, but Judah's hallowed bards, to me

Are dear,—Isaiah's noble energy,

The temperate grief of Job, the artless strain

Of Ruth and the pastoral Amos, the high songs

Of David, and the tale of Joseph's wrongs,— Simply pathetic, eloquently plain!"

—Sir Aubrey de Vere.

The following brief outline will suggest to my readers something of the nature of the Bible book material that will appear on these pages. There will be great deviations from the outline, but nevertheless, some outline will be followed.

1. Doctrinal. (For the Church)
2. Practical. (For the Individual)

In so far as possible the studies will be descriptive and practical. There will be little room for the work of the linguist herein, not that that work is not important, but rather because our column is limited in its space and the aim and scope of the writer are quite otherwise. If a larger knowledge and appreciation of the English Bible will be gained through these attempts of mine, then I shall be satisfied.

Rom. 1:18. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness."

Moffatt says it this way: "But God's anger is revealed from heaven against all the impiety and wickedness of those who hinder the truth by their wickedness."

Stiffler on Romans says, "The 'for' is not specific, but comprehensive. It looks at all that Paul has just been saying. He is not ashamed of the gospel. The gospel would be nothing if men were not guilty and in need of the rescue which the gospel alone can afford. The gospel alone reveals the means of salvation, for everywhere else there is no revelation except of wrath. This wrath or holy anger is universally revealed, 'from heaven.' Men in all ages have been aware that the Power above frowned upon them for their deeds."

Perhaps some one is ready to say, "Why talk about the anger of God?" My answer is, because God talks to human beings about it. Why should we not wish to know the mind of the Father on any subject? Who are we that we should desire to minimize any truth which the Father desires to reveal? Who can judge of the importance or non-importance of any subject upon which the Great God of heaven and earth seeks to make known unto us? Sin is sin with God however sinners may view it. Its enormity is so great that in order to induce man to forsake it, God must hold before him his anger. As Stiffler says, "The blackness of their sin is that they 'hold' or withhold the truth in unrighteousness." It would seem as though the Father could but wish that revealing his wrath would make his entreaty to forsake it more effective.

Would you like a very brief outline for studying the anger of God? Try this. Ps. 74:1; 90:11; Hos. 13:11; 2 Kings 13:3; Rev. 15:1, 7.

PROVOKED:

1. By disobedience. 1 Sam. 28:18; 1 Kings. 16:2-13; Isa. 9:17, 19, 21.
2. By stubbornness. Ex. 32:9, 10; Num. 32:10, 11; Rom. 2:4, 5.
3. By murmuring. Num. 11:1, 10, 33; Ps. 106:32.
4. By idolatry. Num. 25:3; Josh. 23:16; 1 Kings 11:9.

APPEASED:

1. By intercession of the righteous. Deut. 9:18, 19, 20; Ps. 106:28.
2. By putting away evil. Num. 25:6-11.

PRAYER for Averting:

Dan. 9:16; Isa. 12:1; and 57:16, 17.

DELIVERANCE FROM, Rom. 5:9; 1 Thes. 1:10.

Destroys the WICKED, Num. 16:20, 21, 45; Isa. 63:3, 4, 6; Matt. 22:7; Heb. 3:11; Rev. 14:10, 11; and 19:15.

Our forefathers in the pulpit were plain, blunt men. They not only believed in the beauties of heaven—and preached it—but in the terrors of hell—and preached that; not only in the love of God—and preached it—but in the wrath of God—and preached that. Men were told without apologizing for God's teaching, that God could not only love, but that he could hate. Wonderful was his amazing mercy, but justice was never lost sight of. As there could be no heaven without mercy, neither could there be without justice. Oh, no; a salvation that takes no consideration of injustice, and saves a man in spite of himself, is too worthless to foist upon a down-trodden, sin-cursed earth.

A young officer of the army was on examination for promotion. The committee in charge proposed this question: "If you were leading your division through a deep gorge, and a strong fort was in front of you, and a strong force was in the rear following you, what would you do?" The officer hesitated a moment, appeared puzzled, but finally answered, "I think, Sir, I would resign." If I could not declare the facts about sin, that its enormity was so great that "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," I would resign an empty commission. The Old Testament closes with a glimpse of an angry God who may come at any time and smite this rebellious earth with a curse. Read its last chapter. The New Testament closes with a last warning: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still." Yes; now be unjust if you will; now be filthy, if filthy you will be. What more could be done?

Sunday School Association's Missionary Writes

(Editorial Note: Our readers are favored this week with a personal communication from the pen of Miss Mary Emmert. During the past year Miss Emmert received support from our Association for the type of work which she describes in this letter. That this support has been well placed none of us will doubt. The Bible cannot be taught to African pagan sinners unless they are educated in its precepts and wisdom. The letter, you will note, is addressed to the co-laborers here at home. It is meant especially for the officers of our National Sunday School Association. All those who have had some part in helping to make our work a success are included, however. Our African and South American missionaries have shown the greatest gratitude possible for the work we are trying to help them to do. It is to be hoped that the present financial depression will not hinder us in supporting them in an even larger way.)

Yalohe par Bangui, Oubangui Chari,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
December 14, 1931.

Dear Co-laborers:

Brother Bauman has long since notified me that the Sunday School Association has placed the sum of $250 to my support as an educational worker. For various reasons I have been delayed in acknowledging this gift but I am nevertheless appreciative of it and of the splendid spirit that prompted it.

The educational work is a worthy cause. Naturally I believe in it or I would not give so largely of my time to it. This present year we have just finished ten school months. The oldest class of boys are studying to become monitor-evangelists. They must take government examinations in order to receive certificates; and then we hope to send such as feel called to chapel points where they can both teach and preach. Thus they can prepare students for higher work at the Station school. Of course it is still uncertain whether permission will be granted, but we are working and praying for it and know you will be glad to pray too. There are only eight boys in this class; five or six of them have expressed the desire to become evangelists. These lads have been faithful throughout the five years of the school. They already teach Sunday school classes and some of them do village preaching and also preach occasionally on the Station.

The second class of boys are studying the Bible daily. They have had just about enough French now to be able to read the Bible, with quite a bit of patient explanation of course, for the Bible in French is not easy reading. Some of them also are looking forward to being evangelists. They are still quite young and must be carefully trained for several years yet. Precept upon precept, line upon line.

There are yet two younger classes who are just now able to read simple French. Some of them look quite promising and others don't. But often the Lord chooses the very ones that we would reject. In all there are just fifty students here now. Only two of this number are girls. That is a very small percentage indeed, but we hope that it will break the way for more in the future.

We are looking forward to having a new building with three class rooms this year. It will be used for Sunday school classes on week days. This will avoid having so many classes in one room. So far it has been like a country school, but with monitors to help we can have more classes.

The fifty children now in school all live on the Concession, most of them with their parents or friends, but a number of them are housed in school dormitories. These latter work three hours a day for their board, so there is some outside supervision to be done also. The problems connected with the training of these children are too great for any one to handle. We covet your prayers. In fact we must have intercession if these young lives be consecrated to the Master's service. I'm sure you will be blest for your interest in this work.

Yours in him,
MARY L. EMMERT.

A Skeptic Who Aided Christianity

By Arthur Holmes

David Hume Laid Low the Ghost of Human Authority in Religion, in Philosophy and in Science

As Christianity more than once has been injured by its best friends, so also has it been greatly aided by its enemies. John Locke was a religious man, but his works gave aid and comfort to the deists, the forefathers of the French atheists, whose distant relatives still linger with us. The collapse of deism in England arrived because its foundation in inductive, materialistic and mechanistic science was rudely blasted out from underneath it by the skeptic, David Hume (1711-1776). For this service, because he acquired the reputation of a skeptic in religion, Christianity has never been sufficiently appreciative. That he exposed the uncertainty inherent in modern science, that he destroyed deism, that he forced a reconsideration and reconstruction of the theories of knowledge, and, finally, that directly upon his basis of faith Samuel Butler rested his great "Analogy," stronger now than a hundred years ago, are reasons enough to re-evaluate this Scottish skeptic's contribution to the world's constructive thought.

He was born in Edinburgh of a good family, the youngest of a family of three children. He entered Edinburgh University at the age of twelve, stayed three years, returned home with a fair knowledge of Latin, some of Greek and a taste for books "of reasoning and philosophy, poetry and polite authors," whatever that meant, thought he seems early to have turned to philosophy, and especially to Cicero and Seneca, and to the English thinkers, Dr. Locke and Bishop Berkeley and Butler, and to theology.

Early Struggles

From an early age he aimed at a literary reputation, and, in spite of poverty, achieved it: He turned first to law to make a living, but did little with it. His application to the philosophies of Locke and Berkeley reduced him to physical exhaustion, so that he entered business (in 1734) for a rest, found it unsuited to him, and went to France, first to Paris, then to La Fleche, famous for its study of Des Cartes. His health was restored by the trip, and it was in France that he composed his "Treatise on Human Nature," the work that has given him lasting fame, published in 1739 and 1740, the publisher giving him about $250 and twelve copies for the first edition. In Hume's own words, the book "feel dead-born from the press," suffering from the fatal defect of failing to make clear and cogent application of its principles to the moot problems in religion and philosophy of the day.

"But," Hume says, "Being naturally cheerful and sanguine temper, I very soon recovered from the blow (of the failure of his book) and prosecuted with great ardor my studies." They yielded other volumes on politics, history and religion, among them his "Essays," which proved popular, and his "Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion," published in 1779, after his death, and his "Natural History of Religion," 1757. In the meantime, he also accepted several minor political office, traveled some on the Continent, sought a professorship in Edinburgh, and failed, and finally settled in Edinburgh, having, with his pension, an income of about $5,000 a year. He built a house on David Street named for him; entertained Jean Jacques Rousseau, and fell into that noted quarrel with that "little better than a madman." In the spring of 1775 he was stricken with an illness, visited Bath for treatment, and on his return home weakened and died within a month, so ending one of the most successful and happy lives lived by that usually unfortunate and unhappy lot of men known as philosophers.

Personal Qualities

Hume possessed an intellect which was remarkable for its penetrating keenness, especially in the gift of psychological analysis, though he could be utterly blind to some obvious truths. His emotional nature was well developed from a rich natural endowment. Of himself he says: "I was . . . a man of mild disposition, of command of temper, of open, social and cheerful humor, capable of attachment, but little susceptible of enmity, and of great moderation in all my passions. Even my love of literary fame, my ruling passion, never soured my temper, notwithstanding my frequent disappointments." Criticism never touched him deeply, and he even complains jocosely because his works were not sufficiently attacked by the clergy. In spite of his phlegmatic temperament, he worked hard and diligently, continuing his labors with unflagging zeal long after his early poverty was abated to the point where he might have taken his ease.

There has always been a question, a rather personal and gossipy one, about the seriousness with which Hume took his own skepticism. Could he believe that material objects existed—as also Bishop George Berkeley taught—only in his own consciousness? And then only so long as he perceived them? Did he disbelieve in the soul? Did his skepticism seriously extend itself to the existence of God? These are questions that have agitated writers on his philosophy and biographers who studied the man himself.

Interest in Religion

All that can be said is that he was himself primarily interested in religion. At moments his longing for a firm faith in God, is pathetic. His "Dialogues" on religion, in parts at least, indicate that he did possess more faith than his writing would permit him to hold, considering the limitations he imposed, or, rather, the limitations the method of inductive science imposed, upon men's efforts to know. For Hume was not primarily engaged in writing religious works, but in showing what effects the prevailing scientific method of his day, coming from Descartes, Bacon, Hobbes, Locke and Bishop Berkeley, had upon religious beliefs, and indeed upon all knowledge. In his works it is hard to determine just where the line can be drawn between the skepticism which inductive science necessarily induces and the

JESUS COMFORTS HIS DISCIPLES

(Lesson for March 13)

Lesson Text: John 14:1-18; Golden Text: John 14:27

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Heavenly Home. John 14:1-15

In the hours of our darkest need it is to these verses that we most often turn for comfort. Jesus' message to a world filled with trouble was, "Let not your heart be troubled;" and they were not empty words, out he showed us the way out of our troubles. We may be homeless here, but there is one who is preparing a better home in a better land. The body in which we live has also been likened to a house which we know is but temporal and decaying; but praise God there is another house eternal in the heavens whenever the time comes that we must "move." In our eternal home we shall ever be with him, and the way thither we know. Could there be more blessed comfort than this?

TUESDAY

The Comforter Promised. John 14:16-26

What an advantage the Christian has over the world! It is not strange that the world seems neither to know nor to understand the teachings of Jesus: they know not Jesus, for they have never seen him, and the Holy Spirit they cannot see, as Jesus brought out under the figure of the wind, when he talked with Nicodemus. Let us praise God for the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, who brings to our remembrance the blessed words of comfort and the precious promises of Jesus—not the least of which is found in v. 18: "I will come to you."

WEDNESDAY

Fruit-Bearing Promised

There is a true vine (v. 1), and a false; the branches of the false vine may be left to themselves, but there is a husbandman who tenderly watches over the true vine, caring for it and seeing that it fulfills its purpose in life—the bearing of much fruit. Even though we have borne fruit for the Master, let us not be self-satisfied: perhaps with the proper purging and pruning at the hand of the husbandman we might bear more fruit. And let us not forget that the bearing of fruit is, after all, the test of discipleship (v. 8).

THURSDAY

Friendship with Jesus. John 15:11-21

Not servants, but friends of Jesus: how exalted our position in him! He has made known unto his friends the whole plan of salvation, and has comforted us with the promise that he will return and take us to be forever with him. But just as true friendship with any earthly friend carries with it certain duties and obligations, so does our friendship with him. We are commanded to love one another as he has loved us; think that through. And if we befriend him whom the world hates, we may only expect to be hated by the world. But if we suffer with him—2 Tim. 2:12; Rom. 8:17, 18.

FRIDAY

The Holy Spirit a Teacher. John 16:1-15

It is worth spending much time not only on this but on other passages, to study just what the work of the Holy Spirit is in the world. Beginning in v. 8 we read of his office to the unbelieving world; beginning with v. 13 we read of his work in the believer. Things that the disciples were not yet ready to be taught, the Holy Spirit should later teach them. Just so, in our own lives today, the Holy Spirit is continually showing us things in God's word which we have many times read but never understood. We should never open the Book without first breathing a prayer that the Holy Spirit may enable us to understand what we read.

SATURDAY

Jesus, the Intercessor. John 17:9-21

There is blessed comfort and peace in meditating upon the things for which Jesus prayed in this great prayer for his people, but perhaps the greatest comfort is just to know that he cared enough to pray for us at all—and that still he ever liveth to make intercession for us. How can we be less than conquerors?

SUNDAY

A Prophecy of Comfort. Isa. 40:1-8

Jerusalem had suffered the full penalty for her sins, and now God sent her this message of comfort. If we seem to suffer now, let us think upon the exceeding great and precious promises of our God; and let us remember that they are not the promises of fickle mortal men, but the promises of the Almighty God, whose word shall stand forever.

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

7.—Righteousness vs. Respectability

Among the coins in the currency of the Kingdom of Heaven none is more valuable than righteousness. Jesus minted it new and sent it forth into circulation stamped on the one side with his own image and on the other with the legend, "Ye therefore shall be perfect." Very soon, however, there crept into circulation a very attractive and dangerous counterfeit known as respectability. In general appearance it closely resembled the genuine coin of righteousness; but a more careful inspection discovered the face of a Pharisee in the place of Christ; and on the reverse side the legend reads: "Vox populi vox dei." (The voice of the public is the voice of God.)

Many a prominent church is merely a local bank for the output of this false coin. Its membership is a respectable gathering of respectable people without one scintilla of real Christian righteousness. They are models of refinement, culture, intelligence, propriety, but wholly wanting in the spirit of charity and self sacrifice. They are men and women who are looked upon by the entire community as patterns of virtue and social excellence; but their character has no persuasive, leavening power.

Like the gold in Klondike sands which lies for ages in contact with the worthless dust and yet changes not one particle to the likeness of its own priceless beauty, they exert no influence to transform or uplift the life about them.

Such were the Pharisees of old. "Hypocrites"? No, not all of them. They were many of them exceedingly honest and scrupulous. And as a sect, they were the very best people of the time. Jesus recognized the real excellence of their lives, their purity, their uprightness, their zeal; yet he said to his disciples, "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven."

What was the fault with Pharisaic righteousness? It was the false coin, respectability. It was a rule of life prescribed by public opinion. Very exacting was that opinion, but it could never inspire true righteousness. That is an individual matter. It is the outgrowth of personal conviction. And that personal conviction must be derived from the very word of God.

Furthermore, righteousness is not fixed, but progressive. Its standard rises higher from day to day. Its manifestation becomes more exalted with every passing year. The respectability of yesterday may pass muster today, but yesterday's righteousness repeated today is sin.

Do you ask me to define the exact difference between righteousness and respectability? Here it is in a nutshell. Respectability is proudly exclusive. Righteousness is humbly receptive. Respectability gilds the very gateways to perdition. Righteousness lays the eternal foundations of the heavenly city.

Young People's Service to the Church

By Frank Gehman

Never have young people had a better opportunity to serve the church than today. Our Twentieth century is one of challenge. No less is it so to Christian young people. A century ago, a decade ago, young people had scarcely the freedom in service that is theirs now. Youth is today acknowledged as a potent factor in the thought life of the nations. Never before has youth been accorded quite the place in church life that it is today. It is a time of opportunity to youth. Let that opportunity be not abused.

The regular activities of the church offer to young people a splendid opportunity. These call for effort and cooperation to keep things going regularly and smoothly. Can you see things to do? Are you ready to pitch in and do them? A college man needed a job to supplement his savings in order to go to school. He got a job in a privately owned shop of the city. In a short while he had no place. When the owner was asked why he had discontinued hiring this man, his answer was abrupt—"He never could see anything to do." The church's regular activities offer a splendid opportunity to young people. There is the Sunday school class that needs a teacher; some competent person is needed as a secretary; you may be a teacher in training, attending the teachers' training class; you may see that strangers are made both welcome and comfortable; or you may be only a minor cog in the wheel. But right here is the opportunity of being a faithful and loyal cog.

Then there is the Christian Endeavor, which belongs especially to the young people. Make it a soul-winning, life-building success. It is your very own service, your very own organization. Make it a loyal part of the church's life, so loyal that the church leaders may depend upon it as fully as upon the Women's Missionary Society.

Thus there is a great place for the young people today both in the regular activities of the church and in the special work of the Christian Endeavor. Let us make our place in the activities count for the Lord.

In no sphere may we do more effective service than by true, consecrated Christian living. Next to a pure Gospel, I firmly believe nothing is more important than a pure life. Too much cannot be said here. The world reads no Bible but the open book of Christians' lives. The church needs the testimony of sincere and consecrated Christian lives. What would be nobler than for Christian young people of this generation to take a leading part in that kind of Christian living?

How does your life count in the church services? Can the pastor know, without looking your way, that you are in your accustomed place at the beginning of each service? Do you give prayerful attention to the service? Are you thoughtfully reverent? Is your heart open to the instruction of the Holy Spirit? Does your spirit rise in a desire to know more of God through his Son? Public worship is a time of heart-searching and of life-strengthening, just as well as a time of honoring God. Young people can be of great service to the church by just such living at church.

On the street, in our public lives we have the opportunity of showing the genuineness of our Christian lives. Do we manifest the Spirit of Christ in dealing with our fellowmen? Much of our soul-winning power depends upon this point. From the human side of soul-winning and work for the Lord it is not so much flawless diction and fluent expression that count as one's own purity of life.

The home, where so often the public polish is dropped, affords another splendid opportunity to prove our Christianity. Youth is now supposed to be in rebellion against the elders and against conventionalities. Christian living will make one conservative on these points and give wisdom besides. It is not a bad idea to listen often and deeply to our elders. Many times they have paid dearly enough for the knowledge that they would gladly give us gratis. Conventionalities may often seem foolish to young life but we need to remember that they have come out of the deep and oftentimes bitter experience of the race. Ponder well the occasion of their existence before scrapping them forever. Probably these two points make for most of the friction in the home today. As Christian youth what will we do about it? Note the way a pure Christian life in the home will lead.

Young people can do an immeasurable good and render a lasting service to nation, church and Christ by genuine Christian living.

These things mentioned beforehand constitute a part of this last matter, namely, that of a Christian testimony. The church is here to give a testimony to the world, a testimony to the saving and keeping power of the Lord. Can young people have any serious part in that testimony? Emphatically, Yes. Youth is subject to censure to day as are many other institutions of our land. Suppose we see a group of young people taking an active part in church work and, more than that alone, living the profession they make. Will the world take note? Indeed it will, and young people have had their part in rendering a service to the church, divinely instituted and perpetuated by our Lord to his everlasting glory. Then let our testimony ring loud, AND TRUE, in church activities, in everyday purity of living and in leading lost souls to our Blessed Saviour's bleeding side.

Young people's services to the church may be many and varied, and, if effected in the power of the Holy Spirit, they will be to the everlasting honor and glory of our Lord.

Argentina

There are many things to encourage us in our work in Argentina, but none more than the great success that is attending the work with the tent. I have already written of the short campaigns in Rosario, Tancacha, Perdices, Deheza and Cabrera. In the latter place we remained two weeks and the crowds increased till the last, and there was a great demand for a longer meeting. I believe we should have remained at least another week, but we wanted to follow our schedule.

From Cabrera we went to Carnerillo, a small town of 500 people which never had any preaching before. There is no church nor priest and the people are not as fanatical as in some places. From the first we had good attendance, but the people listened from a distance. Then they came closer and within a week the best people of the town were in the tent listening eagerly. In each place we have sold considerable literature,—Bibles and portions and copies of my book on doctrine.

In Rio Cuarto we arranged with the commissary for a nice vacant corner, four squares from the center. It is one of these lots whose owners have disappeared and nobody knows where they are. When we were about to put up a tent a man appeared in a furious mood and declared he was the agent of the owner, and ordered us to get out. He presented no papers and we concluded that he was an agent of the priests. The commissary, whose secretary is a former student of mine, by the name of Ernesto Nielsen, a Dane, favored us and we put up our tent and have been having great crowds every night.

I have daily Bible studies with the young men who are helping and we have as usual a meeting for children in the afternoon. We have over 100 enrolled and an attendance of over 60. The children are nearly all new children, as the tent is not in the district of the mission. They come to the meetings at night and sing for the public the choruses they have learned.

The evening meetings fill the tent with women and children with several hundred man and women listening on the outside. Brother Romanenghi has been giving most of the main addresses but is aided by the rest of us. He is wonderfully gifted for this work and I hope may be able to continue in it.

The order is good. One night a drunkard had to be taken care of, but the people seem to be all sympathetic with the work and there will be many accessions as a result of it.

It is the most effective method we have yet found for evangelizing the people. The time seems to be ripe for it. We are using thousands of tracts as it takes thousands to supply such audiences every day besides the distribution from house to house. We need your prayers that all these expenses may be met and that above all that hundreds of souls may be saved. The government here is adding new and heavy duties on all incomes and many think it will bring bankruptcy to the business men and grave consequences to the country. But the world has brought on its bankruptcy by its own follies and must learn to return to the simple Christian life.

If even our church members will all do that there will be no lack of bread or for missionary funds.

C. F. YODER.

1931 REVIEW OF THE FIRST LONG BEACH CHURCH

The revival in January, 1931 conducted by Evangelist Harry Vom Bruck and singer Walter McDonald resulted in seventy-five being baptized and joined the church. Since then sixty-five have been baptized, three by letter, two by relation, making a total of one hundred and forty added to the church in 1931. During the summer Rev. Kenneth M. Monroe spent two and a half months assisting our pastor and when the pastor had his vacation and went to the General Conference, Brother Monroe had full pastoral charge. He gave us some very practical and spirit-filled sermons. The Thursday evening lectures on Archaeology were very interesting and much appreciated.

After nineteen years of service for the Savior in this place our pastor still holds forth the bread of life to hungry souls. Many are the people from different churches who come to the services, and go away filled with real spiritual food. In these days may the Lord richly bless and strengthen his Servant, faithful and loyal to the Word of God. Numerous are outside calls for Dr. Bauman to deliver his messages on prophecy.

It is with a heart full of praise and thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for his manifold blessings to us that the superintendent, A. H. Kent, brought his annual report this year. It truly has been a great year for our Bible school. The Lord has been so gracious to us. He has blessed abundantly,—really above anything we could ask or think.

The different departments under the efficient work of their superintendents have made a fine growth and accomplished great work for him. The departments graduated a large number of scholars on Promotion day, when we had 1,214 in attendance—the largest in the history of our school. The average attendance for the year was 806.

In spite of the depression which no one can gainsay, our offerings through the Bible school during the year have increased more than 60% over those of last year. This is marvelous in our sight, and we lift our hearts in praise to him.

The special offerings were: Birthday offerings for Kentucky, $78.9; Building Fund, $3,314.46; Easter Offerings, $2,003.51. The grand total cash offering for the year was $6,945.50.

The Christmas program was pronounced the most impressive ever given by the school and an honor to our Lord and his House. The quiet, unnoticed work of our Home Department carried on for the shut-ins, from home to home by Brother and Sister Carter (parents of Lyda Carter in Kentucky) brings sunshine into the hearts of many not able to come to Bible school. The splendid Daily Vacation Bible School made lasting impressions upon the lives of the boys and girls. New pupils were added to the Bible school thereby.

One of the agencies responsible for the growth of the Bible school, is the Transportation Committee. Automobiles cover the city and bring in the boys and girls. The average brought per Sunday was 186.

May we still continue to pray that we may have a real Bible Training school in our splendidly equipped building, teaching and

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Dr. Caldwell, head of the department of Sociology, recently had an article in the Scientific Monthly, a very exclusive journal, on the subject of "THE CAMPAS INDIANS OF AFRICA." He collaborated with a student here who had some original experience with these people.

The College recently defeated Fenn College (a department of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A.) in fencing on our own floor.

The County Basketball tournament was held in the College Gymnasium last Friday and Saturday. It was well attended. Polk High School was the winning team coached by an Ashland graduate.

I recently received an annuity without solicitation from a faithful friend in Pennsylvania. This is very encouraging and points the way others might well do. The amount was $1,000.00. There will be no lawsuit over that amount.

Dr. Bame, editor of our Sunday School literature, recently gave a most excellent address on George Washington at the local Rotary.

The enrollment now stands at 310, our largest. With the addition of some 20 for the last six weeks, there will be upwards of 325 on the grounds. This number taxes our facilities. Again, I want to remind the readers of this paper, that the Chapel seats only 200. And all the bookkeeping, janitor work and the teaching is being done at the very lowest figure. I want again to speak a good word for the Church's employes here at the College.

The senior class this year will consist of 59 with the bachelor's degree and 25 two-year education, making a total of 84. This is our largest graduating class. All of these figures apply only to the Arts College.

It was a pleasure to have Mr. and Mrs. John Rishel and Mr. and Mrs. Mackel of Pittsburgh, as visitors here at the College over the week end. Mr. and Mrs. Mackel have a daughter, Rhoda, in school here.

The College recently defeated Heidelberg College in basketball on their own floor.

Professor Puterbaugh, head of the Department of Chemistry, read a paper before the Association of Chemistry teachers of Northeastern Ohio, in Cleveland recently. His paper dealt with a phase of teaching Chemistry to Freshmen.

FREMONT, OHIO

A two weeks' evangelistic campaign led by Rev. R. D. Barnard, pastor of the Dayton, Ohio, church, which closed February 14th, is the latest good news from Fremont, Ohio, Brethren. While but one was added to the church by baptism, and one by re-consecration, the campaign had the effect of encouraging the various departments of the church's activities, and arousing new zeal and broader vision both in pastor and membership.

A careful check-up of the attendance disclosed that thirty per cent of the audiences were visitors and friends of the church, many of whom make no religious profession. Mrs. John Baringer, who has been a devoted and capable leader of the work almost from its inception thirty-one years ago, and who is serving her twenty-sixth consecutive year as superintendent of the church school stated that more unsaved people attended during this campaign than have been in the church in many years.

This attendance was possibly due largely to the new contacts made through the intensive visitation carried on by the evangelist and pastor under the directing suggestion of the church. More than fifty per cent of the calls were made in non-church going homes in the community. Brother Barnard outlined a comprehensive program of visitation to be promoted with Easter Sunday as a first goal for a record attendance. Then he gave his energetic assistance in launching the "drive."

Brother Barnard's splendid leadership was the result of a four-party agreement entered into by the Dayton church who so generously "loaned" Fremont Brethren their capable pastor, the Ohio Mission Board who sponsored the plan, Brother Barnard, who receiving no extra compensation "donated" his services, and the Fremont church, which is the grateful beneficiary. We take this opportunity to thank all who made the special services possible, and express it as our conviction that the results will be cumulative and constructive rather than spasmodic and temporary.

That the campaign disclosed virgin soil waiting to be sown and cultivated was demonstrated on the closing Sunday when the church school attendance exceeded the stated enrollment by twelve per cent. Despite the difficult days through which the church is passing, the membership have been loyal in their attendance and support, and deserve the words of commendation extended by Brother Barnard and the District Evangelist, to which the pastor also subscribes.

Another outstanding event in this church's more recent history was the annual Homecoming Anniversary services held on the Sunday following Thanksgiving, when the District Evangelist, Rev. Doyll Belote, graciously accepted the church's invitation to be the guest speaker. An enjoyable fellowship was had throughout the all-day services during which Brother Belote brought training young men and women, each day of the week, for service for him. Teaching men and women, boys and girls, the Word of God, and bringing them to a saving knowledge of Christ and winning them to him, is the supreme business of our Bible school. May we continue to be faithful to this our task, in his name. We have a personal workers' band called "The Seventy." They meet once a month at 6 P. M. and have a fellowship meal. They made 5,914 calls. These personal workers' calls have a great deal to do with the additions to the church and Sunday school. They are mostly ladies and are divided into teams, so those having autos take those having no autos. This is a glorious work for the Lord. ("Time far better spent than going to bridge parties, as I am told some of our sisters participate in. Pastors, please give an antidote.")

The World-Wide Missionary Society held eight monthly meetings. The speakers included our own Miss Lyda Carter of Kentucky, Mr. Van Goetham of the Belgium Gospel Mission, Mr. George Jackson of the Orinoco River Mission in Venezuela and Mr. King, Chaplain of the Los Angeles jails. At other times letters and needs of our own missionaries in South America and Africa were presented. The Mission Study class has been studying the books, "Israel, My Glory," and "Christ Comes to the Village."

During the past year, the Christian Endeavor societies have increased, until we now have the perfect number of seven organizations. A Christian Endeavor Council composed of a president or superintendent of each society, keeps a closer band of fellowship between the different societies. The older societies have found a real field of service for Christ in the San Pedro Mission, and our young men were given opportunities to preach. The men attending the missions were fed spiritually and physically. Many souls have found their Savior as a result of this work. The county farm has been another opportunity for service.

The missionary field of our own denomination has been a real opportunity for Endeavorers. Over five hundred rolls of bandages were sent to Africa, boxes were sent to Kentucky, and the South American Children's fund remembered with an offering, as well as the Superannuated Ministers' fund. The Church Building Fund has been loyally supported by the Christian Endeavor Organizations. The lessons of these societies includes Tithing, Quiet Hour Comrades and Bible Study with special attention to memory work in the younger classes.

About Thanksgiving time a campaign was launched for the Community Chest of Long Beach. As we did not contribute to this organization, a work was started by the church to care for the needy, physically and spiritually. After Christmas the need was greater than before. The Deacons' Board decided that it was a real opportunity for the Lord. Throughout the winter this work has continued. From twenty to forty baskets of food have been distributed each week. The Dorcas Committee has met regularly to mend clothes, or fix comforters. Clothing and food have been sent to not only our own members in need; but many others have been brought to a knowledge of the Savior. These are days when man's extremity is God's opportunity. It has been a great blessing to these workers engaged in this work. The Christians have responded to his Call, and different ones have brought a small amount of food every week. Other supplies have been bought with funds from the Deacons' account. When food is distributed the workers stop to have Bible reading and prayer in the home. Many who have never needed to ask for help before, have only found help materially until they could get employment, but have as a result of this work found Christ their Savior.

Our power house, the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, is attended by about 150 to 200. Besides this, other weekly prayer circles offer up petitions for the salvation of souls an dtestimonies of praise for the same, praying not only for souls in our church, but the church at large, and throughout the land and the world over, and for the completion of the church, Christ's blood-bought bride and for his soon return for her.

FAIR HAVEN CHURCH, WEST SALEM, OHIO

The Fair Haven church has not reported to the Evangelist since last autumn. However, the work here has been quietly progressing in the Master's name. The winter months always sees a falling off to some extent of the attendance in church and Sunday school here in the rural section. However, it has been picking up again, so that we are almost back to normal. The attendance last Sunday was ninety-one for Sunday school and over one hundred for church. The evening services, both Christian Endeavor and church services, are well attended. Many visitors from the surrounding churches which have no evening services have been attending our services. This is especially true of the young people. This is the first winter in the history of the church here that Christian Endeavor has been carried through the winter months. Many of our young people who have never before prayed in public, nor acted as leaders in any public service, have been taking an active part in this training school of the church. This bids fair for the future of this church.

It may be of interest to some to know the type of sermonic work that is being carried on here. The pastor is using two series of sermons, one for the morning and the other for the evening. The morning series consists of a study of the messages of the Seven Churches of Asia, Revelations 2-3. In the evening the series consists of a study of the Epistle to the Ephesians. This is one of the most interesting studies the present pastor has attempted to present to the church. Much interest has been aroused over this study. It is hoped that the saints of this church may be edified and enriched in their spiritual living through these studies.

The young people are rehearsing a play which they will present some time in March. They are raising money to meet a pledge to the Kentucky mission work at Krypton. The Christian Endeavor has also pledged toward the support of the church, and are using this procedure to procure the necessary money.

We are all looking forward to the Pre-Easter week of services which have been planned for this church. We are fortunate in living so near the college and seminary. This has enabled us to secure the very best talent for this pre-Easter week of Bible studies. In addition to the College and Seminary we have been able to secure the assistance of Dr. Beal of the First Brethren church in Canton, and of Dr. Charles Bame of Ashland, Ohio. We are thus permitted to have for seven nights, each of seven men to preach upon great Bible themes. Certainly this shall be a memorable week for the Fair Haven church. The following is the program as it has been prepared for that week:

Sunday, March 20, "The Christ of the Centuries." Prof. M. A. Stuckey.

Monday, March 21, "Jesus Christ; Prophet, Priest and King." Dr. E. E. Jacobs.

Tuesday, March 22, "The Social Effects of the Life and Work of Christ." Dr. J. C. Beal.

Wednesday, March 23, "Our Kinsman Redeemer." Dr. J. Allen Miller.

Thursday, March 24, "The Meaning of the Cross." Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Friday, March 25, "The Glorious Vision of the 'Other Thief.'" Dr. Charles A. Bame.

Saturday, March 26, "The Resurrection."

These are just the beginnings of the good things the Lord has in store for us this year. Beginning July thirty-first our evangelistic campaign will begin under the leadership of Dr. L. S. Bauman, of Long Beach, California. We know that, the Lord willing, that Dr. Bauman shall come, we shall have a bountiful feast of spiritual blessings during these two weeks of services. We are praying earnestly that the Spirit may have his way during the pre-Easter services and during the evangelistic campaign next August. We solicit the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of the Lord's work here in the Fair Haven congregation and community. Many souls are standing outside of the fold. Perhaps this is the year that they will accept the Lord and enjoy sweet fellowship with his redeemed ones.

R. E. GINGRICH, Pastor.

REWARDS

Rewards are everywhere held forth as a reward for labor, in the gospel, and this view is in harmony with the teachings of nature and every law of justice. The Lord does promise rewards for valuable labor, and it is comforting to know that this is Scripture.

The theory that the person who comes into the church in early life and lives an exemplary and self-sacrificing career until he becomes old and dies, will receive no more than will the one who repents an hour before he dies is too weak and contemptible to be godly. God will fulfill his promises and his promises are that the faithful servant shall be rewarded according to his labor."

Quoting 1 Cor. 3:10-16, he continues, "Inasmuch then, as the reward depends upon the quality of the work done, it is important that the preacher obey the apostle, 'Take heed how ye build thereon.' He ought to have evidence of fruits answerable to amendment of life before he makes his applicant a stone in the Lord's temple if he wishes a reward for his labors; for unless his work abides thereupon, he shall receive no reward."—Holsinger in Evangelist, 1886.

personal faith which Hume himself held in spite of science, and above it and beyond it.

The natural, genial disposition of the man predisposed him to agreement with beliefs, and his phlegmatic temperament made non-conformity an effort. But he possessed a face-to-face attitude toward truth. He did not shrink from stating in words what his keen, analytical mind, with its predilection for diversity versus unity, deference versus likeness, facts versus theories, revealed in the system of thought in his day and country. In performing this unwelcome task, he did the world of philosophy and religion both a great service. He once and for all laid low the ghost of human authority in religion, in philosophy and in science. To thinking people, after Hume finished—and no man has advanced any further along the line he surveyed than he himself went—mere rational systems of thought based upon sense-knowledge and human reason could never again be used to cow and subjugate the faith of a soul desirous of believing in things eternal. Whatever Hume himself believed, he certainly permitted other people to secure religious faith if they wanted to, and that without either stultifying their reason or laying themselves open to the charge of being unscientific.—The Lookout.

CHRIST'S OPEN DOOR

never glorify God. In such an atmosphere, worship is dead and lifeless. The Sardis church was most worldly. She lost her savor, testimony and influence. "Flowers that are sweetest become sour when they fade." Beware when the world begins to flatter the church.

The true church was not known as the largest and most wealthy church. It had power which belonged to God. What couldn't God do through the church if she were wholly consecrated to him? It is really wonderful what God can do with little things, if given a chance. God does select the weak to confound the mighty. He used a left handed man, a woman, an ox goad, the jawbone of an ass, a sling and stone, a trumpet, a pitcher and candle to overwhelmingly defeat the mighty enemy. These in the hands of the Holy Spirit performed miracles. We read also that, "One shall chase a thousand; and two shall put ten thousand to flight." God wants not so much a large church but a clean church. Paul prayed for greater strength. God replied, "My Grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

Once more Christ reminded the Philadelphia church, "Thou hast kept my Word." This is the true test of love. "If a man love me, he will keep my Word." When so many agencies are employed to mutilate God's Holy Word, how important that his church guard, teach and practice the whole Bible. His church is the repository of his will, Word and message. God's message to the Jew in the Book of Esther seems almost applicable in this connection, "And who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for such an hour as this?" Parallel with this one is the other comforting thought in the New Testament, "Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." The one essential and all important requirement is preparation and a complete resignation to his will.

The church, under discussion, hears Christ again say, "Thou hast not denied my name." Christ's name is synonymous to that of the church. This church did two things. She was a living testimony for Christ. Because she lived, he also lived. When she lifted him up from the earth he was able to draw men unto himself. Christ is expecting the church to execute his righteous will. In the second place this church was not silent when a word was the duty of the moment. Often the name of Christ is allowed to be dishonored and blasphemed because the church members stand by in silence and offer no reproof. Could you imagine Christ standing by and tolerating his Father's name trampled in the dust? So zealous and jealous should the church be for the dignity, Deity and Honor of his most worthy name. Since this calls for so much liturgy, form and aristocracy we make bold to say that a little more informal and emotional testimony regarding that name would be a blessing, honor and glory to Christ's name and his church. Do not forget that that name stands for the person and work of Christ.

One can scarcely pass on without reminding ourselves of his promise, "Also I say unto you, whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the Angels of God: but he that denieth me before men, shall be denied before the Angels of God" (Lk. 12:8-9). Confess means publicly to own and acknowledge as his own; to own and profess the truth of Christ, and to obey his commands, and that in spite of all opposition and danger from the enemies. Christ also reminds the true church that because they are true to him he will preserve them from the, "Hour of great Tribulation." We must not forget that Christ operates the door and possesses the key. He not only places before the church an open door of opportunity but also closes the door for security and protection. Thank God, the days of persecution and humiliation will be over. Then will be the time of peace and glorification.

Hear Christ, finally, as he says, "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown, him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of My God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God, which is New Jerusalem, which is come down out of heaven from My God: and I will write upon him my New Name" (Rev. 3:11-12). A pillar is a permanent fixture in the eternal Celestial Temple of God. A new name will be written on the victorious overcomer. With this new name the Christian enters the new life and existence. A woman, upon marriage, takes upon herself the new name of her husband. When Christ the Bridegroom marries the church—the Bride, she will be known by the new name. The Christians of the Philadelphia church, "Held fast," "His Word." Now he will hold them fast; they shall not be moved.

In conclusion, by way of summary, we shall endeavor to present just a few recommendations. May we preface this conclusion by saying that the church is not authorized, according to Scripture, to arbitrate for the world; neither is she expected to pose as a rule of practice for sinners but for saints. The New Testament was written as a Scriptural Norm of living for the church. The church is expected, by the Master, to preach and live the Gospel. Christ is never pleased when his church apologizes for her position. Ours should be, more and more, a positive preaching. It is easier to declaim like an orator against a thousand sins in others than to mortify one sin in ourselves; to be more industrious in our pulpits than in our closets; to preach twenty sermons to our people than one to our own hearts. Every sermon ought to have the doctrine of Christ in it in form or in solution. Every minister of the Gospel should address his audience with the zeal of a friend, with the generous energy of a father, and with the affection of a mother. We should preach nothing down but the devil and nothing up but Jesus Christ. It is not so much our business to mix with the world as it is to prepare our hearts to resist temptations.

In this age of increasing apostasy, indifference and lukewarmness on the part of the professing church, we urge a continuance of revivals for the church and a program of Gospel evangelism for the unchurched. We further recommend that the church offer every possible assistance to the missionary program of the church.

Your Moderator is intensely interested in the weak, struggling churches which should not be allowed to become defunct if at all possible to keep them alive and active, therefore we recommend that this Conference appoint a committee to investigate the conditions of these churches and submit a practical program for these churches at next year's Conference.

We recommend that our church, including both clergy and laity, acquaint themselves thoroughly with the Scriptural teaching on war and non-resistance and act accordingly when the next crucial crisis shall have arrived. Wars there will be. We should seek God's guidance in the matter and pledge our allegiance to him.

We urge that a special program on Stewardship be adopted in our various churches. We should learn that all is loss that comes between us and Christ. The most worthless thing to have in our possession when Christ comes is a pocket full of money, for—burial shrouds contain no pockets and the ferry boat crossing the last river carries no baggage.

Lastly we urge that a very pronounced emphasis be placed upon the vital subject of, "The Second Coming of our Lord." We should teach, preach and live as if he might return any day. "Be ye, therefore, ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

Brethren, will the Brethren Church recognize the open door of opportunity? Hungry folks must be fed. May we continue to break Bread and be instrumental that God may invite through the door multitudes for food. "God has made a covenant with his people, has given himself for their portion, his Son for their price, his Spirit for their guide in the way, his earth for their accommodation by the way, his angels for their guard the powers of darkness and death for their spoil, everlasting glory for their crown." And so, "Lord pardon what I have been, sanctify what I am, and order what I shall be, that thine may be the glory, and mine the eternal salvation." Amen.

Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

"TITHING IN HARD TIMES"

The Layman Company has a varied list of leaflets and pamphlets on stewardship and tithing, carefully adapted to the widest and yet most economical distribution. One which is of great value for the present moment is "Tithing in Hard Times." A copy of that leaflet, and a complete descriptive list of other stewardship material, will be sent to any address on request to The Layman Company, 730 Rush Street, Chicago, giving the name of The Brethren Evangelist.

HERALDING THE GOOD NEWS OF SALVATION

THE CALL—

Once again the call goes forth to all the faithful of the Brethren Church to make an offering for Foreign Missions.

Easter Sunday, March 27, is the day upon which this offering will be made before the Lord to the Glory of his name and the Salvation of souls.

Pastors, organizations and officials, and all members are earnestly besought to pray for this Offering.

Let Every Church, every Sunday School, every other organization including the C. E. and Sunday School classes come to the help of the Church in making this Offering what it must be to maintain our present status of work.

INFORM YOURSELF; TALK FOREIGN MISSIONS; PRAY FOR BOTH THE WORK AND THE WORKERS: THEN GIVE AS THE SPIRIT OF GOD LEADS.

HEAR THE GOSPEL UNLESS WE GIVE IT TO THEM.

OUR APPEAL—

These men and women, every one of them called of God, must not come to want nor be recalled from the fields of labor.

Every member of the Brethren Church is under obligation to keep faith with these who so freely have given their all to go to these needy fields. They went at the Call of their Lord expressed through the Church. GOD WE KNOW IS FAITHFUL; THEY ARE FAITHFUL: WILL WE WHO MUST SHARE WITH THEM IN THEIR SUPPORT BE FOUND FAITHFUL?

Your Mission Board comes with confidence in this appeal. THE BRETHREN CHURCH HAS NEVER DEFAULTED IN THIS WORK. WE DO NOT BELIEVE THE BRETHREN WILL DO SO NOW.

OUR FIELDS—

Our first Field was Argentina. Here we are allocated a territory equal in size to half the state of Indiana with about a million people. Our work is centered in Rio Cuarto. Other strategic locations have been occupied and from all reports from the Field we are at the threshold of a great forward movement in the work there.

In Africa we hold a vast unoccupied territory with a million people to be Evangelized. Our work centers in three distinct fields, namely, at Bassai, at Yaloke, and at Bellevue.

THERE ARE TENS OF THOUSANDS OF MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN EACH OF THE FIELDS WE OCCUPY WHO WILL NEVER

GOD'S WILL—

Your Board believes that in the past it has been wonderfully led by the Spirit of God in all its undertakings. Manifest and numerous tokens of God's approval upon this work can be cited. We therefore come once again in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. His last word to his disciples was their Commission to Herald the Good News of Salvation to every lost soul.

Through the Church, and the Church alone, he has ordained that his Will shall be executed.

The Church has been all too slow and far too long in doing her work. What a glorious opportunity awaits the Church to demonstrate her fidelity to her Lord at this coming Easter tide!

Did the Apostle Paul Preach Human Philosophy or the Truth of God?

By Prof. Alva J. McClain

Elsewhere in this issue of the Evangelist, the reader will find an article by Brother R. I. Humbert entitled "Educational Qualifications of a Minister." With a number of his statements I am in entire agreement, especially those which emphasize the absolute need for a thorough knowledge of the Word and the Power of the Holy Spirit. Other parts of the article bristle with inconsistencies, and in one place he advances a serious error which is the occasion for my own discussion here.

The matter of educational requirements for ministers is something that needs discussion with the utmost candor and frankness. Free discussion, conducted in a Christian spirit, is a good thing and often clarifies issues. I have always believed in it. If our policies and institutions cannot stand the light of inquiry and discussion they are not worth much. I do not think that Brother Humbert's arguments will injure the cause of Christian education.

As to how much education should be required of ministerial applicants before ordination, I know of no serious proposal to set up the standard of four years of college and three years in the Seminary as an absolute rule for all men, although I think that is little enough for the average youngster who emerges from High School at the age of 17 or 18. The Apostle Paul forbids the ordination of a "novice," a rule that might be observed more carefully with profit to all concerned. But aside from this, there is one requirement which the church has a right to lay upon every man without exception—He should know the Word of God. And that is a requirement not easily met. The purpose of our own Seminary is to help men meet this requirement. Doubtless, there are men of unusual purpose, industry and ability who have been able to meet this requirement by the method of private study. Such men, however, are not found depreciating the value of Seminary education which is true to the Word. On the contrary they are the men who do the most to provide for young men the educational facilities which they themselves were unable to enjoy. No finer example could be offered than Mr. D. L. Moody.

So if any man can get his knowledge of the Word adequately by private study, we shall thank God for his industry. But the point is that the Church has a right to require such a knowledge of those who apply for ordination. And if examining committees are becoming somewhat more strict about this matter, it is a good thing for all concerned. It is our opinion here that the Christian minister should know the Word of God as well as the physician knows his field. And we believe in conducting examinations in order to find out, as our students will tell you. I expect to write an article or two on this subject in the near future.

But the thing which concerns me most in Brother Humbert's article is not his view of higher education, but rather his quite astonishing attempt to hold up the Apostle Paul as a horrible example of the effect of education and learning. The question here, as the reader will see, is not concerning education but something vastly more important, namely, the divine authority of the Apostle Paul and the inspiration of his words.

First, Brother Humbert puts into the mouth of the Apostle Paul words that he never uttered. Here are the words, and the quotation marks are his, not mine: "I will just reason with them (the Athenians) a little and let them know that I am an educated man and can quote from their own poets. When they hear me use a little philosophy, it will get their attention and command their respect." Where did Paul ever say this or anything remotely like it? What right has any man, least of all a minister of the Gospel, to put his own "imaginings" into the mind of the Apostle and then criticize him on this imaginary basis?

Second, Brother Humbert adds his own words to the Apostle's words written to Corinth, and thus makes Paul write what he never wrote. He says that Paul "wrote a letter to Corinth something like this:" "I made a great mistake at Athens by using human reasoning and philosophy and I was unable to establish a church there but when I came to you, I came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom for I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Again the quotation marks are Brother Humbert's own, and he puts after the "quotation" the reference (1 Cor. 2). Once more we may ask, where in First Corinthians or any other letter did the Apostle write anything resembling the apology that Brother Humbert attributes to him? Paul did write the latter part of the "quotation," and it is the very Word of God, and for that very reason man has no right to add his words to what God has written. A paraphrased quotation is sometimes permissible if it is a paraphrase of something actually in the Word. But Brother Humbert has added something which is not in the passage, as any one can see by reading 1 Cor. 2:1-2.

Third, Brother Humbert charges that the Apostle Paul preached "human reasoning and philosophy" at Athens. Is this true? Let the reader open his Bible to Acts 17:16-34 where the Bible tells what he preached. We do not need to take any man's word for it.

In verse 18 we learn that Paul encountered certain of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers. What did he preach to them? Brother Humbert says "human reasoning and philosophy." The Bible says "He preached unto them Jesus and the Resurrection." (18)

The philosophers became interested and took him unto the great Areopagus that he might tell them more about this "new doctrine," and there Paul preached a sermon. What did he say? I do not have the time for a complete exposition of this wonderful Scripture, but here are some of its main points:

Paul preached that God created the world and everything in it (24). Is this doctrine human philosophy or the Word of God? Compare Genesis 1:1. The philosophers there believed just the opposite, as Paul knew.

Paul preached that God is the Sovereign Lord of heaven and earth (24) and that he needs nothing from man, as their idols did. Is that human philosophy?

Paul preached God as the Preserver of all things. (25). The Epicureans did not believe the gods had anything to do with the world. And the Stoics were pantheists.

Paul preached that God had made "of one blood" all nations of men (26). That is exactly what Genesis teaches, contrary to certain notions that the human race is descended from several origins instead of one.

Paul preached the control of God over the destinies of the nations, their times and their bounds. (26). The Old Testament and especially the book of Daniel, is full of this great truth. Paul knew his Bible.

Paul preached that men ought to "seek the Lord" (27), that being the great purpose of creation. If you think this is human philosophy, read Isaiah 55:6-7. And don't forget that Paul had already told these Athenians who the Lord was (18).

Paul preached that since man is the "offspring of God," he ought not to think that God is like any idol that man can make. This is good Biblical argument. Man is made in the image of God, and badly as the image has been effaced by sin, we can still learn something about God by looking at his creature. We can learn that God is a personal being with intellect and will, something all idolators need to know. And God will hold even the heathen world responsible to knowing, though they are without written revelation. Compare Romans 1:18-20.

Paul preached repentance to the philosophers (30). If Brother Humbert knew the philosophy of the Epicureans and Stoics, he would understand how utterly abhorrent this command would be to their natural minds. Surely this is not "human philosophy."

Paul preached a Day of Judgment for all men (31), which involved the idea of future life and personal accountability, a thing rejected by the Epicureans and gravely doubted by the Stoics. Does the Bible teach a Day of Judgment?

Furthermore, Paul preached that Jesus Christ would be the Judge! (31). And Brother Humbert calls this "human philosophy."

Thus finally, Paul comes back to what he started with—Jesus and his Resurrection.

Washing the Disciples' Feet--An Exposition of John 13:1-17

It is an impressive scene, that of Christ and his disciples gathered about the table in the upper room on the last night before his death, and the occasion is a most significant one. At no other time in the life of our Savior do we see such a manifestation of divine love and tenderness and at the same time such positive assumption of authority and lordship. It was most natural. He had come to his last hours with his disciples, and last hours are always important. Here were these hand-picked and personally trained leaders who were to carry on his work, and they must be given their final instructions, and their faith must be strengthened and purified. For that purpose he was there with them. What he says and does, therefore, on this occasion are profoundly significant, and are deserving of our most careful and prayerful consideration.

We shall consider the scripture in four parts: First, the Introduction (1-3), where the foundation is laid for a most significant act; second, the Act of Feet Washing (4, 5); third, Peter Corrected and Reproved (6-11); and fourth, the Rite Enjoined (12-17).

I. Introduction, or Laying the Foundation for a Most Significant Act (1-3).

It took place "before the feast of the passover," that is, the evening preceding that on which the paschal lamb was eaten. The occasion was not, therefore, the actual observance of the paschal meal of the Israelites.

It was "when Jesus knew that his hour was come" (1). This is in contrast to the expression frequently met with heretofore—"his hour was not yet come." The end was at hand and Jesus knew it. That adds to the seriousness and gravity of the situation.

What Jesus did here and what he said were inspired by his never-failing and deeply-moving love for his disciples. "Having loved his own, . . . he loved them unto the end" (1). Jesus loved them all along, we are reminded, but never more so than at the very end. In other words, the Gospel writer would have us know that never was his love so manifest as in these last hours, by these last acts. And when John wrote these words fifty or sixty years later he had lived to understand far more than he was able to understand that night, not only the deep, sacrificial measure of Jesus' love, but also the wise provision and the far-sightedness of it, as revealed in those final instructions. Here is the motive for the action.

Then follows a statement pointing to the order of events. "Supper being ended" means supper being completed, that is, prepared. A supper was prepared but not yet eaten. One ancient text (the Alexandrian) reads, "When the repast as a repast began," and that reading is approved by Tischendorf and Meyer.

In the same verse (2) we read, "The devil having put it into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him." That reveals not only the diabolical nature of the treachery in Judas' heart, but also indicates that Jesus understood that time was pressing, and that he must forthwith be about his final instructions to the church.

Furthermore, John informs us that Jesus was especially conscious of his deity and divine authority as he was about to enter upon the act of Feet Washing. "Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God and went to God" (3). Why did John think it necessary to record that Jesus was conscious of his sovereign position and divine origin on this occasion? It seems evident that John was made to understand at the time of the event that Jesus was actually establishing an ordinance and that he had the authority to do so.

II. The Act of Feet Washing (4, 5).

Jesus "riseth from supper (from the table), and laid aside his garments (his robe); and took a towel and girded himself (tied around himself, so as to leave both hands free for the feet washing). After that he poureth water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded" (4, 5). Note that the feet washing was performed at the table, after all had been seated for supper, and not at the door where, as they entered the house, the customary washing for physical cleansing took place. It should be borne in mind also that the feet washing was done before the supper was eaten, while the quarrel among the disciples as to who should be greatest occurred after the meal and the eucharist, according to Luke (22:20, 24). That fact rules out the claim advanced by some that Jesus resorted to the feet washing as a means of settling the dispute between the disciples. All the circumstances under which the feet washing was done put the act beyond any ordinary custom and make it so strange and unique that it cannot be accounted for on any other ground than that it was the vehicle of some new and profound truth.

III. Peter Corrected and Reproved (6-11).

The feet washing went forward without interruption until Jesus came to Peter, who interposed an objection. He was outspoken and daringly bold beyond any of the other disciples, yet he very likely expressed the mind of all. "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" (6) inquired Peter. Jesus replied, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter" (7). The fact that he said that indicates that Jesus was not engaged in the customary feet washing with which Peter was perfectly familiar. But because he did not understand, and was not willing to wait to find out, he went a step further against the program of the Master, saying, "Thou shalt never wash my feet" (8). Jesus could not countenance a spirit of rebellion and disobedience, and he met Peter's defiance with words equally as positive, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me" (8). Submit, or forfeit your lot with me, was Jesus' ultimatum. Were those words for Peter's benefit only, or does Jesus hold the same attitude towards rebellion today as then? Is it a light thing for people who acknowledge the Lordship of Jesus to refuse to practice his established rites merely because they do not fully understand the significance of those rites?

But Peter's seeming rebellion was not of a malicious and persistent character. He was ignorant of Christ's purpose, and prejudiced against his methods, but he was not unwilling to be corrected and reproved. His love for the Lord Jesus was such that he was willing to change his attitude and do the thing he had formerly refused to do and could see no use in doing, when he found that it was his Lord's will. And yet he was slow to learn, as men are today. When he was faced with the seriousness of refusing to submit to the divine program, he would have swung to the other extreme of doing more than Jesus wished to have done, and would thus have violated the purpose and intent of the rite. When will we ever learn to do just what Jesus requires—no more, no less? From a refusal to have his feet washed, he changed to a clamor for rebaptism (9). And Jesus replied, "He that is bathed (or baptized) needeth not save to wash his feet" (10). As one returning from the public bath and getting his feet soiled along the way, does not take a complete bath again, but merely washes his feet, so the Christian who contracts defilement along the roadway of life, is not rebaptized but engages in the spiritual service of feet washing, symbolizing the cleansing which we may have of Christ whenever we come to him in faith. The baptismal rite is performed once for all as a cleansing from past sin, but the feet washing is to be repeated frequently, as a reminder of our constant need and as a sign of that daily purification which the Lord is ready to bestow upon us.

"And ye are clean" (10)—all were clean except Judas, whose treacherous heart had given its allegiance to Satan. They were "clean"—good, honest, sincere, devoted disciples, yet they had their frailties, as none knew better than Jesus, and they were certain to need the cleansing, vouchsafed through Jesus' blood and symbolized by the washing of one another's feet. That is the word of the Lord to us also—"ye are clean", but "except I wash thee",— that is to us too. "Ye are clean" through the waters of baptism, but for just such folks he established the cleansing service of feet washing,—that is suggestive and should keep us humble, if we were inclined to be otherwise.

IV. The Rite Enjoined (12-17).

"So after he had washed their feet"—all objections had been silenced and he had finished the act, the service, the object lesson,—is that all it is? and all there is to it? What is there about the whole performance that makes it really significant? Consider—

1. Who it is who has done this thing? Jesus said to his disciples, You yourselves call me Lord and Master, or Teacher (13). And you are right. That is just what I am—Lord, Teacher. What is the function of a teacher and lord? Is it not to direct, to command, to teach? Why should the disciples have been reminded of this? The answer is plain. It was because they were being taught and commanded something to do. They must be reminded that it was the Lord God speaking and acting. That makes it significant for all people for all time.

2. Why had Jesus done this—washed the disciples' feet? Jesus himself tells us very definitely why he did it. He says, "For I have given you an example" (15). It was to set an example that he did it. What is an example given for? The answer is, To fol-

EDITORIAL REVIEW

THE LAST SUNDAY IN MARCH is Foreign Mission offering day. You should be planning and praying that it may be adequate to the needs of the field. Next week's issue of The Evangelist will be specially devoted to the interests of Foreign Missions.

Those who may be interested in the Pre-Easter Week Services of the Fair Haven church near West Salem, Ohio, will please note in the news department of this issue a corrected announcement of the programs.

A recent personal communication from Brother I. D. Bowman informs us that he is not enjoying full health, but is suffering somewhat as a result of an auto upset two years ago. Nevertheless he is still preaching the word of God with power among his eager parishioners in Delaware.

Word recently received from Brother M. L. Sands informs us that they are having a good meeting at Muncie, Indiana, under the evangelistic leadership of Brother C. H. Ashman. The crowds are large and the interest is fine. At the beginning of the second week eight confessions had been received and it looked like a real "victory revival."

Brother Humberd's article in this issue seemed to be, before he kindly revised it, an attack on the Seminary's program. That explains the editor's offer to Prof. McClain of the opportunity to reply in the same issue. We believe the question of ordination requirements for the ministry may well be discussed, in the proper spirit, and may result in clearing up much prevailing confusion and misunderstanding.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey, of the Ashland Seminary, spent all day Tuesday, March 8th, at a Sunday School Institute at South Bend, Indiana, all the churches of Northern Indiana cooperating and the pastors participating. As has been previously announced, the National Sunday School Association is ready to cooperate in promoting institutes on Sunday school work in any locality or group of churches where such services may be desired.

The work at Lydia, Maryland, is making good progress under the leadership of Brother W. S. Baker. The Sunday school and women's organizations maintaining commendable interest and activity. Attendance at the church services is said to be on the increase, a result to some extent, no doubt, of the pastor's special effort to make the services interesting. An evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother Frank G. Coleman of Hagerstown, nearby, resulted in fourteen being added to the church by baptism. Brother Baker has been retained as pastor for another year.

Brother G. L. Maus, pastor of the church at Roann, Indiana, has closed his fifth evangelistic campaign in this church and maintained splendid interest throughout the meetings. The field has been kept well gleaned, but six new members were received by baptism.

Brother Harley Zumbaugh led the singing. The various departments of the church are said to be doing good work, and particularly their comparatively new organization of the Brotherhood of Paul and Timothy is worthy of notice. This is another successful effort to do for the boys what the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha is doing for the girls. May the interest in the boys and men of the congregations continue to increase.

Brother R. Paul Miller writes of an interesting and very successful meeting with a Church of the Brethren in suburban Altoona, Pennsylvania, the pastor of which is Brother Earl C. Bowser. The spirit of fellowship is said to have been fine and the attendance crowded the building. Fifty-four confessions were received during the meetings and others were reported after the meetings had closed. Aside from the success that attended these meetings, they were significant because of the interchurch fellowship afforded. It is not the first instance of a Brethren minister holding meetings for a Church of the Brethren pastor, or vice versa, but it is encouraging to note that such inter-Dunker fellowship is gradually increasing, and that ministers of each church group are finding among those of the other a devotion to the Word and to Dunker idealism such as they themselves cherish.

The church at Elkhart, Indiana, has recently enjoyed a successful revival under the evangelistic leadership of their pastor, Brother W. I. Duker, who, in a two weeks' campaign was privileged to see thirty-four persons confess Christ as their Savior, twenty-six of whom have been baptized. The music was in charge of Brother Harry Gilbert, a local music leader. The people were very loyal and stood by their pastor in a fine way, we are informed. Encouragement was given by delegations from nearby Brethren churches and from at least one Church of the Brethren. We notice in several districts and sections where our churches are closely associated as to distance there is a growing tendency toward fellowshiping together and encouraging one another in their undertakings. It is a fine thing to do, and as a result there is growing up a mutual feeling of unity and concern that is beautiful.

Brother W. C. Benschoff, pastor of the church at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, reports splendid progress in his portion of the Lord's vineyard. Attendance at all the services has increased during the past year, the average church attendance being 131, and the average Sunday school attendance being 212. Thirty-five have been added to the church membership during the year, with but few losses. The various auxiliaries of the church are active and growing. A new organization for young men, a missionary society, corresponding to the S. M. M. for the girls, is said to be meeting a real need and satisfying the young men. A union evangelistic campaign, in which the pastors did the preaching, overflowed one church and then crowded two, the average attendance for the three weeks being approximately 1,000. Brother Benschoff speaks also of his experience with the Maurertown church in Virginia, where Brother E. L. Miller is the pastor and with whom he was engaged in a revival, as previously reported.

Dr. Bame, Sunday school editor, writes in this issue about his new Brethren Youths' Quarterly, that is, "new" by reason of the fact that he has a new writer. When we use the word "new", there is no reflection meant on the quality of the quarterly during past months, for under the keen pen of Prof. Stuckey it was continually bringing forth precious truths both new and old. Brother Bame has been making high claims for the quality of this quarterly for some time and he continues to stand by his claims with the new writer he has secured, but whose name he has not divulged as yet. Not only for this publication, but for all other Sunday school lesson helps, we continue to say, as we have on many previous occasions, that our Brethren Sunday school publications are the best that can be found for Brethren people. Any one using other publications not Brethren need only to turn back to the lesson for last Sunday, March 6th, treating the subject of Feet Washing to be convinced that Brethren faith cannot be developed and strengthened by the use of other "just as good" lesson helps put out by so-called non-denominational publishing houses. When we appeal for greater loyalty in the use of Brethren publications, we are doing it not merely in the interest of our own publishing house, but in the interest of the larger loyalty to our denominational ideals and tenets. And at that point we can stand considerable improvement.

Educational Qualifications of a Minister

By R. I. Humbert

"This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work."

"Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine."

"Against an elder receive not an accusation but before two or three witnesses."

Scripture abounds with passages setting forth the high calling of the position of the minister. Many details are set forth as to his manner of life, personal conduct, consecration of time and sincerity of purpose.

The position as minister is a direct gift of the Holy Spirit and one that we are admonished to desire (1 Cor. 14:1). There are, however, certain qualifications to this most important office and we are admonished to "lay hands suddenly on no man" (1 Tim. 5:22). That is, there should be no hurry in ordination for a little time will often reveal some hidden reason where the applicant fails to measure up to the Scriptural requirements.

Worldly Wisdom

The Scripture is plain as to the qualifications that fit a man for ordination but in our time some have taken it upon themselves to add to the Scriptural account and demand a certain specified amount of education. But, does four years of college and three years of seminary fulfill Scripture requirements, or does such an arrangement tie God's hands and make it impossible for him to use his method of choosing the foolish things of the world to confound the wise (1 Cor. 1:27)? If it is true that God has made foolish the wisdom of this world (Vs. 20) then why require one of God's ministers to use up four years of his life in studying such things, especially since it is a well known fact that God usually uses the man of a simple childlike faith far more than him who is loaded down with so much wisdom of this world.

To refuse to ordain a God-called man simply because he desires to fit himself for the service of his Lord along Scriptural lines, is certainly the wrong course to take.

Purpose of This Article

This does not mean that a minister should not go to college if he so desires, nor that he should never acquaint himself with the learning of men, providing he can do so to the spiritual profit of himself and his hearers. "The works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein" (Ps. 111:2). The Christian can study astronomy, biology, geology, etc., for they are the seeking out of God's works and can be of great value to the minister, for the God of the Word and the God of creation are the same God. It is when man "considers the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained," that the fires of reverence burn in his heart and he exclaims, "What is man that thou are mindful of him?" (Ps. 8:3).

Neither do I seek to depreciate the great value of the time I spent in the study of Systematic Theology under the direction of Brother McClain. The purpose of this article is to set forth the conviction that the Bible contains the true requirements for ordination and that a plan now in operation, in one district of the Brethren Church, should not be continued and should not become universal, also the hope that the Brethren Church will remain true to its motto, "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible."

Thoroughly Furnished

God went to all the bother of inspiring his Word in order that the man of God might be thoroughly furnished unto ALL good works (II Tim. 3:17). A physician must have his pills and instruments, with the knowledge of their use and he is thoroughly furnished unto his work; the farmer must have his plow and other implements, and he is thoroughly furnished for his work and if a man is in possession of the Word of God and under the power of the Holy Spirit, he is thoroughly furnished for God's work, even if he has never seen the inside of a college.

Some try to tell us that a minister needs the power of psychology to make his preaching effective but Christ said, Ye shall receive POWER after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. It is a grave danger to substitute something else for the God given power.

"How dare this man preach, he never graduated from college?" Such was the cry of the wondering Jews when they heard Christ preach (John 7:15). The answer rings back in Luke 4:18, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me for he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor."

If a person is refused ordination because he lacks seven years of a specified course, Christ himself would be excluded. So would such mighty men of modern times as D. L. Moody and others. In fact, a humble man of God, in possession of the Word of God and under the power of the Holy Spirit, is far more able to be used of God than the best Hebrew and Greek scholar who has nothing but his degrees to command attention.

The Apostle Paul

To help prop up a flimsy excuse for such requirements, we are told that, although the apostles did not have an education, yet Paul was highly educated and therefore everyone else should know the philosophies and other learning of the worldly wise men.

Whatever Paul may have had to give him "confidence in the flesh," he had an experience at Athens that forever settled it in his mind, and all such things that he used to be proud of, he now counted but dung in comparison to the knowledge of Christ Jesus (Phil. 3:8).

We can imagine Paul as he goes to Athens. "Now these people are already very religious but of course they worship the wrong gods. I will just reason with them a little and let them know that I am an educated man and

The Waiting Grace

By Frank Gehman

Text: Therefore wait ye for me, saith Jehovah, until the day that I rise up from the prey.—Zeph. 3:8a.

What a beautiful grace it is in a Christian to wait quietly upon the Lord. It is one of the hardest of things for many of us to do. Even Abraham, father of faith though he was, was too eager. He could not see the way God planned. Nor can we always. Then for the grace to peacefully, calmly wait for him to move us! He knows when. Too, he knows how to carry out the way he planned. We do not always know the plan. How, then, might we work it out? The Psalmist bade his soul be quiet and fear not; Jehovah would bring him again to the place of service. That same mighty Jehovah is ours. Do we fear? For shame; he will save us from harm. Do we grow impatient? Are we restless as the prancing battle steed champing its bit while waiting for the fray? How are we to know that he is ready for us to take the field till he moves? Our post might be right here and we would desert it. Calmly, calmly—he will lead in time. Trust him. Believe in him. His arm is not weakened.

He may be wanting to test us. Several years ago in the middle west a train crashed through a bridge spanning a river. The wrecking crew came at once to the job. Wreckage was cleared away. The bridge was repaired. The last beam was ready to be swung into place to be bolted and spiked fast. A workman was sent out onto the bridge to direct the crane in placing the timber. The crane picked up its weight. The engineer backed his train into position. The beam was swung round and fastened. The track was cleared. The returning workman declared he had felt the bridge shake when the train was upon it. They thought that he was mistaken. A test run was made. The bridge seemed safe. A fast passenger was nearly due. The crew loaded their equipment and pulled for the closest siding. On came the flying train, reached the bridge, rushed upon it—and through it. The loss of life and property was great. The test had been faulty after all. God gives true tests. Waiting is a test. Can we wait? The test must be a hard one to fully prove us. Unless proved, we, too, might fail at the critical moment. Wait, wait upon the Lord, oh, my soul.

God needs folks in his church who will trust him always. How can we prove our trust but by meeting the test? "Therefore" . . . This must be a natural conclusion that is to follow, natural after what has gone before. Dear Child of God, what have you learned? Is there a "therefore" for you? "Therefore (because of what you have learned) wait ye for me." God is testing you. Will you wait for him? You may be sure he hasn't forgotten you. Not likely if he has the very hairs of your head numbered. He waits. Can we wait with him? Waiting is one of our tests. Oh, but you say, "My time is short, the day is passing when I can serve." Peace. What is that to you? Are you in the Lord's will? Then be patient and remain there. You can serve there. A cake does not need frosting upon it to be a cake. How is a year out of his will to compare to a day in it?

God may be wanting to school us by keeping us waiting. We learn many things in the hours of waiting. It is a good time to put together what we have picked up elsewhere. A railway waiting room is one of the best places in the world to philosophize. One is there and cannot get away until the train is ready to leave. You may be in God's waiting room. Maybe you know lots of things but haven't put the facts together rightly. Here is your chance. God may have you waiting for that very purpose. Will you by your indifference or impatience spoil the good plan of God for you? The hours of waiting for God to move should be valuable hours of training. Vs. 11.—"In that day (the one at the end of the waiting) shalt thou not be put to shame"—for the various reasons given. "Thou shalt not be put to shame." Do you believe it? Then wait on him.

God knows the right time to move. We do not. The engineer does not know just when it is safe to take his train across the other track. The man in the tower does. God is in the tower for us. He knows when to move. He has before him the plan laid from the foundation of the world. There is your name, the place, the task. Here is a new task, a new place and the very date when you can make the move with the most good to the cause of Christ. Why not, then, trust him? He knows the time. Even the Son has entrusted his "time" to the father's keeping. Are we better than he that we should not wait? God knows what is ahead; we do not. He knew that at a certain time the Roman power would control most of the known world, would have an efficient police system, a unified government, a system of highways and standard languages. It was into a circumstance like that that the Church was introduced. All these helped its spread. Who is man that he could have done better? Wait on God.

We need to wait for leadership. To act hastily often means to act in our own strength. God will lead in sufficient time. Abraham's haste brought trouble thirty-eight centuries ago—two or three years ago the pot was still boiling with the Jews and Arabs in national conflict. "Therefore wait ye for me." Reason enough. Nowhere is it said that Enoch ran with God. Enoch walked with him, and because Enoch walked WITH him and did not go ahead, or stay behind, or go down a bypath, God took him. Suppose he had run ahead. Would he have been at the right place when God was ready to take him? God knows when to lead his children. We need that leadership, or we will make tragic blunders. Wait, therefore, upon him.

Waiting is not the same as idleness. Idleness is sin. Time is too valuable to waste. We must give an account of it. Especially will the Christian recognize the worth of time. When God wants us to wait, it pleases him for us to wait. God never keeps us idling. Idleness is of man. It squanders time. Time is a gift of God. How can the Christian waste God's gifts? Idleness is unprofitable to both God and man. If we are to be profitable to God, we must be busy at the right things. We must scorn idleness. It is a tool of Satan for deceiving ignorant people. Waiting is a grace of God for cleansing and purging Christian lives. Now, will you wait on God? Will you idle while waiting?

Time spent in waiting need not be wasted. Indeed, it may become very profitable. Dr. Gribble will tell us in her book about their months of waiting to get into the Oubangui-Chari district of Africa. Wasted time? I have heard her say that their first convert there was made while they were waiting. Too, what volumes of prayer were poured out in those days. Not idle, meaningless prayer. Full-souled, deep, feeling prayer. Why was the work successful when finally the door opened? Go back to the eighteen months of "waiting." It was while he was "waiting" to go to China as a medical missionary that David Livingstone was sent to Africa. Mark the results of the waiting in his life. Rather profitable waiting. No, dear friend, times of waiting need not be wasted times. God will be grieved if they are. We will be the sufferers. Let us wait—idly? No. Let us wait profitably,

Now this waiting—in prayer—is needful. Our spirits need it. We learn much. We are strengthened. Then, too, it gives the Lord a better chance to work in and through us. The secret is not secret. It is a grace. The grace of waiting, waiting for him to speak, for him to act through us. Then we cannot fail. He is our assurance. For more than thirty years Monica prayed for her illustrious but wicked son, Augustine. At last he found the Lord and an immortal name amongst the Church fathers. Look! Thirty years of prayer, of heartbreaking waiting on the part of a Christian mother for a pagan son! It is said that Dr. Simpson prayed for forty years for the opening of the Oubangui-Chari district in French Equatorial Africa. Then came James Gribble under the hand of the Lord. Have you marvelled at the success of that young work? Look, and then look again. Everywhere waiting, not in idleness, but in usefulness, and then God moved. He moved with power. He had purged channels. Victory followed. It couldn't be anything else. The waiting time is a precious prayer time.

Are you called upon to wait? Stifle that discontent and wait where you are till he is ready to lead you forth. Perhaps your present seems too hard. Some day he will call you to another station. Can you patiently wait his bidding? Oh, for the grace of waiting in Christian lives! Not useless, profitless, idle waiting, but prayerful, busy waiting that will be a glory to him. "Therefore wait ye for me, saith Jehovah, until the day . . ."

Krypton, Kentucky.

"Why Uncle Sam Went Dry"

Editorial Note

Memories are short and there is considerable evidence that many good American people, even some in the churches, have forgotten the long battle with booze that brought about Prohibition. The "wet" forces have been hammering so persistently on the false note that Prohibition was the result of a sudden emotional reaction, or an abnormal stirring up of the people, a taking advantage of war psychology, that it was "put over" while the boys were in France, that many people who ought to know better are beginning to believe it. It is important that we shall keep our minds awake and our memories fresh, and our opposition courageous and aggressive. There is real danger that we shall experience at least a temporary loss of ground in the near future unless the good people of our land awake to the situation and show more of their old time fighting spirit. And it will help wonderfully to maintain a vital, fighting interest, if we keep memory alive as to the progress of the temperance reform and the evils that made such reform necessary. The following article by W. G. Calderwood, published in the Evangelical Messenger, will be a help to the refreshing of memory:

WHY UNCLE SAM WENT DRY

By W. G. Calderwood

Uncle Sam paid little attention to the drinking habits of his family until he began to collect an internal revenue tax on intoxicants. From that time his books are doubtless substantially accurate except for the moonshine and other illicit tanglefoot. His troubles with moonshine date back to the "Whiskey Rebellion" in 1794.

The first official record shows that in 1840 the per capita consumption of liquors of all kinds was 4.17 gallons per year. The next twenty years registered an increase of 2.25, an average increase of about one-tenth of a gallon a year. The sharp upward swing began immediately after the Civil War.

This startling increase aroused the temperance forces to action, and total abstinence and prohibition organizations sprang up and flourished in unprecedented numbers and strength. The Women's Crusades in Ohio fanned the zeal of the women, and the W. C. T. U was born, and soon grew to be the largest organization of women in the nation; the prohibition party took the field actively and "Maine Law Leagues" were formed in many states. Great temperance demonstrations were staged.

This tide of agitation reduced the consumption and held it below 9 gallons per capita for six years, when the national thirst began to assert itself. In 1880 the record stood at 10.08 gallons per capita; by 1890 it reached 15.43, or an increase of more than 50 per cent. A tidal wave of prohibition swept the nation, and carried a number of states and hundreds of smaller units dry under various forms of prohibition, and the upward trend was abruptly checked so that the decade ending with 1900 registered only 17.73 gallons per capita, or a gain of less than 15 per cent as compared with a 50 per cent gain the preceding decade.

The wets, then as now, claimed that prohibition was an invasion of personal liberty, that it destroyed true temperance, that it could not be enforced, and that the people had revolted against it. All of the states which had adopted prohibition except Maine, Kansas, and North Dakota, returned to regulation, with the result that the consumption of alcoholic drinks skyrocketed to 2.81 in 1911—the highest point in the nation's history. The evils of drinking and drunkenness multiplied. And that saturnale spelled the doom of legalized beverage alcohol.

Disgusted and disillusioned, the states and increasing numbers of towns, cities and counties made a rush for the war wagon. Georgia and Oklahoma started the scramble in 1907, followed by Mississippi and North Carolina in 1908, Tennessee 22 in 1909 and West Virginia in 1912. Then came five states—Arizona, Oregon, Colorado, Washington and Virginia—in 1914; five more—Iowa, Idaho, Alabama, Arkansas and South Carolina—in 1915; four more—Montana, South Dakota, Michigan and Nebraska—in 1916.

And we were not in the war yet! Those who blame prohibition on the war remind one of the clown who when he got a flea in his eye pounded the elephant! The tide of sentiment for the state-wide prohibition broke in 1907—ten years before we entered the war.

In 1917 Indiana, Utah, New Hampshire, and New Mexico abandoned regulation. In 1918 five more states clambered on the wagon, namely: Texas, Ohio, Wyoming, Florida and Nevada, followed the next year by Kentucky, bringing the total of dry states up to 33, or more than two out of every three of the states in the nation. And then, in 1920 came national prohibition, ratified by all of the states excepting Rhode Island and Connecticut.

By 1916, the year before we entered the war, consumption had fallen off to 19.61 gallons per capita, and in 1919 it fell to 9.28, while in 1920, the first year under national prohibition, the record dropped to 2.84.

Prohibition came because regulation did not regulate! Experience had proven that it could not be enforced.

The apostle affectionately enjoins us to work our salvation out, not in. And the reason he gives why we should work it out with fear and trembling is that it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. If it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do, what have we to do but to cease trying to work in ourselves altogether, and trust God to do it for us?—W. E. Boardman.

A NEED OF THE PRESENT DAY CHURCH

What the Twentieth Century Church needs is a great, positive conviction and not negations. A genuine revival will not come in the modern Church until we possess the same overwhelming, dominant convictions about Jesus Christ which possessed the souls of the first Christians. The missionary enterprise of the Church, whose nerve has been cut by the denials and negations of a skeptical yet influential minority, will not regain its power until our souls are possessed with the conviction of the first Christians, that Jesus Christ and his gospel are indispensable to the salvation of the world.—Christian Evangelist.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

VITALIZING LIFE—EVANGELISM

"Vitalizing Life—Evangelism" will be the central theme of the fourteenth annual Ohio Pastors' Convention, sponsored by the Ohio Council of Churches, in Columbus, January 30 to February 2, 1933.

Date, place and theme of the convention were determined at a meeting of the executive committee in Columbus, February 16.

Rev. Isaac E. Miller, Methodist Episcopal district superintendent, Columbus, is convention chairman, chosen at the recent Cleveland session. The Cleveland convention was the first session of the body ever held outside Columbus.

Recognizing evangelism as the fundamental, all-inclusive task of the church, the executive committee made plans to relate all reports and discussions to that general subject. Specific sub-topics to be assigned for study and report by committees will include: Personal evangelism, industrial goodwill, international goodwill, interracial goodwill, youth, comity, church music, consolidated churches, motion pictures and the theater, educational evangelism, evangelism and the home, law enforcement, stewardship, radio, press and relief work.

Exact phrasing of these sub-topics and appointment of committees to consider them were deferred until a later meeting, after Easter.

BAPTISTS REPORT DROP IN MISSION RECEIPTS

The board of missionary cooperation of the Northern Baptist convention summarizes the financial situation of Baptist missions as follows: The total unified budget for the fiscal year 1931-2 is $5,100,000. Of this total there should have been received by December 31, 1931, eight-twelfths, or $3,400,000. The actual receipts to that date were $2,232,597, or $1,167,403 less than budget requirements.—The Christian Century.

CONGREGATIONALIST MISSION RECEIPTS SUFFER 16 PER CENT DECREASE

At the January meeting of the Congregational commission on missions, in New York city, figures for 1931 were revealed indicating that gifts from churches and individuals to the whole apportionment for home boards, the American board and the state conferences, had decreased $458,000 below 1930, the largest drop recorded in many years, and representing a 16 per cent loss. Of this amount, the American board's decrease was $169,000; since the board had reported a loss from these sources up to September 1 of $70,000, the further loss in four months from these living donors has been $99,000. The leaders predict that the present year may bring an equally difficult problem, or worse. Every board has cut its budget severely, both at home and abroad, and these new figures, it is said, will compel a further examination of every item of expenditure. An emergency fund is being raised by the American board, which has already reached about $30,000. An "emergency dollar plan" has been submitted to all the churches.—The Christian Century.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR

The quality of our citizenship is supremely tested in times of crisis. During the past few weeks the situation in the Far East has been so menacing to the peace of the world that it laid a particularly heavy responsibility upon all good men and women everywhere to pray and work for the cessation of hostilities and a reasonable solution of the difficult problems involved. It is pre-eminently a time for calmness, sanity and patience; it is emphatically not the time for wild and whirling words, offensive epithets and hasty proposals based upon insufficient information or some form of prejudice.

It is probably inevitable that the occasion should be used by some folks to beat the tom-toms, to stress the importance of arming to the hilt, and to insinuate that all those who do not believe largely increased military expenditures to be the best way of promoting peace are simply lacking in patriotism and showing a yellow streak in time of danger. There remain among us all too many who continue to believe in the ancient rule of "the fist and the claw." Whatever some Congressmen or militant ladies in so-called "patriotic organizations" may think or say about the peril of an invasion of America, it is our conviction, as it was Abraham Lincoln's, that no foreign nation can begin to do as much damage to our country as may possibly be done by some of our own people. And the most dangerous people are those who think war, talk war and plan for war.

President Butler puts it succinctly when he says, "The question for every citizen of whatever land who claims to be civilized, is 'Am I making myself competent to understand this changing world? And if so, am I putting my power, my brain, my character into this work so that my nation may be in the front rank in furthering the new order?'" The sort of citizen to which Dr. Butler refers will not be found sneering cynically at the Geneva Disarmament Conference, but sincerely hoping and praying for its success. If it should fail, civilization will be set back for decades, perhaps for centuries. Indeed, the failure of this Conference might easily mean a world conflagration.

Alas, the Washington observance this month is likely to be used by many for no higher purpose than to quote the advice, "Beware of entangling alliances," which was given by a wise man to an infant republic, but which under present conditions has become utterly impracticable. As a matter of fact the world is growing smaller and smaller and the isolationist attitude has become pathetic. We in this country will either rise with the whole world as it struggles for a better life, or we will go down in the wreck with the rest of it.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Washing the Disciples' Feet

low, to copy, to pattern after. Then he did the feet washing service to show us how we should do.

3. What did Jesus say to those to whom he had done this thing? Hear him, for in speaking to the disciples gathered in that upper room, he is speaking to his disciples of every age and clime. And he was never more specific and definite. Concerning no other teaching may we be more certain about what he says to us.

a. You ought, you are duty bound, to wash one another's feet (14). Could anything be more definitely enjoined upon a people than this upon the church?

b. You should do as I have done to you (15). There very definitely are we admonished to follow his example. How can we escape the responsibility?

c. Don't become too proud to obey. If not in so many words, yet very definitely in meaning, he says that very thing. "The servant is not greater than his Lord" (16), nor the messenger greater than the one sending him. This is a warning against change or modification of the charge.

d. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (17). Not only is the obligation very strongly and inescapably laid upon us, but blessing is pronounced upon those who really do it. That is the greatest reason of all for the practice of the ordinance of feet washing. If the duty were not so definitely and forcefully set before the church, it could not afford to miss the blessing that comes from the faithful and sincere observance of this rite.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Genesis

Genesis is the prelude to God's great symphony of revelation. The Bible certainly is the masterpiece of all harmony, with major and minor chords perfectly blended, lacking nothing, superbly grand, and spiritually entrancing.

The very word "Genesis" means "beginning." The book itself introduces us to the greatest mysteries of all time and to all the important subjects of creation and of faith. God is set forth as the Creator of the universe; the creational procedure is revealed; the Edenic scenes are portrayed; and the patriarchal age is introduced and completed. Creation, the cosmos, man, sin, Satan, society, races and redemption—these are the cardinal topics and beginnings of this marvelous volume. Fundamental, not final, treatment and consideration are given to them.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK.

1. Author. Moses, "the most august character of antiquity."
2. When Written. Supposedly around 1500 B. C.
3. To Whom Addressed. To all mankind. None spared.
4. Occasion. The demand for the preservation of Divine history.
5. Authenticity. Genesis is the only authentic account of beginnings; others are decidedly inferior and untrustworthy in many particulars. It is the ORIGINAL account.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK. (CLASSIC).

1. Generation or Advent. Gen. 1-2.
2. Degeneration or Descent. Gen. 3-11.
3. Regeneration or Ascent. Gen. 12-50.

The Generations of

1. The heavens and the earth. Gen. 2:4ff.
2. Of Adam. Gen. 5:1ff.
3. Of Noah. Gen. 6:9ff.
4. Of the Sons of Noah. Gen. 10:1ff.
5. Of Shem. Gen. 11:10ff.
6. Of Terah. 11:27ff.
7. Of Ishmael. 25:12ff.
8. Of Isaac. 25:19ff.
9. Of Esau. 36:1ff.
10. Of Jacob. 37:2ff.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK.

1. Redemption from sin through faith in God.

IV. THE CHARACTERS OF THE BOOK.

1. Language. Lofty Hebrew.
2. Style. Classical and Patriarchal.
3. Key Word. Generation.
4. Key Verses. Gen. 1:1; 2:4.
5. Key Chapters. Gen. 1, 2, and 12.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK.

1. The sins of individuals, of the family, of society, and of the nation are best conquered and forgiven by trusting in Jehovah for deliverance and freedom.
2. Genesis denies atheism, polytheism, materialism, pantheism, fatalism, agnosticism, and all other kindred isms.
3. Genesis, more than modern science or anything else, has abolished mythology throughout the entire civilized world. For additional proof, re-read Paul's famous address on Mar's Hill. Acts 17.
4. The greatest facts of all time were not merely discovered or even evolved, but they were REVEALED.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK.

Genesis 3:15 evinces the fact that Christ will be the seed of the woman who will bruise Satan's head; and unto Christ the Seed of Abraham—the Jews—will gather, together with all mankind. Gen. 49:10.

Typical and dispensational teachings abound in Genesis and he who would understand the Scriptures in their entirety must not neglect these aspects of the truth. 1 Cor. 15:45.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK.

I. Doctrinal and Practical.

1. God is the Creator and sustainer of the universe.
2. All life is the direct result of his creative power.
3. Man is created by the Triune God. "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." God, the Father ordered it, the Son witnessed it, and the Spirit did it.
4. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph are a patriarchal quartette of immediate relatives, neither better nor worse than the Levi's, Hiram's, Joe's and Harry's of our own families. They lived under law, while we live under Grace. We ought to be and do better than they, but do we?
5. Man is never himself until he finds himself in God.
6. Faith is the only basis upon which God can establish his will in man.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Heb. 12:2, "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

Moffatt says it this way: "Our eyes fixed upon Jesus as the pioneer and the perfection of faith—upon Jesus who, in order to reach his own appointed joy, steadily endured the cross, thinking nothing of its shame, and is now seated at the right hand of the throne of God."

I have set myself to the task of inquiring, what was that joy? For, in the mind of Jesus, joy—"the joy that was set before him" was a powerful factor in enabling him to "despise the shame" of the cross. Jesus did not need prayer to make him good; yet prayer, much prayed, was a regular habit. How he urged it upon his followers. He did not need the waters of baptism, and yet he began his public life with that rite and ended it in giving the great commission to his followers, as Mark records it in this form: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:16). He did not need to endure the cross to be happy, but "for the joy set before him," he despised the shame. What was that joy? Not the privilege of being in heaven, for he came from there to hang upon it. IT MUST HAVE BEEN to play his part so well that others would desire to be there.

We know from what he said to the world that he was deeply moved at our condition as lost men and women. And LOST is the word chosen by our Lord to express it. Then he saw WHAT WE MIGHT BECOME IF SAVED. I think this vision was the joy set before him. This fact ought to help us make more of our holy religion. All heaven knows we make so little of our religion. I suppose it is because it means so little to us. To be redeemed and to be forever with our Lord means so much to him. It thrilled him with joy. It made him despise a degraded death on the cross. Oh, the base ingratitude of a depraved soul in an exhibition of such little concern! How we ought to hang our heads in shame!

Some one has said, "Among all created beings in the universe, God has chosen to lift redeemed man up to the very highest place." And beyond all description of a wild and exaggerated statement this is, if not true. If it is true, then every intelligent person ought to know it, and BE GRIPPED AND HELD as by a mighty vise by it. Think of it! Man (redeemed) exalted to the very highest place at the right hand of God. Here are several important particulars in which souls will have the advantage of the highest angels.

1. They are to be the recognized bride of the King of kings. "Bride"! And what a figure our Lord has chosen. Chaste; beautiful; loyal to her husband. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (Rev. 19:7, 8).

2. They are counted as brothers and sisters of Jesus. What exalted family ties! "For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother" (Mark 3:35).

3. They are to have bodies like his glorious body. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body" (1 Cor. 15:44). "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:20, 21). I believe all "for the joy set before him."

4. They will share with him his infinite wealth. Yes, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." They Don't now. "Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ" (Gal. 4:7). Also Rom. 8:17.

5. They will share with him his royalty, and reign with him. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne" (Rev. 3:21). For shame, we do not care more.

There is no limit to what a Christian can do if he makes full use of the possibilities of prayer.

The Light that Can Not Be Hid

By William Frederick Bigelow

As you know who have the patience to follow the Editor through the expressions of his personal opinions on this page, it has been his custom to quote from time to time the opinions of others, particularly when those opinions, not having in them the divergence from the usual that makes news, were passed by, by the gleaners in the rather arid fields of public addresses. If one rises up in a sedate meeting and declares rather convincingly that God is a back number, we all hear about it. If an educator advises a group of college seniors to be snobs, it is known all over the land by next day noon. If a new and youthful college president says that "the purpose of higher education is to unsettle the minds of young men, . . . not to teach them facts, theories, or laws," he is quoted everywhere. But if the speaker concerns himself with reiterating the truths that the race has learned by experience, with pointing out paths that a multitude has followed with both zest and daring, with recommending a goal that, though achieved a thousand times, is always an adventure in winning—only those who heard him know anything about it. And so, as last August we gave you a college president's message to his senior class, we are dipping into the Baccalaureate sermon by Chancellor Clark, of the American University for the following paragraphs:

"There seems to be a movement on in the nature of a passive resistance to knowledge. I have a conviction that with the radio, movie, movie-tone, and television, our task as educators is made the more difficult and that we, too, have new frontiers and new undiscovered continents before us. With some people there is always some reason why they can not make good. It is the conditions that surround them, or the students assigned to them, or the administrator's relationship to them, if they do not make their department what it ought to become. The pity of it is that too many of these are intellectual peacocks strutting about showing their colorful learning when they could better take off their adornments and get down to some real constructive, hard work. It is a pity to know so much that it doesn't lend itself to imparting to others. Some have little to contribute other than puerile criticism of those who are able to do things. Of all the great intellectuals you have known, undoubtedly they have been modest men and women. In humility and hard work, we are to learn our lesson and make a place for ourselves.

"This, young ladies and gentlemen, is now your task. The world is not against you, but tremendously with you and for you, if you have anything to contribute. You are to be rugged, hardy frontiersmen, out on the ranges of the present endeavor. The people who furnish the money for your living did not get it by self-pity, or self-excuse, but generally under handicaps, and certainly with great diligence. They expect as much of you.

"Youth is out on the frontiers, moving for a new and better day. They are willing to make sacrifices and put forth an effort that peace may be perfected in a world of progress. The college and university does not make our youth any less American in outlook and purpose. It does help them to see the problems of our national life, and they are made aware of conditions throughout the nations. The frontiers of international relations zigzag across the world. It is all uncharted. Every living man and woman of us is a frontiersman. The heroism in the fathers who waged ceaseless contest with the necessity of our country's development, must now be matched by an equal heroism on the part of our sons and daughters, to protect and maintain that which was secured at such great cost.

"I must not let this occasion pass until I have reminded ourselves that in the spiritual realm the frontiers are further out in front of us than in any other realm. We may have attained a high state of spirituality. It is to be hoped that we have. Who is the man, and where is he, who feels comfortable in the present spiritual experiences of men? If ever there were frontiers for youth it is in the spiritual realm of the present. The largest possible contribution for the future is in the hands of sincere, devoted and effective men and women who know how to be religious and not fanatical; who know how to be spiritual and not spoiled in statement; who know how to live a life that somebody else would love to parallel.

"A specialist in business recently sent out a message to the business world saying, 'The need of the hour is not more factories or materials, not more railroads or steamships, not more armies or navies, but rather, more education based on the plain teachings of Jesus.'

"Ministers, missionaries, teachers, statesmen, men of business and profession, all have a task to match their lives by the Man of Galilee, and make new discoveries, and reach new heights, and have new experiences out on the plains that slope toward God by the way of Olivet and Calvary. Religion is still propagated by prejudice; few there are who can be found out on the frontiers of spiritual attainment where they can see Jesus only against their future sky. Join your life with him. I do not know where it will lead you, and you need not care, if you go with him.

"I was with five hundred, from the ends of the earth, who came to reckon with their differences in religion. To their great surprise, their differences were not so marked as their agreements. Each group was making its way across the world, feeling it was quite alone, and here they discovered, at the turn of the way, that they had found travelers going in their direction. Let us join this new company, with our faces to the future, our vision become clearer, and the certainties of life assured. Have such a clear vision of him set against the skyline of your future that you may not perish from the earth, but live with the Everlasting."—Good Housekeeping.

The New Youth's Quarterly

The Youth Has Peculiar Problems

Nobody believes that all the noise about youth is all "hokey", as the youth might express it. The youth of our day has new problems and new temptations. That goes without saying. That they need not fail any more than the youth of other days also goes without saying. They need not. But if some one, not so much older than themselves has met these problems and with a much larger experience and acknowledged ability can tell them how these problems come and how their evil effects can be avoided, the Quarterly will do its work. It will have a beautiful cover which can not appear on future issues without a new influx of orders.

So, my brethren, I ask you to scan, more than that, to scrutinize this new product to see if you can see in it what I see. If you do, you will give us orders for other groups of your school and for those classes which are now using literature that is less Brethren and perhaps, no better from any viewpoint.

CHARLES A. BAME,
Editor S. S. Literature.

There is a new Youth's Quarterly coming off the press and it will soon be in the hands of most of our Sunday School Superintendents. We have not been selling enough of this good Sunday school help. Whatever may be said of some of the helps we produce for the younger people of the Sunday schools, we are ready to defend to the limit, the helps we have been offering for the youth of ages, 12 to 18. Professor Stuckey's work was entirely satisfactory and never a word of criticism was offered while he was writing the lessons. Necessity has made it impossible for him to continue and another writer has been secured.

The product of this new writer is now coming to our people with the hope that it will be received with the same wish that the editor has for it—that it will be a fine help to the pupils.

More than that, the editor believes that more of our schools should seriously investigate this output as related to the larger use of Brethren products. We still insist that we must find a way for a larger use of Brethren outputs. But it would seem that all our people had heard that plenty of times. So, to the next item.

That item is that this new Brethren Youths' Quarterly is different. The name of the author will not appear in the first issue. It was written at the suggestion of the editor with the view of meeting the problems, of youth.

"There is no splendor in the easy, indulgent way," says Robert E. Speer. "The splendor lies in finding the hard thing to be achieved, and reveling in it." Why do men attempt the difficult, try to reach the summit of Mount Everest, to pierce to the heart of Mongolia and enter the forbidden city, or to brave the rigors of the frigid zone to find the North Pole? There is no splendor in the easy way. Yet in moral issues how often we take the path of least resistance! We refuse service and resign because the work of the Lord is difficult, whereas we ought to revel in it.

(Lesson for March 20)

Lesson Text: John 19:17-22, 25-30; Golden Text: 1 Cor. 15:3

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Jesus Betrayed. John 18:1-11

The wounds of Jesus, in the words of Zechariah, were inflicted in the house of his friends. He was betrayed by one who had been most intimately associated with him, under the influence of his love and teaching throughout his ministry; and the betrayal was accomplished in one of the most intimate spots of their friendship, in the Garden of Gethsemane. The high courage of Jesus is the more apparent in contrast with the cowardice and treachery of Judas and his band; but remember that the courage of Jesus was due to the season of agonizing prayer and communion with the Father. How we all need such communion! And let us not forget that it is still quite possible for us to betray him today.

TUESDAY

Jesus Denied. John 18:15-27

Again it was one of Jesus' most intimate friends, one who had but lately declared that though all others forsook him he would remain true, who wounded him. As we look back now it is easy to see that Peter failed because he placed his trust in his own weak self rather than in God; what may not be so easy for us to see is that so frequently we do the same thing! We are frequently asked to profit by Peter's example and not keep company with the wrong crowd; we should not companion with the unrighteous, but if we rely upon God for strength he will keep us true and firm regardless of surroundings or circumstances. Let us rest in the Lord.

WEDNESDAY

Jesus Tried. John 18:28-40

What tragic travesty in the trial of the Son of God, by whom and for whom all things were created, by a few degenerate beings he had himself brought into existence! Truly, as Jesus said, Pilate could have no power over him at all except it were given him from above. But Jesus was delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. And remember, it was for us!

THURSDAY

Jesus Condemned. John 19:4-16

Note well the accusation of the Jews: they were determined to bring about his death because he made himself the Son of God (v. 7). Pilate reminds us of our present-day politicians who know full well their duty but lack the moral courage to perform it. And perhaps we ourselves are not so different from Pilate and the politicians! God help us to see ourselves as thou seest us! Jesus stood condemned before the judgment seat of Pilate, but one day we all, with Pilate and the Jews, shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ. How different things will seem then. God help us to live in readiness for that day!

FRIDAY

Jesus Crucified. John 19:17-30

The story is told in the scripture with the utmost simplicity, and we can add nothing. We know that his physical suffering must have been intense, yet it must have been as nothing compared to the load of sin which bore him down. He had known no sin, and from the beginning had enjoyed unbroken fellowship with the Father, yet now he was accursed (Gal. 3:13). How great must have been his love for his people!

Jesus Buried. John 19:31-42

Jesus, the Son of God, was buried! How his enemies gloated and mocked; how his friends must have grieved and despaired! Tenderly a few of his timid disciples laid away his body, no doubt with many a sigh for their lost hopes. We can hardly conceive of it yet Jesus would not have been a perfect Savior, tempted and tried in all points like as we are, unless he had tasted of death. Let us praise God that we have a perfect Savior!

SUNDAY

Christ Died for Us. Rom. 5:1-8

The hearts of even the most calloused are somehow strangely stirred as they read of the sufferings of Jesus; how much more must our hearts be stirred as we realize it was for us! In the words of the Golden Text, "Christ died for our sins," and was made a curse for us, even while we were yet sinners. Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost (Luke 19:10), and on the cross he said: "It is finished!" How we ought to love and serve him! And what does it matter even if we are called upon to suffer for him who loved us so?

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

8.—"Right vs. Rights"

The Golden Rule is not a "bill of rights." Rather does it represent the will to do right. In all the teaching of Christ the word "rights" finds no place; but the word "right" or "righteousness" occurs frequently. True, no man ever did so much as Jesus to secure the rights of every member of the human race. Woman's rights, children's rights, the rights of servants and masters, the rights of the poor and the weak and the ignorant all have found an increasingly clear recognition and respect with the spread of the Gospel. Yet this has come about by the persistent inculcation of the principle of right and the equally persistent restraining of the spirit which demands "my rights."

Today we hear a great deal about the rights of particular classes or individuals. In fact, the great mass of human society is divided, in every direction by cleavage planes of conflicting rights. The wars of the ages have been fought for the most part to secure the rights of nations or tribes or classes. And they are not few who consider it a perfectly Christian ideal to maintain their rights. Christian preachers not seldom proclaim a Gospel of rights rather than of right. Not so did our Lord.

A man once came to Jesus with the appeal, "Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me." In other words, Master, help me to secure my rights. What a reasonable request! Here was a grand opening for practical work along the line of social reform. The average disciple of the present day would quit preaching the Gospel in a moment for a chance like that, and announce a series of discourses on "The Equalization of Wealth." Then he would neglect the prayer meeting to gather statistics of like injustice and form communistic clubs. And finally he would turn the church over to other hands that he might be free to become the leader of some great "movement." What did Jesus do? He preached the man a most impressive sermon on the folly of covetousness, and showed him the infinite superiority of right over rights.

Christian to maintain one's rights? Why, it isn't even moral! Rights is a social word, a term of economic science. Fancy the Savior demanding his rights! He never asked for them, and never received them. And he is the absolute pattern for the disciple. Rights is a counterfeit coin that is displacing the genuine metal of right in many hearts. The man who asks, "What would Jesus do?" will never be heard whining about his rights. He won't have time to think of rights; for he will be wholly absorbed with righteousness.

See how this counterfeit "rights" has been made. The principle of right is founded upon a sense of indebtedness. Duty is but another form of the word debt. Every true man says with Paul, "I am a debtor," and the great effort of his life is to discharge his debt to God, to the world and to himself. The selfish man seizes upon this thought of indebtedness and reverses it. He says, "The world owes me this or that," and in this mold he shapes the idea of rights.

Right is the telescope through which we clearly discern the rights of others. But let us beware how we reverse the telescope; for doing that our fellowmen seem exceedingly remote and their interests correspondingly dim. With the coin of right every debt of rights will be paid in full. But when the counterfeit of rights steals into circulation, debts increase; for "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he posseseth."

A Challenging Comparison

GROWTH OF A BAPTIST MISSION IN CHINA

By Addie Estelle Cox

How I wish that each of you might spend at least a day with us in this country field around Kaifeng, Honan, China, and see for yourself what marvelous opportunities the Master is giving us! Let me tell you what I saw when first coming to the field and what I witnessed a few weeks ago in the same spot. The comparison will doubtless reveal to you the vital importance of reaping without delay the harvest that is so ripe and ready.

Missionary H. M. Harris had come to the town of Chang Shih and preached salvation through faith in Jesus Christ. The presence of a foreigner produced much interest, for rarely if ever had one with fair skin and blue eyes been seen in this section. As Dr. Harris stood on the street and preached by the light of a lantern tied against the door of a nearby building, a great crowd gathered about him. "Listen! he speaks Chinese," said one. "Why, we understand everything he says!" exclaimed another. "He that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing bringing his sheaves with him." Dr. Harris did not weep that I know of, but he did get so cold in the little Chinese room with no heat and insufficient bedding that he was exceedingly uncomfortable. "I almost froze," he said, in speaking of the experience. He counted not health nor life precious in striving with his might to give the gospel to multitudes who never before had heard the wonderful words of life. Later he came with a tent and held another meeting. The sowing was thoroughly done and soon the sheaves appeared. Before long there were forty or fifty believers and a wide-awake evangelist and his wife were sent to the place. At the time of my arrival Sunday worship was being held in a little chapel which had been used for a store and opened on the street. The noise of passing wagons and squeaking wheelbarrows resounded against the dark dingy, smoke-stained walls. There were two few seats and most of the men had to stand. The women sat on little, backless benches outside the door opening on the inner court. The babies cried and the newcomers talked in loud tones, but the preacher went bravely on with his sermon in spite of all the disturbance.

That was ten years ago. Recently during one of our quarterly meetings Rev. W. W. Lawton of Kaifeng gave the main address of the morning. The large, commodious church building which Dr. Harris erected several years ago was almost filled with Christian men, women and young people. They maintained excellent order and listened eagerly to the splendid message of Pastor Lawton. His presence was deeply appreciated, for we had long been looking forward to his coming. In June M'ss Walker came out and gave a forceful message on tithing. There were about 300 in the audience that day and since the meeting a number have begun to tithe, so we have heard.

But do not imagine that all these earnest Christians are from the one town of Chang Shih. By no means. They came from 50 or 60 towns and villages around. In many cases only one in a family has trusted Jesus for salvation, the others clinging still to the idols of paper and clay. How anxious they are for their relatives and friends to hear and believe! Some of them are being persecuted for Christ's sake. One little woman who formerly had to slip away without her husband's knowledge of it when she went to church, and had to stand a cursing or beating upon her return, has at last proved to him the reality of Jesus' power to cleanse and save. He was with her at one of our prayer meetings a few days ago and it was very gratifying to see him kneel reverently as we did during the closing prayer. Although his hair is gray, he has assumed the attitude of a little child in learning verses of Scripture, songs and prayers. He used to absent himself during our visits to the home, but now he is friendliness and cordiality personified and delights to do everything possible for our comfort and pleasure. But sad to say, we are not able to get to all the homes.

Oh, for laborers enough to respond to such requests as these! "Please come soon to our village. None of my people have yet heard the gospel." "When can you come to our home? I hope it will be soon for I want them to hear and believe on the Lord." Please pray that reinforcements may be sent

PRAY—GIVE—GO

*Three things the Master hath to do
And we who serve Him here below,
And long to see His kingdom come
May pray or give or go.*

*He needs them all—the open hand,
The willing feet, the praying heart.
To work together and to weave
A three-fold cord that shall not part.*

*Nor shall the giver count his gift
As greater than the worker's deed,
Nor he in turn his service boast
Above the prayers that voice the need.*

*Not all can go: not all can give,
To speed the message on its way.
But young or old, or rich or poor,
Or strong, or weak, we all can pray.*

*Pray that the gold filled hands may give,
To arm the others for the fray;
That those who hear the call may go,
And pray that other hearts may pray.*

LULL'S MISSION AND MESSAGE

"There is no more heroic figure in the history of Christendom than that of Raymond Lull, the first and perhaps the greatest, missionary to Mohammedans. Though much less generally known, he deserves to be ranked with Francis of Assisi, who preceded him by a few years, who anticipated him in his desire to preach Christ to the Moslems, but who, in view of the revival work done in Europe by his preaching friars, may rather be regarded as the father of itinerant home missions. Raymond Lull loved and lived; and while he now lives for ever in the presence of the Lord he loved, his example lives on earth for missionaries in every age." —Eugene Stock, "History of the Church Missionary Society," Vol. 1, p. 13.

"It is my belief, Oh, Christ, that the conquest of the Holy Land should be attempted in no other way than as thou and thy apostles undertook to accomplish it—by love, by prayer, by tears, and the offering up of our own lives."

"Lord of Heaven, Father of all times, when thou didst send thy Son to take upon him human nature, he and his apostles lived in outward peace with Jews, Pharisees, and other men; never by outward violence did they capture or slay any of the unbelievers, or those who persecuted them. This outward peace they used to bring the erring to the knowledge of the truth. So, after thy example, should Christians conduct themselves toward the Saracens."—The Moslem World.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION

We have always had a peculiar regard for the China Inland Mission. We rejoiced to hear recently that in these hard times none of its force has had to be withdrawn. We believe the explanation will be found in certain principles which have been consistently adhered to. (1) There has been unflinching devotion to spreading the gospel of Christ the Divine Redeemer. No outside enterprise has put a shadow on that. (2) Only soundly orthodox and thoroughly devoted missionaries are sent out. As we understand, there is no stipulation as to salary, but the missionaries are provided for. (3) Complete dependence upon God for means of support. Money is never asked for, though the story is told freely. There are no "drives," no special methods, but unflinching sufficient money has come. (4) Expenses here at home are kept at lowest level. There is no complicated organization, no elaborate offices, no high-priced executives, and no debt for money borrowed at any time. The whole plan appears to us as most like the evangelizing in the early days of the Church than of any effort we know. We can all learn to our profit to depend more on the Lord and less on human persons and methods. Our own missionary enterprises will languish more and more until we take lessons from this great enterprise of faith.—The Presbyterian.

The advantage of leisure is mainly that we have the power of choosing our own work; not certainly that it confers any privilege of idleness.—Sir John Lubbock.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apollite
was a great correspondent

WAYNESBORO, PENNSYLVANIA

Others have been reporting the activities of the work of the church here from time to time, and this we were pleased to have them do, but it is perhaps the pastor's turn. The past year has been one blessed of the Lord, rich in Christian experiences and fruitful in results. There has been a marked increase in numbers. More people than formerly, have been coming under the ministries of the church. Growth has been steady and sustained. Attendance at the preaching services has increased considerably, a spirit of reverence and worship pervades each service. The average attendance at the worship services during the year was 131. Thirty-five were added to the church with but few losses. Special days have been observed with emphasis upon the spiritual. The Christmas season was spent in an enjoyable and profitable manner. A pageant, setting forth the Christmas story, was creditably rendered to an audience which filled every available space. Quite frequently we find ourselves crowded for room.

The auxiliary life of the church is in a normal, healthy condition. The various organizations are officiated by consecrated, experienced leaders. A recent addition to the auxiliary group is a young men's missionary society. This is patterned after the S. M. M., and with us, solves the problem of a young men's organization. The membership is not large but the boys are determined to make this society a real factor in the life of the church. Our young women, too, are deserving of praise. We thank the Lord for these young people and pray for wisdom in the direction of their lives. The W. M. S. recently put on two pageants and completed their mission study. These good women are indispensable. Two Christian Endeavor societies continue to offer opportunity for training, a goodly number are taking advantage. The Sunday school embraces all in its membership and interest. Much might be said in praise of officers and teachers, in fact all. The average attendance for the last year was 212. Some sixty had a perfect record for the year—these received recognition and awards. Brother John F. Locke of Woodstock, Virginia brought us recently, on three successive Wednesday evenings, his Bible pictures of the Holy Land. These lectures were well received by large audiences. Brother Locke should be heard in this series of lectures by our churches. These lectures are entertaining but especially are highly instructive.

Beginning January the third and continuing for a period of three weeks, ten of the churches of our city cooperated in a union evangelistic campaign. Services the first week were held in the Methodist church, but attendance was such that it was found necessary to open the Church of the Brethren. At these two places services were held simultaneously for the remainder of the time. The preaching was done by the pastors, each taking his turn. A large chorus at each church, led by one of the pastors in turn, was an outstanding feature. Very definite preparatory work had been done. A religious survey was conducted by the Men's Federation in December. This located the unsaved and gave direction in personal work. A group of more than fifty visited and dealt personally with those who knew not Christ. Scores of cottage prayer meetings were held. It is difficult to take a measure of results. Attendance was good. The average attendance for each evening over the period of three weeks, was estimated to have been about a thousand. The number of public confessions was not what we had hoped for, but many have or will unite with the churches. The people of the various churches with their pastors worked together with a unanimity of spirit, presenting a united front to the forces of evil. The city was much blessed.

Maurertown, Virginia

During the month of November three weeks were spent with the Brethren here. This meeting has been reported by the pastor, Brother E. L. Miller. I thought of this place as sacred ground, having been made so by the labors of Elder E. B. Shaver and others of blessed memory whom it was my privilege to know. It was under the preaching of Elder Shaver that I first found my Lord. Maurertown is one of our earliest congregations. We have here a very substantial people. I was well received by these good folks, and shall ever remember with pleasure their kindness and hospitality. Entertainment was in the homes of three different families—the Shavers and Beydlers. These were real homes in which everything was done for my comfort. Piloted by the pastor the way was found into the hospitality and generous provision of a number of other homes. The occasion offered an opportunity to see much of the beauty and visit scenes of interest in the Shenandoah valley.

But best of all was the Christian fellowship. The evangelist was soon made to feel that he was among God's people. These people did more than attend services; they backed the effort with their prayers and personal interest. This fine spirit of cooperation and ready service made possible the results. The Lord will abundantly bless and reward.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

LYDIA, MARYLAND

We will try to give a brief report of the work in the church at St. James. While it might appear to us sometimes that there has been little accomplished, yet we know that God has blessed us as a church, and as individuals also.

The work of the church moves along slowly, but surely. The Sunday school is growing in numbers and interest. Our efficient superintendent and teachers are a very faithful group. At Christmas time there was a program given that showed much talent and preparation. There was also a White Gift offering taken. Our young folks also sang Christmas carols.

There has been an increase in the church service. After the union meetings that were held out doors last summer we tried to have some special effort each Sunday evening. Sometimes a Sunday school class had charge of all the devotional part of the service. In fact each class had finally taken its turn. One evening the Captain of the Salvation Army in Hagerstown and his three daughters came bringing with them their musical instruments, giving us a very rare treat.

We also have here a very live group of Sisterhood girls. Five of their number attended Conference at Winona Lake last fall and came home much inspired, each one giving us some helpful message. This group of girls is glad to help whenever an opportunity affords.

The Woman's Missionary society is very much interested in their work. The monthly meetings are well attended, and the spiritual side of life is much stressed.

This church, as many others, has felt the so-called "depression," but the folks are standing nobly by the work, looking for brighter days, knowing that God never forsakes his own. We wanted an evangelistic meeting but did not know just how to manage, but God managed for us. He put it in Brother Coleman's heart to offer his service which was gladly accepted. Brother Coleman preached for two weeks, driving from his home in Hagerstown, about eight miles away, each evening. There were fourteen that made the great confession and were baptized.

We much appreciate the Hagerstown folks in permitting their pastor to help us. They came in groups several evenings, thus showing their goodwill and interest in the meeting. Many of the Hagerstown folks first learned to know their Savior in the St. James church.

The present pastor has been asked to stay another year. We pray that all of us, working together, being led by our Heavenly Father, we will be able to accomplish much good. May we be willing to be used in his service wherever he may lead.

MRS. W. S. BAKER.

REVIVAL AT JUNIATA, PENNSYLVANIA

Nearly two years ago, while I was working with the church at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, where Brother James Cook was pastor, Brother Earl C. Bowser, pastor of the Juniata Park Church of the Brethren, a suburb of Altoona, Pennsylvania, attended several of our meetings. At that time he invited us to hold a meeting for him at Juniata. The time seemed long delayed but now the meeting is history.

We found a church in which we felt at home from the start. A church that was used to hearing the truth, rejoiced in it, and was looking for Christ's return. From the start the attendance crowded the building. On the last night many stood around the walls and some were turned away.

There was a fine spirit of fellowship manifested by the ministers of the community, and their interest and frequent attendance lent much encouragement to us in the meetings. Members of other churches freely attended the meetings and shared with us in our prayer meetings as earnestly as Brethren did.

Twice there were bus loads of folks from our Martinsburg Church twenty-five miles away. It was a pleasure to meet these dear folks again. They brought with them the same fine joyous spirit which characterized the meetings we held among them.

The Brethren pastors in this field surely are alive to the vital message of the gospel and are preaching it fearlessly. They are headed for a great day of prosperity and spiritual power if our Lord tarries.

Talk about hospitality, these folks surely know how to extend it! My home was with the pastor, Brother Bowser and his splendid wife, and I shall not soon forget all the blessings I shared with them while there. Brother Bowser is a man who has had to struggle against odds from the start. Left an orphan when a mere boy, exposed to all the temptations of youth, yet he chose to serve Christ and preach the gospel. Few were the friends to help him in his struggle upward, and many were they who would have hindered. But God was with him, and is using him to do what many a man with greater opportunities has never done. God knoweth!

Fifty-four confessions were received during the meetings and more are being reported since the close of the revival. May they continue on. It is a fine field that has promise of real future and these folks with their leader will surely reap faithfully here.

The memories of fellowship are still lingering in my heart and I look forward to the day when I may meet with them all once more.

R. PAUL MILLER.

ELKHART, INDIANA

We have just closed one of the most successful revivals we have ever had—successful because of the concerted effort of our people.

Loyalty characterized the two weeks' program which was a source of inspiration and strength to go forward.

Our pastor, Brother Duker, was our evangelist. He preached in his usual forceful manner which left no doubt in the minds of his people as to their duty toward their God and fellowman. He is now serving the tenth year of his pastorate with us and this is his first revival. The splendid cooperation of his people enabled him to lead many through the "still small voice" to their Savior. He knew his field, understood his people, as a shepherd knows his sheep and is known of them. There were thirty-four accessions; twenty-six have been baptized. Of this number six were children, a number of young people and several who were heads of families—men and women who have been in our midst but had not united with the church.

Brother Harry Gilbert led the singing and had the full support of the choir. May this be the beginning of greater service for Brother Gilbert and his wife, who accompanied at the piano.

Our services were strengthened because of the large delegations from Goshen, Nappanee, South Bend, Ardmore, and also Osceola, also the Church of the Brethren, with their pastors.

We closed our services, having evidence that the Spirit does direct his work through those who are willing to be led. Great blessings have come to us through these meetings. May our victories keep us humble that we may be used of him—that his name may be glorified.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

ROANN, INDIANA

We are glad to report that the work here at Roann is moving along very well under the leadership of Rev. G. L. Maus and his faithful wife.

Our fall communion was well attended and it was indeed a reverent remembrance of Christ's love and death. The homecoming day was observed in October. Rev. Clark of South Bend brought the main address of the afternoon. Another interesting feature of the program was short talks by a number of older members of the church and visitors that at one time had lived in this vicinity.

Rev. G. L. Maus, pastor of the church, conducted the revival meeting which began on January 24 and continued two weeks. This was the pastor's fifth revival campaign at this place, but the messages brought were new and indeed spiritual. The attendance throughout the meeting was very good. The visible results of this meeting were six accessions by baptism. This field has been kept well gleaned. Most of the children and young people of the Sunday school are members of the church.

The song services were led by Mr. Zumbaugh of Tiosa and it was through the untiring efforts of Mrs. J. E. Clingaman and Mr. Ralph Sausaman that the choir chairs were filled each evening.

The different societies of the church are doing splendid work, but especially do we make mention of the Brotherhood of Paul and Timothy. This organization of boys number twenty-two. They have their meetings monthly and the boys take their turn in helping with the programs. Their patroness is Mrs. Lloyd Miller and she is assisted by Mr. Miller. Mrs. Miller is a real consecrated leader and understands how to lead these boys into fine Christian service. Pray that from this group of boys the future church will have some real leaders.

MRS. CLYDE RAGERS
Corresponding Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL QUALIFICATIONS OF A MINISTER

can quote from their own poets. When they hear me use a little philosophy, it will get their attention and command their respect." Paul got his audience together and began to reason things out and to add power to his message, he quoted from one of their own poets (Acts 17:28). The main result of his message was stolid indifference. Paul did, however, accomplish one thing. In other places when he had preached the gospel he was met with persecution but here, under this form of preaching, he was saved the trouble of dodging the stones which were the result of Satan fighting back. Happily, Paul saw his mistake before he reached Corinth and in later years he wrote a letter to Corinth something like this.

"I made a great mistake at Athens by using human reasoning and philosophy and I was unable to establish a church there but when I came to you, I came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom for I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified" (1 Cor. 2).

Power Through Obedience

The only way to command nature is to absolutely obey her. Electricity is a mighty power. Disregard its laws and it is useless; obey its laws and its mighty power leaps into the harness and serves man faithfully. It is thus with the power of God. Spiritual laws are just as real as physical laws. Obey God's method of ordaining a minister and his power will flow through the earthen vessel and make the minister a blessing to his people. Man often wants to get a power that he can use, but God is more interested in having the Power get the man.

Foolish Substitutes for Power

A man bought a great factory but the machinery would not move. Every wheel was in place, every belt was tight but there was no motion. An expert was called in to find the reason for the lack of power. Under his directions the whole factory was painted within and without with beautiful colors but still there was no motion.

Another expert was hired and under his direction a large orchestra was employed to furnish music to the machinery but still there was no motion. At great expense the owner tried scheme after scheme to get the desired results but all was in vain until a very wise man came to town. He looked the machinery over—everything was in perfect order. Then going into the boiler room he noticed that there was no fire in the furnaces. He built a fire and the steam gauge moved up; he pulled the throttle and the great wheel began to turn; he threw in the gears and soon the whole factory was a buzz of industry.

It is thus in our time. Our Lord left only ONE thing as the Power to move the machinery of his Church. A man is THOROUGHLY furnished unto all good works when he has the Word of God in his heart and depends upon the Holy Spirit for his power.

The Need of the Apostles

The apostles were certainly well equipped by their three years' learning at the feet of Jesus Christ himself. But even though men were dying every day without Christ, they were to wait until they would receive POWER through the Holy Spirit.

Timothy and John Mark were not required to waste several years in loading up on worldly wisdom that would be useless in their work.

Fallacy of Reason

Today we are informed that a minister should have more education than was required twenty-five years ago because he preach to college graduates and if he not quote philosophy, etc., he cannot them.

It is strange how men can use the power of their mind in worldly affairs but fail entirely when it comes to spiritual things. Truly it is as Christ said, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16:8). That is, the man of the world uses better judgment in his affairs than the Christian does in spiritual things.

Suppose a lawyer was to get sick and his wife would call the physician. "My husband is sick. Would you come immediately?"

A slight pause.

"What! You can't come! Why can you not come?"

"It would be impossible," says the physician "for me to do your husband any good. He is a lawyer and since I have never studied law, I cannot help him."

How foolish! we exclaim. That lawyer has a body that is no different from that of a farmer or the postmaster. If that physician knows the cures for the human body, what difference does it make who the man may be?

If this be true, then why should a true minister feel his inability to reach the college man? Doesn't the college man have a soul? And must he not be saved by the blood of the Lamb? If the minister is true to his calling he has the only cure for that sin sick soul whether he be a down-and-outer or an up-and-outer. There is no difference for all have sinned, and there is no difference for "he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

DID THE APOSTLE PAUL PREACH HUMAN PHILOSOPHY OR THE TRUTH OF GOD?

Is it necessary to say more? Some seem to be greatly disturbed because Paul was able to quote a Greek poet (28). But even pagan poets hit a ray of truth occasionally. If we are to discredit Paul here on this ground, we shall have to repudiate also Titus 1:12, for there Paul quotes a pagan prophet with approval. Would Brother Humber have us throw out the Book of Titus on this ground? That is the logic of his position. Certainly, the great Apostle, chosen of God, is a better judge of what is true than any uninspired writer.

Fourth, Brother Humber conveys the impression that the results of Paul's work at Athens amounted to little or nothing. He should read verses 32-34. "Some mocked"—there you have the opposition which Brother Humber insinuates Paul had escaped by compromising. Mockery is sometimes worse than stones. Others said to Paul, "We will hear thee again of this matter." They were interested. But best of all "Certain men clave unto him and believed." Among this number was actually one of the members of that world-famous court of the Areopagus, Dionysius. If Brother Humber were invited to preach to the American Philosophical Society, one wonders whether he could do any better than Paul whom he criticizes so severely. It is not easy to convert a philosopher. But they are just as worth saving as any bum in the streets.

It is probably true, though not certain, that Paul established no church at Athens. But even our best missionaries and preachers sometimes fail today in this respect.

His criticism of Paul's words recorded the 17th of Acts, Brother Humber introduces a highly dangerous principle. If Paul was wrong at Athens, perhaps he was wrong at Ephesus. Once open the door to make men the final judges of where Paul was speaking by inspiration and where he was not, you will not have much left in the end. This is precisely the principle of modernism and the subjective Biblical criticism.

Here are Paul's divine credentials of authority: God said "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Israel." (Acts 9:15). And Paul did not hesitate to defend his authority. Paul had his critics even in the church at Corinth, and this is what he writes to these critics:

"If any man thinketh himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord" (1 Cor. 14:37).

In conclusion, I wish to say that I believe that Brother Humber wants to be true to the Word of God. But mere good intentions will not keep our feet in the path of truth. During the late war there were instances of men who lost their direction in the smoke of battle, wandered into the enemies' trenches and fired against their own side. It looks to me as if Brother Humber, in his battle against educational requirements, has unwittingly wandered into the camp of modernistic criticism and has fired against his own side. For his sake, I trust that he will rectify his mistake.

It may be, as Brother Humber suggests in his article, that ministers need not be required to know the field of human philosophy. But I certainly think that they should know their Bibles well enough to distinguish the difference between the truths of God and the vagaries of human philosophy.

(NOTE: I tried in a friendly way by correspondence to persuade Brother Humber to eliminate from his article the attack on Paul's preaching at Athens, but he declined, thereby leaving me no choice but to answer publicly what I feel is a very dangerous position.)

THREE POEMS

By Roberta Symmes

A Dreadful Deed

When old North Wind was mad one day,
His temper was not sweet;
Alas! he did a dreadful thing
And just blew up the street!

An Acre of Acres

One day when I was sick in bed,
With sore throat, don't you see,
And feeling just about as bad
As any boy could be—
I chanced to have a thought that kept
Me all that night awake:
The poor giraffe—how must he feel
When his throat starts to ache!

Pussy's Washrag

Pussy ate her dinner,
And then she washed her face;
She keeps her little washrag
In quite the queerest place!

I find she keeps it hidden
Where you would never think;
For in her rosy little mouth
She hides her tongue so pink!

THE TIE THAT BINDS

HESKETH-SOWERS—On Sunday evening, January 13, I did join in Holy Matrimony two of our best loved young people—Muriel Sowers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Sowers, and Clarence M. Hesketh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hesketh.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by her sister, Erma Irene; Clifford Hesketh was his brother's best man.

Both these young people are members of our little church, Myrl having been baptized by Rev. John A. Remple, seven years ago. I baptized Clarence, one year ago last November.

We pray God's blessing may rest upon this union and that it may strengthen their love for him.

S. H. RUZARD, Pastor.

YOUNG-TAYLOR—At the minister's residence, in Fort Scott, Kansas, on February 8th, 1932, Roscoe E. Taylor and Clara A. Young were united in matrimony by the writer. The parties are both of Fort Scott and they will be at home to their many friends at the head of the Avenue, in the south part of the city.

L. G. WOOD.

GASTON-CHENOWETH—James Edward Gaston of Morrill, and Miss Mary Caroline Chenoweth, of Morrill, were united in marriage by the writer at the Brethren parsonage, Tuesday, February 10. Mrs. Gaston was a faithful member of the Brethren church and Mr. Gaston a member of the Baptist church, both in Morrill. Their many friends wish them much happiness as they sail the Sea of Life together.

L. A. MYERS.

STRAUB—Geo. T. Straub, aged 78 years, 1 month and 8 days, departed this life, January 10, 1932. The funeral services were held at the Brethren church in Hamlin conducted by the writer. He is survived by his companion and one son and a grandson. Mrs. Straub is a faithful member of the Brethren church at Hamlin.

L. A. MYERS.

IN THE SHADOW

THOMPSON—A. P. Thompson passed to the Eternal World, January 6, 1932 in the Sabella Memorial Hospital at the age of 67 years, 4 months and 13 days. He was a member of the Brethren church in Morrill, and was faithful to all its services. Two sons and one daughter survive. The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the Brethren church in Morrill.

L. A. MYERS.

SAYLOR—Mrs. Susan Beechly Saylor, widow of Uriah M. Saylor, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Rufus Miller, in Morrill, August 30, 1931, at the age of 79 years, 6 months and 25 days. She united with the Church of the Brethren in her girlhood, being a charter member of the Main Street Brethren church of Nereedale, Pennsylvania. Later she transferred her membership to the Pony Creek Brethren church, north of Morrill, Kansas. Her membership was transferred to the Brethren church in Morrill at the organization of that body, becoming one of its charter members. Funeral services were held at the Church of the Brethren in Morrill, conducted by Rev. Kemper of Carleton, Nebraska, in the absence of her pastor.

L. A. MYERS.

LAGER—Earl Lager was born in the Godfrey neighborhood, Fort Scott, Kansas, and departed this life by accidental death at a grade crossing, at Godfrey, on February 8, 1932, at the age of 18 years. He was graduated from the Fort Scott High School last Spring. Since his graduation he has been on the farm with his parents. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Lager.

Beside his parents and his grandparents, he is survived by the following aunts and uncles: Claus and Alfred Lager of Fort Scott, Charles and William Lager of south of the city, Mrs. Ida Galvin and Mrs. Alma Jacques and Mrs. Henry Smallwood of Fort Scott, and Mrs. Alma Richardson of Kansas City, Missouri. Earl had a large circle of friends who are saddened by his departure.

Funeral was conducted from the Brethren church at Fort Scott, by the writer, February 10th, 1932. A very large concourse of sympathizing friends attended the service.

The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Evergreen cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

LOWE—Glenn Lowe was born near Lincoln, Nebraska, April 29th, 1903, and departed this life by an accidental death at a grade crossing at Godfrey, Kansas, February 8, 1932, being past 28 years of age. He was a son of Wilson Lowe of Mulberry, Kansas and a grandson of D. W. Lowe of the Godfrey community.

He was married to Ethel Pitts on December 4, 1926, to which union one child was born, a son Robert, aged 3 years. Beside his father and grandparents, he is survived by his widow and son Robert, and the following brother and sisters: Arthur Lowe of Mulberry, Kansas, Mrs. Ethel Duncan, Miss Irene Lowe of this community, Mrs. Alice Harris and Mrs. Lottie Brown of Arcadia, Kansas.

The Lowes are well and favorably known in their community. Funeral was conducted from the Godfrey school house on February 11th, 1932 by the writer. A very large audience paid their respect.

Burial was made in the family lot in Clarksburg cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

YARIAN—Samuel Yarian was born in Miami County, Indiana, April 20, 1876 to Andrew and Nancy Yarian, and died February 18, 1932 at the age of 55 years, 9 months, 28 days. He leaves to mourn his departure his wife, three sons and one daughter, besides many other relatives and friends.

Mr. Yarian united with the First Brethren church at New Enterprise, Indiana, on September 8, 1918 under the pastorate of Rev. C. A. Stewart.

The funeral service was conducted from the First Brethren church, Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock by the pastor, Rev. G. L. Maus. Burial was in I. O. O. F. cemetery.

MRS. RAGER, Corresponding Secretary.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CORRECTION OF FAIR HAVEN PRE-EASTER WEEK SERVICES

Last week in the newsletter of Brother R. E. Gingrich there appeared the program of the Pre-Easter Week Services of the Fair Haven church near West Salem, Ohio. We have our attention called to an error that occurred in the printing of that program, and in order to correct it we are re-publishing the program this week according to Brother Gingrich's copy. It follows:

Sunday, March 20, "The Christ of the Centuries." Prof. M. A. Stuckey.

Monday, March 21, "Jesus Christ: Prophet, Priest and King." Dr. K. M. Monroe.

Tuesday, March 22, "The Social Effects of the Life and Work of Christ." Dr. E. E. Jacobs.

Wednesday, March 23, "Our Kinsman Redeemer." Dr. J. C. Beal.

Thursday, March 24, "The Meaning of the Cross." Dr. J. Allen Miller.

Friday, March 25, "The Glorious Vision of the Other Thief." Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Saturday, March 26, "The Resurrection." Dr. Charles A. Bame.

We hope all who may have read the incorrect program last week, will also read this corrected copy.—The EDITOR.

“DON'T LET LOOSE”

During the speech of King George, opening a recent Disarmament Conference, some one tripped over the generator wires of the Columbia Broadcasting Company, tearing them all loose and interrupting the service. The chief operator quickly grasped the loose wires in his bare hands and for twenty minutes the current passed through his twitching flesh while repairs were being made. His hands were slightly burned, but through his body the words of the king passed on to millions of listeners and were heard distinctly. Without his courage and endurance, the King's message would have failed to reach its destination.

The King of Heaven has chosen to send His message to a lost world through human wires. Every faithful missionary, and every Christian who gives to their support, is a human wire through which the King's voice is reaching the lost with a message of peace, vastly more important than the message from London.

For the missionary it is often costly business. Men and women must suffer the loss of every earthly thing, stoop with weariness, waste away with fevers in far off places, even die,—but it pays to HOLD ON. Only thus can men hear the Voice of the King. The Church of God needs more men who are willing to TAKE HOLD and HOLD ON—like the greatest of all missionaries who prayed that “Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death.” (Phil 1:20).

The Easter offering is not far distant. Those who fail to pray and give will to that extent “break the circuit” from heaven to earth. If we “let loose”, the King's voice will not be heard.—Alva J. McClain.

EASTER SUNDAY IS FOREIGN MISSION OFFERING DAY

The Missionary Call

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble, Missionary on Furlough, French Equatorial Africa

Acts 16:9. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There stood a man of Macedonia and prayed him, saying: Come over into Macedonia and help us.

The missionary call comes to God's children in various manners. To me it came in a manner differing slightly from the above. For me there was not one vision alone. There were many. To me there appeared not one Macedonian but many Africans. Night after night, whether waking or sleeping, I saw them falling as it were into a deep and dismal abyss, without God, without hope. It was thus that I was led to Africa.

And yet there must be many others calling, many others being called. Do we respond as Paul did? Acts 16:10, "And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us to preach the gospel unto them." Paul not only endeavored to go; he endeavored to go immediately. Do we?

In the soon-to-be-published letters of my late husband, James S. Gribble, he says, "When my own call from God became irresistible, I packed my trunk on Monday, took the train on Tuesday, and the boat on Saturday, and meanwhile there was added unto me more than $400 for the supply of my material needs, and I knew nothing of popularity." Thus to those who set about to go even financial stress need not be a hindrance.

Nor are other hindrances given except to be surmounted. When I first went to Africa I met a young missionary nurse who told me the story of her call. Born in Sweden, the eldest of a large family, educated with the hope of assisting her father and mother in the training of the younger children, she hoped to serve God in her own loved land of Sweden. One day she went to hear a foreign missionary speak. The Lord spoke to her through the missionary's message, saying, "Elma, will you go to Africa for me?"—Surprised, she responded, "Lord, you have made a mistake. I cannot go to Africa. I must work in Sweden!" Did you ever tell the Lord that he had made a mistake? But the Holy Spirit is an irresistible wooer, and if we will but permit him to do so he will unfaithfully win our battles for us. And so at last she responded, "Lord, I will go." The first step, a tremendously difficult one, was to tell her father and her mother. And so in fear and trembling she went to them with these words upon her lips. "Father and mother, I have come to break your hearts. I must leave you and go to Africa. God has called me and I can no longer resist him." As she expected, her father's head was bowed as though in anguish, as she expected, the tears flowed freely down her mother's cheeks. And then her mother spoke words—surprising words—that revealed how near oftentimes are the outward manifestations of joy and of sorrow: "Elma, before you were born, in that glad hour when your father and I first knew that you were coming to bless our lives, we gave you, our expected first-born to the Lord for Africa." Dear young friend, are you receiving the missionary call? Remember that for you some have prayed—whether father or mother or friends. Remember, too, that before times-eternal One has prayed for you, prayed that your faith fail not. Remember, too, that he who receives his call must set about to go—if possible immediately—lest the heathen be reached too late. Many there are who never heard the Word—many there are who hear the Word too late.

Some time ago there came to the Yaloke hospital a woman who had been attacked by one of the dread man-eating leopards of our Banou region in French Equatorial Africa. From the moment of her entrance her mind was dazed. During her brief time in the hospital she was daily told the story of Jesus. But too late—alas too late! She could not now comprehend the message which she was hearing for the first time. On the 6th day she developed the terrible symptoms of hydrophobia and died—crying in her fearful agony, "Liouar bene, liouar

"Come over into Africa and help us."

bene—"There is no path—there is no path." The heathen in foreign lands are daily dying, crying, "There is no path—there is no path." And yet John 14:6—our Lord Jesus has said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life—no man cometh unto the Father but by me." And we, the church, have failed to tell the story!

May every one to whom this message is brought respond to the missionary call—somewhere!

What is a missionary? A missionary is one who goes joyously to heaven taking others with him. The Holy Spirit himself must direct as to whether one labors at home or abroad. Ion Keith Falconer has said, "While half of the world lies shrouded in utter darkness, and thousands of millions are suffering the horrors of Islam or of death, the burden of proof rests with you to show that the circumstances in which God has placed you were meant by him to keep you out of the foreign field." Some one has said: "Every one has a right to hear the gospel once before any one else hears it twice." Another has said, "Young convert, consecrating your life to God, face first the question of the foreign field. You need rather a call to remain at home than a call to go abroad."

There are those to whom this message comes who would like to go abroad, but who now, because of advancing age or entangling responsibilities cannot do so. Perhaps you, like the father and mother mentioned above, can pray your son or your daughter to the field. You can pray for those who are laboring now in foreign fields.

There is one who was born in a manger—One who lived as an obedient child—One who fulfilled his earthly ministry—One who was crucified and buried—One who rose again—One who ascended into heaven—One who ever liveth to make intercession. Does not this wonderful climax—this wonderful crowning of our Lord's finished earthly work with his continual heavenly ministry, lead us to appreciate the beauty and the dignity of intercession? Say not "I can only intercede." Say: "He intercedes—I will intercede also!" And remember that from this joyous work of intercession nothing can ever separate you! Tribulation shall but add to your incentive, illness shall but increase your privilege. And death can no more separate you from this joyous service than it separated him, our Lord, our Master, and in all things our Pattern.

In 1913 my husband and I were itinerating upon the shores of Lake Albert. There was no way to reach the hungry-hearted villagers in the swamp-ridden district of the shore, but by canoe. And the canoe owners were unwilling to rent their canoes. But prayer changes things! To kneel in the sand or in the swamp may seem a small matter, but the natives saw the relationship between the prayer of faith and its result. And as, their hearts made willing, they came forward to offer their canoes, they said: "We can't refuse the missionary anything when he asks his God."

And then came a sudden blow, a severe illness which necessitated transportation to the Cook Brothers' hospital in Uganda, then as famous as the Mayo Brothers' hospital in America. This time the stormy lake must be, not skirted, but crossed. This time the suffering one must have, not a canoe, but a boat of adequate size. But the natives when asked, refused to go. And then again the missionary knelt, this time by his wife's bedside in the little tent by the stormy lake.

While he was praying, there was a rustling at the tent flaps. The missionary arose from his knees, and going to the door found three men waiting there. One of them spoke in the Lur language, saying: "We three will take two canoes and we will cross this stormy lake to Butiaba. We will bring back the boat on which you wife may travel. But you?"—and here was the surprising challenge—"ask your God to hold the winds in the heavens while we cross." Ask your God, Christians! Ask your God to hold the winds in the heavens while the missionaries cross the seas of disaster, the seas of bank failure, the seas of depression, the seas of suffering, of separation and bereavement in Oubangui-Chari. Ask your God! For you have a God who answered the challenge of the heathen who were willing to rely upon him whom they knew only as the missionaries' God! You have a God who held the winds in the heavens while they crossed—these simple black men, trusting in the missionaries' God! You have a God who enabled them to cross that day as on a sea of glass, and to come back the next day, al-

The Expansion of Christianity

The expansion of Christianity is the great task and problem of the church of Christ, and more and more the membership of the church is being made to understand the necessity of it and is gripped by its urge. There have been, and are yet, many blind to the expansive nature of Christianity, and have professed not to believe in missions, but many eyes have been opened and many others are being opened, and with the seeing there comes belief and the spirit of urgency. Among the numerous illustrations that might be cited of conversion to faith in missions, one of the most illustrious is that of Robert Louis Stevenson, whose talented pen has so charmed the people of the world. As he came face to face with the facts regarding the worth of missions, his mind was so completely changed that he "actually became a Sunday school teacher in a Samoan mission school and a supporter of missions to the day of his death."

"I suppose," he writes, in a paper read before a missionary meeting in Sydney, Australia, in 1893, "I am in the position of many persons. I had conceived a great prejudice against missions in the South Seas. I had no sooner come there than that prejudice was reduced, and then at last annihilated. Those who debarterate against missions have only one thing to do, to come and see them on the spot. They will see a great deal of good done, they will see a race being forwarded in many different directions, and, I believe, if they be honest persons, they will cease to complain of mission work and its effects."

Not all can make a trip to mission lands and see the work "on the spot," but there is no reason for any one who will read to remain unconvinced. The evidence is to be found on every hand. And nothing is more important than that the last member of the church shall become convinced, convinced not only of the importance, but of the necessity and urgency of missions.

There is a great necessity for the expansion of Christianity because the founder of Christianity has commanded that men should go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. When he commands there is nothing left but to obey, for he declared, "All authority is given unto me in heaven and on earth." This is an amazing declaration, but it comes from him who conquered death and the grave, and who was exalted to the right hand of God the Father. This takes it out of the realm of choice and makes it a great necessity. Those who espouse the cause of Christ are under high obligation to take the message of salvation to those who have it not.

There is a necessity for the expansion of Christianity because Christ's program is universal and his kingdom is imperialistic. Christianity is not just one of the great world religions; it is the only true religion and the only one that has a right to a place under the sun. All other religions being false, it is set against them with unalterable and unyielding purpose for their destruction, as light is set for the destruction of disease. It agrees to no truce and brooks no compromise. It was given to be not the religion of the Jews, nor yet of the Americans, but of all men, everywhere. It recognizes no national boundaries, or racial barriers, no color lines or class distinctions. No part of mankind is outside the borders of its possible influence or proposed sovereignty. Its message is to "whosoever will," its provision for the whole world and its claim on every soul. Every true Christian must, therefore, share its universal, imperialistic attitude, and is under bounden duty to help to propagate its teachings and to win adherents to its cause.

Again, there is necessity for extending the reach of Christianity because it centers in Christ, the Son of God, who alone can take away the sins of the world. There have been saviors aplenty offered to the world, but they have all been false gods, absolutely powerless to be the savior of men. Jesus Christ is the only world's Savior, all-sufficient and all-embracing. Christianity has power because it is heaven born. But Confucianism, Shintoism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam and Zoroastrianism, all having offered to the world, or to parts of the world, a salvation of some kind or other, have miserably failed and have left their worshippers as wretchedly enslaved in sin and superstition as before the faith was embraced. And their failure to save the individual has been reflected in a correspondingly low and deplorable state of civilization within the countries concerned. Take, for instance, the influence of Confucianism on China. The teachings of that idealized Chinese sage have had many centuries to affect the life of this great, backward people, but ignorance, superstition, degradation and confusion flourish there as in few other countries in the world, not taking into account the increased confusion due to the present Japanese attack. During the past few years China has been expelling foreigners over wide areas. But, as P. Whitwell Wilson inquiringly remarks, "Has Zimri peace who slew his missionaries?" Nay, her chaos had almost become chronic, until she was plundered from without. It is certainly evident that the country needs a greater than Confucius. A similar thing may be said of Hinduism in India. Miss Mayo in "Mother India" says India is enervated by indulgence and disease. Turkey was perhaps the most cruel and most despised nation in the world until she began to break with the ideals and spirit of Islam. And now, as Mr. Wilson states, "The very faith that deports Christians from its borders is crumbling to a collapse under its own weight." Indeed, there is no religion but Christianity and no Savior but the Lord Jesus sufficient to meet the needs of any people in the world, as is evidenced by the backward conditions and hopeless spiritual state prevailing in non-Christian lands. The knowledge of Christ is worthy to be taken to every land, and everywhere that is the "good news" that is most needed.

But how is this much needed expansion to be accomplished? In the first place by prayer. Does that seem a commonplace thing to say? But there is nothing more important to be said, however many times it may have been said before. Prayer is the first and most important thing to be done with regard to any spiritual undertaking, but is never more important than in the task of evangelizing the world. Prayer is the divine method of procedure. "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Those are the words of Jesus, and experience has proven the efficacy of prayer. When the Christian intercedes in faith, God crowns the act with victory. And when failure rests upon the approved work of the Lord, it would indicate that there is a lack of prayer. Does such a conclusion seem justified? Yet it is based on the experience of some of the world's greatest Christian leaders. Hear Dr. John R. Mott:

"Without doubt the dearth of workers actuated with a sacred sense of their vocation is due to lack of prayer on the part of Christians. Let the prayers offered in the pulpit and elsewhere evidence larger obedience to the prayer command of Christ. Let the missionary-prayer meeting respond more faithfully to the call for intercession. Ask the officers and teachers of the Sunday school to unite in prayer that the Holy Spirit may separate from among the young those whom God would have one day preach Christ. Let parents pray that their own children may be guided into the work of God's own appointment. Influence earnest young men and women to make the choice of their life work and life field a matter of special prayer until God's will is made clear. Multitudes have been inspired while praying to God for guidance to give their lives to missionary service at home and abroad."

In the second place, the expansion of Christianity can be promoted by the giving of life to the carrying of the Gospel. That is the divinely stated objective of prayer—that laborers will be thrust forth into the harvest, that lives will be surrendered to the Lord's will. Some one must go for him; that is the great imperative. Jesus said, "Go ye, therefore, and preach the Gospel." Who is going to do the actual going? That is the question that every young person with talent and opportunity must face. No question is more serious, or fraught with greater possible consequences. And no greater honor can come to a life than to be called of God to bear his message to those who have it not. Ambassadors, they are! Messengers, missionaries, representatives of the kingdom! The call will doubtless come to some whose hearts are sensitive to hear the divine voice at this Easter season. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" says the Lord of hosts. And some one must answer, "Here am I: send me."

And finally, the expansion of Christianity can be helped forward by gifts of money, and here is where nearly every one can help, at least in a small way. Not every one can go in person with the gospel message, but nearly every one can give. And every one who can, is under high obligation to do so. It is no slight offense to refuse to do what we can. Giving of our substance is not merely an opportunity, but a duty as well. How shall the missionaries go except they be sent, and the sending is made possible by the gifts of those who remain at home. That is very definitely their responsibility to those who are willing to go. To refuse to do that much for those who go, and at the same time to remain at home piling up wealth, would seem like playing the slacker and the profiteer. It certainly is not doing one's share, nor being square with one's fellow Christians. Nor is it being faithful and obedient to the Lord Jesus by doing what can be done to carry out the Great Commission. This is time to take stock of our fidelity to the great Head of the church and to challenge ourselves to the doing of our very utmost toward discharging the outstanding responsibility that has been committed unto us.

Why Evangelize Roman Catholics

Do Roman Catholics need to be evangelized? Perhaps the question strikes you as strange. But it may be that you would not think it a strange question if you were familiar with Roman Catholicism as it appears in those countries where it is the dominant religion and often the controlling factor in politics. Such is the situation in the Argentine, where we have a number of thriving Brethren mission churches and where the great mass of the population is nominally Catholic. You have already heard much of the ignorance and superstition in which the Catholics of such long-standing Catholic countries have been kept enslaved. We have also reported occasionally concerning the inclination toward persecution of Protestantism on the part of the Catholic priesthood in Argentina. But at the time when you are being urged to contribute largely to the promotion of mission work among Catholics, it may be of benefit to many to have outlined for them the principal reasons why there is a real need for the evangelization of Roman Catholics. Following are seven reasons as the editor of the Missionary Review of the World once itemized them:

1. Because multitudes of them are ignorant of the Gospel of Christ as proclaimed in the New Testament.
2. Because their religious leaders do not give them the Gospel of salvation through Christ by faith—but substitute salvation by works.
3. Because their Church does not encourage them to read the Bible so that they may become intelligent Christians.
4. Because their church interposes the Virgin Mary and canonized mortals between the suppliant sinner and the Savior.
5. Because their Church encourages many superstitious beliefs—as in relics, charms, etc.
6. Because many of their priests are ignorant and immoral and exact money for baptism, marriage, mass and other religious sacraments.
7. Because Roman Catholics truly converted to Christ testify to the new life and light, peace and power that have come to them through the evangelical Gospel.

The spirit of strife is to be dethroned only by enthroning the spirit of peace, and that is a gift of God. But that is not an argument against the enactment of laws against fighting, either individually or en masse.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

When you have read all the mission material in this, our Foreign Mission Special, you will do a service to the cause if you will pass it on to some other church member who does not take the paper. Remember the Foreign Mission offering date is March 27th. Do your best, and do it promptly.

Brother E. L. Miller of Mauretown, Virginia, secretary of the General Conference Executive Committee, issues a call for the various departmental programs that shall have place in our General Conference program. He is very lenient as to date when said programs must be in his hands, and it is to be hoped that all the various organizations concerned will put their programs in shape promptly and send them to the secretary by the first of May.

From a personal communication from Dr. Louis S. Bauman, we learn that he is now engaged in an evangelistic campaign in the First Church of Long Beach, California, where he is pastor. He was joined by Walter MacDonald, singer and song leader, on March 8th and they will close on Easter Sunday. This is the same song leader who assisted Dr. Bauman so efficiently last year. Brother Bauman writes: "Last Sunday we had the first fruits of the campaign—eight precious souls."

From the Washington, D. C., church we have another report of offerings received from other churches to be applied on their new building, the completion of which they are contemplating undertaking. The Sunday school of this church has reached the limit of its growth until the new structure is completed. They have gone forward in a fine way under the leadership of their pastor, Brother Homer A. Kent, and with a new building their future will be unusually bright. Any other churches wishing to have a part in providing our Washington congregation with a completed church building in accordance with the recommendation of General Conference, will yet find opportunity.

Brother L. B. Shank, one of our California readers, writes this week urging a more intensive effort on the part of pastors to get pre-publication subscriptions for the new book of Dr. Florence N. Gribble. The book is entitled "Undaunted Hope" and we are assured that the book will be as interesting and challenging as the title would indicate. The pre-publication price is $2.50, and the price thereafter will be $4.00. We urge every reader of this paper to cooperate in getting the required number of subscriptions to get the book published. Money is scarce, we know, but you can afford to sacrifice, if that should be necessary, in order not to miss the inspiration of this splendid mission book. Give your subscription to any member of the Foreign Missionary Society, or send it to the treasurer, Dr. Bauman, at Long Beach, California.

Three numbers of the Ashland Seminary's course of special lectures given to the Seminary students by leading pastors of the church have been heard with much interest and profit to the goodly number in attendance on each occasion. First was a lecture by Dr. Bame on Religious Education in Dunker History, concerning which we made comment on a previous occasion. The second was a lecture on the Glory of the Christian Ministry by Dr. William H. Beachler of Gratis, Ohio. Dr. Beachler's long and rich experience in the ministry enabled him to speak with a note of authority, and when he had finished every minister and minister-to-be had experienced a new thrill of the joy and glory of this high calling. It was a scholarly address and was given in Brother Beachler's characteristic, forceful manner and eloquent style. Then came a lecture by Rev. Willis E. Ronk of Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, on the Qualifications of the Minister. This lecture maintained the high standard established by the preceding lectures, and was characterized by practical helpfulness and inspiration. He left his hearers with a high respect for the ministry and challenged the ministerial students with a determination to live in all points worthy of the Christian ministry. We congratulate the Seminary on bringing these men before its student body, which must have been much edified by the wise counsel and inspiring presence of the speakers.

The Dynamics of World Evangelization

By Charles H. Ashman, Member Foreign Board

If ever there was an hour when the Church needed Missionary Dynamics, it is now! The gravest and greatest problem in the work of missions today is not on the Foreign Fields, but in the local church at home. The Church and not heathendom is our present problem. In these days of stress and strain, there is a real danger of losing our missionary vision and vim. The test of every Brethren church in this year will be its relation to the supreme mission of the church,—world evangelization. Our Foreign Missionary Offering at Easter will be a test of our spiritual life, it will reflect as a mirror the spiritual life of our members. True, there are spiritually-minded Christians who cannot give this year. But, it will test the spirituality of all those who can give. Read 2. Cor. 8:13-15.

Now, if we are to meet the challenge of this hour, there must be certain missionary dynamics to bring driving force upon us. "Two of the greatest foes of Foreign Missions are prejudice and indifference, and it is said that ignorance is the mother of both." "Knowledge is power! Missionary information keeps the fires of missionary zeal burning brightly. Surely, we have this dynamic of knowledge in the Brethren Church. We seriously question if there is a denomination which keeps its churches better informed concerning its Foreign Mission Work than our own. The Brethren Evangelist and Foreign Missionary Magazine constantly keep before us the facts and figures. There ought to be very little of prejudice and indifference among the readers of these two publications. Our Missionaries home on furlough have brought to us "first hand information" in abundance. BUT, in addition to all this, at this Easter time, there must be the Dynamic of Emphatic Repetition. We pastors must "tell it again and again." The needs must be presented with added force. The facts and figures must be stated with sharper points and greater piercing power.

There must be the Dynamic of Obedience. A General was asked, "What is the greatest essential to a good soldier?" He answered, "Obedience." Jesus Christ has commanded, "GO!" That word contains spiritual dynamite! It ought to blow out from their hiding places those dollars which belong to God. There are SPIRITUAL HOARDERS a plenty in the Brethren Church! They have been denying Jesus Christ that which belongs to him for years. Now is the hour for them to yield to the dynamic of "Go!" and come forth with their substance to meet the emergency of this year. This force has drawn many lives into the Foreign Field and others ready at home to go. Now, the supreme need this year is that it shall shake the Home Church to her very foundations and shake loose those dollars which so many are holding on to with such tenacity. For God's people to keep money that belongs to him out of circulation in missionary activity is a sin. It is a sin of rebellion, disobedience, selfishness, disloyalty.

There must be the Dynamic of the Love of Christ. "The Love of Christ constraineth me," The Apostolic Church had that urge. It was the "breath and blood of the early church." Whenever there was danger of it becoming weak, God brought the rod of persecution upon the church and drove them forth as evangelists. Church history proves that whenever the church lost this missionary urge, internal strife, division, and combustion resulted, Protestantism, at first, was not expansive, but proselyting in its motive. It divided and subdivided. This will apply to a local congregation. Get a church afire with the flame of missionary zeal and the cross will be consumed and the congregation melted together into a solid congregation.

Then too, there must be the dynamic of sacrifice. There are few Christians today who actually know what sacrifice is. It will take much of denial today before we come to the point of sacrifice. We have taught and trained ourselves to believe that so many things are absolutely essential to our lives, that if we are compelled to give up luxuries, we think we are sacrificing. But, unless we are to take a backward move in Foreign Missions this year, we must get beneath the luxuries into the actual necessities and beneath them to real sacrifice. It surely will require a dynamic to bring this to pass.

Victory or Defeat?

By A. V. Kimmell, Member Foreign Board

1 John 4:4—"Because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." This text is proving a blessing to many in these difficult days. The setting of this text has far more to do with present conditions and the Christian's victory in these days than many would surmise. The preceding verses have exposed false prophets, evil spirits and the anti-christ; powerful personalities now working in the world. Who will deny that the present deluge of lawlessness, open violation of every law known to God and man, is not instigated and fostered by the Lawless One? The distress of nations, the confusion in the business world, the unthinkable spectacle of men and women and children freezing and starving with supplies so abundant that on every hand there are cries of overproduction, all this must be traced to the same source—the Devil and his agents.

Under such conditions must the Christian admit defeat? Must he helplessly and hopelessly give up and say the task cannot be done? NO! NEVER!! Why speak with such assurance? "Because greater is HE that is in you, than he that is in the world."

Brethren, in times like this it is useless to look to each other and say that man must give more, or that woman must do better. We must look to God. The missionaries are giving their ALL. Most of the pastors are giving more than their incomes permit. Many of the members of the Brethren Church have been giving sacrificially for years and will continue to give to the limit, but this year the limit of those who gave formerly will not meet the need. Therefore we are looking to God that he may lead churches which have given small offerings for our Foreign Missions in former years to give much more this year. We are looking to him to speak to many who gave nothing last year to give liberally this year. Yes, we are looking to God to uncover large gifts in various places; we know not where, we know not whom he will use, but we are looking to him to supply the need. READER! is he trying to speak to you and have you share this blessing with him?

When the great revival swept through Korea humble families mortgaged their poor homes and gave the money to the Lord's work. One man owned nothing but an ox. He sold him and gave the money to the church. When spring came, together with his brother they placed the harness to their own shoulders and pulled the plow to turn the soil. The Lord knows where to find the men and the women who will make this Easter offering a Victory for him. "Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Look Up

By Carl H. Seitz, Member Foreign Board

As we approach this glad Easter Season, our hearts burn within us as we think over those days when our Lord Jesus Christ was upon earth. What awful suffering he endured! How he hung on that accursed tree! How he shed his precious blood that he might redeem us from our sins! Oh! the joy of knowing that he was raised from the dead so that we who believe might be justified from our sins. Yes, PRAISE GOD, we are made just as if we had never sinned.

Oh, Christian brother and sister, are you glad you heard this blessed story? Are you thankful that you have been saved? Are you rejoicing that your salvation is reserved in Heaven? Are you learning that the things that are unseen are eternal? How good it is to know that no matter what we are called upon to suffer we never lose our salvation!

"For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Are you not anxious to share these glorious truths with the hopeless people of Africa and South America?

The 200th anniversary of George Washington's birth is being celebrated over our entire nation. It began February 22 and will continue until Thanksgiving Day. His name arouses intense zeal in the hearts of true Americans—and it should. It is expected that every man, woman and child will participate. Such a celebration will do much to strengthen America against Communism and other destructive forces. Tremendous energy and vast expenditure of money will make this celebration a great success.

What if the true Church of Christ should unite in a similar effort to celebrate the Name and Gospel of "him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood." There are enough true members of the body of Christ in America to bring the Gospel in a compelling way to every man, woman and child in the United States. If the Church really took seriously the Commission of her Lord, in a very short time this Gospel could be sent to the ends of the earth. Shall we not pray that the entire Church will so witness that men may know him who is so much greater than Washington, "even the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world?"

Our obedience to the Great Commission brings such rich returns, we dare not leave others give for us. Surely every member of the brotherhood can give at least the two dollars asked for by the Board. Maybe our offering will seem but a mite, but he sees and knows our circumstances, and the degree of sacrifice and counts it all as done unto himself. God can supply our needs. Yes, PRAISE THE LORD—it is not "Can God?" but "God Can."

"Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

"But my God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

"My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him."

THE TRAGEDY OF CALVARY IS BECOME THE GOOD NEWS TO ALL THE WORLD

For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures.—1 Cor. 15:3, 4.

Are we faithful in passing on the message to those who have it not?

May God richly bless you as you bring your Easter offering unto him that others may hear and thereby hasten his coming. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

"Ye Shall Be My Witnesses." Acts 1:8

By Chas. W. Mayes, Member Foreign Board

The word "witness," which our Lord used in this connection, carries with it in its original meaning the thought of a martyr. This is much stronger than we are accustomed to think of. One who is to be a true witness for Christ must give his life either as a sacrifice in death, or as a living sacrifice. Some are willing to be both. The testings of the present hour will give opportunity for the Lord's people to demonstrate the type of witnesses they wish to be.

Arthur T. Pierson in his record of Missionary Endeavor, tells of a native African monarch who greatly despised Christianity and all those who were Christians. The vilest of persecutions were experienced under his rule. On one occasion, three native boys were to be killed for their faith in Christ. Their arms were cut off. They were bound alive to a scaffold. A fire was kindled beneath. As the flames arose, they were slowly roasted to death. Think of such a miracle in the lives of native boys who only a short time before had served dumb, senseless fetiches! But they knew the price and something of the value of their redemption.

The old crowd mocked. They laughed at the terrible agonies of the three Christian boys in the consuming fire. They were told to pray to Jesus and see if he would come down and deliver them. But in the hearts of these dark skinned lads there was the power of the Holy Spirit. They knew the joy of being made white in the blood of the Lamb. So they praised Christ their Lord until their tongues, dried and shriveled in the heat, could no longer sing:

Daily, daily sing to Jesus;
 "Sing, my soul, his praises due;
 All he does deserves our praises,
 And our deep devotion, too.

As is always the case, their dying the martyr's death was the beginning of a great revival wherein many, many souls were saved.

You are not being called upon to die a martyr's death. But you are given the holy privilege of living a martyr's life. "Ye shall be my witnesses." Perhaps you cannot go to Africa to witness, but your sacrifice can produce cash to send others, and maintain the ones who are now there. Just now your cash will measure your witness for Christ.

Whittier, California.

Have Faith---Go Forward

By U. J. Shively, Member Foreign Board

In a very recent issue of "The Missionary Review of the World," this is told of Thomas A. Edison, one of the world's greatest men: "After 84 years of a full and energetic life, he gave to the world's largest audience, over the radio last June, what proved to be his final public utterance.

"This message was spoken at a time when banks were continually going to the wall, when unemployment was steadily increasing, when sales of all kinds were being held and many stores were cutting prices to the limit with little or no profit. Pessimistic statements were the rule. Here are his words:

"My message to you is to be courageous. I have lived a long time. I have seen history repeat itself again and again. I have seen many depressions in business. Always America has emerged from these stronger and more prosperous. Be as brave as your fathers were before you. Have faith. Go forward."

Have faith—Go Forward. This should be the motto of every member of The Brethren Church at all times, but especially these days of 1932.

World evangelization is the biggest God-given job today, and the Brethren Church has her part to do. This then, means that each member of the church has his own share to do to complete this job. If any of us fail then we are not only failing the church, but we are failing our God. Who wants to fail? Who will fail?

Have faith in whom?

In God—whose work it is and whose orders we ought to obey.

In the Church—to whom is given the opportunity of carrying out these orders.

In the Foreign Mission Board, who are the servants of Christ and the Church.

In the Missionaries—who are giving their lives, going forward in faith that God will supply all their needs. God will and does supply their needs through his children.

In our opportunity—for we know it is God given, it is ours and no one can take it away from us. But we can neglect it. Will we?

Let us Go Forward.

How? By our prayers and our gifts of self and substance. We cannot all GO as foreign missionaries, but we can all BE foreign missionaries by giving our prayers and money.

When? On Easter Sunday. Jesus gave to us such a wonderful gift when he arose from the grave. God gave his best. Jesus Christ gave his best. We ought to be ashamed to do less than our best. Really, we ought to surpass ourselves.

IS EASTER SUNDAY YOUR BIG GIFT DAY?

Why? So God's treasury may be filled and missionaries can be sent to give the heathen an opportunity to hear the WORD and by hearing they may believe and be saved.

Why? So our own lives won't shrivel and dry up, but grow and bring forth fruit to his glory. So we won't be so stingy that we will eat our morsel alone.

"If I have eaten my morsel alone,"

The patriarch spoke with scorn:

Would he think of the Church were he shown

Heathendom—huge, forlorn,

Godless, Christless, with soul unfed,

While the Church's ailment is fullness of bread,

Eating her morsel alone?

Freely ye have received, so give."

He bade who hath given us all.

How shall the soul in us longer live

Deaf to their starving call,

For whom the blood of the Lord was shed,

And his body broken to give him bread,

If we eat our morsel alone?

—Archbishop Alexander.

Retrench? But Why?

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier, Member Foreign Board

Some churches have alas been obliged to retrench in their missionary programs. Has this been due to the so-called depression? No. A lot of it took place before the depression set in. I think it has been due to a loss of belief in the Gospel as the authentic Word of God. I will not discuss the reason for that disbelief save to say that it has been a long time on the way, and growing, especially in those churches which have long since rejected large portions of the Word as suited their fancy.

Do you think that any church would retrench if its members believed that the Great Commission of Matthew 28:19 is the actual revealed Word of God? I think not.

I insist that the Brethren Church cannot retrench.

1. Because our missionary program is modest and within our means.

2. We do believe the Word of God and will be true to its message.

3. We have unshaken confidence in our splendid corps of workers on the fields. We are convinced that they are by no means loose and lax in either belief or practice.

Therefore the missionary program is an integral part of

WILL YOU PRAY

"There are five outlets of power," said S. D. Gordon; "through our life, our lips, our service, our money, our prayer. And by all odds, the greatest of these is the outlet through prayer. . . . The greatest thing anyone can do for God and for man is to pray."

The Brethren Church, like all other denominations, is face to face with a crisis. No church can live when its missionary spirit dies. The supreme business of the Church is the business of missions. The spirit of the Cross is the spirit of missions. The final orders of the Christ are unto missions. The soldiers of Christ were ordered to march forward to the uttermost part of the earth. The command is explicit: "Preach the glad-tidings to every creature."

Without hesitation, we dare to say that the church that fails here, and sits down to eat her morsel alone, sits down to die! The favor of God—the storehouse of his riches,—will not be opened in high heaven above to supply any army, nor any part of an army, that does not march within the will of God, and to carry out the purposes of God. The will of God and the purpose of God cannot be mistaken:

"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria; and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1:8). "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14). "God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. . . . After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up" (Acts 15:14-16). "To it shall the Gentiles seek: and HIS REST WILL BE GLORIOUS" (Isa. 11:10).

No, we cannot mistake the purpose and plan of God. Neither can we mistake the plain course of duty for the Church of God—and every member within it! "Ye shall be my witnesses!" "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15). But, "How shall they preach (go) except they be sent?" (Rom. 10:15).

To send "witnesses" to the uttermost part of the earth, and provide for the necessities of their journeyings, costs money. As a result of a world-wide financial depression, many of the "witnesses" are actually being called home to-day. Such action can only mean an increase of the world-wide spiritual depression, and death to the church that ceases to function in the one great cause for which she exists.

The Brethren Church has not yet called for a single soldier to return from his post in the front-line trenches. Is she going to do it now? NEVER! Let us rather send forth new recruits to take the places of some who have fallen in the ranks—fallen face to face with the foe—fallen fighting courageously on! "Depression" or no "depression," The Brethren Church still has enough supplies in her garner to provide for as fine a group of missionary warriors—man for man, woman for woman—as has ever marched forth to battle with the forces of pagan night! Look into their faces! What can you spare this Easter Day that they may battle on?

And, if the misfortunes of life have so drained your purse that you cannot give largely of silver or gold, then none so poor but that you can give what is even of greater value,—your fervent effectual prayers for these! It is really more difficult to pray for missions than to give for them. Every great outward—every upward-movement for Christ and his Church was born within a circle of praying saints. WILL YOU PRAY FOR THESE? Great as is the "depression," if the Brethren Church shall fall upon her knees before God and maintain a joint and believing spirit of supplication and intercession, the necessary supply will come, missionaries will be outward (not inward) bound, and the Word of God will have free course and be glorified!

WILL FAMILY WORSHIP PASS AWAY?

A young lady of the big city visited some friends in the country and wrote this letter about it:

"I was visiting the home of a good friend and right after breakfast every morning we gathered in the library. My friend's father then read to us out of the Bible and we all knelt down and then he prayed aloud. We then got up and went out into the gardens or up to our rooms as we pleased. It seemed a strange and beautiful thing to me. I inquired of my friend, and she told me that in their neighborhood many old people did this thing and that her father had inherited the habit from his father. Of course, such a thing is not done nowadays, but I confess that I liked it. This is one of the old-time things that has passed away."

There is humor and pathos in this city girl who had never before seen a family engage in family devotions. It might shock us if we knew how many there are in her class. There are many homes these days where the family has never bowed together in prayer. We fear those who still observe this old and beautiful custom make a very small minority. In the rush of this day we have little time for meditation and prayer. The children are growing up without ever seeing or hearing their parents at prayer. If this is true we are sowing an indifference in spiritual matters that is sure to bring a sad harvest in the religious life of the coming generation.—Methodist-Protestant-Recorder.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

The Senate and the House have adopted resolutions submitting to the States a proposed amendment to the Constitution providing that henceforth the Congress elected in November shall begin its term in the following January, that all sessions of Congress shall be unlimited as to length, and that the inauguration of the President and Vice-president shall be in January. The amendment must be ratified by three-fourths of the States within seven years.—C. E. World.

TURKEY TURNS TOWARD SUNDAY

From Vakit, a Turkish periodical, comes the following quotation: "It is necessary to change the weekly holiday from Friday to Sunday for commercial reasons. All the merchants whom we have consulted on this matter agree with us. We keep Friday; Europe keeps Sunday. This causes much confusion in business relationships. Suppose a cable comes from London on a Friday to a merchant in Constantinople. The message will not be delivered until Saturday, as Friday is a holiday. The Turkish merchant replies on Saturday, the cable reaches London on Sunday, but is not delivered until Monday, because Sunday is a holiday in London. The result is delay and confusion. We must co-operate with Europe in business, therefore we should have the same weekly holiday. In all things we are adopting international principles. It is useless to be different from others in this respect. There is no basis to oblige us to stick to Friday as a holiday. Let us keep Sunday."—The Congregationalist.

DECREASE IN CHURCHES

During the past five years Southern Baptists have lost an average of 256 churches each year. At the same time they have had an increase of 50,000 members for each of those years. This seeming paradox can be explained most largely by good roads and the automobile. Family grave-yards and big dinners beneath the trees cannot overcome the attraction of larger, generally town, churches. Parts of Arkansas and Louisiana have suffered from floods and churches swept away have not been rebuilt in many cases. Then the financial situation has also closed some churches in the industrial centers.

This, of course, affects the pastor. As churches become less in number and the schools continue to turn out their product, pastorates are more difficult to obtain. Evangelists are "taking a pastorate." What is the surplus to do? Shall men go out of the ministry, or, like Paul, turn to the making of tents while they preach? Supply and demand will work in spite of our speculations. The best prepared men, endowed with talent and really called of God, will find their fields even as they have in every age. Vocational overcrowding is not confined to the ministry.—The Baptist.

ABNORMAL MENTALITY NOT THE CAUSE OF CRIME

At a meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Association in Baltimore, Feb. 18, it was declared that heredity plays a small part in filling prisons and institutions for mental troubles.

Most criminals go wrong because of unfavorable home conditions, not because they are mentally deficient, said Dr. Amos T. Baker, population. Only approximately 2 per cent of convicts are insane of most criminals compares favorably with that of the law-abiding population. Only approximately 2 per cent of convicts are insane and approximately 15 per cent are feeble-minded, Dr. Baker reported. The ethical level of the community where a man grows up, he said, is what determines whether or not he becomes a criminal. The modern gangster type of criminal has about the average mentality, he has found. Forgers average the highest in mentality and convicts guilty of assaults the lowest. Most murderers, Dr. Baker said, have a normal mentality.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE HAS 402,000 WORDS

There are at present, according to Dr. J. R. P. Slater, in the Toronto Globe, 402,000 words in the English speech. There were only 26,000 words in Johnson's dictionary. So we have increased by 376,000. Shakespeare used 24,000 words. If these calculations are correct, Shakespeare used 98 per cent of the English of his own time, and that alone puts him on the pedestal where general feeling tends to place him.

Milton used 16,000, Shelley about 16,000, Tennyson about 14,000, Woodrow Wilson, so we have read, in his various speeches used 53,000; college students have a vocabulary in use of up to 12,000 words, possibly rising to a recognized vocabulary of 40,000 words.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Exodus

The archives of ancient Egypt contains a reference to Israel on a famous pillar of Merneptah which reads: "Israel is desolated, her seed is not; Palestine has become a widow for Egypt." Such is the dictum of secular history during an age never-to-be-forgotten in the regions of the far-famed Nile valley.

Biblical history, in the book of Exodus, suggests that Israel was not always desolate, nor was her seed finally extinguished, nor did she remain perpetually a helpless widow. "The Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt" (Exod. 12:51), "with a mighty hand and with an outstretched arm." Deut. 26:8.

The great deliverance extended to the Jews, so far as the chronicler is concerned, really is a continued story of what happened to the ancestors of the faithful Abraham, the meditative Isaac, the crafty Jacob, and the righteous Joseph. It begins with a "Now" which may, quite correctly, be translated "And." It is a repetition of Genesis 46:8. The last phrase of this volume, "Throughout all their journeys," connects itself with the following narrative. It in a very real sense, is a book without an end or a beginning. It follows Genesis and flows into the Levitical writings as quietly and naturally as the Severn flows into the sea.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Moses. His auto-biography is given.
2. Object. To give an authentic account of Israel's sojourn in Egypt with Divine revelation attached thereto.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Deliverance from Egypt. Chaps. 1-13.
2. The Journey to Sinai. Chaps. 14-18.
3. The Law at Sinai. Chaps. 19-24.
4. The Nation in Worship. Chaps. 25-40.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK

The theme deals with DELIVERANCE and REDEMPTION, and, as a necessary and resulting consequence, RELATIONSHIP to Jehovah, Israel's Redeemer.

"Then weep no more—'tis all thine own—
His Crown, his joy, divine
And, sweeter far than all beside,
He, He himself, is thine."

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Leading Topics.
  - (1). Passover—Redemption—Life.
  - (2). Law—Obedience—Light.
  - (3). Tabernacle—Worship—Love.
2. Key Words. Redemption, Passover, Blood.
3. Key Verses. Exod. 3:13, 14; 12:13.
4. Key Chapters. Exod. 12 and 20.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The Holy Spirit shows how the Great "I AM" has an eternal and sovereign interest in the salvation of man.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Jesus Christ is set forth in this writing as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "He that eateth me even he shall live by me." John 6:57. The entire life of Moses and his accomplishments typify excellently the life and ministry of Christ. The wilderness journey and the tabernacle furniture show forth most beautiful aspects of spiritual truth.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

A great Bible expositor has this splendid statement of the message of Exodus for our twentieth century life: "The story is indeed a living message to our own age revealing the necessity for absolute and uttermost obedience. The call of God is to separation, and the world urges us to remain in the land, and be neighborly. It is ours to reply that friendship with the world is enmity against God. Then we are told that if we insist upon being peculiar it is not necessary to compel our children to be so. God grant that our answer may ever be, 'We, and our children.' The last suggestion of the enemy is that we should leave our cattle, that it is necessary for us to conduct our business according to the spirit of the age. The final answer of the Christian is ever that which declares that 'There shall not a hoof be left behind.'"

THE CHANGED LIFE

Five years ago I came to believe in Christ's teaching, and my life suddenly became changed: I ceased desiring what I had wished before, and began to desire what I had not wished before. What formerly had seemed good to me appeared bad, and what had seemed bad appeared good. . . . The direction of my life, my desires became different: what was good and bad changed places—Tolstoy.

Rom. 9:20, 21. "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" Moffatt renders the passage thus: "But who are you my man, to speak back to God? Is something a man has moulded to ask him who has moulded it, 'Why did you make me like this?' What! has the potter no right over the clay? Has he no right to make out of the same lump one vessel for a noble purpose and another for a menial?"

About the time man has made up his mind that he is of very much importance in this universe, he runs across the doctrine of the sovereign will of God; and then his pretty, little building of self-esteem goes tumbling down. We ought to know by what we have observed about others, that the sod will not close over us very long until our nearest friends will have all but forgotten us; and these few will not linger very long. And yet, men fight all their lives to satisfy that spirit of egotism as though heaven were peopled with egotists. Even God has been drawn into the controversy. We talk so much "love," and "God's love," as though they were all God could do. They never give God any credit for his justice. They have forgotten that his great love is founded on justice; that God is absolutely fair. Being fair, there are many things among unfair beings which he will not tolerate.

In raising the question of God's equity, we think of his Providence on the one hand, and the Word of his grace on the other hand. Only by these two methods of approach can we know God. I mean by his Providence what we see going on around us. Is God just in his Providence? Our wounded pride sometimes causes us to question it, for we see so many inequalities. There are so many things happening every day—things which bewilder us—that we question whether God can explain them. We forget that the time element can work wonders; that the storms which shocked us in years gone by, we can now understand. I was reared among a people who discouraged pride and self-exaltation. I all but turned away from such wholesome training, but now I thank God for the lines I learned in that school of discipline:

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.
Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

When we leave God out of our thinking, about the biggest questions we ever wrestle with are questions like these: Why are there so many good people sick while there are so many wicked people who never see a sick day? Why are so many good people who are poor, and so many wicked people rolling in wealth? Why are there so many religious homes stained, and marred, while so many godless homes have not a cloud on the horizon? Why are the righteous so frequently cast down, while the wicked flourish like the green bay tree? And we cry out in the bitterness of soul, is that even handed justice? My answer is (and I know the meaning of storms) if this life stopped at the grave, then "No a thousand times No!" There is no even-handed justice about it. But, if we are to live forever, then what? The "returns are not all in" here, and now. Have we not noticed that the heartaches of today are recompensed by the joys of tomorrow? Give God a chance, AND TIME! Do you not endure the suffering of the major operation, that in a few weeks you may be well again? "Oh, if I can only pull through this one," is a current expression. Some one has expressed it about like this: "Our horizons are bounded by the tops of the nearest hills; we can see no farther. Because of that, will you say there is nothing good beyond?" Then what is beyond the line of our vision, might that not fully explain the inequalities we see in Providence, here? We dare not judge all eternity by the few storms here. No, we dare not. God must have time.

The Apostle Paul's Call to Foreign Missions, and Ours

By Henry M. Woods

Many noble-hearted young men and women of the League of Evangelical Students and in our colleges and universities have given themselves to the Lord Jesus Christ and desire to spend their lives in his service. They are asking as the great Apostle did, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Shall I work in the homeland, or go to the foreign field?

What is the substance of Christ's call to us to preach the gospel among the heathen? This may be answered by asking, What was the Apostle Paul's call to preach the gospel to heathen Europe?

The Apostle states his call clearly in Acts 16:9—he saw the man of Macedonia, and heard his appealing cry, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us"! Paul had been itinerating through Asia Minor, and came to a little district of it on the shore of the Aegean Sea, made immortal by the Iliad of Homer describing the conquest of Troy by the Greeks. As he looked across the Sea toward the dark land of Europe, he heard the call for help, as of a drowning man, "Come! Help!"

He realized that the people of Macedonia and Europe, represented by this man, were perishing in sin; they were under condemnation, without God and without hope. They found no help or deliverance in their philosophy and culture, however brilliant, nor in their religious beliefs, which really led them farther away from God. Paul knew they had only one hope of salvation, and that was in the crucified and risen Savior. Through him, and him alone, was there life and light, the forgiveness of sins, the new heart to serve God, and the glorious inheritance of the saints in light. The Apostle knew that God had put into his hands a mighty instrument to raise the spiritually dead and transform those sunk in trespasses and sins. He was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, nay, he gloried in it, because he knew it was the power of God to save not only Macedonia, and guilty, vicious Rome, but also the whole world.

Paul saw where the darkness was blackest, the need the greatest, and felt sure that God would have him go there. "Europe's unspeakable need" was, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, "the call." And this is the call that comes from heathen lands to our young people today, "Come over and help us, where the need is greatest!"

In this age of saying smooth things, and of blinking at dark, unpleasant truths that ought to be faced, do we not need constantly to come to the Word of God as the only standard of truth, and realize the ruined, hopeless condition of the heathen world as it is, and that Christ alone can save it?

Does not an attractively-written, but superficial, book on Missions—perhaps the most widely read during the past twenty-five years—declare in substance that the idea of multitudes of the heathen going down to eternal perdition is now no longer held? And does not the same author give much praise to ethnic beliefs, indicating certain ideas in heathenism which ought to be retained and combined with the gospel—as if the gospel of Christ did not already contain the grains of truth found in heathen religions, and infinitely more, and that in richer, fuller form?

Since these ideas of accredited missionary teachers directly oppose the teachings of God's Word, how necessary it is for evangelical Christians to hold fast the Truth, and know what the Word of God clearly teaches, that the heathen are lost, under condemnation for sin which they knew to be sin (Romans 1:20-32; 2:15; 3:10-23) and that while there are some beautiful sayings in the writings of heathen teachers, yet the heathen themselves confess these sayings are utterly without life and power, and that the only hope of the heathen world is in the gospel of the Son of God!

The substance of our call to the foreign field, then, is essentially the same as that of the Apostle Paul: the heathen are going down to eternal death in their sins; Christ has provided the only Remedy; and has commanded us to take this remedy to sin-sick souls throughout the world. Go to the heathen because the need is greatest there. Go to the heathen, because the glorious gospel alone can save them, and we hold it in trust for them. (1 Thessalonians 2:4; 1 Timothy 1:11.)

Of course, there are other elements of the call to be considered.

Are we physically able—not disqualified by serious ill health? For the encouragement of those who are not in robust health, we may say that one often sees men and women physically frail on the foreign field who by proper care of their health are able to do years of efficient work and have outlived some who seemed to be much stronger physically.

As to mental and social qualifications, it may generally be said that those whose endowments would make them useful at home, can also be very useful on the foreign field. Consecrated diligence and perseverance, patience and a loving spirit, often do wonders and make up what may be lacking in other respects. Some good workers are rather poor speakers of the language. Though they may not speak fluently nor pronounce accurately, they make themselves understood and "get their message across."

The great things for the missionary are, faith, prayer, studying God's Word, and hard work. The greatest thing, the all-important thing, with which hard work and distracting duties should never be allowed to interfere, is close daily fellowship with the unseen Savior: the life hid with Christ in God, the missionary's eyes continually fixed on the faithful Lord who is ever near to those who seek him, whose grace is sufficient for every trial, and who abundantly supplies every need. Every missionary who has tried to do his duty, can endorse the words of Joshua in his parting address to Israel, "Ye know in all your hearts and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you: all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof."

As one takes a survey of the heathen world, there is much to encourage him. "Be of good cheer" is the watchword; for though the work requires patience, yet steady progress is being made.

The situation in China is more reassuring. In spite of famine and floods, bandits and fighting, the Church is advancing.

So also in Japan, Korea, and Africa. The self-support of native churches, which should always keep step with native control, is steadily growing, even in poor congregations.

In India we can trust God's Providence to overrule perplexing political agitation to the good of his people.

While Moslem countries move slowly, yet here also progress is made. The fact that the Arabic language no longer holds the place it once held, cannot but weaken the iron chain of Islam and Koran.

The outlook in so-called Papal lands—often papal only in name—as Mexico, Italy, Spain, and South America—is brightening. The movement for religious liberty is constantly gaining ground; and religious liberty means a blow to false pretensions of a medieval hierarchy, and an open door to the true apostolic faith of the Bible.

Everywhere there is an insistent call, "Come over and help us!" Our risen and triumphant Redeemer says, "GO YE!" Our covenant-keeping Lord now commands as he often commanded Gideon of old, "Go in this thy might (the almighty power of the Holy Spirit) and thou shalt save Israel. Have not I sent thee?"

May many gladly respond, saying as Paul did before Herod Agrippa, "Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision!"

The Vision of the heathen world going down in sin to eternal darkness; the Vision of the nail-pierced hand outstretched in love, drawing all men to himself; the Vision of our own great privilege of being, like Paul, a co-worker with Christ in saving the world!—The Evangelical Student.

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD

(Lesson for March 27)

Lesson Text: John 20:11-20; Golden Text: 1 Cor. 15:20

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Empty Tomb. John 20:1-10

"O fools, and slow of heart to believe," were Christ's words to the two disciples on the road to Emmaus. To us it seems as though the disciples should have understood the plain words of Jesus with regard to his death and resurrection; however, the fact that they never dreamed of such an event is one of the strongest proofs of the resurrection of Jesus. Had not the event actually taken place it would never have occurred to the disciples to say that it had. The empty tomb was not only the vindication of all Jesus' claims; it is also our only hope for eternal life, and it is because he lives that we believe we shall live also. Let us praise God for his power over death, as evidenced by the empty tomb.

TUESDAY

Jesus Appears. John 20:11-18

The angels in the empty tomb asked Mary why she wept, and if she had not turned away so quickly they would probably have told her that her sorrow was needless and that Jesus was risen from the dead. Jesus has sent us all a message that shall comfort us until he himself appears. His message to his brethren (v. 17), is one that has brought cheer through the centuries: His Father, with power to raise Jesus from the dead, is also our Father and our God. Mary hastened to obey the first command of her risen Lord; let us also be careful that we obey his commands.

WEDNESDAY

Jesus and Thomas. John 20:24-31

When Thomas actually saw Jesus for himself he no longer thought of putting his fingers in the wounds of Jesus; rather, we believe he must have felt ashamed of his former unbelief. In the same way many of our own words and deeds will seem rather small and unworthy when we finally see Jesus face to face. We find comfort in the words of Jesus in v. 29, but let us be sure that we really believe—and that believing we might have life through his name.

THURSDAY

Jesus and Peter. John 21:15-25

Not long before this Peter had boasted that though all others forsook him, yet he would remain true to Jesus. He had since learned his lesson, and would make no extravagant claims, simply replying that Jesus knew that he loved him. It is well to remember that Jesus does know whether or not we love him. Jesus told Peter to prove his love by doing his bidding. There is only one way we can prove our love for him to-day, and that is not by asking idle questions as to the future, or speculating about the fortunes of others, but simply by doing the will of Jesus.

FRIDAY

The Great Commission. Matt. 28:16-20

Jesus had appointed a place, and when the disciples came he met them there. He has appointed a place where we too may meet him, and we know that he will never fail to be there if we keep the appointment. Jesus had called them together that he might commission them for service before ascending into heaven, and he first reminded them that his was the power and the right to so commission. Today we believe this last great commission applies to us as fully as to those first disciples; let us look to him for power to carry it out, that we may have the promised blessing of his presence, for it is only as we do so that he has promised to be ever-present with us.

SATURDAY

The Ascension. Acts 1:1-11

Jesus ascended into heaven, but that did not mean that he had no further interest in the affairs of men. He had promised to send the Comforter to teach men more fully the things concerning himself, and in addition we have the blessed promise that some day he will return again. In the meantime he has shown us that we have a work to do, and that we may receive power for that work through prayer and the Holy Spirit.

SUNDAY

The Ever Living Christ. Rev. 1:10-18

If these verses seem rather fanciful in some respects, suppose that you were asked to describe in human words the glories of the God of heaven! But though he lives in glory, he still has a message for his church! And what comfort in the thought that he has the keys of hell and death! Let us pray for that day when shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

THE MISSIONARY CALL

be it in a storm, on the S. S. Samuel Baker, canoes and all!

Whether or not you can go to foreign lands you can intercede. And interceding, you shall receive the end of your faith, even the salvation, not alone of your soul, but of souls!

And he who winneth souls is wise—and not only wise but satisfied, content.

The most precious words my husband left me in his letters and writings were these:

"I shall be content with the lowest seat in heaven if only there I may sit and see the redeemed of the Lord come in from those fields where I have been privileged to be a pioneer missionary. And should I be given a crown, so unworthy would I deem myself to possess it that I should only cast it at the Master's feet." I like to think of him now, occupying some lowly seat in heaven and casting his crown at his Master's feet. I like to think of him as one by one, the Bayou, the Banou and the Unyamweze are being called to enter the presence of the Lamb. I love to think of him as he sees the Kere walk the golden streets.

But there is more. I love to think of him my Lord, who in the salvation of countless members of lost tribes in Africa is hearing their hosannas and is seeing of the travail of his soul—I love to think that he, too, is satisfied!

And here on earth, my own work yet unfinished, my own intercession yet incomplete, I give as my testimony simply this:

I am glad that I have been, now am, and shall be—till my Master shall come or call, privileged to be a missionary! In spite of bereavement, in spite of suffering, in spite of separation, I praise God for the unspeakable privilege. Are there those who read these lines who would share in the missionary endeavor immediately? Will you, like Paul, conclude that God has called you to preach the gospel in your Macedonia? whether that be at home or abroad, Africa, or South America? or elsewhere—anywhere for him? For still they cry—the Macedonians—the Africans—the lost of every land—

"Come over into Macedonia and help us!"

9. "Christianity vs. Churchianity"

Not long ago a popular and beloved ex-governor of one of our New England States died. He had been a member of the Unitarian Church in his native city, but as the building where he had been accustomed to worship was far too small to accommodate those who desired to attend his funeral the rector of the largest Episcopal Church in the city graciously offered the use of his church for the service. The offer was accepted in the spirit in which it was made, and the occasion thus became a most worthy expression of Christly courtesy and hospitality. That was Christianity.

But the story has a sequel. Certain strict ecclesiastics of the narrow sort denounced the broad-minded and large hearted rector as "unfaithful to his trust," and declared that "however great the occasion of those present might be, it was an act of profanation. And all this because one who differed from them in certain articles of belief and who had not been ordained in exact accordance with the traditions of their order had been permitted to hold a religious service in their church. That was Churchianity.

A pastor of another denomination read the account of this occurrence in the daily paper and was filled with disgust at such a display of bigotry. Muttering, "Churchianity," he threw down the paper and went into his study to finish a scholarly and eloquent sermon on the topic, "Why am I a Baptist?" quite unconscious that he was planning to pass off upon his people for the current coin of the realm some of the same worthless counterfeits.

A layman, superintendent of a neighboring Sunday school of a different name, attended the pastor's church the next Sabbath morning. For a time he listened to the sermon with ill concealed disapproval, then he turned his mind to the more agreeable task of concocting a system of prizes and other attractions by means of which his own school might be built up at the expense of other schools in the vicinity. And long before the last hymn was given out he began to have visions of a membership roll larger than that of any other Sunday school in the city. Nor did he dream that the gold of his Christian service and consecration was being exchanged for the brass of churchianity.

The proprietor of a large factory heard the sermon, and said to his wife on the way home that he wished Dr. — would not place so much emphasis on mere sectarianism. He believed in working for the spread of the Gospel over the world. And he gave a great gift to foreign missions and immediately cut the pay of his operatives to make up the loss.

In the same church was a wealthy lady who was always in her place on Sunday and very active in all departments of religious work; but at home she never took any interest in the spiritual welfare of her servants, nor showed any sympathy in their troubles or weaknesses. In fact, she always hired foreigners or Catholics if possible; for then they would not be wanting to go to service just when she wanted to go; and she could not be expected to understand their ways of looking at religious things.

Churchianity is not confined to one or two sects. There are multitudes of people who have a deep seated aversion to Romanism, and who never could be accused of any leaning towards Episcopacy, who yet have their pockets filled with this counterfeit coin. They may not be limited in their interest to one particular church; but none the less their religion is of the church churchly, and does not have that Christly outlook that cared little for the church, but made much of the Kingdom of God.

dance. He seemed at peace when they promised him that they would not.

Mangali died praising God for the way of salvation that he had heard before it was too late.

The devil did not leave the village after Mangali died, but worked all the harder. After the Christian funeral and burial, the people had the usual mourning and wailing.

About two weeks later it was noised about that a celebration was being prepared for the people of the surrounding village in honor of Mangali. Yes, the devil had his way with the people but Mangali was out of the devil's reach. He was safe in Jesus' arms.

It is not for these who are safe with Jesus that we plead but for those yet in the grip of Satan. Mangali is present with the Lord because some one told him the Story. But there are others who, too, would like to know of Jesus' love.

The unreached tribe called Boone is pleading for the gospel message, but there is no one to tell them. No one there to teach them to read that they might know the Book, and spread the message among their own people. No chapel as a light house, no mission station, for there is no one to be sent.

We read that this gospel is the power of God unto salvation to those who believe, but there is no one to go to those who have not yet heard.

I wonder whether we have cooperated with God enough to meet his approval, in his plan that the gospel should be taken to the uttermost parts of the world. Have we walked with God in doing what was our part in being good soldiers of the cross to take the gospel to them, or, in supplying ammunition in the fight, that they might know the way of escape from the devil and have Eternal life?

Results of Past Mission Offerings and the Need for the Present

By the Fosters

In Africa at the present time there are three Mission Stations, which have been made possible by the past offerings of the Brethren people. There are also nine chapels in out villages, and two brick churches and one mud chapel on the stations. Then there are three brick dispensaries fully equipped to serve those to whom the Lord has sent us, and two brick school houses where our boys and some of the girls are taught. They in turn will be able to expound the Written Word to their own people. There are also three large brick store houses, one on each station and such other buildings as are needed. Not only have all these been made possible, but also two large brick houses on Yalouki Station, two brick and one stone house at Bassai and a new brick house being built at Bellevue. We continually praise the Lord for all these material blessings, and for those whom he has been able to use so freely give of their substance in the past.

All this has been wonderful, but there is a greater work than this that has been wrought out in that dark land. Through your gifts the Lord has "Thrust forth workers into his harvest field," who have faithfully preached and taught the Word in many places, villages, highways and byways. And through the preached Word God has been able to build a "Spiritual Church," that is not temporal, but eternal. God is doing a

Out of the Devil's Reach

By Estella Myers

Yes, the devil was having his own way one morning as the people gathered in Mamadous' village for the celebration of Mangali's death. Not many days after he died, the big time was planned. The women of the village were told to make flour and beer for the occasion. The relatives and friends gathered together their goats and chickens for food. Indeed the village was busy preparing for this great feast and dance, for was not Mangali called the "father of the village," so every big man should have in his honor a large feast. When all was ready the drums were beaten to announce to the far villages the coming day when the relatives wished to show respect to Mangali.

The day arrived. That morning the ground was black with people around Mangali's former hut and fireside. It was a hot day, yet the drummers stayed by their playing and the dancers their dancing. The voices of men, women and children were heard as they sang and danced. At times the singing grew faint only to sound louder and louder than ever as new voices relieved the tired one. The noise of the drums would fall to rise again like the sound of a roaring sea. As the sound of all this descended Bassai hill all day and all night, the hearts of the Christians and missionaries were sad.

Mangali lived to be a very old man. The stooped shouldered old man was often seen walking slowly with cane in hand. His thin body was clad only in a loin cloth made of bark. When too weak to travel, he sat beneath his granary. The granary was built high to keep the insects from the grain and at the same time it furnished shelter from the rain and hot sun to those who wished to sit beneath it to chat. At one time in his life he was a very wicked man. He taught the little boys in the bush schools, the customs of the tribe, superstitions, the fearing of evil spirits, appeasing of the idols and immoral ways of the people. He had owned many wives but at the time of his death only one remained.

Life meant nothing to this old man until he met John. John is one of the evangelists who learned to read the scriptures in his own language, outside the school room. He often visited Mangali to speak to him about his Lord. Day after day he prayed with this old man and read from the Word. Mangali became interested and often spent the nights with John that he might hear more of Jesus' love. Months passed by and Mangali drank in the truth.

One day he said to John, "It is the truth. I believe Jesus is the Son of God. I take him as my Savior."

John was so happy, so he brought him to the converts' class. We found he not only had the knowledge of the truth but that his heart was changed. Not only was he converted but regenerated. God had worked his work in Mangali's heart. He was taken down in the baptismal waters and came out happy in the Lord. He attended the services at the church as long as he was able to walk. How he did enjoy the only communion service that was at the church after he became a child of God and just before he died. The old man could not sing but he did love to make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

We often prayed with him on the veranda of our homes and at the dispensary. When he could no longer climb the hill to services he spent his time testifying to his people in the village. He gathered the old men together to warn them of the wrath to come. He knew his days were numbered. He wanted to do all that he could for the Lord he now loved, for he had wasted so many years in sin. How he pleaded for his sons to become true followers of Jesus. He requested that they should not follow the old heathen custom of a feast and dance and drink after his death. He told the chief of the village to prevent it. He talked to the people of his heavenly home and wanted them to meet him there. "Do not mourn" he said "because I am leaving this world for a better one." Just before he died he called his relatives together and repeated over and over his wish that they would not have the great work in the hearts of those people. The boys are taught to be preachers and among the laity there are those who support them by their tithes; also build chapels in the villages. The last Sunday of every month as the believers gather in God's house to worship, they bring with them a little white envelope in which they carry their tithe for the month; not out of the abundance that they have received, but of their little. Many of them would like to buy a new straw hat, or a pair of trousers or a shirt to cover their nude bodies; but they WILL NOT USE THE LORD'S MONEY for their own use. How precious in the sight of the Lord is that spiritual church!

You have had a share in the past, but what part are you having this year in bringing others out of darkness into Light? This great work can only continue and grow as our people support it with their gifts. Are you willing for their sakes, and for the sake of those who are still outside of the church to do without that new Easter bonnet, or that gown that is not needed. Surely, surely, the souls of the lost are of greater value than the material things of this life, that many times are not needed. We must not only answer to those who are lost, but also to our blessed Lord.

WASHINGTON CHURCH BUILDING FUND

(Sixth Report)

Since our last report appeared in the columns of this paper which was quite some time ago, the following contributions have been very gratefully received:

Previously acknowledged .....	$1,888.87
Church at Winchester, Virginia
Loyal Workers' Bible Class .....	2.82
Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Frye .....	5.00
Misc. ....	46.05
Total .....	53.87
From one who loves Christ (name withheld by request of donor) ..	100.00
Pledge made by the First church, Philadelphia, Pa. ....	100.00
Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Shockey, Alexandria, Va. ....	7.00

Total offering made by the brotherhood to date .....$2,149.74

We want to take advantage of this opportunity to thank on behalf of the membership of the local church, all those who have contributed toward our building fund, and to express our appreciation for your interests in the work of this place. Our church has undertaken a large program for this year looking toward the completion of the building which is so badly needed. The contributions received from the people of the brotherhood will make it possible to begin work on the upper structure sooner than would have been the case otherwise. We solicit your prayers for our building program. Pray that, if it be God's will, he will enable us to complete the building in the near future. The basement unit is filled to capacity by the Sunday school and we can not hope to grow more until the building is finished.

We desire to make special mention of the splendid offering made by the Winchester church. When it is remembered that this is a young congregation with its own obligations to meet and only a small number of wage earners, and in view of the present depression, it is considered a fine offering. May the love which prompted these good people to make this gift continue to dwell in their hearts.

Fraternally,

ATTENTION: PASTORS

When the announcement was made at General Conference of the coming new book, "Undaunted Hope," by Dr. Gribble, the thought came to me that "the business of the King requireth haste," and that if one desired to get in on the special rate of $2.50 for the first one thousand, he would have to act promptly. But many did not seem to feel that way. Possibly hard times have made people slow to act, and they are afraid to trust God for the price of the book. It is only a short time till April first and we hear there have not been the required number of orders secured. We have heard that many churches have not been canvassed at all, and the laymen do not realize the great privilege that is theirs. We surely do not want this sister to feel that her wonderful contribution, written to the glory of God, is not being appreciated. It is not to the glory of James Gribble, but to the prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God, who wrought the miracle of the Oubangui-Chari mission. After seeing some of the pictures of the African work shown recently, a mother and father decided that each of their two children should have a copy of the book "Undaunted Hope" but these two sons decided to save money to buy their own copies. So give the children a chance. And by all means solicit your congregations.

BOBBIE'S PRAYER

*Dear Father, there's this other boy tonight,
Who's praying to a god that's made of wood.*

*He asks it to take care of him tonight,
And love him—but his god is made of wood.*

*He is so far, I cannot make him hear;
I'd call to him and tell him if I could,
That You'd take care of him, that You are near*

And love him—but his god is made of wood.

*I know he'd ask You if he only knew,
I know he'd love to know You if he could;*

Dear God, take care of him and love him, too,

The other boy, whose god is made of wood.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

BERINGER-CAMPBELL—On Saturday afternoon, March 5, at the parsonage in Martinsburg, Miss Isabel Campbell, daughter of Brother and Sister Seth Campbell of McKee, Pa., and Mr. Forde Beringer of Hollidaysburg, were united in marriage. The bride is a member of the First Brethren church of McKee and the groom is a member of the Lutheran church.

May the Lord's richest blessings abide upon these Christian young people as they thus launch out upon life's sea together.
R. I. HUMBERD.

IN THE SHADOW

EBERSOLE—After a long trip of several hundred miles, we arrived in Martinsburg, late noon last September. We were strangers in a strange place and only those who have been in similar circumstances can realize the welcome of a good warm dinner. But the hands that prepared that meal now lie in the grave to await the resurrection morning. Mrs. Emanuel Ebersole died at her home in Martinsburg, Pa., February 23, 1932, at the age of seventy-two years.

Three years ago Brother and Sister Ebersole celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. A daughter was born to this union but died at the age of eight years. Three other children were welcomed into this home where they were reared to maturity. Sister Ebersole was a member of the First Brethren church of Martinsburg, having taken the Lord as her Savior some forty-five years ago. Funeral services were held at the home in charge of the writer, assisted by Rev. David Detwiler.
R. I. HUMBERD.

Diehl—Jerome Diehl was born near Blue Knob, Pa., March 10, 1899, and died at his home near Damascusville, Pa., March 3, 1932, at the age of sixty-two years and eleven months. He was united in marriage to Mary Berkey who died January 26, 1931. Eight children were born to this union, five of whom are still living. Mr. Diehl was a member of the First Brethren church, McKee, Pa. Funeral services were conducted at the home, Sunday afternoon, March 6, by the writer.
R. I. HUMBERD.

WOOLLEY—Louisa Lewis Woolley, one of ten children of Samuel and Mary Lewis, was born May 3, 1848, in Miami County, Indiana, where she lived until she was twenty-three years old when she was united in marriage to Albert Woolley. Three children were born to this couple, twin daughters, Mary Mabel and Anna Maud. Mary Mabel died at the age of two months. Maud grew to womanhood and became the wife of Frank L. Rohrer, and is the only surviving child. Ora Edwin, the only son of the deceased, died at the age of two years from whooping cough. The husband died twenty-four years ago March 2.

Mr. and Mrs. Woolley united with the Brethren church at Tiosa, Indiana, at about the time it was erected in 1882.

Besides her daughter, there remain two sisters—Mrs. Sarah Charles of Orlando, Florida, and Mrs. Anna Whistler, of Denver, Indiana, and one brother—William Lewis, of Argos, Indiana; four grandchildren—Mable Miesler and Charlotte Pomeroy of Plymouth, Indiana, Vera Rohrer of Argos, and Mamie Marsh of Port Wayne, Indiana; two great-grandchildren, Frederick Marsh and Barbara Pomeroy.

Sister Woolley was an active member of the First Brethren church of Denver, Indiana, where she resided since the death of her husband.

Funeral services were held on March second in the First Brethren church of Denver, in charge of the writer, assisted by O. A. Lemert, with burial in the Chili cemetery.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

It is the desire of the secretary of the executive committee of the General Conference of the church that those having in charge the preparation of auxiliary or departmental programs will please do so early enough to have said programs in the hands of the general secretary by the first of May. The conference ordered such programs to be prepared by April first, and that would be better. But if you get them to the secretary by May first he can get everything in order in time. Surely a month of grace should be sufficient. And one announcement like this should be sufficient too. Please don't fail us. If your program is not in our hands by May first we are given authority to either furnish program for you or leave your program off the general program as published. A little cooperation will mean no crowding at the last minute.

Thankfully yours,
E. L. MILLER,
Sec. Gen. Conf. Ex. Com.,
Maurertown, Virginia.

What Is It Costing Us? What Did It Cost Him?

What Is Our Foreign Missionary Work Costing Us?

What is it costing the Brethren Church to carry on its foreign missionary activities? Doubtless some are asking this question. Using round numbers, we may say that our work is now costing us $16,000.00 in salaries and allowances for missionaries and their children in Africa and Argentina, and those in preparation in France.

About $12,000.00 is about equally divided between the two Fields during the year for "Field Expenses." These expenses include some of the building being done in Africa, but not all. The larger buildings there have come mostly from special gifts. This amount does not include buildings or repairs to buildings, nor street work done, in South America. But it does include the employment of workers, rental of buildings, and the carrying on of the work under our fine corps of national pastors in Argentina.

At least $8,000.00 more must be allowed if our missionaries are to be allowed to come home on furlough. To leave the African climate to spend every fifth year at home for recuperation, is absolutely necessary for our African missionaries. They labor almost directly under the rays of the African sun. Missionaries are learning from bitter experience that to remain longer on the Field costs them tremendously in physical strength and health.

Medical supplies purchased at home and forwarded to Africa cost at least $500.00,—and more should be sent.

The employment of office and secretarial help at home is costing about $2200.00 at present. The publication of "The Brethren Missionary" calls for about $1200.00. Another $1200.00 will be needed for postage and printing (two very heavy items at Easter time), Board meeting expenses, taxes, insurance, office supplies, tracts, medical examinations, special allowances for missionaries at home, etc., etc. (An itemized list of these expenses last year can be had by referring to our Financial Report published last July, and which will be sent free to anyone for the asking.)

If you will sum up these figures, you will find they will amount for $41,000.00 of our expenditures. (Of course, these are "round numbers" and in this work, making correct estimates a year ahead is difficult.) We have not reckoned with numerous "Special Gifts" that are always a part of our receipts, nor for auto allowance paid by the Board, nor for gifts that go to other missions than our own, through special request of the donors. (We forward such gifts for those who wish it done, giving proper credits.) Nor do these figures include new buildings in Argentina, nor the sometimes expensive street improvements that we are compelled to make from time to time.

It can readily be seen that we should have $45,000.00 for our work to keep it even at par. If new missionaries are to go forward to help the overburdened workers now on the Fields, or if new stations are to be opened, of course, it will cost us more than that. It is the policy of our Board to care for our present stations and workers, and care for them decently, before lengthening our lines,—a policy that some of our missionaries, ready to further stint themselves to meet the great need just beyond, do not accept any too heartily. If the folks at home could have the vision our missionaries have; and if their hearts would throb with the same great love of Christ "for the sheep without a shepherd,"—if the home-folks would be willing to use such finances as they have for Christ and the salvation of the lost, as the missionaries on the Fields are willing to do, there would be no missionary treasuries at home suffering from the "de-roll (including three in preparation in France); and there are also 15 missionary children to whom allowances are still paid. And, remember, we have six national (native) pastors (not including their wives) also in Argentina. These, there, are the equivalent to most of our pastors in the homeland. This makes a complete roll of 35 missionaries in our work on both Fields, saying nothing of their children.

Now, suppose our entire income this year shall amount to $45,500.00 (and won't we be happy if it does!) Divide $45,500.00 by 35, and you have exactly $1300.00. Therefore, each and every missionary the Brethren Church is furnishing to seek out and shepherd the lost sheep in the darkness of paganism, and for whom Christ died as much as he died for us—each and every such missionary is costing the Brethren Church $1300.00 in order to keep him on the Field and furnish him with sustenance and the tools for work.

Remember, that this includes the absolute TOTAL cost, buildings, etc., etc. The missionaries themselves do not divide any such sum among themselves,—"not-by-a-good-ways!" Surely, no one can accuse us of failing to make the most of "a missionary dollar"! Should anyone do so, we should be glad to be advised how we can make more of a missionary dollar, unless you want to starve our missionaries, or deny them the protection of health,—and even life. Also, it should be remembered that it is no small amount of property the Brethren Church has been accumulating on her mission fields, and there is not a single mortgage on all her property, as far as we know. If there is, it would be a few dollars owing in South America, on such churches as the Brethren down there are building and for which they themselves are paying.

Some of these days, our Lord is going to return and call his stewards to account. Dare the 25,000 or more members of the Brethren Church face him in that day, and confess that they have done less than this in obeying his last great marching order, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature"? Yea, we wonder how we, as a Church, shall be able to give an account of our present record, admitting that we gave for this purpose a gift of less than $1.75 a year per capita? Even "hard times",—the hardest of times—will scarcely excuse us for a record like that. Think it over!

BRETHREN, WE DID SO LITTLE LAST YEAR THAT WE DARE NOT MAKE EVEN SUCH TIMES AS THESE AN EXCUSE FOR DOING LESS THAN WE DID THEN! DON'T PERMIT YOURSELF OR YOUR CHURCH TO MAKE AN EXCUSE THAT WILL GRIEVE THE HEART OF THE MASTER WHO LOVED AND GAVE HIMSELF FOR "WHOSOEVER"—i. e., THE WHOLE LOST WORLD OF MEN!

And finally, while we are figuring up what all this work is costing us, we might ask, "WHAT DID THIS WORK COST HIM?"

We will leave that for you to figure!

And begged for bread.
Because it is my pride that none
Shall go unfed*

*I set out bread and meat, and poured
A steaming drink.
He thanked me as he left. But I,—
I sit and think.*

I never broke
The bread of life, doomed souls to whom I never spoke*

Before Thy throne
And plead, "No man cared for my soul!"

A GREAT Pre-Millennial Scholar

Recently through the courtesy of a friend on the Faculty of Pittsburgh-Xenia Seminary I secured a copy of a book for which I have been searching in second-hand book stores for years. Its title is "THE THOUSAND YEARS IN BOTH TESTAMENTS," and the author is the late Dr. Nathaniel West. He was one of a group of noted scholars who taught and held the premillennial view of our Lord's Return, including such men as Dr. A. T. Pierson, Jas. H. Brookes, A. J. Gordon, Adolph Saphir, Wm. G. Moorehead, and others. There were giants in those days.

The book by Dr. West has unfortunately been out of print for years. Eighteen years ago it was recommended to me by Brother Bauman and I read the copy he had in his library. It made a profound impression at that time, and I still regard it as one of the most scholarly and convincing arguments ever written in favor of the Pre-millennial Return of Christ. Dr. West not only presents the Biblical teaching, but also marshals the testimony of the Church's greatest scholars in support of his view. The following excerpts are taken from the appendix of Dr. West's book:

THE Error of Augustine

"With Augustine arose the idea that the Church is the Kingdom, and this, with the changed political condition, and the position of the Church, under Constantine, led to the downfall of the Chiliastic (premillennial) doctrine. The vigor of its life departed, as persecutions ceased, and when Christianity began to sway the Civil Power, this was regarded as the 'Victory' the Millennium had promised. The Middle Age perpetuated this great error." (Semisch. Herzog. Real-Encyc. I 659.)

THE Course of this Age

"The view that Christianity will expand in this age to a World-Religion, and bring the Golden Time, as the product of its historical development, is fundamentally false, and opposed to the Word of God. It rests upon a false ground, the identification of the inner life of the Church with her outward extension. Its consequences are the struggle after Secular Power, National Churches, National Creeds, National Confessions, National Patronage, National Legislation, Propagandism, and passion for Union, fatal to the true life and mission of the Church. We need only remember Constantine's time and the nominal conversion of the masses, mere name-Christians. The hope of a Christian State ending in a Millennium is deceiving. According to the Word of God, the outcome of the development of the Christian Church, in this age, is a great apostasy through which Christianity itself is forced back into the Great Tribulation." (Kliefoth. Christliche, Eschatologie, 196, 197.)

THE Coming of Christ's Kingdom

"Let us guard against the idea that it is either possible or destined, that Christianity will Christianize, in a real spiritual sense, the world in this present age. The kingdoms of this world must first be destroyed. Then only is it possible that, rising in a new form, they will become the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. This view of the world, and of our times, is founded on the Word of God." (Auberlen, Daniel, 288.)

JUDGMENTS prior to the Kingdom

"The Church may succeed in making a worldly caricature of the Kingdom, but let us never allow ourselves to dream that, by thus forming herself according to her model in the midst of the world, the secret and continuing increase of the World-Kingdom and power, with its fatal influence, is interrupted. This interruption is effected, according to Scripture, in a totally different way, even by the binding of Satan, and casting him into the Underworld, at the Second Coming of Christ. Antichrist must first be destroyed, and the Nations judged, before Christianity can ever become a World-Religion." (Hofmann, Weissag u. Erfüll, II 295.)

THE Apostasy of the End

"It is a real apostasy of which the Apostle speaks, and not a mere resemblance. Such is the future now impending, and whose beginnings are all around us. Some resign themselves to a vain hope, and dream that Christianity will, more and more, become a power in human thought and action, and finally complete itself in the synthesis of these two fields of natural and Christian life, so becoming a World-Religion embracing in its bounds the utmost barbarous tribes. On the contrary, the future we go to meet is the complete alienation of the masses from the Christian faith, and finally an open apostasy from the same. Not unity, but the sundering and separation of the religious and natural consciousness; not the union but the disruption of the Church and Civil Society, is the outcome before us. The Christ-opposed consciousness of the age demands a Leader in whom it shall be concentrated, and personally represented, and, in this sense, the Apostle Paul connects with the last apostasy the 'Man of Sin.' " (Luthardt Lehre. v. d. letzten Dingen, 150.)

THE Beast and the Harlot

"The question before us is not a vain one. It forbids us making any alliance with State-Omnipotence, for this would be only worshipping The Beast. Just as earnestly does it forbid what so many would exact of us, on all sides, viz.: That we should stand shoulder to shoulder with the Great Harlot, in order to contend the more energetically against the anti-christianity of modern culture, for this alliance with the Harlot would only be to hinder the making of her "naked and desolate by the Kings of the earth," and the 'eating of her flesh with fire,' an event in which we should go hand in hand with God. On the other side, it teaches us the right answer in reference to the appearing of the Antichrist in the last times, viz., that the sign of his presence is not to be expected first only at the Appearing of the Lord, but on the contrary, that the signs of his presence are even now among us whereby we know it is the 'last time.' " (Dr. Ferdinand Philippi Lehre v. Antichr. 79.)

THE Growth of Antichristianity

"As the First Coming of Christ could only take place when the fulness of the time had come (the end of the 69th week, Dan. 9:26) and the world, in its need of salvation had reached that point with which that salvation could, and must, connect itself, so also can the Second Coming of Christ, bringing judgment with it, only occur when the world has become ripe for judgment, and wickedness has increased to such a height as to draw down upon itself the judgment, and wickedness has increased to such a height as to draw down upon itself the judgment of God. Apostolic prophecy expects, prior to the Second Coming, no Millennium, but the highest development of antichristianity. And this is before us. The whole essence of New Testament prophecy is this, that it seeks, from the 'Signs of the Times,' to recognize the events of the antichristian development, and to stake off the remaining Stadia through which it has to run, then look for the inbreaking of the full salvation with the personal Appearing of Christ." (Dr. Weiss. Theol. Stud. u. Kritik. 1869, pp. 8, 9).

THE Culture of the Beast

"It is decidedly and plainly foretold, in the Scriptures, that evil must attain to its supreme manifestation upon earth, before the Lord comes. In the last times, a great and widespread apostasy from Christianity will take place, and Christendom become a complete Babylon. The Churches will be in a state of corruption because false doctrines and unchristian government will have got the upper hand. Worldly luxury, combined with wealth, trade, and extensive commerce, will exercise a widespread dominion, and ungodliness and debauchery accompany it. But in 'one hour,' i. e., suddenly Babylon will fall, a sudden catastrophe will ensue, and overthrow of the social condition of this whole world, culture and civilization, with its sham Christianity. Then will the Antichrist and the anti-christian kingdom be manifested, even the climax of apostasy, the

Faith Justified By the Resurrection

The most convincing and incontrovertible proof of the genuineness of the Christian faith is the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. No other event in history is more faithfully attested than the resurrection, and none is more absolutely beyond all human comprehension. It is one of those facts that simply cannot be understood or explained. It is wonderful, miraculous—the most outstanding miracle of all time. That is why it stands at the very center of all Christian evidences and is become the most unquestioned and satisfying of all the credentials of Christianity, justifying faith in its every cardinal doctrine, as might easily be demonstrated, if we had the space to consider them all.

The resurrection justifies faith in the claims of Jesus for himself. Jesus made claims for himself which would have stamped him as the world's most deluded enthusiast, or arch deceiver, if he had not once and for all demonstrated their truthfulness by rising from the dead. He claimed to be the Messiah, the anointed of God; the Son of God and the Son of man; the Word made flesh, dwelling among us, having all authority and all power, having the right to discard the old, to institute the new, to forgive sins, to be the object of the church's love, the world's hatred and the most absolute allegiance of all his followers. Either he was the transcendent Christ that he disclosed himself to be, or else he was guilty of the most obnoxious blasphemy of which it is possible to imagine and deserving of the death to which the clamor of the jealous Jewish leaders brought him. How can we be sure which alternative to choose? There is much evidence. His whole life accumulates proof as from day to day he goes about doing good, performing miracles, and teaching the doctrine of the kingdom. But the crowning evidence, an event absolutely unique in all the history of man, is his resurrection from the dead. That is proof indisputable. That put him, where he claimed to be, on an equality with God the Father.

The resurrection justifies faith in the redemptive work of Christ. If Christ did not rise from the dead, then he was a mere man and his dead body still lies buried in some Syrian tomb. If Christ did not rise, he is still dead, and his death had no more to do with the problem of sin than had the death of the malefactors crucified with him. If Christ did not rise from the dead, he cannot redeem others from the power of death, and we have no redeemer, no savior. This is the teaching of Paul, who puts it strongly, as the very pivotal truth of Christian faith. "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins" (1 Cor. 15:17). But Christ did rise, and he was "declared to be the Son of God with power . . . by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:4). The resurrection was established and was declared to be the natural and necessary completion of the atoning work of Christ. "He was delivered for our transgressions and raised again for our justification" (Rom. 4:25). Because Christ arose from the dead, his death has power, his sacrifice is effective, he is become our Savior. In the light of the empty tomb we know that Christ actually did give his life for the sins of the world, and that in reality it was not taken from him; he was not murdered. Jesus himself said: "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have the power to lay it down, and I have the power to take it again" (John 10:18). And he exercised that power, and for a purpose, even as he said: "I lay down my life for the sheep" (John 10:15). In other words, he made himself the sacrifice, he became the "lamb of God" to "take away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). And the efficacy of his atoning work is demonstrated by the fact of his resurrection.

The resurrection of Christ justifies faith in a life after death. And that is one of the most comforting factors in our Christian faith—that we shall live again. The human heart yearns for life and shrinks from the face of death. "If a man die, shall he live again?" That question has troubled men from the dawn of history. No answer has ever been found save in the religion of Jesus Christ, and the answer thus given is that every man shall live again, and we are taught that the faith and life manifested here have much to do with the life that is to come. And the ground on which we are assured of life after death is the resurrection of Christ. Paul says: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" The resurrection of the dead is as certain to take place as that Christ himself arose. And of that fact Paul tolerates no doubt. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15:12, 20). Those who sleep shall be awakened and shall be raised in incorruption. Mortality shall be changed to immortality, and death shall be swallowed up in victory. The victory shall be accomplished through our Lord Jesus Christ, who himself hath conquered death and the grave, and who is "the resurrection and the life." How precious is such faith! How full of meaning!

Dr. Newman Hall used the following illustration to bring out the meaning of the resurrection:

"A chamois hunter of the Alps climbed one of the mountainsides in pursuit of his game, out of the vale of Chamouni up the Mer de Glace, up among the snows of the mountain beyond. Suddenly the snow gave way beneath him, and he fell down, down, several hundred feet. He was not harmed; but, as he arose and looked up, he saw that wall of ice reared on each side toward the sky, and the blue light of heaven alone looked down upon him. How hopeless! Better that he had died at once than in that tomb and in a slow death. But just at his feet ran on the thread of a stream. A thought struck his mind. Streams sometimes flow from out the glaciers of the Alps, bursting from their base into the valley beyond. He thought, 'I will follow that little thread of clear snow-water,' and so while it broadened and deepened he followed on, climbing over the ice, until he at last came to the broadened pool into which the stream sank away. The water was dark and swirled round and round, and sank in the center, and the wall on the other side reared itself before him, and all was lost. The thread of hope seemed extinguished in that dark pool. 'But no,' he said, 'there is one chance yet.' He kneeled upon the snow; he cast aside all his trappings and lifted his heart to the God of the eternal mountains. He plunged into the pool. There was a moment of darkness, unconsciousness, and then he was thrown out upon the bosom of the stream beyond the barriers, in the midst of the singing birds and the green hills and fields and blooming flowers of Chamouni. So shall it be with us when our footsteps come to the dark pool. It shall be but a moment's plunge into the icy depth, a moment's unconsciousness, it may be, and then into the vale whose flowers are more fragrant, whose fields are brighter than any Chamouni, amid the songs of the angels to the welcoming hands of God, our spirits shall joyfully go." "So also is the resurrection of the dead."

The resurrection of Christ justifies faith in his living presence and vitalizing power in our lives from day to day. The exalted Christ himself declared to the apostle John, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore" (Rev. 1:18). And to all the disciples he said, when he commissioned them, "And lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20). Nothing is more important to keep in mind than just that—the abiding presence of the Son of God in our lives. It is good to lift up our voice often and sing—

My faith looks up to thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary;

And yet we may well share something of the feeling of G. H. Knight, who said, "Perhaps I think too exclusively of the Christ who died, and not sufficiently of the Christ who lives and reigns, and is now my living Advocate and Friend forever. At least Paul seems to have thought so when he spoke of the consolation of knowing the 'Christ that died, yea rather is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.' The life of my Lord did not end nineteen hundred years ago! Just that he might not be a local Christ, or a Christ for one age alone, he rose into that unchanging life that knows no periods, no epochs, no time, but is an Eternal Now; and he is with men today." Thank God for our living, reigning, ever-present Lord and only Savior, and thank God for faith that is justified by the resurrection of our Lord.

We call attention to Mrs. Orville D. Jobson's story in this issue on the Mission page, for the children. Adults will enjoy it also.

A revival meeting is in progress at Smithville, Ohio, conducted by the pastor, Dr. G. C. Carpenter. It began on March 13th and is to continue until Easter. This notice slipped our pen last week.

Dr. Bame, editor of the Sunday school lesson publications, has another word this week about the "new" Youth's Quarterly. He says he has gotten a "calling" from the new writer of that quarterly, a calling which he does not resent, because "it reveals the deep motive the author had in mind." We are not given the name of the writer, but it is a high and serious purpose that guides the writing and that will be reflected in the product. If your school is not already using the Youth's Quarterly, give it a trial.

We are informed that the evangelistic campaign recently closed at Muncie, Indiana, with Brother Charles H. Ashman as the evangelist, was another real "victory revival" and that more than fifty confessions were received. Our information was not exact as to number, but we will doubtless soon receive a definite report from the pastor, Brother M. L. Sands. We are in receipt of a report of the dedication of the first unit of their new church building, which will be published next week with the cut which is now being made.

President E. E. Jacobs of Ashland College tells his impressions received from the recent meeting of representatives of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools held in Chicago. He says there was no disposition toward a let down in standards, which means, that in spite of the depression, schools that wish to continue to do recognized work must look well to their financial support. For church schools, such as Ashland College is, the responsibility rests primarily upon the denomination.

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor at Carleton, Nebraska, writes that unusually bad weather and roads have interfered with church and Sunday school attendance, but they have been able to maintain regular services when many other churches were closed. He reports a unique feature, called "human pictures," which he devised and used successfully for increasing interest in his evening services. One confession of faith is reported. We are glad to note that Mrs. Deeter has very largely recovered her health and has resumed the large place of service she occupies in the pastorate.

The merger of Lane Theological Seminary of Cincinnati and Presbyterian (McCormick) Seminary of Chicago has finally been consummated, after having been delayed for nearly two years by legal technicalities, related to endowment provisions. Lane Seminary will cease to exist as a separate institution but will continue its ministry as a part of the Presbyterian Seminary of Chicago, of which Dr. John Timothy Stone is president. Dr. J. A. Garber, a professor in Lane Seminary and formerly head of the department of Religious Education in Ashland College, will be located in Chicago as a member of the merged seminary faculty.

Dr. C. F. Yoder reports a very successful tent meeting held in Rio Cuarto, in a different part of the city from the original mission church. The attendance ranged from 300 to 500—an attendance that would be considered very good for most of our church revivals in the homeland. An average of fifty-five children attended the daily Bible school. It is said that "quite a number of new people professed faith" and desire further instruction. The annual conference of our mission churches in that country was held at the close of the tent meeting, attended by "some fifty delegates" from the other mission stations and by many local people at the evening sessions. At the Field Council general plans for the work and the relocation of workers were decided upon.

There has been quite a widespread demand for pictures of our missionaries for use in Junior Christian Endeavor societies and the children's classes of our Sunday schools. As pictures of these missionaries have been published from time to time, we have noticed that many of our people have cut them out and pasted them on cardboard, hanging them in Sunday school class rooms. One trouble with these pictures has been that they have varied so in size that they did not lend themselves well to the making of a symmetrical picture card. In last week's Evangelist you will find pictures of all our foreign missionaries published in uniform size on two pages that turn together in the center of the paper. If you will lift those pages out and paste them on a large cardboard, you will have a splendid picture gallery of Brethren missionaries for hanging on the walls of your church where the children meet.

The church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, has experienced a real revival of souls and an ingathering under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. Thirty-four confessed Christ for the first time and twenty-three renewed their vows to the Lord, making a total of fifty-seven to strengthen the work of the church at that place. Also twenty young people gave themselves as life-work recruits. Brother Miller sees a bright future for this church under the courageous and energetic leadership of Brother William Schaffer, their pastor. The Sunday school has taken on new life and has greatly increased its attendance since he arrived on the field. Another encouraging feature of the work here is the fact that the unsaved people attend church readily, whereas in the average community it is like pulling teeth to get them to the house of God.

The church at Fort Scott, Kansas, enjoyed a successful revival under the evangelistic leadership of Brother C. C. Grisso and the pastor, Brother L. G. Wood. A severe Kansas storm broke in upon the meeting and interfered with the attendance at a time when they expected to reap their greatest harvest, but still the meetings resulted in eleven additions to the church and the membership was greatly encouraged and strengthened. Brother Grisso believes the future of the Fort Scott church is bright and that it will not be long before it will be able to get along without mission board help. At the Lanark, Illinois, church of which Brother Grisso is pastor, fourteen confessions have been received since his last fall revival, not all of which have been received into the Brethren church. Effort is being made to take good care of the young people at this place, and the various departments of the work are going forward splendidly.

In a personal communication that just came to our desk from an active and loyal layman, we read a comment on local conditions that appeals to us to be worthy of passing on to the Evangelist family, inasmuch as the "trouble" cited is likely more than local. This correspondent said: "Our trouble here is that we take too much time during the year to pay the preacher, and then work about three weeks out of the year. And it's rather hard to convince the people that the other forty-nine weeks count." We are wondering if it is not often true that more time and thought is spent by the church leadership trying to raise the money necessary to meet the cost of existence than in doing the real work of the church, as this thoughtful critic suggests. The implication is that when the church is made a real vital force in the lives of its membership and in the community in which it is located, the financial needs will be forthcoming. And is not the implication justified by experience? There is need of instruction concerning the Gospel means of financing a church, and such instruction ought to go right along with other much needed teaching. But, usually, when the money that may rightly be expected to come from a congregation comes hard, there is something more than financial trouble present, and the remedy must go deeper than mere methods of raising money.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

The wife of Brother Clarence Sickel, missionary to Argentina, has been ill for some time, and the request comes: "Pray that she may find the health needed for her work."

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor at Linwood, Maryland, tells us that his church is in preparation for an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller and asks for the prayers of God's faithful in behalf of the coming meeting.

Brother W. H. Schaffer, Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, says, "Brethren, pray for us that we might accomplish still greater things."

The Empty Tomb

By Frank G. Coleman

TEXT: Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believeest thou this?—John 11:25, 26.

Again we stand before the tomb of the Lord Jesus Christ. Our hearts glow with a strange warmth and sense of security as again we realize that this tomb is empty. Is not this fact, in a very peculiar way, the hope and fear of the world? If those who continue to cry, "Away with him, crucify him," could rid their minds of the tormenting fact of the resurrection the increase in open and violent sins would mount up with lightning like speed.

The empty tomb of Christ guarantees that every tomb will give forth its dead, "Each in his own order." No guard, though doubled and redoubled, will be able to stay the power of God as he calls saint and sinner to life. Though these may be separated by Gods' own time the resurrections are nevertheless sure. Death is abroad because of sin (Rom. 5:12). What untold sorrow and grief death has brought! Five thousand human souls depart this life every hour. Staggering, is it not? as we visualize the endless procession of human beings of every tongue and tribe, of every hue and color, from every point of the compass, trooping across the stage of life, making their bows and passing on lost to everything but God and Judgment. What a nightmare of despair! What a hideous injustice! What a nerve-racking, brain-destroying apparition to have hung about the neck of humanity! How unequal this battle with certain death! Fight as we will, hold out as long as we can, in the end we lose. Certain, sure, no escape, we are doomed. Five thousand executed every hour of time. The most terrible thing in all the realm of human experience. But is it? A friend said to me one day, "The thought of death is nothing, but Oh, how terrible the thought not to live again." I have spent many hours, no doubt, in meditation on that statement. I am convinced that not to live again is by far more terrible to consider than the experiencing of death.

The hopes, aspirations, dreams of each and every one to end at death! The failing light, the trembling hand clasp, the agonizing look, and here it ends. To think of life's dreams—labor of love—planning—hoping—scheming ending here!

Well, much of it may end here, but thank God there is something beyond. God in his infinite mercy and love has provided the empty tomb of "him who became the first fruits of them that slept."

The farther we get from the actual event of the resurrection of Christ the more it is challenged. In this twentieth century, when science and reason have been unduly magnified, the fact of the resurrection of Christ is being questioned more and more. The story of the Roman guard circulated among the Jews shows that the story was contested in that far off day. More modern theories have crept in. Christ swooned, disciples thought him dead, the cool of the tomb revived him.

There are seven frightful consequences of denying the resurrection. Paul sets these forth in the 15th chapter of First Corinthians.

1. Then is Christ not risen. And all of the black hopelessness of despair pictured above is true. Shout it to the maddening throngs of humanity. Tear the hope from every Christian heart. Chisel it off every tomb, erase it from our literature. Put over the entrance to every cemetery, "This is the end." Tell that little mother standing there with the hope of the resurrection in her heart as they bury her first born that it is the end of hope. Nothing lies beyond but despair. Nothing left but the senseless clay. To accept the theory that Christ is not risen is to plunge the needle into the eye and shroud the universe with darkness.

2. Your preaching is vain. Empty, hollow, it comes to naught, for it has lost its heart. The very foundation has been torn away. What is left to preach? Ethics? But why be so particular about ethics—there is nothing beyond, no incentive to moral living, no purifying hope such as John points out. Preaching must go since the resurrection is the foundation upon which the whole super-structure of our faith rests. If there is no resurrection then the foundation is gone and the house crumbles.

3. Your faith is vain. Christ's work is not finished. Prophecy has failed. Therefore the Old Testament scriptures are unreliable and the New Testament is indeed "old wives' fables" born in a nursery to amuse little children. "Your faith is vain," tear up the Bible, hide your face in shame. Christ was after all only a martyr.

4. Ye are found false witnesses of God. Every sermon of hope, every promise of future life beyond the tomb, every statement that God in his overshadowing passion for the souls of man has provided a way of escape—a substitute to die in our stead, who rose a conqueror over death, hell and the grave—is a monstrosity. We are bearers of idle tales, we have lied against God.

5. Ye are yet in your sins. No redemption, no escape, the law has not been satisfied, we are arraigned at the bar of justice guilty, condemned, sentenced to death and awaiting execution. Let humanity accept that and you will send man crashing down the ages to horrible self-destruction.

See the Cains staggering from the presence of God, each crying, "My punishment is greater than I can bear." "Ye are still in your sins."

6. Then those also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished. Draw the veil gently, this scene is too sacred and personal. My loved ones are perished, eternal separation. The anticipation of seeing that "Little Old-fashioned Mother of Mine" has died like a half opened flower. Never more shall I behold her—gone, perished. There is no home yonder for the soul.

An old Norse king one night sat with a group of his court when suddenly a raven flew in at the open window. It fluttered about the room for a time then, finding the open window, it darted out into the darkness. The king remarked, "So it is with man. He comes out of the darkness into the light for a little while and then goes out into the darkness again." "Ah, yes, sire," said one of the court, "But, does not the raven have its nest beyond?"

But there is no home for the human soul, if so be it that Christ is not risen. We are perished.

7. We are of all men most miserable. Indeed, no truer word ever came from God or man, if "Christ be not risen."

The whole fabric of our Christianity is moth-eaten. White robes of the righteous deeds of the saints are dragged in the mud of despair. Misery has cloaked us in the black robes of hopelessness. God forbid!

Hallelujah! Paul follows this with, "But NOW is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept."

Stephen, Paul and John testify to having seen him after his resurrection. Does not the evidence mount higher and higher as we consider the matter? From my study window I can see the bulbs that have slept in the ground all winter sending up their shoots. The words of the late Mr. Bryan come with striking force, "It would hardly seem necessary that Christ rise from the dead to give us proof of immortality. If the Father deigns to touch with divine power, the cold and pulseless heart of the buried acorn and cause it to burst forth from its prison walls; if he stoops to give to the rose bush, whose blossoms float upon the Autumn breeze, the sweet assurance of another springtime; will he refuse the words of hope to the sons of men when the frosts of winter come?"

Greater than all else is the testimony of the Spirit of Truth as he bears witness with our spirits that the death and resurrection of Christ has become the dynamic of God. Paradoxical though it may seem, it is nevertheless true, a death has become the dynamic of life. "Because he lives, we, too, shall live." This is the assurance of "The Empty Tomb." We sally forth this Easter-tide, heads up, the light of victory in our eyes. Our mortal bodies may be first cousin to the dust beneath our feet but our souls are at one with God through faith in the shed blood of Christ on Calvary.

"Hallelujah, 'tis done,
I believe on the Son,
I am saved by the blood
Of the Crucified One."

How do I know? The Empty Tomb.

The Cross

By Walfred J. Johnson

The cross should be the starting place from which the Christian should work. We do not work to the cross but from the cross. The cross should be the central fact in the life of every Christian. It should be that around which our lives revolve. The place called Calvary should be the high spot. Have we allowed this all important fact to be obscured in our life?

Man seems to have a special art for putting the cross in the shadow. The reader should be cautioned against the skillful phrases so commonly used that obscure the cross. We hear much of the Jesus of social welfare, the Jesus of marvelous teaching, the Jesus of community uplift, the Jesus of moral uplift, "the Jesus way" and the principles of Jesus.

From a class of one hundred fifty students writing on the theme, "Jesus the Greatest Character in History," I took the following statements:

"All centuries, races and ages find in him their virtue."

"He was courageous, democratic, self-sacrificing, humble and forgiving."

"He is the most unselfish life in History."

"His influence has contributed most to the progress of the race."

"He is the founder of religion."

These are some of the outstanding statements made by the class; but where do we find the cross in these statements?

The cross occupies the central place in the Bible. The very keynote of the gospel is Calvary. The Old Testament points forward to the cross, and the New Testament points back to the cross. Over the Old Testament could be written the words, "O that I knew where I might find him." Over the New Testament could be written, "We have found him of whom Moses and the prophets did speak."

The cross occupies the central place in the life of Christ. Men want to be remembered for the lives they live, but Christ wanted to be remembered for the death he died.

If the cross is coarse and vulgar, it is because our sins have made it so.

Beware of the man who talks much about "the example of Christ," and "imitating Christ," but leaves out the message of the cross. Rally to the teaching that exalts Jesus as Savior.

"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world" (John 1:29).

"He himself bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Pet. 2:24).

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling.
Naked come to thee for dress,
Helpless come to thee for grace,
Foul, I to the fountain fly,
Wash me, Savior, or I die."

Acton, California.

Why He Triumphed

(We take pleasure in passing on to our readers this splendidly reassuring editorial from The Evangelical-Messenger, one of our valued exchanges.—Editor).

Someone, we know not who, has produced this gem, descriptive of the matchless character of history: "Here is a man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another obscure village. He worked in a carpenter shop until he was thirty, and then for three years he was an itinerant preacher. He never owned a home. He never wrote a book. He never held an office. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never put his foot inside a big city. He never traveled two hundred miles from the place where he was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompany greatness. He had no credentials but himself. He had nothing in this world except the naked power of his divine manhood. While still a young man, the tide of popular opinion turned against him. His friends ran away. One of them denied him. He was turned over to his enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed upon a cross between two thieves. While he was dying, his executioners gambled for the only piece of property he had on earth—his coat. When he was dead, he was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend. Nineteen long centuries have come and gone, and today he is the surprise of the human race and the leader of the column of progress."

How can you explain his triumph? It is the supreme miracle of history, and the end is not yet. Perhaps we are only seeing the beginning of his power and dominion in human affairs, and that the future shall witness his complete dominance over the lives of men and his enthronement in all the high places of authority and power. But whether just at the beginning or near the end, his triumphs in these centuries that have passed challenge our admiration and wonder. What is the key that will unlock the mystery?

Is it not contained in two sentences from our quotation? "He had no credentials but himself. He had nothing in this world except the naked power of his divine manhood." His triumph is that of personality, of character, finding its supreme expression in sacrifice. It was this through which he himself expected to win. What did he say? "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." The Cross was and is his strongest weapon. Multiplied thousands have been conquered by it. They have not been able to resist its dynamic. That matchless Being with "nothing in this world except the naked power of his divine manhood," has accomplished by his sacrificial and atoning death, what no other being ever has or could do. That majestic and illimitable Personality; crucified for our sins, dying in our stead, paying the debt of our transgressions, is the central figure of the Lenten season: more than that, because he is what he is, and has done what he has done, he is our one hope for deliverance from the bondage and dominion of sin both in this life and the life to come.

When Moody was in London, some four hundred clergymen gathered to interview him. For an hour he answered such questions as four hundred preachers, of all shades of belief and opinion, could think to ask. Finally one propounded: "What's your creed, Mr. Moody?" Quick as a flash came the answer, "My creed's in print." In print! Indeed! No one had known Moody to write anything. Four hundred pencils came out of their hiding places to write down the name of the book. Then Moody quietly said: "Isaiah fifty-three, five—'He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities,' and so on through."

It's a good creed. A man mighty enough and holy enough has been found who could make expiation for the sins of the race. He had nothing but his own Divine manhood, but it was enough. Praise his name!

Signs of the Times

By Thomas Gibson

The signs of the times, in reference to the fulfillment of prophecy, are one of the infallible evidences of the authenticity, inspiration and divine origin of the Bible. Did the Apostle Paul have a prophetic vision? Was he divinely inspired by the Holy Ghost? Will his predictions be fulfilled? How can we know a true prophet from a false one? God has made it very clear in his Word. "If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream" (Num. 12:6). "How shall we know that which the Lord hath not spoken?" "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken" (Deut. 18:22).

Yes, the predictions of Paul are being, in a large measure, fulfilled today. "This know also that in the last days, perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy" (II Tim. 3: 1, 2). Has not this prediction come to pass in this age as never before?

"Blasphemers." The writer was visiting in the home of two friends (husband and wife with one little, bright, three-year-old girl). That husband has been so ensnared by the devil as to actually blaspheme in the presence of his wife, child and myself, at the dinner table. And, apparently he thought nothing of it. It was very evident that it had been a common thing. And they were quite astonished when I asked permission to ask God's blessing on the food. Is it any wonder that children are "disobedient to parents", being raised under such environment?

"They will be without natural affection." More affection for the brute than for the human. In cities, you will see women making companions of dogs. Many of them refuse to bear children, bestowing their affection on dogs.

Was there ever a time when so many false accusations were made? They will be "incontinent", unchaste, full of vile passions, and fleshly appetites will be indulged without any restraint. Not receiving any help from God, they will be unable to "bring their thoughts into subjection and obedience to Christ."

They will be "fierce,"—violent, ferocious, having the disposition of a savage, being cruel by nature. Look at the nature of the crimes which are being committed today, by men, women and children. Many of these crimes show shocking cruelty.

Are not those perilous times predicted by Paul, upon us? "Despisers of those that are good." What do you think of the family that refused to hear a gospel sermon on their radio on the Lord's Day, preferring to listen to the report of a football game? One of the accusations that will be brought against the ungodly on that Day of Judgment will be that they "had pleasure in unrighteousness," and had "not love of the truth ... and for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie" and be lost!

"Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." The world is pleasure-mad. They are running here, there and yonder, seeking pleasure. And God's holy day is being desecrated by pleasure seekers, deserting the house and the worship of God for worldly pleasure.

Notwithstanding all of the above vile and ungodly attributes, they will "have a form of godliness." O, yes, it is customary and popular to "have a form of godliness." One could hardly belong to the church without having "a form of godliness." "But they deny the power thereof." They deny that "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" when accompanied in demonstration of the Spirit and in power. Not possessing the power, it is not strange that they deny its existence. Agnostics there are who do not believe in God and soul, claim that they are unknowable, and therefore they deny their existence. Christian Scientists deny the existence of matter and other realities they cannot explain. These Eddyites, because they cannot handle the problems of sin, sickness and death, deny them and tell us there are no such things in existence.

"There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, 'Where is the promise of his coming, for since the father fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Scoffers are here as never before, evidencing the fact that we are in the last days.

Another of the infallible proofs that we are in the last days, is the failure of human governments. All over the world, lawmakers are unable to enact laws which the people will abide by. The people do not want just and holy laws. In fact, many of them do not want any laws. The spirit of rebellion and anarchy is abroad. They do not want righteousness which "exalteth a nation," but sin which is "a reproach to any people." The harvest of sin is about ripe for the sickle, the sword of God's judgments. Soon the cup of God's indignation will be full, when he will make individuals and nations, who have long trampled under foot the blood of Christ, "to drink of the wine of the wrath of God, poured out without mixture, into the cup of his fierce indignation," without the mixture of compassion, pity, sympathy, love or mercy!

The Lord Jesus is coming! Watch and pray!

1816 Woolsey Street, Berkeley, California.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

A CONGREGATION RENOUNCES WAR

When Dr. Albert Edward Day, minister of Christ Methodist church of Pittsburgh, had finished preaching on "If War Comes," a member of his Sunday evening congregation moved that a telegram, expressing the convictions of the congregation, be sent to the President. Dr. Day, fearful lest such a vote be merely a mirror of a passing emotion, cautioned against thoughtless action and assured those present that no expression would be of value unless it represented matured and deliberate conviction. But the congregation, composed of university teachers and students, public school educators, nurses, business and professional men and women, and social workers, persisted. Accordingly, the following message went from the congregation to Washington:

The congregation assembled at Christ Methodist Episcopal church, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday evening, February 7th, by an almost unanimous vote, have requested me respectfully to communicate to you their determination never to participate in nor support another war of any kind. This action is taken in loyalty to what they believe to be the spirit of Christ. They do not propose a defenseless nation but a Christian method of defense—the sturdy spirit which guns cannot intimidate, which will suffer rather than inflict wrong, will die rather than kill, will if necessary meet charging infantry with changeless ideals. We urge you to employ every influence at your command to secure a peaceful settlement in the conflict between Japan and China, and to refuse to lead this nation into war upon this or any other occasion of international misunderstanding.

Dr. Day, in telling of this experience, admits that he was surprised to find the extent to which his congregation was at one with him in what he had feared was an unpopular conviction. Might not many other ministers, if their congregations were given an opportunity to express themselves, find that there is far more readiness for the Christian renunciation of war than they have dreamed?—The Christian Century.

STANLEY JONES WILL REMAIN IN INDIA

Expected by his friends to attend the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, hundreds of invitations from churches, conferences, mission boards, summer assemblies and other gatherings throughout the United States and Canada reached Dr. E. Stanley Jones in India. But he refuses to leave India at this time which he regards as one of extraordinary opportunity. During December he conducted in Bombay a series of gospel meetings—"really remarkable in the crowded houses and close attention to straight messages on Christ as Savior. The question hour was equally remarkable in the revealing of real heart hunger. In the last meeting about 400 stayed with the definite response to an appeal to seek and find God through Christ and more than 100 signed the inquirers' cards."

Dr. Jones' cablegram of refusal to leave at this time said: "After prayerful consideration I have decided not to return to America until January, 1933. Coming now would mean two years' absence from the East. I cannot bear to leave when all life moulds are breaking, when the East was never so confused, but never so eager to receive what Christ offers. Ask America to stand by."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

BAPTISTS MOVE TOWARD UNION

The presidents of the two Baptist conventions, north and south, completed a tour of the larger cities, when they reached Washington on January 15 and met the Baptist constituency at Calvary Baptist church. A memorial has lately gone out from the Baptists of this border city to the executive bodies of both conventions, calling upon them to foster in every possible way efforts to bring about a closer relationship between north and south, with union as the ultimate aim.—Selected.

WHAT LINCOLN SAID

To all the "Wets" in America, and especially to all our Protestant Church members who are inclined to be sympathetic with the "Wet" cause, we respectfully refer these significant words by Abraham Lincoln: "The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals and threatening its destruction, and all attempts to regulate it will not only prove abortive, but will aggravate the evil. No, there must be no more attempts to regulate the cancer; it must be eradicated."

That states the case exactly. Every "Wet" proposal is an attempt to regulate the cancer. Prohibition aims to eradicate. You must take your choice—either Prohibition or some form of permission. And every form of permission is an attempt to regulate the cancer. Ask any physician whether that is a possibility, or whether any such attempt is merely a demonstration of unspeakable folly. We simply dare not make terms with a cancer. Such efforts, as Lincoln said, will "not only prove abortive, but will aggravate the evil."—Reformed Church Messenger.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

Study No. 2

Rom. 9:21, 22: "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" What if God willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much longsuffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction. And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory?"

We had been studying how God's Providence seemed to favor many careless, if not wicked people, and that his heavy hand rested upon his children who were trying to walk uprightly, but that we would make a mistake, if we did not wait until the returns were all in, so to speak. You will recall the story of the shepherd boy who was stripped of his clothing by his brothers and put into an old cistern to die. These brothers did not like Joseph, and all because his father did like him. Imagine him saying to himself, "How can God be just and suffer this to befall me? They have taken my coat and left me shivering here. They have taken all my parched corn and left me here to starve. My father will mourn my loss and there will be no one to comfort him. No, there is no justice in a God who will permit this indignity." And it did look that way. But a few years later Joseph was a great power with the monarch of Egypt. Now ask him what he thinks of Providence, and he will say, "I would not be on this throne had I not been cast into that pit by my jealous brothers." And is not that the teaching of God again, and again? The life which we are now living can not be measured by a short span. God is desirous of making the best of us. He has very poor material to work with; but he not only has all time for his work, but all eternity beyond this vale. Storms there will be; I think I know. I also know it is best to trust such a gracious Father.

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning Providence
He hides a smiling face.

"Blind belief is sure to err
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter
And he will make it plain."

We may not understand his Providence; but we see too little of it to make out a case of injustice against God. Some rascal may have our coat now; but he may be in the pit in some future time. If God's Providence seems to be a puzzle now, we are not mistaken in reference to the Word of his Grace. He gave up his Son to die, and to triumph over death "for all." His life was the only perfect expression of JUSTICE which this world ever saw. He dealt fairly with all. He was never charged with wronging any man. "We know that thou art no respecter of persons", was heard of him, even by his enemies. Fair-play was his invariable rule. The ruler who was forced to sentence him was led to say, "I find in him no fault at all." Then again: the benefits of that victorious life and wonderful death are offered alike to all. And all, alike, must accept him by faith. No favoritism is shown. "All men." "All nations".

Then under such just and impartial leadership, he leads me to see the necessity of being fair with (1) myself, (2) with others, and (3) with God. How easy to be unfair with myself. I am a complex being, and there is ever "a war with my members." My meaner self is constantly trying to get the upper hand of my better self. I am in constant danger that I may wrong my soul. My big problem is a soul problem. "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" This fair, impartial Son of God forces that on my attention again, and again. I wrong my soul when I exhaust my time in silly pleasures. I wrong my soul when I refuse to accept his pardon.

We are not fair with our fellow man when we take undue advantage of him in business depression, or try to break down his influence. What scores will have to be evened up in politics, in business, and even in religious activities. Some men delight in the game of killing somebody off. No wonder God must have two worlds to straighten out all the crooked places in our dealings with one another. But he will, although it takes so much time.

Leviticus

Genesis, Exodus, and Leviticus are the A, B, and C of all true religious knowledge. Genesis presents a picture of man fallen; Exodus portrays man restored to fellowship with God; Leviticus provides the rules and regulations whereby man may walk in the way of holiness and be in constant communion with God.

Leviticus is the book of the sanctuary. "And he called" (Vay-yikra—Hebrew) is the meaning of the title of the writing. It is a book of laws and served as a handbook for priests and Levites. It sets forth the duties of ministers in the tabernacle and provides for the instruction of the people in the worship of Jehovah. God gives to the children of Israel laws peculiar to himself and thus causes them to become a nation of worshippers "redeemed by blood, separated from idolatry, undefiled and beloved as a peculiar treasure."

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Moses.
2. When Written. 1500-1450 B. C.
3. To Whom Addressed. To Israel.
4. Occasion. To provide laws for the worship of Jehovah.
5. Authenticity. The Jews recognized the law as that of God.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK (CLASSIC)

1. The Provision for Worship (Atonement) Lev. 1-10.
2. The Requisite of Worship (Holiness) Lev. 11-22.
3. The times for Worship (Consecration) Lev 23-27.

or

1. Dedication—(The Offerings)—Provision for Approach. Lev. 1-7.

2. Mediation—(The Priests)—Appropriation of Provision. Lev. 8-10.
3. Separation—(The People)—Conditions of Appropriation. Lev. 11-22.
4. Consecration—(The Feasts)—Benefits of Approach. Lev. 23-24.
5. Ratification—(The Signs)—Symbols of Relation. Lev. 25-27.

III. THE THEME OF THE BOOK

In Leviticus sacrifice is revealed to us as the righteous BASIS, and the priesthood as the holy MEANS for drawing nigh unto God. Sin is recognized and redemption is provided.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Language. Legalistic.
2. Key Words. Holiness or Holy (Occurs 119 times variously), Blood, Atonement.
3. Key Verses. Lev. 17:11; 19:2; 20:7.
4. Key Chapter. Chap. 16. (Atonement).
5. Key Topics. Sacrifice, Priesthood, Feast.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The true value of Leviticus consists in its "revelation to man of the Divine purpose of redemption."

Dr. Kellogg, moreover, avers that this volume of the sacred Scriptures has a five-fold revelation for the Christian:

- "1. The Character of God.
- "2. The Fundamental Conditions of True Religion.
- "3. The Principles that Should Guide Human Legislators.
- "4. The Work of Christ.
- "5. The Prophecies in Types of Things to Come in the Kingdom of Christ."

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Certainly no other book of the Pentateuch is so rich in types, figures, and dispensational teachings as is Leviticus. Christ is the Offerer who became man to meet the holy justice and rigid requirements of God; he is the Victim—sinless and spotless—who was offered to save man from the consequences of sin; he is the Great High Priest or Mediator for us before God himself. Not one sacrifice, not one action of the priest, not one feast is without its marvelous significance for us and in us. Read anew Lev. 4:18; Heb. 13:10-12; 9:22.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

1. Man is defiled by the transmission of sin; he cannot cure it or remove it; he remains defiled; but God has made provision for the removal of sin. That is the message of Leviticus.

2. Redemption is based upon righteousness; redemption is realized by blood, which means, life poured out as water from a vessel; redemption precedes holiness.

3. The principal rules of conduct laid down in the Levitical law still are in force. They, although made full in Christ since grace has been offered, still have a spiritual application in our day. Let us hear Dr. Sampey on the point:

"(1) All offerings to God must be without blemish. He requires a perfect offering (Lev. 1:3, 10; 3:1, etc.). There was more leniency in free-will offerings, as not matters of debt, but of gift to God (Lev. 22:23).

"(2) The first-fruits belong to Jehovah (Lev. 23:10). Do we put our religious offerings last of all? or does God come first?

"(3) A sin unwittingly committed must be atoned for as soon as discovered (Lev. 4:2, 13, etc.)

"(4) Official position brings corresponding responsibility, the sins of rulers calling for more expensive offerings (Lev. 4:3, 22, 27, 32). Is it worse for a pastor to refuse to pay his debts than it would be for a layman? See Matthew 5:19 for the sin of false teaching.

"(5) Restitution in the case of theft or other wrong must be made (Lev. 5:15, 16; 6:5; 22:14; Num. 5:6-8. Compare Ex. 22:1-15). A professing Christian who takes the bankrupt law and afterwards grows rich, without paying his debts, should be sent to school to Moses.

"(6) Care should be exercised in the cultivation of a life clean in every respect (Lev. 15:31; 18:30)."

First Brethren Church of South Bend, Indiana

EDITORIAL NOTE

(It was the writer's privilege to be an attendant at the Brethren Sunday School Institute held at the First Brethren church at South Bend, Indiana, on Tuesday, March 8, 1932. The Institute was well attended, teachers and officers coming from all directions in Northern Indiana. This was a rather remarkable thing in view of the extreme winter weather of last week. The laymen of these churches were given every opportunity to participate in the sessions. They prepared their addresses in splendid fashion and the resulting consequence is that they are to be shared with our workers over the brotherhood. They were of considerable interest and inspiration to the hearers.)

The Cabinet Meeting

By Supt. Samuel Sharp, Nappanee, Ind.

When an individual makes preparation for a particular occupation, calling, trade or business which he intends to make his life work and to which he devotes his time he is said to have a vocation. Therefore if a graduate from some School of Religious Education should direct the educational development of his church or Sunday school his directorship is a vocation.

Then there are those who are followers of a certain calling or pursuit such as—lawyer, doctor, dentist, bookkeeper, school teacher, housekeeper, farmer, etc. and who take time from their regular business to act as superintendents and teachers in the Sunday school. Time spent at this work is their avocation.

From this last named group, men and women who are busy six days of the week with their regular business, comes the leadership and teachers in the Sunday school and they are able to accomplish so much because their precept is Christ Jesus. This group makes up that body or committee known as the Sunday School Cabinet, Council Meeting or Workers' Conference.

Who are members of the Cabinet? First the pastor because after all he is really the head of the Sunday school, the superintendent and elected officers, the selected officers and I think it a fine practise to include the teachers. The departmental heads of course are selected officers and it is a fine thing for a Sunday school to include in their working force a Bible School Committee headed by the pastor and general superintendent and including the department superintendents. The work of this Committee will be to consider the qualifications of teachers entering the different divisions.

Why Have a Cabinet Meeting?

1st. The National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church recommends that ten meetings a year be held and requires that six be held in order to gain seven points in the Standard of Excellence for Brethren schools. And what superintendent with a vision for the growth in numbers and educational development of his Sunday school does not wish to measure up to this Standard as nearly as possible?

2nd. The problems that confront the superintendent and which he does not care to decide upon alone can be settled by this executive group much better than by bringing it before the entire school where many undisciplined minds must be dealt with.

3rd. It gives each leader and teacher that is always busy in their own department a general idea of what is going on in the other departments. This is made possible by the reports and general discussion of problems.

How to Conduct a Cabinet Meeting

The general superintendent may plan his own program or he may appoint a committee to conduct the meeting. In either case some central thought should be carried out in the devotional part. Following is an outline—

Hymn—"Work For the Night Is Coming."
Scripture Reading ... Matt. 7:15-21.

The Author "Calls" the Editor

Nobody likes to be "called," I presume. But here is one time when the "calling" did not hurt. It came from the writer of the new Youths' Quarterly as a result of the "boost" the editor tried to give it in a recent Evangelist. The author must have believed that the editor had not quite exactly represented the work, and maybe he did not. But the editor thought the folks interested might desire to know how the author felt about the "boost" and besides, it reveals the deep motive the author had in mind in writing the lessons. Let me quote:

"I have dealt with the problems of youth only when it seemed apropos as it were indirectly. I think that the truths of the Gospel should take the major emphasis and that the "Problems" should be dealt with only as they come up incidentally.

"Each individual teacher has the key to problems in his personal relations with the class members. He knows them and he knows their problems. I do not think that any formal attempt to deal with problems in the lesson discussion or lesson-help would in any way assist a teacher who has not the interests of the pupils at heart.

"Some writers commit to the problems of youth, problems of war, peace and other problems of social behavior. The problem of the student is a personal problem for, after all, belief in the Bible and the Church is a personal matter and the message of the Bible and the Church is a personal message. Of course, the teacher must begin where the pupil is and lead to greater truths." The closing word of this writer is, "If I am not right in this matter, please set me right."

Well, the editor has no disposition to try to set the author right. The purpose thus set forth ought to inspire the teachers of the youth of the Brethren Sunday schools to look into an author's product who thus boldly and avidly gives the activating motive of his effort. That's why I have passed on to you this paragraph from the writer's letter to the editor. We believe it will bear inspection in the light of the above explanation. We believe more classes could use it with profit.

GOD IN CREATION

(Lesson for April 3)

Lesson Text: Gen. 1:1-2:7; Golden Text: Gen. 1:1.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

The Story of Creation. Gen. 1:1-5; 26-31

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. The account in Genesis is rather meager—just an outline instead of the full details our investigative tendencies desire; we cannot be sure of just how long it took, or of the exact method by which God created the world, but the important thing is that by his express command and with definite purpose God did create the world. Having created it, he commissioned man to have dominion over it, and we must give God the glory even for man's development of the earth's resources.

TUESDAY

God the Creator. Isa. 40:18-26

The invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead (Rom. 1:20). The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork (Ps. 19:1). The poet has also said that the heavenly bodies were "Forever singing as they shine, 'The hand that made us is divine.'" How different is such a Creator from the created images men have made! May we suggest that men still fashion gods after their own fancies, the only difference being that they fashion them of mental concepts rather than of wood and silver. Let our whole worship and allegiance be to God the Creator!

WEDNESDAY

The Purpose of Creation. Rev. 4:1-11

Let us not suppose for a moment that all things were created merely to satisfy a passing whim of fickle deity. "For thy pleasure" has a much deeper meaning. It is our Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom; and again, "It pleased the Lord to bruise him." It was our Lord's wish that the world come into being as a habitation for man, and that man should become not merely his created servant, but his friend. What pleasure and joy it gives him when human souls own him as their Maker and Redeemer: "There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth!" By him and for him were all things made—let us fulfill our part of the plan of creation by living our lives for him.

THURSDAY

The Works of God. Ps. 33:1-9

Everywhere we look, as we see the beneficent providence of nature we can only exclaim: "The earth is full of the goodness of the Lord!" If this is true today, what must it have been like before man fell and the curse was pronounced upon the earth! The day is coming when the curse shall be removed, and even the "desert shall blossom like the rose." We are told that our mighty God loveth righteousness (v. 5); if we wish to serve him in love and righteousness God will give us power to do so.

FRIDAY

Creation by Christ. Col. 1:9-17

This passage makes clear the unity between God the Father and God the Son; it is frequently overlooked that it was Jesus himself who in the beginning created all things. It will be well worth re-reading the first three verses of the first chapter of John. Jesus evidenced the same power in the miracles he performed during his earthly ministry—and the greatest miracle of all was our redemption, which he wrought through his death and resurrection. Let us pray with Paul (v. 10), "That we might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing."

SATURDAY

The Creator's Care. Ps. 104:1-14

Having created the earth, God did not withdraw to a distant heaven and leave the earth and his creatures to take care of themselves; rather, this passage forcefully reminds us that it is his hand that provides for our every need. Let us never fail to acknowledge this, by giving thanks before meals, by giving our testimony of praise whenever occasion offers, and by living out our thanks. Remember, we are of much more value than sparrows or lilies of the field!

SUNDAY

The Creator Praised. Ps. 8:1-9

Some one has made the point that during the earthly ministry of Christ all the elements of nature yielded to his will—the winds and waves, the loaves and fishes, broken bodies and ruined souls—but that man alone rejected him. The whole creation groaneth together, waiting for his coming: let us join with all creation in praising him who brought us all into being, who has kept us every moment, and has redeemed us for his very own.

Spiritual Coins and Counterfeits

By C. D. Whitmer

10. "Fruit vs. Foliage"

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp—
The man's the gowd for a' that."

Thus says Robert Burns; and all the world says Amen. Yet while we join heartily in the chorus, and mean it too, we often find ourselves coveting the mere externals of rank or reputation or culture or some other accident of humanity, and rejecting the pure gold of manhood. And unfortunately the "guinea's stamp," is as easily impressed upon brass and pewter as upon silver and gold. A rascal may acquire the polish of the dancing school or the manners of polite society no less easily than the man of sterling worth; but he is none the less a rascal for all that.

For this sort of counterfeit our Lord has given us a simple but infallible test. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Now all such things as rank, reputation, respectability, yes, even culture and learning and polished manners, are but the ornaments of life, the leaves of the tree.

Character, character, that is the fruit and that alone. The life that fails in point of character, though it attain largest worldly success and honor is a fruitless life.

Listen to St. Paul, "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." What, not a word about intelligence and learning and respectability? No, not a word. He does not even mention religious fervor and prayer meeting piety. Why? Because these after all are nothing but leaves.

Of course leaves have their value and mission in the world. A tree without leaves is not an object of beauty. Leaves often lend a grateful shade to the weary and sun scorched traveler. They suggest coolness and refreshment. Still fruit is the important thing. The fruitless tree, be it ever so beautiful, has missed the chief end of its existence, and has forfeited the promise of continued life.

We would not disparage the foliage of life. Polished manners, a cultivated mind, a good reputation, all are good as far as they go. They add to the pleasure of living, and temper the heat of life's journey and toil. As the seer of Revelation has it, "The leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations." But they are not sufficient for the needs of men. Learning, or refinement, may gloss over the ills of life; but they do not heal them. Studied politeness may hold evil passions in check or conceal them. Reputation cannot save a soul, nor can a good appearance satisfy the heart hunger of humanity. Character alone can do that. Only the actual cultivation of the Christly spirit can fit man for the heavenly life, or make him a fountain of strength for the weak and needy.

Do not despise the external. On the other hand, do not be deceived by it. It is better to be than to seem; but best of all to be what you seem and to seem what you are.

South Bend, Indiana.

THE LOOKOUT COMMITTEE

I. Aims.

1. To increase the society in size.
2. To prevent old members from becoming lax in duties and attendance.

II. Organization.

1. Chairman.
2. Secretary.
3. Two or three other members, with definite assignments of work.

III. Routine.

1. Monthly meetings.
2. A detailed, constructive year's program.

3. Monthly written reports submitted to the society president.

4. Records of all statistics.

IV. Program Regarding Old Members.

1. Keep accurate record of attendance at all meetings.

2. Send cards to absent members telling that they were missed.

3. Personal visitation of absentees if cards fail.

4. Send cards to all persons reminding them of consecration meetings.

V. Recruiting New Members.

1. Sources.

- a. Personal friends.
- b. Newcomers.
- c. Sunday school.
- d. Day-schools, etc.

2. Points of contact.
  - a. Invitations to meetings.
  - b. Socials.
3. Socials, when well planned, are frequently valuable in first introducing new members to the society. Follow the social with an invitation to the meeting.
4. When the prospect does come to the meeting, pay some attention to him; let him see that you are glad he came. Give him a part in the meeting which you think he can handle. Then send him a card during the week following, thanking him for coming, and extend an invitation to the next meeting.

5. When the prospect has signified his willingness to join the society, after having considered the pledge, make his introduction into the society a simple ceremony.

6. Get the new member into the "C. E. habit" of regular attendance.—The C. E. Reveille.

ning attendance was large and some fifty delegates came from the branch missions.

The program centered in the theme of evangelization and all present were greatly inspired by the splendid addresses. Several workers of other denominations were present. Professor Ferrari of the National College of Villa Mercedes was present with his wife and both took part. Mrs. Ferrari is a daughter of Evangelist Varetto who held short meetings for us in Tancacha and Rio Cuarto.

The very Catholic family that lived next to us all these years moved out recently and the lawyer who bought the place kindly loaned the house for the use of the women. Several stores loaned beds also. The men had the free use of another vacant house a square away so that there was room for everybody. All ate together under one of the large grape arbors of the mission, the cooking being ably managed, as before, by Sister Nielsen, aided by Sister Larsen and others. Everyone seemed to be quite contented. A few remained some days after the conference was over.

At the beginning and close of the conference we had meetings of the Field Council and arranged to have Brother Pisani go to seminary this year while Brethren Siccardi, Sotola, Jr., and I will continue with the tent, aided by the different pastors. We are now in a campaign in Alejandro which will be reported later.

Miss Nielsen and Miss Larsen have gone to Tancacha for Vacation Bible School work two weeks. Brother Yett is preparing to leave next month on furlough. Brother Sickel has felt obliged to take his wife and children to Rosario to secure proper medical attention for Sister Sickel. Pray that she may find the health needed for her work. Brother Zeche will move to Huinca Renanco and care for that work and Realico.

Last but not least we have the addition of a learned monk, recently from Spain, who for a long time has studied the Bible and has been preparing to leave the environment of hypocrisy of the convent. He escaped Sunday evening and came to the mission, but the most interesting story of it all I will leave for Brother Romanenghi to relate.

C. F. YODER.

YOU AND I AND THE DOTTED LINE

Some folks take the depression seriously. Some don't. And some others just appear to. There's the case, for example, of the famous American author who galloped gallantly, his spear atilt, into Harlan County, Kentucky, to do something big and brotherly by the miners there. That the miners of that area badly need something big and brotherly goes without saying. Harlan County, if half that we're told is true, makes a spot on our map blacker than the coal that comes from its pits. But our galloping author turned out to be the man not to do it. For, in the course of human events down there, someone asked some questions. And it transpired that the crusading visitor earned some $35,000 a year. The next question—which concerned the amount of that total that went for relief—left the notable in question as flat as a pricked balloon. Ever the gas was gone.

There probably aren't many of that ilk we hope there aren't. Neither our religion nor our civilization can run the risks of irresponsibility in this crisis.

West African Folk Stories

By Mrs. Orville D. Jobson

II. Fireside Stories

(Editor's Note—This is the second of Mrs. Jobson's African Folk Stories, written for the children of the Evangelist family. This story is from the Bulu Tribe. She promises to send at least one a month. Watch for them; don't miss one.)

The gray dawn came running swiftly through the forest, dripping silver drops from her silver garments as she ran. The little brook murmured a welcome, the little leaves quivered, the grasses waved a greeting as 'twixt the tall trees she sped. She rustled softly through the leafy branches where the little birds slept. "Wake up!" she whispered into each downy nest. "The sun is coming! Sing your songs of morning and rouse the sleepy children shut up in their gloomy huts. Sing! Till the little doors shall be taken away and the paths shall be full of running feet!"

And in the tree tops the birds awoke with a flutter and a twitter. The parrots screeched and whistled till the sky was filled with their noise.

Below them in the village streets the wee bark huts awoke. The little doors were taken away and out stepped the sleepy children, yawning and stretching and shivering in the still, damp dawn. Mothers emerged from the doorways, sleepy little brown babies clinging to their necks. Fathers appeared with little sons stepping close behind them. And toward the grass roofed chapel they wended their way to pray.

Obam snuggled up close to his father on their pole seat near the door. His boyish voice rang clear in the words of the song. He listened with eyes and ears intent as the words of the Book were read.

Suddenly from the forest came a sharp cry. Somewhere a boy shouted in response—then another, then another "A rat! A rat! A huge, big rat! Come, help catch him, quick! come!"

Obam started from his seat, his heart pounding with excitement, a shout upon his lips. He checked it just in time and sank back sheepishly to hide beneath his father's arm. He breathed more freely, he was in God's house, and one must reverence God's book. If he called himself a child of God he must not run away from prayers to chase a rat. And yet—what sport! He tried to listen to the prayer but his ears strained to catch the triumphant shout that would proclaim the chase was over. Perhaps—his heart took hope at the thought—perhaps the prayer would be quickly over and he would be free to join the hunt before it was too late. But no! on went the prayer, and in the little pause that finally followed Obam heard the cries of victory and knew the game was over.

The closing song was sung. The villagers filled out through the narrow doorway and turned their faces homeward. Obam followed clasping his father's hand more tightly than usual. Out from the forest came an excited group of boys holding high in their midst the delectable rat. "Look, Obam!" they cried. "Just see what you missed! Isn't he a big fellow? Just look how fat he is!"

Obam looked—and felt his mouth water! it had been many moons since he had tasted meat. Quickly he turned his eyes away. The voices of his comrades taunted him. Almost he hung his head—but not quite. For in a moment there came to him a voice, still and small was the voice, but clear as a bell and sweet. And Obam knew that a child of God had pleased his King that day.

Argentina

Since our last report only several weeks ago a great deal of news has accumulated but there has been little time to report it.

First, the tent campaign in Rio Cuarto was a great success. Only one meeting was hindered by rain although a number of storms broke shortly after the meetings were over. The attendance ranged from 300 to 500 and the attention was very good. Over 160 children came to the Bible school although the average attendance was only 55. These were practically all new children from the district of the tent and a number of them now go to our central Sunday school.

Quite a number of new people professed faith and desire more teaching in preparation for membership. The pastor and other workers in Rio Cuarto have plenty to do.

Following the campaign in the tent came the annual conference during the first three days of carnival. Home work and water throwing in the streets hindered the local attendance at the day sessions, but the eve-dustrial city which, with its Community Chest Drive under way, decided to make appeal to the head of the city's biggest industry. This man was rich and pious. He went regularly to church. He believed in the good old gospel, the older the gooder. He wanted every one to have religion, a nice, comfortable, other-worldly religion. But, every year, when the Community Chest representatives called on him he turned them away without a cent.

"If there are hungry folks in this city," he said, "it's their own fault."

This year two preachers were sent to make the call—one of them the minister of his own church. Again he had a ready-made "no" for their appeal. Whereupon one of the preachers cut loose with a very modern but a very orthodox application of the Sermon on the Mount that was as scorching as it was specific.

"I'm a minister of the gospel," he concluded. "Folks and their welfare are my stock in trade. You can't tell me that the hungry children of our town are their own fault and get away with it. I know, and so do you, that there aren't enough jobs to go around. My gospel tells me that I'm my brother's keeper. It tells you the same thing. Every man in this town who passes by on the other side of that responsibility in this crisis is a Christian liability that neither my preaching nor your prayers can compensate for. If you know the same Christ that I know you're as sure as I am that he's here, right now, his heart burdened with the cold and hunger of men and women and little children waiting to see what you're going to do about it."

What he did about it was to sign on the dotted line.

And that's what you and I will do about it. We'll do what we did last year and the year before—only we'll do more because there's more suffering. We'll do more in our own communities for our neighbors-in-need. And we'll do more for those farther neighbors whose need is just as great. We'll look after the needs of our own communities. And we'll also stand by the Brethren Benevolences and Missionary work. We'll give proof that the tribe of the Priest and Levite has greatly shrunken and the tribe of the Good Samaritan gloriously increased.

The economic depression is a challenge to the stability of our economic order. But more important than that, it is a challenge to the reality of our Christian faith. What we may say about Christianity tomorrow won't matter much unless we can act like Christians today.—Adapted from Stanley High in Christian Herald.

ment which is made to me by the public is: "You Brethren people always have good evangelists for your revivals," and Brother Grisso maintained that good record while here. I have known Grisso for many years, but this was the first time we have worked together in a campaign, and I can say it was very pleasant and agreeable to say the least. His messages were of a very high order and they were never wanting in the "Brethren approach" but always rang true to the tenets of our faith and practice. We did considerable calling during the afternoons among members and prospectives and this I consider very important, for the deepening of interest in members and also leading souls to Christ.

We were very pleased to have Grisso with us at this time, not only because of his personality and messages, but also because he is a member of the Mission Board and has a keen interest in this, as well as our other mission points.

This meeting came at a time when there was considerable sickness in the city, and some of our families did not get to the meetings at all on that account.

Early in the second week of the meetings the severest winter weather of the entire season settled down upon us, and this hindered the attendance at the time when we were expecting to reach a climax, but the meeting continued until Wednesday, March 9th with good interest. We went out to Godfrey one Sunday afternoon and Brother Grisso gave his Chart lecture to an appreciative audience. The result of this meeting was eleven accessions to the church and the members encouraged and several others interested which we hope to receive in the near future. We consider this a very successful meeting, and we hereby thank Brother Grisso for coming and also the Brethren church of Lanark, Illinois, for allowing him the leave of absence to come to us.

Pray for us as we try to follow up, in gathering in the interested.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

It was the privilege of the writer to spend two weeks in an evangelistic effort with the church at Fort Scott, Kansas, where the work is cared for by our good Brother and Sister L. G. Wood. This was my second trip to Kansas, the other one being some ten years ago with the brethren at Portis. We found the pastor and wife busy in their work, bending every effort to have things in readiness for the meeting. They have had a long, hard pull here to bring the work up to the place where they can go along without outside help. They have not arrived at that place yet, but we believe it is in sight. We have known these workers for a long time, and it was a pleasure to become better acquainted with them and to spend this time in their home and among their parishioners, for through it all we have come to love them more and to appreciate the sacrifices they are making for the work. They are universally loved, in the church and out, and in all my contact with the folks I did not hear one word of criticism of their labors. This is as it should be. There have been some mistakes made here in the past but the future seems hopeful and we shall look for reports of continued victory from this field.

As to the results of our effort, they were not all that we had hoped for. The interest was good from the very first and it seemed of civilization," and they still lead in the fields of thinking, science, etc. The American colleges getting their social inheritances from the great English Universities, must be allowed to explore new fields with a free hand.

5. After all standards have been met, all arguments over, still the function of a college is to EDUCATE THE YOUTH. Everything must be bent towards that end. If it can be shown that endowments are either needed or not needed, extra-curricular activities necessary or unnecessary, or what not, then let us either have them or do away with them, but the end in view is but one thing, and that is the education of young people.

I heard a good many distressing stories of how the financial situation is effecting colleges, some of which have had a rather long and successful history.

Dr. Anspach represented his college in Michigan.

The annual meeting of the Board of College Trustees has been set for Tuesday, April 12th. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

Our revival began February 21st and our evangelist, Rev. C. C. Grisso, arrived on the field Tuesday, the 23rd and at once took over the leadership of the campaign and was greeted by an appreciative audience from the first service. During the first week the audience gained an average of ten each evening and by Sunday evening we had a very fine audience and splendid interest. This was Brother Grisso's first appearance in Fort Scott but he and his messages were no disappointment to the people of the church and of the city. A common state-

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

I recently attended the annual meeting of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools in Chicago. I desire to set down my impressions as they relate to such colleges as ours.

1. There is no tendency to reduce standards relative to the work and efficiency of colleges and high schools within the North Central area, which covers 20 states. On the contrary, superior standards will be set up. The Association this year dealt with over 50 colleges in the way of review, survey, inspection, standardizing, etc. Many colleges were either dropped, put on probation, or application declined. In other cases, membership was granted but all financial obligations had to be met.

2. The very elaborate machinery financed by more than $100,000.00 for the survey of the 60 cooperating colleges (Ashland is one) with the end in view of setting up new and superior standards, has already begun work and promises to make one of the largest contributions to higher education ever made in America. They allow themselves three years to make the survey and two years to digest the results but when the work is over, tests for what a college ought to be, will be formulated. And when this is once done by the North Central Association, it is believed that all other standardizing agencies will be influenced to make them more or less their own. It is a great project.

3. There was a spirit throughout all the meetings to attempt to make the college responsive to the age in which we live. "Splendid isolation" for colleges is over. Social needs will determine what function a college will have to perform.

4. Colleges are still the "advance guards that we were on the way to a great revival when all of a sudden our meeting was cut asunder by one of the worst streaks of Kansas weather in several years. However, the Lord gave us some souls that will prove some strength to the work of which no doubt the pastor will report. I should say here that the pastor knows his field well and accordingly keeps it well gleaned. We spoke one Lord's day afternoon at Godfrey, using our large chart on "God's Plan of Redemption." It was at this place that Brother Wood recently held a successful meeting. We shall not soon forget the many kindnesses and words of appreciation from pastor and people. It was easy to preach to those who are so highly appreciative of the whole-gospel message. They are truly brethren, and no preacher will need to apologize for presenting our plea here. The church stands as a beacon light in that community where there is plenty of modernistic teaching and departing from the Word of God. Let us not forget the Fort Scott church and those who labor there, at the throne of Grace.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

It gives us pleasure to report that the work at Lanark is going forward in a commendable way. Our good correspondent, Brother H. A. Gossard, has been keeping Evangelist readers informed of our activities here, but through force of habit we cannot refrain from a visit with our many friends through its columns. We think it is a very good habit to fall into too. Our church paper ought to have more news from all over our brotherhood. We are happy to report that every auxiliary of our work here seems to be functioning nicely in its special task. A new Christian Endeavor Society is filling a long felt need among our young people. It is strictly a young people's work. The most recent organization is a Junior Sisterhood. Thus with two Sisterhoods, a Christian Endeavor and well organized and active young people's Bible classes the needs of our young folks are well cared for. Our Midweek services are not as largely attended as we would desire, but they prove a spiritual feast to those who come. For several months past for our Bible study we have studied the "Great Doctrines of the Church." After our revival last fall six persons responded to the invitation at the worship service. Then at Christmas time at a special "White Gift Service" six others came and confessed their Savior. The Sunday before Christmas one accepted the invitation, and yesterday another, making fourteen in all. Some of these have been baptized, a few have united with another church due to parental influence and others await the rite of baptism. A very good interest is maintained in our Bible school. We seek to maintain a high standard in our teaching force. We have a splendid orchestra, and several well organized classes, that are doing effective work.

Since the beginning of the new year the pastor has been bringing a series of sermons from the general theme, "The Times we live in." These messages have been well received. Just now we are busy planning for the observance of the Easter season. We are endeavoring to observe it in a way that will bring honor and glory to the name of him who suffered and died for us, and came forth from the grave as a mighty victor.

Surely these are days of great opportunity for the church. How we ought to avail ourselves of this opportunity and bring to this old world and to the hungry hearts of men the message they are needing. If ever we ought to remain true to our high calling in Christ Jesus it is through these perilous times through which we are passing.

Yours Faithfully, until he Comes.

C. C. GRISSO.

VICTORY REVIVAL, CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

Although there is a depression in financial circles, it is not so in spiritual circles in the First Brethren church of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania.

For the past few years the Conemaugh Brethren have been making steady gains in numbers and in a deeper appreciation for the Word of God. We invited Brother R. Paul Miller as an evangelist to give more impetus to the work and in this he fulfilled his calling well.

Were it not for the severe storm which broke at the beginning of the last week and continued through the week the attendance might have been larger. Nevertheless, those who wanted to attend the services did not let snow storms and cold weather hinder their coming. One mother, not so young in years, and one son walked several miles through swirling snow and over dangerous roads in freezing temperature one night to hear the Gospel. Her efforts were rewarded when three of her grown children accepted Christ as Savior. A faithful brother in the church who missed but one service because of sickness, drove several miles each trip and brought a capacity load every time. His efforts also were rewarded when at the last service the last person on his prayer list accepted the claims of Christ.

At the close of the last night's service a total of fifty-seven souls had made the great decision. Thirty-four confessed Christ for the first time and twenty-three renewed their vows to the Lord, who bought them, and expressed their desire to serve him in a fuller and better way. The Conemaugh Brethren have great cause for rejoicing over the salvation of lost souls and the rededication of many who lived cold and indifferent lives as professing Christians. We are certain that the harvest is not over but just begun. If it had been possible for Brother Miller to have remained with us for another week or two we earnestly believe a bounteous harvest of souls could have been reaped. That may have been a little hard on his patient wife and family but we feel sure the sacrifice would have brought blessing. We witnessed homes united in Christ. Fathers became Christians, mothers decided for Christ. Children came in simple faith in a dying Savior. Homes established family altars to offset the devilish evolutionistic teachings in our schools and to keep the children and parents close to Christ.

We shall not easily forget the kind admonitions, suggestions, and keys to effective soul winning Brother Miller gave us from day to day. His short stay in the home of the pastor has been a wonderful blessing and inspiration. We pray that more homes might be so uplifted by his personal contact.

On several occasions we had visitors from the Juniata Park, Altoona, Church of the Brethren and Reformed church, including their male quartet on one occasion. Repeated visits were interrupted by severe storms. Delegations from the First church, Johnstown, came on several occasions and gave special numbers in song. The visits of these brethren certainly were appreciated.

Another reason for great rejoicing was that twenty young men and women of the church presented themselves as Life Work Recruits in the Master's Service. Despite the prevailing sickness and stormy weather of the last week we were wonderfully blessed with the salvation of souls at every service. Brethren, pray for us that we might, through his strength (John 15:5) accomplish still greater things. God answers prayer. Many of the Conemaugh Brethren know he has, for their prayers have been answered.

Looking for that Blessed Hope.

W. H. Schaffer, Pastor.

THE REVIVAL AT CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

We opened this meeting February 22nd and continued for three weeks. We found the pastor had worked hard for the meeting. He had it well advertised in the papers, cards spread everywhere, many well attended prayer meetings held for weeks before we started, and a good list of prospects to deal with. This laid a good foundation.

The attendance at the meetings steadily gained till the main auditorium and balcony were packed the first Sunday night. But when bad weather set in with a storm that tied up traffic and made the streets and roads a sheet of ice, things changed. Not until the last day or so did we get our attendance back again. But lack of attendance did not in any way hinder the work of saving souls for they kept coming to Christ right along each night with hardly a service but what some one came out for Christ after once they started coming.

Brother Schaffer is doing a great work here. He has taken a church that was commonly reported to have no future because of many local hindrances due mostly to location, and is building up a fine work. He has been using difficulties for his stepping stones to greater things and is neither dismayed nor even thinking about his obstacles. He is simply out winning unsaved souls of whom there are many all around the church. He is preaching expository sermons that will build up the faith of the people and is working earnestly with young people, not merely to make a social affair with them, but drawing them to Christ and teaching them the deeper responsibilities of his discipleship. This work of his bore rich fruit when twenty of his finest young folks who had never made a previous offering of themselves to Christ for service gave themselves in a special young people's service the last night of the meeting. It is a shame that so many Christian workers think that you have to bring a lot of worldly ways into play in order to hold young people for Christ. Young folks will respond to high and noble appeals and give themselves up unreservedly much quicker than adults at any time. The years to come will reveal a fine array of Christian workers in the field from this church if kept under the teaching and leadership that now prevails. God bless these young folks.

The Conemaugh church has a future, a real future, and they are now beginning to realize it. God grant that as one, both pastor and people will labor shoulder to shoulder to accomplish the great work the Lord has for this people to accomplish in this place. Unsaved souls came into these meetings in larger numbers than in any meeting I have held for many months. Getting in the unsaved is the great problem of the majority of churches. But that is no real problem in Conemaugh. They come! This presents a marvelous opportunity for the future. From the tone of remarks made by the real leaders of this church they are seeing this and are determined to do their best to bring all souls possible to Christ before he comes.

I enjoyed the finest hospitality here. Homes were open and tables were laden with feasts for us. How I enjoyed it all. My home was with the pastor and his splendid wife, who is a great help and encouragement to him. Their many kindnesses to me shall long be cherished.

R. PAUL MILLER.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

The church at Linwood has been active during the winter months. She has set for herself a heavy programme for the next months. Chief among her activities is the work of getting the church in active working order, so that when our evangelist, R. Paul Miller, comes we may have reasonable hope of a real revival.

Brother Miller expects to begin the meeting here on the 10th of May to continue till the 29th of May. Our revival services will close with a communion service. May we ask the prayers of all God's faithful children for our success in this great work. Special prayer meetings will be held shortly in the church and in the homes as a means of preparation for a successful meeting. The devil in these days does not yield readily and it takes the united prayers of all God's children to prevail.

The Junior Sisterhood is working very nicely. They have full programmes and all seem to enjoy them.

Recently the pastor preached in the Blue Ridge college chapel by request of the president. Blue Ridge is a Church of the Brethren institution and it was a real pleasure to talk to this growing school. I preached these last spring and was given a very cordial reception.

By request I preached to the Seminary students of the Western Maryland seminary. This school is owned and operated by the Methodist Protestants and has a high standing not only in Maryland but neighboring states. These folks have been very friendly toward us.

J. L. BOWMAN.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

After "many moons" we shall endeavor to use some space in the Church News column so you won't think we are "dead." With more than three months of extremely bad weather and roads—the muddest roads in forty-four years, highways snowbound, and side roads blocked for weeks at a time, we are emerging with a record of missing only two services all winter. Many other churches closed their doors on Sunday evenings, and some for three Sundays straight with no services. However, our attendance has been cut down considerably as a result. But we have observed all special days, and while we thought some of our offerings were rather small, we note we are still ahead of some larger churches in the east. In all offerings we know that what was given, was out of real sacrifice and self-denial.

Mrs. Deeter has almost recovered from her major operation, and is able to assume most all her church duties again. She teaches a class, has charge of the Jr. C. E., directs the choir, the S. M. M.; Treasurer of W. M. S., and fills in at various other things between.

All our auxiliaries are going and doing good work. Last fall we organized our young folks from the two churches into what we call the Endeavor-League. They had charge of an evening service in January, and will later fill in again with something special besides their regular meetings.

Just recently we "invented" a new feature for our Sunday evening services and will use them during the Pre-Easter meetings too. It is what is known as "Human Pictures." We made a large frame, 6 feet 8 inches by 9 feet, 4 inches, with colored light effect back of the frame, and back of that is colored drapery, which gives a pleasing effect when the different colored lights flood the inner space. While some one either sings an old hymn about the Cross, or gives the story of the Cross, the "human" in the picture stands or kneels by a cross with outstretched arms,—"I will cling to the Old Rugged Cross." If one is genius enough he can "invent a picture" to go with most any song.

We are planning a week of Pre-Easter meetings, and are leading up to those with special sermons on the supernatural manifestations surrounding Calvary, and during the week such subjects as "His Virgin Birth," "His Divine Life," "His Vicarious Death," "His Bodily Resurrection," and "His Personal Return." We are also planning on special services on Good Friday afternoon, a feature we have observed for three previous years.

Just recently a fine young lady came forward on Sunday morning and made the good confession, and will be baptized later on. We are praying others might be added to the fold during the meetings.

Owing to the stress of the times we have voluntarily made a 10% cut in our salary, besides increasing our gifts to the budget. The church is curtailing expenses in many ways. The W. M. S. has scheduled volunteers to do the cleaning of the church each week for months ahead. This plan has been carried out for over a year and is working nicely.

We are still enjoying our work with the Nebraska people and frequently are called on to deliver addresses or sermons, and special numbers in song or Chalk Talks in other places. Recently three other ministers and myself sang two numbers at a funeral of a brother minister, before an audience of 500 people. This was a very solemn occasion as the minister was only forty years of age, and had been quite active in our County Ministerium.

In February we had the privilege of uniting our eldest son in holy matrimony at the close of a Sunday morning worship period in our church. It was quite a hard task, for "Dad" to do it, but we were indeed happy over it and we feel better satisfied (naturally) than if someone else had done it.

We are happy in the Lord's work and try to keep busy for him.

W. R. DEETER.

DEVOLUTION GETS TO EGYPT

Here is a joyous letter from Jim Quay of the Cairo Y. M. C. A.: "When this Association was opened nine years ago, the staff consisted of four Americans and one Scotchman. Today there are four Egyptians and one American—myself. On October 1, Naguib Effendi Kilada, the Egyptian longest in service, was made general secretary of the Cairo Central 'Y.' Now I have an Egyptian chief! I am the only foreign missionary in the country who has ever had this distinction. This is not an accident, but the result of deliberate planning from the very first to develop responsible Egyptian leadership and to pass control into their hands just as rapidly as possible. The results justify the venture. I have never worked with a group of Americans who played the game with finer spirit than these Egyptian fellows, nor have I served under a man in whose judgment I could place greater confidence, or whose appreciation and cooperation were more genuine. Of course Naguib does not like to have me call him my boss; he is more like a brother, which makes the relationship all the more delightful. Neither Egypt nor any other mission land will ever be won for Christ by foreign missionaries. All we can do is to discover, inspire, and train national leadership."—The Congregationalist.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

consummation of evil on the earth. Then will great tribulation befall believers. Antichrist will form a new religion, by 'strong delusion,' into which the Lord will suffer all to fall who have not received 'the love of the truth,' a Caesaropapy of the worst kind, a World-Religion which ends in the worship of the Image of the Beast, i. e., of the human spirit which has apostatized from God, a Beast whose boast is Culture and Civilization, more and more tending to Bestiality, to rude force, and carnal lust. And all who have any degree of skill in placing the 'Signs of the Times' in the light of God's Word, will not mistake the fact that those elements are more and more showing themselves from which the False Prophet is to be developed, atheistic and materialistic systems, denying God and the existence of spirit, and based upon a purely physical view of existence; an aesthetic literature which, by its poetry, fictions, and romances, diffuses the Gospel of the Flesh among the masses, and upsets all moral relations; a daily Journalism which is a prelude of what is predicted in Rev. 16:13, viz., that, out of the mouth of the Dragon, and of the False Prophet, shall proceed three unclean spirits, 'like frogs,' creatures of the swamp, the morass, and the mire, whose croaking produces a sound that penetrates to a distance, repeating the same thing, day after day, and well adapted to delude men, such as they are, and bring them into the right disposition, or state of mind, for the service of Antichrist. Nor can the Political State of the times be misunderstood, especially the prevailing tendency to banish Christianity from public life, to undermine all authority, to break with all historical tradition, as furnishing elements from which Antichrist may, one day, emerge. No false Democracy, or Red Republic will be the last of historical events to precede the Coming of the Lord. The last development will be Caesarism, Absolute Despotism, a Scarlet Caesarism, and Revolution, the necessary presupposition of the Antichrist. 'Here is the patience and faith of the saints.' (Bishop Martensen of Seeland; Christian Ethics, 352-356.)

HOW TO KILL YOUR CHURCH

Don't come.
If you do come, come late.
When you come, come with a grouch.
At every service ask yourself. "What do I get out of this?"
Never accept office. It is better to stay outside and criticize.

Visit other churches about half of the time to show your pastor that you are not tied down to him. There is nothing like independence.

Let the pastor earn his money; let him do all the work.

Sit pretty well back and never sing. If you have to sing, sing out of tune and behind everybody else.

Never pay in advance, especially for religion. Wait until you get your money's worth, and then wait a bit longer.

Never encourage the preacher. If you like a sermon, keep mum about it.

It is good to tell your pastor's failings to any strangers that may happen in; they might be a long time finding them out.

Of course you can't be expected to get new members for the church with such a pastor as he is.

If your church unfortunately happens to be harmonious, call it apathy or indifference or lack of zeal, or anything under the sun except what it is.

If there happen to be a few zealous workers in the church, make a tremendous protest against the church's being run by a clique.—By Rev. Conard Hooker in "Farm and Home."

AN OLD CHIEF GOES HOME

By Laura Gwin Swadley

Namakei was the chief's name. When he was a young man he was a great fighter. But his life was changed after missionaries came to his island. They taught him about Jesus and he learned to love and serve him.

When Namakei was an old man, there was a missionary meeting on one of the islands. The missionaries of his island were going.

Namakei said, "I want to go along to the meeting."

They tried to persuade him not to go because he was so old and not at all well. They were afraid he might die away from said, "Perhaps God will make you well enough to go back to your people."

But the chief said, faintly, "I know I am dying, help me to lie down under that banyan tree.

He took the missionary's arm and was led to the tree and at once lay down in its shade.

He whispered to the missionary, "I am going; let me hear you pray."

The missionary tried to pray, but his voice choked as he could hardly keep from weeping.

The dying chief took his hand and said, "I am going before you, but I will meet you in the home of Jesus. Goodbye."

That was the last thing he said. He became unconscious and was soon gone, and the missionary's heart was very sad, for the old chief was the first one on his island who had become a Christian.

The next day he was buried on the island on which he had died. All the people at the meeting followed the body to the grave and they all wept as it was laid to rest.

But the missionary was worried about going home without the old chief. He was afraid the people might not understand.

As the boat came near the landing a crowd of people was seen waiting for it. The daughter was looking for her father. When she failed to see him she called out, "Where is my father? Is he dead?"

"Yes, he died on the island," was the reply. "He is now with Jesus in his home."

The old chief's daughter said weeping, "We knew he was dying before he left, for he gave us good-bye and told us all to serve Jesus and obey you and we are going to do it."

The next Sunday the missionary told all the people the story of the chief's death and that he was not dead but alive forevermore.—Children at Work.

"He arose, He arose,HallelujahChristarose."

home and that his people would blame them for his death.

But all they said did no good. He was determined to go and his friends and relatives also wanted him to go.

The day came to start. Namakei put his belongings in a basket which he carried with him. Before getting on the boat he called all his people together and told them good-bye.

"Be strong for Jesus," he said, "if you see me again or not, and be good to the missionary."

Many of the people wept as they told him good-bye.

The journey in the boat was a pleasant one. The old chief enjoyed mingling with the other people at the meeting. Every one there was very kind to him.

But one day a messenger came into the meeting and said to the missionary from the old chief's island, "Namakei wants you to come to him."

When the missionary came to him, Namakei said, "I am about to die. Tell my daughter and my brothers and the others to go on loving Jesus and sometime we will all be together again in the heavenly home."

"Maybe you won't die," the missionary

The cure for all the ills and wrongs, the cares, the sorrows, and the crimes of humanity, all lie in that one word "love."—Mrs. L. M. Child.

OUR EASTER JOY

By Martha S. Clingan

*Sweet song of bird when morning breaks,
The fragrance when a flower wakes,*

*All lovely notes of Spring
The resurrection story tell;
Christ rose, He lives—the anthem swell,
In triumph now we sing.*

*Our Saviour rose from death's dark night,
With Him in heaven's morning light*

*How safe our loved ones are!
Deep shadows from "the valley" lift,
Eternal life His wondrous gift;
This hope a constant star.*

*The cruel cross, dark, rock-bound tomb,
Sad, breaking hearts, long hours of gloom;*

*Then radiant Easter joy!
Captivity He captive led Christ rose and from that narrow bed
Brought life naught can destroy.*

LORD GIVE ME SIGHT

By Bertha Inwood Michael

Lord give me sight
To see the beauties of the sky at morn,
The dew-drops that the lily bells have worn,
The singing birds that flit from tree to tree
Who glorify and sing their praise to thee.
Lord give me sight.

To see within the task that I must do
A chance to serve and glorify thee too;
Help me to see in bird and brook and tree
A messenger that bids me look to thee.
Lord give me sight.

Lord give me sight,
So I may know that each heart-ache and care
I can with grace from thee in patience bear;
Help me to see so some way can be found
To save the souls whom sin hath stealthy bound.
Lord give me sight.

Lord give me sight
To see within the heart of friend or foe
The good hid there, so I may truly know
Just how to play upon the chords of life
So right may always conquer wrong or strife.
Lord give me sight.
Scott, Ohio.

"The year's at the spring,
The day's at the morn,
Morning's at seven,
The hillside's dew-pearled,

The lark's on the wing,
The snail's on the thorn;
God's in the heaven,

A NEW "Reason" for Divorce

With a great trumpeting of publicity, which is the life-blood of Hollywood, another couple of well-known play-actors have announced through the press that they are about to break the ties of matrimony via the courts of Reno.

A divorce in moviedom is nothing new, but the reasons given by the principals in this case are a bit unusual. In a carefully written statement given to the press we are informed that they are being divorced in order to preserve "the love and respect" they have for each other!

One cannot help but wonder what kind of "love and respect" it is that requires the services of a divorce court to "preserve" it. Certainly, this is not the love which the Bible places at the center of the true marriage relationship. "Husbands, Love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself up for it." (Eph. 5:25).

The stars of the screen are play-actors, not merely on the stage, but quite often in the serious business of life itself.

LITTLE Interest in Prayer

On January 27th the General Assembly of South Carolina passed a joint resolution asking the Congress of the United States to call upon the President to designate a nation-wide day of prayer, expressing a conviction "that God will heal and bless his people when they exalt him above selfishness and greed of gain and Godless pursuits."

To date we have noticed no inclination on the part of Congress to set a day of national prayer. They are too busy trying to balance the budget without losing their political souls.

The Psalmist declares that even "fools" who suffer because of their own transgressions "cry unto Jehovah in their trouble, and he saveth them out of their distresses" (107:17-19). Our modern statesmen evidently feel that they can handle the situation without any outside help!

South Carolina, however, is to be congratulated upon still having some leaders who believe in a God who answers prayer.

McMANUS on Marriage

You would not ordinarily expect the comic strip artist to be a competent teacher in the realm of morals and religion, but the creator of "Jiggs and Maggie" has uttered some sound ideas on the subject of marriage and divorce. Here they are:

"In this day of nickel-in-the-slot divorces on frivolous or groundless causes, the holy institution of marriage is in a deplorable condition. It is my firm conviction that there should be NO cause for divorce. If a man and wife don't get along—well, that's just too bad—but they are still and should be still man and wife. If they realize that, they will be happy—they will MAKE their happiness.

"For better or worse" they join, and through better or worse they should keep their bargain and their oath before the law of God and man. "Until death do part us" is the period of the contract, without an "if."

Misunderstandings sometimes are good for the soul. A man and woman may love each other devotedly and still clash in disposition and opinion. Husbands should have their say and wives should have theirs. Let them fight it out. But it's their fight, and I am against courts as referees, I am against alimony to the winner, I am against parentless children and broken vows and broken homes.

Jiggs and Maggie have never contemplated such a tragedy. Maggie would brain Jiggs if he ever mentioned such a thing, and I think Jiggs would crown his missus if she ever talked any such nonsense."

You may not agree with everything McManus says, but on the matter of divorce he is a safer guide than the play-actors of Hollywood.

THE Allies of Atheism

Sometimes we are told that we should be charitable toward the Modernists because they are trying to save religion by throwing overboard the excess cargo of theology which the good ship of Christianity has been carrying too long.

Those who take this position should read the fifth annual report of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism. It analyzes Modernism as follows:

"This loss of faith causes consternation among the Orthodox, who are powerless to arrest the movement. The Reconcilers—liberals and Modernists—are heroically saving the ship of Christianity by throwing her cargo overboard. With what zeal the Fosdicks, the Matthews and the whole crew of rescuers toss out, first the Garden of Eden and the Flood, followed by the Virgin Birth, Atonement and the Resurrection. And then they gain a great victory by getting rid of hell and heaven and the devil and God, though with much ado they keep the name of the last. They may save the vessel of ecclesiasticism, but how long will men sail the seas in an empty ship? They will go ashore and enjoy life with the Atheists! We welcome the aid of Modernists and pledge them our fullest cooperation in ridding the world of Fundamentalism—or any serious acceptance of Christian theology."

Between a "serious acceptance of Christian theology" and the position of Atheism there is no permanent resting place for the human spirit. The history of human thought has demonstrated this more than once. But many modern religious leaders, like Belshazzar of Babylon, never seem to learn anything from the lessons of history.

The liberalistic method has always been to begin with the Old Testament, and particularly the writing of Moses in Genesis. You can be a Christian, they will tell you, without believing in the Mosaic account of Creation and the Flood story. It is interesting to note that our Lord anticipated this very plausible sounding lie and condemned it forever in John 5:46-47, "For if ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my Words?"

That is a question no Modernist can answer, for Jesus Christ indorsed the writings of Moses as true, and to reject Moses is to reject Christ.

WHAT OTHERS THINK, SAY AND DO

Roosevelt's Nine Points on Churchgoing

1. In this actual world, a churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at or ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid down-grade.

2. Church-work and church-attendance mean the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others.

3. There are enough holidays for most of us. Sabbaths differ from any other holidays in the fact that there are fifty-two of them every year. Therefore, on Sabbaths, go to church.

4. Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees, or by a running brook, or in a man's own house, just as well as in church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact that the average man does not thus worship.

5. He may not hear a good sermon at church. He will hear a sermon by a good man who with his good wife is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier.

6. He will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible. And if he is not familiar with the Bible, he has suffered a loss.

7. He will take part in singing some good hymns.

8. He will meet and nod or speak to good, quiet neighbors. He will come away feeling a little more charitable toward all the world, even toward those excessively foolish young who regard church-going as a soft performance.

9. I advocate a man's joining in church-work for the sake or showing his faith by his works.

"Underneath are the everlasting arms"—underneath all the sorrow, the difficulties, the burdens that seem weighing us down fathoms deep. We cannot sink too far for the loving tenderness and mighty power of God to uphold us still.

After Easter--A Let Down, or a Climax?

It has been inspiring and encouraging to note the strenuous efforts put forth during the weeks preceding Easter to bring the Christian people to a new realization of the greatness of the work of Christ that culminated with the resurrection. We cannot build too keen an appreciation of those significant days preceding Easter, nor can we over-emphasize the fitness of making them a time of very special effort at evangelism and of seeking to draw the net for an ingathering for the church.

But what about the days after Easter? Are these days to be a time of let-down, or are they to lead forward to a still greater climax in spirituality and power? Is the intensiveness of spirit to be allowed to lag, and the keen sense of responsibility for the extension of the message to be dulled, and possibly even allowed to vanish? Or will it be that the aroused spirituality of the lenten season will be conserved and still further strengthened and will result in leading the church on to greater experiences with God and mightier demonstrations of the Spirit's presence and power?

The after-Easter season is a critical time, and all too often it has been a disappointing and spiritually-relaxing time. There is a tendency on the part of many to rest from their labors, after Easter. Dr. William E. Biederwolf refers to this tendency as the "tragedy of Easter." In a recent message he said: "The tragedy of Easter lies in the fact that the church generally makes it the end of the period of intensive spiritual cultivation instead of the beginning." This is not as it should be. It is no time to slacken in one's spiritual zeal after experiencing anew the joy of the resurrection. Indeed there is no time that is suitable for a spiritual let-down, though many act as if they thought there might be. That is one of the weaknesses of the average revival effort. When it comes to a close, everything closes. It is the end of special prayer, special effort and of expressed concern for others. All plans stop with the close of the revival. All the intensive activity and zeal disappear over night. Such a break in the life of the individual or of the church is wrong, and deplorable. It is so any time, and especially after Easter, when the days lend themselves with such subtle suggestiveness to the fostering of new and still more real experiences with the risen Christ, and to preparation for still greater bestowments of spiritual power. Dr. Biederwolf says: "It is a tragedy indeed that we sacrifice the post-Easter season by a let-down in our activities and devotions instead of using it to build up toward Pentecost Sunday for a renewal of the Holy Spirit's power in the churches. Easter-to-Pentecost should be the harvest time in the church of renewed power and vision. In that quiet season people everywhere should wait on God for his blessing and outpouring."

With this thought in mind some pastors have prepared an Easter-to-Pentecost program, or outlined a campaign of spiritual up-building within the church. It is not too late yet to lay plans for making larger use of the opportunities which this season offers. We do not have in mind any ready-made program to present to the churches for their adoption, but we do have in mind some goals or aims which we believe are worthy of consideration as parts of such a program.

These days might well be made a time of special Bible instruction, calculated to inform the mind and strengthen the heart of the church members, especially of the new members received during the pre-Easter services. It is a strategic time to present the teachings and instructions of Christ to the church with clearness and force, and to seek to make the spiritual Presence of the Lord stand out with a new reality. These are critical days for the new converts, and there should be no lack of effort to enrich their knowledge and to enlarge their understanding. The church is at fault that leaves these new children of God go without being indoctrinated. This is a good time to do it.

It is also a good time to stress daily devotions in the home and to urge the setting up of family altars. The days following the resurrection were quiet days for the disciples and conducive to meditation and divine communion. It is a good time for church members to be impressed with the importance of having a period of quietness in each day when they may give themselves to meditation, to Bible reading and prayer. For the new members this is specially important. The way they get started, they will likely continue. And few things are more important to Christian growth than the daily observance of the Quiet Hour.

It is the logical time to bring to the minds and hearts of the people, particularly the young people and new converts, the responsibility to do some definite service for their Lord, and to consider prayerfully and with power-seeking earnestness how they may best prepare themselves for that work. The days immediately preceding Pentecost were days of great significance to the disciples from the standpoint of clearly envisioning their tasks and of being divinely equipped for them. Not one of those early disciples was left free from the responsibility of service. Their work was laid upon them as a mighty burden, big and inescapable, but glorious. What better time to impress in a special way upon the minds of the new and unplaced members, the importance of finding the place they can best fill in the program of the church's work. One special way in which this might be done would be to have what might be called Placement-for-Service meetings, possibly discussion groups, where the organization, the work and the needs of the church would be explained and all the various types of service set forth, along with certain general qualifications necessary for effective service. When the field has been laid before them, challenge them frankly with the call and the duty to service and afford them the opportunity to pledge themselves, by the signing of a card, to seek to prepare themselves for some definite service, or preferably, to be ready to answer any call to service that the church may extend to them. And to all set forth the responsibility of supporting the church by being faithful stewards of that with which the Lord may prosper them.

The days following the resurrection are days full of import for the church and for individuals, particularly the new converts. Their future depends much on the use made of these days of opportunity. Let it be not a time of let-down, but a time of conserving the gains of Easter, and a time of laying of foundations, by prayer, instruction and meditation on the church's task and resources, for a new climax at Pentecost and for continued empowerment and service throughout the year.

Jews, Catholics and Protestants Meet

An event of widespread interest was the National Seminar of Catholics, Protestants and Jews held in Washington, D. C., March 7-9. There were 475 registered members of the conference, one-half of which were Protestants and the other half consisting of Catholics and Jews in about equal numbers. Clergymen predominated, but there were many laymen present; business men, teachers, editors, church officials and social workers. It was presided over by three joint chairmen: Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, representing the Protestants; Prof. Carleton J. H. Hayes, of Columbia University, representing the Catholics and Roger W. Straus, son of Oscar Straus, ambassador to Turkey, representing the Jews.

This National Conference of Jews and Christians was originated by some men associated with the Federal Council who felt that the after-war phenomena of race and religious prejudice was contrary to the tenets of Christianity and to the spirit of Americanism. By getting together and talking over likenesses and differences and sharing one another's fellowship, they hope to build up a better spirit of understanding and tolerance and help to dispel prejudice and ill-feeling between races and religious groups. It is the hope of the leaders of this movement that many similar conferences on a smaller scale may be conducted all over the country.

This conference was hailed as a great success by its leaders, the only criticism being that the personnel "did not adequately represent the more conservative wings of Protestantism and Judaism," though "a very earnest effort had been made to secure representation of all shades of opinion from all groups." This fact is significant and raises the question as to why these conservative religious groups have refused to cooperate.

It is not that they are not agreed that racial and religious prejudices that savor of hatred and unkind and unfair treatment are un-Christian and un-American. They know that love for God implies love for one's fellowmen, and forget not that he that says he loves God and hates his brother is a liar, as the Apostle John tells us. They are not unmindful of the fact that Jesus did not countenance the superiority attitude and the carnal tendency to lord it over one's fellows. They recognize that it is the Christian's duty

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We are informed that Brother W. I. Duker, pastor of the church at Elkhart, Indiana, became seriously ill about two weeks ago, and that for the last two Sundays his pulpit has been filled by Sister Edna Nicholas, an ordained minister of that congregation. Pray that Brother Duker may be restored to health and to his ministry.

Dr. K. M. Monroe writes some Seminary news items that will be of interest to the friends of the Seminary, and we suppose that takes in just about everyone. We are interested in our Seminary because we are concerned about the future ministry of our church, and there—in the Seminary—and in the college which prepares them for the graduate school, these future ministers are being, and are to be, prepared.

Brother P. M. Naff, pastor of the church at Buena Vista, writes of the very encouraging progress realized at that place since he took charge in April of last year. The church had previously been without pastoral care for four years and showed the results of it, but since he began his work the people have responded to his leadership in a splendid way and new workers discovered. Twenty-three have been received into the church by baptism, two by letter and fourteen have reconsecrated themselves to the Lord. Dr. I. D. Bowman is to begin a meeting here on April 3.

Brother S. E. Christiansen reports his visit and findings as district evangelist to the mission work in Delaware, which is attached to the Pennsylvania district. He found the people much attached to Brother I. D. Bowman, their pastor, and the spiritual condition good. But the financial status is bad, as it is in a good many places. He says Brother Bowman has built well the foundation of Brethrenism in that field and deserves great credit. Brother Christiansen is taking his position as district evangelist seriously and is trying to make himself helpful to the churches where it is his duty to visit.

Dr. and Mrs. Bryan S. Stoffer, missionaries on furlough from India, and both graduates of Ashland College, were visiting in Ashland on Easter Sunday and Brother Stoffer was invited by the pastor to assist in the morning worship. Having served seven years in India and spent nearly two years in the United States recuperating their health, they will leave Nappanee, Indiana, with their two small boys, traveling by auto to the west coast and will sail from Vancouver the first week in May, for their station at Madura, south India, where Dr. Stoffer is president of The American College.

Dr. Charles A. Bame went to Bryan, Ohio, over Sunday, March 27, to fill the pulpit of Rev. C. A. Stewart, who was suddenly afflicted and reported in a serious condition. We are informed, however, that he is recovering and that there is hope that he will be able before long to resume his work. Pray for him. Dr. Bame reports the work in a flourishing condition at Bryan, one feature of inspiration being the class of fifty young people in the Sunday school and a fine attendance at the services. He will return next Sunday for further service with the Bryan people. He left this morning to lay away his brother-in-law, Mr. Bunnell, of Plymouth, Indiana, who was suddenly and fatally stricken.

The Cooperative Brethren church of Columbus, Ohio, held their "semi-annual members' meeting" on March 3, when Brother Dyll Belote, Elder in charge representing the Brethren church and Brother E. S. Coffman, representing the Church of the Brethren, were present. The pastor, Brother D. R. Murray, reported two baptized since last September and one lost by death, making the present membership eighty. The average Sunday school attendance was reported to be sixty-one and the average offering $3.26. Some much needed repairs on the building had been completed and the treasurer reported all bills paid and a neat balance in the treasury. Their communion service will be held on April 24th and all of like faith are invited.

The Business Manager, Dr. R. R. Teeter, is dealing with a rock-bottom factor in the development of spirituality and church loyalty when he inquires about the kind of literature that is provided in the average Christian home. Do not fail to read and ponder what he says in his "Business Manager's Corner" this week. All too many parents of supposedly Christian homes are careless about what their children read, and make little or no provision for them along this line. Not only should literature that is wholesome and Christian be provided, but also literature that teaches denominational loyalty and faithfulness to apostolic Christianity, if we are concerned about the future of our church. Only those who have no care for it can afford to fail at this point.

A loyal friend of The Evangelist and church leader stepped into the Editor's office the other day and said, "I congratulate you on The Evangelist; it was never better than it is now." When such men as Dr. Yoder and Dr. Rench and Professors McClain and Stuckey are regular contributors, it cannot help being worth reading." He said some other nice things, too, but we want these good brethren to know that their work is being appreciated. We have a letter before us, just received, expressing appreciation of the paper, and enumerating some features that stood out especially big in the mind of this writer. Others have also written encouraging words about our church paper, and such kind expressions are indeed encouraging. With so many splendid voices speaking, some regularly, some only occasionally, through its columns, we are not a bit backward in urging every pastor and church leader to encourage the widest possible reading of The Evangelist.

The editor has been in receipt of numerous and varied types of announcements and programs of Pre-Easter and Easter services. Our pastors are making good use of their mimeographs and of printer's ink, and we commend them for it. Everything else under the sun is being advertised; why should not the church's message also? This is the day of advertising, of intensive advertising. That which is advertised, sells; that which is not, lies on the shelf. There is much illegitimate and harmful advertising, and there is also much that is legitimate and valuable. It is just as true in religious affairs as in business. There are all sorts of religious fakes and fads and isms being advertised. Why should not the man and the church with a real message from the Lord, let the people know where such a message can be heard? We cannot mention all the attractive programs and announcements received, but one deserves mention because of its uniqueness and elaborateness. It is a booklet of twenty pages and cover put out by the First church of Dayton, announcing the sermon subjects of a three weeks' Pre-Easter campaign, conducted by the pastor, Brother R. D. Barnard. An entire page is given to each and every sermon theme, together with a cluster of suggestive questions regarding it and a mimeographed reproduction of an appropriate Biblical painting. The sermon subjects and also the pictures take the life story of our Lord from the worship of Jesus by Simeon, through some of the most significant events of his life and through Passion Week, closing with the resurrection appearance of Christ to Thomas. The cover is very appropriately decorated on green pressboard, with a picture of the head of Christ on the front and a cross transfigured with Easter glory on the back. We congratulate the pastor and his helpers who did the art work.

Scientific Optimism

By Prof. L. L. Garber, Litt.D.

(A College Chapel Address)

The first quarter of the twentieth century will be distinguished in history by the enormous crop of pessimists hatched during the period. These are of motley color and of infinite variety. There is the psychological pessimist, asserting that a man is strictly determined by his environment. There is the pedagogical pessimist, doubting that education can avail to correct the evils of society and questioning the advisability of free schools for all. There is the political pessimist, predicting the failure of democracy and of free institutions. There is the social pessimist, proclaiming that society is rapidly reverting to barbarism, and toppling to swift and certain destruction.

Time does not permit us to mention others of the numerous varieties. We can only say that while there is some truth in each of these claims, their general effect is bad. They stifle and paralyze effort. They crowd down upon humanity the "inferiority complex", and limit the prophetic vision and achievement of the race. Let us change the picture and supplant the dreary pessimist with Scientific Optimism.

The first requisite of Scientific Optimism is consciousness of power. The first idea to be drilled into the heart of every human being is the assurance "I C-A-N." "Greatest in the language are these words." Everybody needs to hear them powerfully and often. They should be engraved over the door of every school, church, home and shop in America. The greatest favor to be rendered any man is to be told how much he can do and how best he can do it.

This is the problem of achievement of education, of culture and of character. A person's first duty is to find, to use and to release the power that is locked up in the human mind. Great men are great because they have explored and revealed their own minds. They have achieved this because of their conviction that they could do something supremely well. Great men are always optimists. They believe in themselves, in their work, in their mission, in their destiny.

The second requisite of Scientific Optimism is the consciousness of power developed out of experience. There are depths of perplexity, of want, of despair along the road everyone must travel who aims at this high goal. Not to evade these, but emerge with strength renewed, hope established and sympathy enlarged, is the ideal of Scientific Optimism. The test of one's faith, faith not merely in self, but in the sufficiency of divine resources, is how long he can stand out against the world. Most people have a notion that an optimist is a happy-go-lucky sort of person; empty of cares, burdens, or problems; smooth and well-fed; favored of God and men. But all real optimists have been through battles, worries, woes and privations that would freeze the heart of ordinary men. That is why they believe.

A third requisite of Scientific Optimism is an analysis and an adjustment. Analyze the requisites of your work and you will be in a position to command your own future. Doubtless you have a longing, a dream, a wish to be or to do some particularly worth while thing. Are you a blind and lazy pessimist, fearful of yourself and too timid to look your own wish in the face? Are you a superficial optimist, drunk with your dream and hoping in a vague way that some kind fairy will waft you into the "land of heart's desire"? To be these is to fail. You must be a scientific optimist, hoping and trusting in God with your heart, while planning with your head and working with your hands.

Every goal to which we aspire demands certain specific attainments, mental, physical, moral. To learn what these are and to acquire them is the first step toward scientific advancement. To become an optimist one must know how he can advance. To remain an optimist one must know that he is advancing, and how to organize the spiritual, mental and physical forces at his command to carry him forward and upward.

The fourth requisite of Scientific Optimism is the overcoming habit. The scientific optimist treads not "the primrose path of dalliance." There are obstacles in the way. A thing well done is never done easily. How much do you want the thing you want? Enough to work for it, to wait for it, to weep, to starve, to bleed for it; to give up the world for it? Then you may have it. Scientific Optimism turns failures and opposition into power. The path to any great success is lined with many small failures. But the assurance of ultimate success transmutes these, as well as opposition, into stepping stones to progress.

"I hold it truth, with him who sings
To one clear harp in diverse tones,
That men may rise on stepping-stones
Of their dead selves to higher things."

The world was against Newton when he proclaimed the law of gravitation. It was against Harvey when he discovered the circulation of the blood. It was against Bell when he made the first telephone. It was against the Wrights when they labored on their first air ship. It was against Wilson when he organized the League of Nations. All these men had to create an optimism strong enough to carry them through and beyond the world's ignorance, inertness, fear, hate, opposition. The law still holds: the greater your work and the finer your message, the more will you be antagonized. Emerson's statement is still true: "To be great is to be misunderstood." The triumphant antidote is scientific optimism.

The fifth requisite of Scientific Optimism is the utilization of reserve psychic forces. Scientific Optimism en-

BASIS OF PAUL'S OPTIMISM

I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me.—Phil 4:13.

*And we know that all things work together for good to them that love
God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.—Rom. 8:28.*

larges power. The experimental psychology shows that the average man utilizes only a small fraction, perhaps a third or a tenth, of his inherent brain power. The rest lies dormant. Why? Because original thinking is lacking. Now original thinking is the only kind that builds the cells of the brain, and organizes them into power-receiving and power-projecting series.

The human brain is an electrical battery; the Great Spirit is the Power House, and personal desires and aspirations are the wires upon which the currents run. Not often is the battery rightly connected with the Power, or with the channels of power within the human life. Great deeds are the product of great desires. Most of us are commonplace because whatever desires we had in childhood have been crushed in the world's routine of apathy, monotony and repression.

Build yourself into optimistic power. Try this: The next time you feel a conviction or an inspiration that seems unusual or untenable, act upon it, fully, promptly, implicitly. Whatever other results, a new channel of power will be opened in your brain, and as you grow familiar with it, you will discover an increase in efficiency. All great discoveries have been the outcome of the brains of men who had new ideas, recognized their value, became absorbed in them, and proved them by challenging the world's attention.

The sixth requisite of Scientific Optimism is concentrated, enthusiastic effort. Thucydides, the famous Greek historian, said, "The Greeks succeed far beyond other men, because we throw ourselves without reserve into whatever we undertake." The scientific optimist triumphs over difficulties. With him chance plays no part and luck is a myth. Whoever attains eminence of any kind does something to earn it. Paderewski was born musical, yet likewise were thousands of others. What distinguishes this, the world's greatest pianist is the habit of playing a note until he gets it right—sometimes three hundred times. Edison's matchless wizardly was the capacity for work. He went for weeks on half the food and sleep his helpers demanded. Beethoven, meeting deafness, went on writing music in his mind. Milton, blind, old, lonely, saw matchless visions and heard ineffable music with his soul. Napoleon, weak and sickly, grew healthy and became the man of destiny by becoming an optimist with reference to his own power and achievement. So likewise Marconi, Burbank, Peary, Caruso, Wanamaker, Belasco, Roosevelt—they disdained heritage and conquered fate and fame by an invincible optimism. It was such optimism as expands one's influence and opens communication with Original Spiritual Power, by means of which the ordinary man becomes great and every man a conscious master of himself, his work and his destiny.

The charm and beauty of optimism is that every one may acquire it. No matter how poor, weak, sad, or forlorn we may be, we can become optimists and so change the worst to the best. Let us note its rules:

1. Do the duty that lies next. Do something to shake yourself out of the frozen rut of regret. "I mix myself with action lest I perish with despair," wrote Tennyson.
2. Study the lives of the world's heroic figures; observe how small your troubles are and surmount them.
3. Find a purpose big enough to create a desire strong enough to carry you up the mountains of difficulty.
4. Analyze loss, perplexity, hardship, and discover what each can teach you, how each can develop you. "When sorrow ends in strength, sorrow ends in joy."
5. Lift some other fellow's burden and you carry your own more easily. "Failures in optimism are always failures in altruism."

6. Remember that Scientific Optimism is faith in self, in God, in man, plus knowledge of material conditions necessary to the attainment of a specified goal, and plus the will to work long and hard, and to use every means to transmute experience into achievement.

7. Remember, that the lever that moves the world is irresistible faith, grounded on irrefutable knowledge, backed by an unswerving will.

Browning describes the optimist well in these words:

"One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward,

Never doubting clouds would break;

Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong could triumph,

Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, sleep to wake."

INAUGURAL MESSAGE OF NEW PRESIDENT OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA

By Bishop Ernest G. Richardson

You have summoned me to the presidency of the National Anti-Saloon League at a time when the League is under heavy attack. This is a compliment to us. Astute enemies, such as we have, do not waste their ammunition against unimportant foes. The heaviest fighting is to secure the most important positions, and against the most determined opposition. The enemy knows who their greatest opponents are, and are centering their attack against them. May the time never come when the Anti-Saloon League can be safely ignored.

The wet section of the papers has certain definitions. The mere fact of faith in prohibition makes a man a narrow-minded, fanatical bigot. According to this definition, that is what I am, because I do sincerely believe in prohibition. Over night I could be transformed in the columns of the wet press into a broad-minded, far-seeing patriot and philosopher. All that is needed would be for me to come out against prohibition, or even in favor of 4 per cent beer. I am satisfied to be measured by other standards than those laid down by wet newspapers.

Before constitutional prohibition was achieved, the enemies of the legalized liquor traffic conducted a hundred years' war. We are prepared to conduct another hundred years' war, if necessary, to maintain that which we have achieved. If anybody thinks that by the expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars over a period of a few years we can be discouraged, he must think again. I believe I voice the sentiment of the great mass of believers in real temperance when I say that we will not cease fighting until the enemy acknowledges defeat.

I happen to be a Methodist. The founder of our branch of Christianity had two mottoes, among others, that guided his conduct. One of his wise decisions was expressed as follows: "I seek a league offensive and defensive with every foe of unrighteousness." Another of his guiding principles was: "If your heart be as my heart, give me your hand." This is a time that calls for similar wisdom on the part of all friends of prohibition. "Divide and conquer" was an old Roman motto. We must present a united front against the insidious attacks now being made upon us.

Toward the accomplishment of these aims I pledge my utmost endeavor.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Dr. Martin Shively

XXXV.—Elder John A. Myers

I never had the privilege of visiting in the home of Brother Myers, neither have I seen either that home nor the community in which he lived and died. I met him occasionally at the general conferences of the church, and had some correspondence with him because of our relations to the Ministerial Association of the church. But even if I do not know the sort of house he lived in, nor the kind of farming he did, nor the quality of his preaching, as he gave a lifetime of service to his church, there are some things I do surely know about him. I know he was a man who was good to see,—a man clean both within and without, whose countenance gave abundant evidence that he had an unswerving confidence in the God whom he so faithfully served, and that in spite of the fact that he must often have been disappointed in men, as they failed to measure up to his expectation for them, a man who still believed in men, and whose confidence would lead him to trust them. For his was a countenance which was clear, open and frank,—one which would immediately inspire confidence both in his integrity and in his willingness to help. And then, too, I know he was a man who deeply and sincerely loved his Lord and trusted him. The one outstanding fact which forces such a conviction, is its influence upon his family, which after all, is the real test of the worth of a man's religion. I can understand how that in a family of considerable size, one member might, because of an outside influence, be led to seek unusual work in the religious field, but when all or practically all of the children of a family hear and wish to respond to the call for service in the foreign mission field, only one conclusion is possible,—In that family not only has religion and religious appeals been given a place of honor, but encouragement has been given to respond to the calls for active service as they may appear. With one daughter serving the Lord in Africa, Miss Estella, and others of the family anxious to do so, the evidence is conclusive that in this home, the way was open for God to lead. Under such conditions it is not hard to understand how that a man could not only faithfully serve a community in a pastoral capacity for many years, but he would do so with complete acceptance to those who were being thus served. For a genuine love for God will beget a love for men, and love for men will not only seek avenues for service, but will open them. This accounts for the fact that almost to the end of his days, over a period which had extended for a good many years, Brother Myers served his congregation as pastor, not only supporting himself by farming, but giving generously of his means for the advancement of the work of the Kingdom, thus preaching perhaps as effectively by what he did as by what he said. I know nothing about the quality of his pulpit work, for as I said in my opening, I never heard him preach, but such a life as he must have lived is far more eloquent than any uttered message, for after all, the truth and beauty of the Gospel is really understood only as it is transmuted into life, and his must have been a most beautiful and successful ministry.

Brother Myers went home to be with God, June 10, 1918, at the age of 67 years, 7 months and 3 days. May what I have tried to say about him be said of us all, is my prayer.

Shall We Put God First, or . . ?

In "The Brethren Herald", a beautifully printed quarterly parish paper published by Brother Robert D. Crees for his West Kittanning and Brush Valley churches in Pennsylvania, he asks his parishioners to share with him a problem, which is doubtless the problem of many another pastor and church leader. We quote:

We have a problem that we want all our readers to think about. In this busy life of ours, many varied duties and interests claim our attention and time. The question is, who comes first? Is it God or—your favorite diversion, your business, the club, the fraternal order to which you belong? If obligations conflict, which do you choose? Which are you putting first in your life? Which do you support most generously?

It is surprising how many Christian people put God and religion last; who not only deny them the first place, to which they have an inalienable right, but who actually put them last. If there is nothing else to do, no household duties, no social engagements, they will go to church—perhaps—if it is not raining, if it is not too hot, not too cold, and if they feel just right! And if there is anything left over after paying their bills, their club dues, and their weekly contribution to the movies, and if they are sure they won't miss it, they will give it to the support of Holy Religion!

But is it right? The church is God's business, his enterprise, the agency which he has created for carrying on his work. We dare not neglect it. The fact that we are too busy, or too tired, or that we disagree with someone, is no excuse.

Let us ask ourselves frankly where we stand in this matter. Perhaps we haven't thought very much about it and have drifted unconsciously into habits of religious neglect and indifference. If so, it is time for us to do some very serious thinking, and to ask ourselves, not merely what we have done or have not done in the past, but what we are going to do from now on. Shall we put God first or—something else?

Nothing can excuse us from being less kindly towards others than God is. We are to be "imitators of God" (Eph. 5:1).

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THE PATRIARCH OF CONSTANTINOPLE DISCUSSES THE POPE OF ROME

In reply to a question concerning a possible union with the Roman Church, the Patriarch of Constantinople is quoted by the Athenian newspaper, Proia, as saying: "The Roman Church is a great and old church, which we honor and respect. We have never thought of denying the Archbishop of Rome his primacy of honor. We consider him the first in the order. But the Pope of Rome does not desire the primacy of honor only, but the government of the church also; in fact, the absolute government of it. Instead of the federal system, he wants a despotic centralization. Not only does the Roman Church make this claim, but she refuses to discuss it. She says, 'I have made the key of truth, and he that wanteth cometh.' Some time ago the Pope issued an encyclical, in which he forbade Catholics to participate in conferences and discussions in which we take part, and which tend toward a closer contact between churches. How, then, is the approach to be effected?"—The Congregationalist.

BIBLE SOCIETIES

Among other fruits of the Shanghai horror are certain losses to the Bible societies by reason of work under way in the Commercial and other presses, all located in the danger zone. The Commercial press, the largest printing establishment in China, was actually bombarded on the 29th, the day after the Japanese forces landed. The American Bible society has lost through destroyed plates and matrices, books in bindery, etc., $7,233.90 Mex. In addition, books in the Commercial and other presses were destroyed to the amount of $15,236.00 Mex. This latter figure, however, is not a financial loss to the American Bible society. The British and Foreign Bible society suffered still greater losses. There have not yet been summarized. For about three years Dr. Barclay, of the English Presbyterian mission in Formosa, has been putting a Romanized edition of the Bible in Formosan through the press. About 90 per cent of the work was completed. The original manuscript and that portion of the work finished went up with the bombing of the Commercial press. Fortunately a second proof of the entire work is in hand. Hence in time the whole job may be done all over again.—The Christian Century.

A VICTORY FOR CHARACTER

Of course the victory of Von Hindenburg is not yet achieved, but well-wishers of Germany are happy that it appears to be assured. He is reported to have rolled up a 7,000,000 vote lead over Adolf Hitler, his nearest competitor, and failed by only 169,752 votes of securing a majority over all competitors. This moral victory is one for character. It is quite generally recognized that the venerable president is not a genius, unless sincere devotion to the welfare of his nation be regarded as genius. He was sincerely loyal to his Emperor as the head of the nation, but when the nation became a republic he was still just as loyally devoted to the nation. A man who can sink personal preferences in his devotion to the national good is to be trusted.—The Presbyterian Advocate.

PROHIBITION FACTS AND WET FANCIES

Eugene A. Hecker, a statistician, calls attention to some very interesting statistics touching prohibition, only a few of which may be mentioned here. He says very truly that "large numbers are impressive, when offsetting figures and facts are ignored. With regard to loss of revenue owing to prohibition he makes some very interesting comparisons. The highest revenue obtained from liquor reached the high point of $483,050,854, in 1919, when breweries and distilleries were working at highest capacity against the approaching drouth. The estimate of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment of revenues of states and other political divisions as $50,000,000 annually is accepted for the sake of the argument as approximately correct. These figures are not very impressive when compared with the total revenues of governments. For the year 1931, the expenses of the Federal government were $4,951,160,738. A revenue from liquor of even $400,000,000, which the wets claim, would contribute only 8 per cent of the total. Until the market crash in 1929, during nine years of prohibition, the revenues from other sources than liquor was sufficient not only to run the government, but to provide such a surplus that federal taxes were reduced.—The Presbyterian Advance.

THE GOSPEL AMONG PIGMIES

That Baganda apostle, Apolo Kivebulaya, now evangelizing the pigmies of the Ituri writes to England: "I am constrained to write to you just a few words to relate to you how the wonderful power of Jesus Christ, who died for us, is working in this country. It is the Gospel of Christ that is making clean the customs of the Mboga people . . . Other people in the forest are just the same when I preach to them the words of God; they also accept the message and strive to give up their sins and their bad customs. It is when we preach the great love of God in Jesus Christ that this takes place. And now I know that when any man trusts our Lord Jesus with all his heart and soul he receives the power he needs to live a new life."—S. S. Times.

Jews, Catholics and Protestants Meet

to be characterized by the spirit of meekness, to deal justly and righteously toward all men and to be in the world as those who serve. These are ideals and aims which they seek to realize, and which are inimical to racial and religious bitterness and bigotry.

But these Christian people do not feel at liberty to fellowship in a religious way with those who do not believe in the Lordship of Christ, and many cannot fraternize with those, at the other corner of the triangle, who deny the sufficiency of grace through faith to save apart from good works, and who exalt a fallible human being to the place of supreme authority instead of the inspired word of God. They would not harbor hatred, nor any unkindness toward these religious groups, nor would they deny them perfect freedom, without any embarrassment, to engage in the type of worship they prefer. Yet they hold all who deny their Lord, whether religious or non-religious, to be subjects for their message and possible converts to their faith. To them Christianity is not just one of the great religions, it is the only true religion, and they cannot compromise their liberty and obligation to seek to convert these other religionists to the worship of the only true Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. And that is what inter-religious fellowship with Jews involves. Christ did not tolerate any other faith than that of the blessed Gospel which he himself gave to the world, and his true disciples can be no more tolerant. They must be true to him. They recognize a higher claim than that of toleration of non-Christian faiths, and that is loyalty to the Lordship of Jesus.

Numbers

The book of Numbers ought to be of interest to all students of mathematics and lovers of the arts of camp life, for it has to do with census taking, camp order, camp purity, camp worship, and camp movements. It should make an appeal to churchmen and those who are occupied with the enticements of travel-lore and world-wide observation. All the problems of great leadership are involved in its pages and the usual popular discontentments are in evidence.

Furthermore, detectives and under-cover men should find some interest in the reports of spies and the difficulties associated with majority and minority reports. In this instance, as is so often the case, the minority report was not the leaden one. The greatness of men like Moses and the folly and bombast of Balaam are revealed in emboldened lines and dramatic incidents.

Recently someone asked the writer to explain the unusual phenomenon of Balaam's hortatory ass. There is nothing unusual about that incident. Do we not hear "asses" speaking in many circles every day? And someone has lately ventured the bold suggestion that we have "Jack-asses" in one of the chiefest branches of our government, to say nothing about the Balaam's. Seriously, is not the present governmental situation and the plight of the American people quite comparable to the state of affairs under Moses? Do we not need even greater doses of Providential discipline? Are we not "wandering" now?

Numbers, as you have gathered by this time, is the book of wanderings. It is closely associated with its sister Pentateuch writings. Genesis sets forth the idea of new creation and the great beginnings; Exodus reveals the doctrine and plan of redemption; Leviticus provides for fellowship with God through proper worship; and Numbers stresses service and a righteous walk before Jehovah.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Moses.
2. When and Where Written. 1500-1450 B. C. Palestine.
3. Authenticity. Generally regarded as sober history; an account of the wanderings of Israel in the wilderness.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. Israel Preparing for Entrance into the Land. 1-10.
2. Israel Excluded and Wandering near the Land. 11-25.
3. Israel Prepared for the Possession of the Land. 26-36.

III. THE SCOPE OF THE BOOK

The book of Numbers covers a period of nearly forty years of Israel's actions near the margin of the Promised Land.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. Pilgrimage. Wandering. Numbering.
2. Key Verses. 1:19; 10:29.
3. Key Chapter. 19.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

Numbers is the I and II Corinthians of the Old Testament. It shows how the child of God may dwell in righteousness and yet walk in the way of the carnal man. It is perfectly possible for a redeemed man, through his own disobedience and conduct, to rob himself of much sweet fellowship with his God and his fellowmen. Many Christians fail to realize the life of victory in Christ because they choose the ambiguous gray habits of those who walk in the wilderness of sin. Yet the patience of Jehovah is not exhausted. What a marvel! But our God keeps us from entering the "Promised Land" on the earth, and certainly from some of the rich rewards of heaven.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

1. The Brazen Serpent, the Smitten Rock, and the Cities of Refuge—all these have a direct reference to Christ. See John 3:14; I Cor. 10:4; Heb. 6:18.

2. Through Christ, Israel will yet be redeemed. She has hesitated and blundered in times past, but some day, through his grace, Israel will accept the King she has rejected as her own King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

Permit me to quote from another great Bible teacher of the last century: "The spiritual teachings of Numbers is rich in quantity and exceedingly practical. As in the other books of Moses, it lies largely in the types, which, broadly speaking, may be generalized as follows:

I. AS REGARDS SERVICE

- (1). We are called to service and to warfare, but in the divine order service is preceded by the NEW BIRTH (Genesis), REDEMPTION (Exodus), WORSHIP and FELLOWSHIP (Leviticus) ...
- (2). Acceptable service is never in self-will, either as to WHAT, WHEN, HOW, or WHERE. All is divinely ordered; nothing is left to inclination or judgment.
- (3). The highest service is that of the Nazarite, the separated one, who will not defile himself with even the uncleanness of the people of God. II Tim. 2:19-21.

II. AS REGARDS WALK

- (1). Perhaps the central lesson of the whole wonderful series is that UNBELIEF HINDERS BLESSING ...
- (2). But the way into the fulness of Christ is in the way of TRUST, not of works, and distrust turns the Christian back into the wilderness of a barren and weary experience. Deut. 1:19-35; Heb. 3:15-4:11.

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Matt. 26:39. "And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." In Mark 14:35, 36, we read, "And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt." Luke 22:41, 42: "And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine be done."

No one who has ever heard Mr. Sunday's great sermon on "The Three Groups", will soon forget it. He was discussing men, noting particularly their conduct that night in the garden just before the betrayal. But I want to call your attention to distance. Matthew says, "He went a little farther", representing physical distance. However, I think it does no violence to the text to see in it moral distance as well, and vastly more important. In the great stretch of human experience did Jesus not go "farther" than any of his disciples? Did he not go farther in the pain he suffered, and the sorrow he endured, and the sacrifices he made? When we remember that all the woes, the sorrows, the heart aches and pains of earth find their counterpart in that Gethsemane agony, why should we not look at moral distance, when Jesus "went a little farther"? His soul surely went a little farther into the shadows of human suffering; else why did he cry out "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." In that respect, too, "he went a little farther." Thus the physical distance in the garden becomes without moment as you study moral distance.

In the physical world, the horizon does not seem far away. But on great moral issues who can determine boundaries? Human slaughter pens, which, in order to appear half-civilized, we call war, who can sense the moral boundary? A nation, or a state, engaged in the business of making drunkards of its citizens, who can find the boundary to such a moral distance? It is moral and spiritual distance which counts most of all. I think Jesus went a little farther in poverty. He went farther in self-denial. He went farther in sorrow. He went farther in service; and Jesus went farther in sacrifice. Herein lies the motive, and the urge, for all Christian activity. Has he not called us to be followers in these things? Then, who can ever expect to catch up with him? Oh, no. He went a little farther.

Take this one: HE went a little farther in self-denial. About the best definition of self-denial is, doing things for the sake of others. And here, what a difference even between our intentions and ability. Why, Jesus left heaven for my sake. He did not think of his own interests when he came. "For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds" (Heb. 12:3). He met the taunts of sinners for my sake. Self-denial? He was buffeted and spit upon for my sake. His hands and feet were torn with nails for my sake. He sweat drops of blood for my sake. And the shame of it all is, I am so far behind him in these things. He spent his whole life for others. Our self-denial?—how empty the claim! A native minister in China was attacked by a mob, and all because he left his old religion to become a Christian. They struck him with stones and mud until his face was all covered with blood. An American missionary rescued him from the mob or they would have killed him. This kind hearted man said to the native convert, "They have been awfully cruel to you, haven't they?" And the native convert replied, "But they may kill me, if that will only make them love Jesus." Now, who could go beyond this in real self-denial? But all this was learned from our great Sufferer. When we think of our indifference to HIS poverty, to HIS self-denial, to HIS sorrow, to HIS service, and to HIS sacrifice—how that we are willing sometimes to throw out of HIS blessed, and holy religion the ordinances of HIS OWN CHOOSING, or treat them as of so little importance as of no use to us—it is high time we hang our heads in shame!

Beyond saving a man from sin, God can save him from uselessness, but many never arrive at that stage of salvation.

The Teacher's Standard of Efficiency

By Mrs. Joyce Saylor, Warsaw, Indiana

Co-workers in the Sunday school! What a sacred trust has been assigned to us! The Christian education of the youth of our country is largely in our hands. Are we taking our task seriously, and putting our very best into it?

We are about to begin a new year in our Sunday school work. Let us take an inventory of the past year and see just where we stand in relation to our task and consider what forward steps we can take as individuals to help make the work more effective and efficient.

The Warsaw-Winona Council of Religious Education have prepared the following self-rating Standard, including some of the most important items essential to the best interests of the work in each local school, and in the absence of which the desired results cannot be accomplished.

The possible score for each item is 10. After thoughtful and prayerful consideration, kindly designate your score.

1. If you are present at the opening of the Sunday school session each Sunday morning. (5) .....
2. If present at "teacher's time," ten minutes before the opening. (5) .....
3. If you are present at least three Sundays out of four and if forced to be absent, notify the superintendent not later than Saturday noon .....
4. If you devote a minimum of one hour each week to the preparation of your Sunday school lesson .....
5. If you are using firm, yet tactful discipline .....
6. If you help to make the worship service of your school, or Department, one of real worship for yourself and your pupils .....
7. If you are influencing your pupils to form the habit of church attendance by regularly attending at least one preaching service each Sunday .....
8. If you are cooperating with the School by attending the monthly Council meeting and your own Departmental Council meeting if one exists .....
9. If you are striving to live an exemplary life before your pupils, and are abstaining from any un-Christian habit and from participation in any form of amusement harmful to your own spiritual life, as well as to your influence over those who are apt to take you as their pattern .....
10. If you are endeavoring to become more efficient by attending the annual Training School and taking advantage of other means provided for growth along your line of Christian service .....
11. If it is the constant aim of all your teaching, by precept, example and personal appeal to win your pupils to Jesus Christ, and to develop their Christian character .....

"Rio de Janeiro-1932"

Increasing interest is being manifested in the Eleventh Convention of the World's Sunday School Association which will be held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, July 25-31. This is the first gathering of Christians from all parts of the world to be held in South America. At least fifty nations will be represented.

Rates for steamship travel to this Convention are the lowest that have ever been offered to South America. The itineraries cover direct travel to Rio de Janeiro, with extension to Buenos Aires. Also from Buenos Aires across the Andes to Chile and the various ports on the west coast of South America and through the Panama Canal. This circle tour can be taken in the reverse direction, going via the Panama Canal and down the west coast, arriving at Rio de Janeiro just in time for the Convention. Full information about interesting routes at very reasonable rates can be obtained by writing to the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York, N. Y.

Pennsylvania, as at former World's Conventions, has registered the largest number of delegates to date. Five hundred registrations have been assigned to North America out of a total of 2,500. Program building is advancing under an able Committee of which Dean Luther A. Weigle, of New Haven, is Chairman. Mr. L. W. Simms, of St. John, N. B., is Chairman of the General Committee on "Rio de Janeiro-1932." A youth conference is one of the features. In addition to the main Convention program, institutes and seminars will be held for a more intensive study of Christian Education in its world-wide aspects. The music and pageantry will be under the direction of Prof. H. Augustine Smith, of Boston University. Prof. Smith cared for the same features at the Eighth World's Convention, which was held in Tokyo in 1920. The government has granted the beautiful and commodious Municipal Theatre for the general meetings of the Convention and the Fine Arts Building has been allocated for the Comprehensive Exhibit, which is under the direction of Mr. Harvey E. Cressman of the American Baptist Publication Society of Philadelphia.

Financing such a Convention must be cared for outside the regular budget of the Association. Century Club memberships are being developed in which Sunday schools or individuals participate by paying $100.00. All who do this will receive a wireless message direct from Rio de Janeiro while the Convention is in session. Then there is an Intercessory Prayer membership for the multitudes who cannot attend but who are eager to be personally and directly identified with such a world Christian Convention. They agree to pray for God's blessing upon this Convention during these days of preparation and especially while the Convention is in session July 25-31. An enrollment fee of $2.50 is suggested. A copy of the Convention Program and badge will be sent to all enrolled Intercessory Members. The address of the World's Sunday School Association is 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York, N. Y.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ORGANIZATION IN PERSIA

Persia will have a Sunday School Secretary in the person of Rev. L. Bentley, Hamadan. Mr. Bentley is a missionary of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., and has recently been appointed by the Presbyterian Mission in Persia to render special service in the Sunday school work of that country. He will help not only the schools under the direction of the Presbyterian missions but will render all the service possible in the Sunday school work for all the denominations in Persia. The committee to develop the Sunday school work in Persia under the leadership of Mr. Bentley is in process of organization.

HOW SIN BEGINS

(Lesson for April 10)

Lesson Text: Gen. 2:15-17; 3:1-8; Golden Text: Matt. 26:41

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

How Sin Begins. Gen. 3:1-12

Three ways in which sin begins are indicated in this passage. Sin began (1) Through the woman's communing with Satan, even in the garden of the Lord; (2) Through doubts as to the truth and faithfulness of God's word, the doubts being suggested by Satan; and (3) Through the desires of the woman herself—or in other words, her willingness to be tempted. It is difficult to say which of these three ways is the basic one. It should also be pointed out that the beginning of sin is gradual: Eve fell through taking each step successively; weak as she may have been, she would never have taken the last step at first. If we would be kept from sin, let us never listen to the words of Satan or his followers, and let us never yield to our first doubts.

TUESDAY

Sowing and Reaping. Gal. 6:1-10

We may well hesitate before entering into sin merely because of the consequences. The truth that we reap what we have sown is everywhere demonstrated. Too often, however, we think of this statement merely as something to hinder us from sinning. It is also a very real incentive to do good: "He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." So let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

WEDNESDAY

Temptation from Lusts. Jas. 1:12-18

Perhaps it was because Eve really wanted to eat of the fruit of the tree that she was ready to listen to the words of Satan. Man's true nature today is no different from those early days when we read that "every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." We cannot overcome our lusts of ourselves, but should meet them in God's strength, with a "Thus saith the Lord." Only in this way may we overcome, and blessed is the man that endureth, for he shall receive the crown of life.

THURSDAY

Temptation from Covetousness. I Tim. 6:1-10

There is no sin in riches. Personally, I believe that if I had more money I could add a bit to the world's store of happiness. However, we should never forget that riches bring much misery and are, after all, quite unrelated to happiness. In the words of the colored poet, Dunbar, even for the richest, if they do not find the smile that warms and the tear that refreshes, life is only "a crust of bread and a corner to sleep in." Let us not foolishly waste our energy striving for riches, which in themselves are not worth the struggle, but let us strive for godliness with contentment—and if we prove ourselves worthy of riches, perhaps they may be added unto us!

FRIDAY

Resisting Temptation. Eph. 6:10-20

It is useless to resist temptation in our own strength. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, and our own flesh and blood is therefore powerless in such a struggle. We wrestle against spiritual forces, and we can only be victorious in the strength of our God, who is Spirit. Let us give special meditation to verse 18.

SATURDAY

Christ our Helper. Heb. 2:13-18

It is a cardinal doctrine of the Church that Jesus, in his earthly life, was perfectly human. As such, he was tempted in all points, even as we are, yet without sin. Because of his own experience, "Jesus knows our weakness," and is able to be a merciful and faithful high priest in all things. He is able to succour them that are tempted: let us not fail to ask him for help and strength in time of need. Read 1 Cor. 10:13.

SUNDAY

The Blessedness of the Righteous. Ps. 1

The way of the transgressor is hard; but the man who walks not in the ways of sin, but delights in the law of the Lord, shall be richly blessed of God. We must be careful that we do not fall into the sin of which Satan so unjustly accused Job—serving God for what we get out of it—yet we cannot be unmindful of his blessings. This being true, let us think of those who have not known the way of God; how are we meeting our obligations to them? Remember that the righteous man "bringeth forth his fruit in his season."

Making Meetings Helpful

By Rev. Harry Thomas Stock

It is not enough to have class sessions and society meetings that are interesting. "Pep" is not necessarily a virtue. Certainly monotony is not. Unless the sessions do prove attractive, new members will not be won and old members may be lost. Is it correct to say that those meetings which are the most helpful, those that deal in an inspiring way with matters which concern us, are the ones which will also prove interesting? If so, our main object is to make meetings useful; they will, then, be interesting.

1. What do you discuss? Do you "accept" courses that have been chosen for you, that you have used for years, without asking whether these are the ones which you need most? In the young people's division there should be an earnest facing of the question, "Just what subjects is it important for these young people to study?" Build up your curriculum for young people in terms of their present and future needs and in terms of the needs of the world. In the society do the same. Are you still using a set of topics issued from some headquarters? Do they suit you? If not, why not make some of your own, using such from these lists as you want, and substituting others which are more pertinent to your local situation?

2. Are your materials helpful? After you have decided what subjects you should study look around for the best materials. Some of them will be in the graded series. Some of them will not be in any church school series. Be sure to get that which is best for your group, regardless of authorship.

3. Are your leaders interested in their task? If you are a church school teacher, don't let the young people get the idea that you are teaching "just from a sense of duty." If you are an officer of the club or society, make this one of your "majors"; don't put a dozen other jobs ahead of it. In either case you have been asked to fill an important position because others have faith in you. Justify that faith. It will take time, of course. Everything worth while does.

4. Do you make adequate preparation for each session? This refers, first, to the teacher. Where do you begin, with the printed material, or with the lives of the young people? Do you try to place yourself in their position, understanding their ambitions and temptations, and then temper your teaching to that? If you are the leader of an evening meeting, when do you begin to prepare, the day of the meeting or ten days ahead? When do you assign parts for the meeting? at least a week in advance? If you are to lead the worship, do you make detailed preparation for every element to be included? If you are the pupil, the "audience" in the meeting, do you, too, prepare? It is your responsibility to get ready for a meeting; the session does not belong to the leader or teacher alone. Above all, do you come to the meetings in the attitude of wanting to learn?

5. Do you strive for variety? Not that you must always have novel meetings, not that you must resort to artificial devices to arouse interest. But any single-tracked program grows wearisome. Have you made use of stories, of occasional outside speakers, of dramatization, of the question-box, of current-event reports, of careful reviews of books or magazine articles?—Young People's Bulletin.

QUESTIONS FOR THE PRESIDENT

1. Do I attend every meeting, "cutting" all other so-called important engagements? If I am compelled to be absent on account of sickness, do I always notify the vice-president in plenty of time?

2. Do I regard this as one of the two or three most important activities in which I am engaged? Or do I "work at being president" only when I am not busy with something else?

3. Am I a leader or a boss? Do I have any trouble getting others to do their share of the work? If so, is it because I do not use the right method of approach?

4. Do I plan carefully just what I am going to do at a business meeting, just what I am going to say, and what I am going to do if things do not go the way that I hope they will?

5. Do I have regular meetings of the executive committee, dated so far ahead that there will be no excuse for making other engagements, and so well planned that members of the committee will regard the meetings as too important to miss?

6. How hard am I trying to keep up with what other groups are doing? When have I read a book on young people's work? Do I attend meetings where other leaders pass on suggestions of successful methods?

7. How hard am I trying to make my organization a real part of the working force of the church? Do I help along the idea that the young people's group is the "whole show," or do I try to see that they "play the game" with the entire church?

8. As I look upon my work so far, is it going to be easy or hard for the next president to go on with the work when my term is up? How can I help to make it easier for him?

9. How often, in what ways, and with what kind of spirit do I check up on all of the other officers? Do I always make sure that they are carrying out the instructions of the group, and that no details are left unattended to? Do I scold?

10. Am I careful to see that the definitely religious or spiritual side of our work is securing the central emphasis, or am I satisfied if our socials are a success and our members pay their dues? Where do I place the emphasis, upon good times or upon growing in Christian understanding and character?—C. E. World.

Children and Missionary Service

It has been rather surprising that such a large percentage of Christians make their confession of Christ when very young and that such a large number testify that the call to Christian service as minister or missionary came during tender years, some even declaring that prenatal influences determined very largely their entrance to Christian service. First impressions are usually strong ones and especially upon the child mind. The appeal for missionary service has made impressions upon very young children from which they never could escape. Recently in a group of missionaries it was their common testimony that they decided to be missionaries when young.

Children and Missionary Money

It is not difficult to teach children to give to missions. It seems a part of their nature to share everything with others. A needy appeal never receives a negative reply. They will divide anything with anybody if properly approached. The small gift that a child can make may not accomplish much so far as the immediate promotion of missions is concerned, and yet their combined giving provides finances for many far-reaching missionary activities, and the giving habits formed may determine large gifts for missions in years to come.

Children and Parents

Children can often do what adults fail to do after long continued and earnest efforts. They can influence their parents to have a favorable attitude toward missions. A little girl of five was sent to the Mission Band by her parents, who, church members though they were, cared not at all about missions but wanted a Sunday afternoon hour of rest from her constant prattle. It was not long until that child led them to an intense interest in missions, a thing which ministers and others had failed to do. It is often true "a little child shall lead them," and it is frequently true in the field of missionary interest. The surest way to reach parents is through their children.

Children and Missionary Organizations

A baby's name on a cradle roll or a child's on the record book of a children's missionary organization may mean little in some ways of thinking but it may be full of the deepest significance and not the least value is the child's training to do work in cooperation with others for great purposes. It is little one can do alone, but great things are done by cooperation. When the children learn how much they can do for missions through their missionary societies, they will be ready for the same kind of cooperation for missions in the church, and that will mean much for missionary promotion.

It Takes Time

A bishop of the Roman Catholic church in commenting upon the recent settlement of difficulties between the church and the Italian state said: "It takes time but the church can afford to wait." It takes time to develop a missionary-minded church. It will take a matured generation of well instructed children. Meanwhile we can not afford to wait in idleness. We must get busy and keep busy with the children. In due time our purpose will be accomplished if we do not grow so weary in well-doing that we faint by the way.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

Children and Missions. Mark 10:13-16

By Dr. C. H. Stauffer

Missions mean sharing Jesus Christ with all the needy peoples of the world. That is a tremendous but not an impossible task. If it is to be done adequately and effectively, it will require the cooperation of all the Christian forces, the combined efforts of all the followers of Jesus Christ. Each one has some worth while contribution to make. No one can escape his part in the undertaking.

Children and a Missionary-minded Church

The surest way to develop a missionary-minded church is to begin with the children. They are in the formative period of life. Their habits of thought are not fixed and their attitudes of life are still flexible. With most adults, it is not so. They are set in their ways. Too frequently they will not receive missionary information, and will refuse to expose themselves to influences which would change their attitudes toward missions. Children are without many of the prejudices with which older people are afflicted. They are open to missionary truths and are ready for missionary projects. They will apply missionary principles to life, will accept missionary aims for life, and will adopt missionary methods for their accomplishment. A missionary-minded church will be produced by growing missionary-minded members and the most fruitful field in which to plant the seed is in the children.

Children and Race Relations

Children do not make serious race distinctions until their minds are poisoned by older people. They will play with children of other races, and share with them whatever they have. They are keenly interested in the children of other lands and races and are ready to give to them out of their store. Missions seek to develop an attitude toward and a fellowship with the races based on Christian ideals, and it can best be done by continuing and developing the race attitudes and fellowships of children.

Recently a minister who is keenly interested in the personal and social applications of the gospel told of a colored visitor being in his home. When his little boy kissed him good-night, he immediately kissed the Negro, too. He said a strange feeling went over him but the boy seemed to feel no racial difference. To children, red and black and white are all one race of men.

Children and War

If we are to have a warless world, children must be taught the Christian way of life not only for themselves but for the national group of which they are a part. The extreme nationalism which puts forth mere petty slights as causes of wholesale murder has no place in Christian thinking and children will quickly learn the lesson and just as quickly apply it. At no point can missions render a larger service than by developing a generation of Christians who will learn war no more and thus remove not only a cause of suffering and heartache but also a great hindrance to the advancement

Children and the Gospel

Children are great lovers. They early learn to love Jesus and to share his love with others. To them the gospel is not for any one group but for all and they give practical demonstrations of their beliefs by freely offering it to others. Not long ago a Sunday school class of children in a church surrounded by people of many nationalities in a contest for members brought children of eight different nations into the school. To them the Sunday school was open to all. They saw no restricted application for the gospel. In another community where the Japanese had surrounded the church, it was the children who suggested that the Japanese children be invited to the Sunday school. Freely and frankly they

SEMINARY NOTES

Within the past two months, three of our own Brethren pastors have given special Seminary lectures before our students. Dr. C. A. Bame spoke on "The Brethren and Religious Education in America." Dr. W. H. Beachler brought his message on "The Glory of the Christian Ministry." Rev. W. E. Ronk delivered an address on "Some Present Day Qualifications for the Ministry." We greatly appreciate the contribution these men have made to the work of our Seminary here.

Several weeks ago we received $150.00 from the National Sunday School Association, to be used in purchasing religious books for our Theological Library. The gift was timely and we have already used a large part of it to pay for books which we had to have the middle of this year.

Two of our men, Tom Hammers and Orville Lorenz, filled the pulpit of the Johnstown First church while Brother Ashman was engaged in meetings at Muncie, Indiana.

Brother McClain who was ill for two weeks, is now able to be about his work again.

Brother Stuckey met with the Shipshewana committee of the Indiana Conference at South Bend, on March 8th. They made plans for the Ministerial Bible Conference and Young People's Camp at Shipshewana this summer.

The W. M. S. organizations of Whittier, California and Dayton, Ohio, have already been thanked for the boxes they have sent to the Seminary House containing comforts and a few other things especially usable in the kitchen. We appreciate the interest of the W. M. S. organizations in our Seminary House, and their desire to add to the enjoyment of the eighteen men living there. Speaking of the needs of our Seminary House, the author of these notes has written an article which will appear in the next Woman's Outlook, in which he has listed, with the advice of the other members of the Seminary Faculty, numerous needs of this House. ### ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

It was my privilege to spend four days with the Delaware Brethren, and to preach three nights and one afternoon in the Mt. Olivet Brethren church near Georgetown, also we have services one night at the little towns near Bethany Beach. This was during the coldest weather of the winter, March 10 to 14. The wind was as cold as I imagine it could be if it had blown directly from the North Pole. I have been out in weather in Norway when the temperature was down a bit, even as low as 45 and 48 below zero. But I never felt that cold any more than I did this in Delaware. While on my way home the wind blew with such force that the sand flew in thick clouds, and the speed of my car was considerably retarded time and time again.

While visiting the members of the Brethren church in that section I was treated with the best in every way. They did all possible for my comfort, as well as helping to get the people out for the services. The services were well attended by both members and strangers, considering weather conditions. The membership within two miles distance of the church I judged to be about twenty and the attendance the first night was about that number, while the last three nights was from thirty to more than forty. Most of the members are very active and their children are taught to take part in the services of the Christian Endeavor society. It was a great joy to me to see these young people take part, and each one of them testified to the blessing of their Savior, as well as prayed for the growth of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ in their community and, in some cases, for our churches and missions throughout the world.

This work has been established by our dear Brother I. D. Bowman. And the people in those parts, even twenty-five miles away at Ocean View and Bethany Beach on the one side and at Loral, the same distance on the other, speak of him in the highest terms as a Christian and as a teacher and powerful preacher of the Word. One man who attends the services, but is not a member and has been disappointed through the acts of several so-called Christians in other churches, said, in speaking of Brother Bowman, "His record is high with me and so it is with most every one in the community. I regard him the best Bible teacher and preacher I have heard." Having the man before me and knowing he was not a Christian, I asked him, "My friend, why are you not a Christian?" He told me his sad story. Some one in whom he confided, became a barrier in his way. His wonderful confidence in Brother Bowman is helping to remove these hindrances. Let us pray for this man, as he told me he wanted to meet his loved ones in Glory. We often disappoint others by our shortcomings, but Jesus never did and never will, and Jesus is the Way. Let us look to him and follow him.

I am glad that we have Brother Bowman in this field, where there is no other Brethren church within a distance of 150 miles, and where there are several towns and cities where Brethren people ought to have churches. Brother Bowman lays good foundations for others to build upon. One man did not like Brother Bowman because, as he said, "He preaches the Bible as God's Word, intended for man, to be the truth from God to men. He says God said it, meant it and that it cannot be changed." Praise the Lord. I believe that myself, and I believe many others in the Brethren ministry hold the same view. This may seem narrow to such as this man, but it is God's way. "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation." There was no doubt about this in the mind of Paul, who spoke by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

The work in Delaware is still under a great financial stress, as it has been since the church was built. For two years they lost their crops, and the third the farmers did not get enough to pay for seed and fertilizer. Several of the farmers down there had to borrow money to start the year's crops last year and when the crops failed they had to borrow money to live, and a similar situation prevails this year. I do not think there are more than three members who have made enough the last three years to break even; the rest of them are merely existing and hoping for better times. Consequently the church has fared ill and the pastor's salary is far in arrears. This together with the lengthy sickness and three accidents Brother Bowman had makes the shoe pinch badly.

This is a field where our mission board has been a great benefit, and I do not know of a more worthy place in our state or district, nor where the help has been a greater blessing. The District Mission Board has aided in this field with $25.00 each month and this was a wonderful help to this needy church. The statement at State Conference last year was that this amount would be given for six months and then cut to the sum of $12.50 per month. I hope our Mission Board will see its way clear to continue the $25.00 allowance until next conference time, for we hope by that time things will be better.

I have written this report somewhat fuller than I otherwise would have done, but this will be my last report in the capacity of District Evangelist from the Mt. Olivet congregation. If other churches of the district desire me to visit them, please arrange for me to do so before July 15th. I am closing my work as District Evangelist and will give my final report this fall.

District Evangelist.

BUENA VISTA, VIRGINIA

Having read the good reports in the Evangelist, of "the good hand of God" upon other churches of the brotherhood, and having found these reports a source of real encouragement to me I feel encouraged to write a report of what God has been doing in our little field here.

God called me to be pastor of this little church and I began my service here in April of last year after the church had been without a pastor for about four years. I found the church badly disorganized, persecuted by preachers of error, and with a debt which is rather large for a church of the membership of this one.

Shortly after my coming we had a revival in which Brother G. W. Chambers and I worked together, he doing the greater amount of preaching. There were six or eight responses to the invitations given, out of which we baptized and received as members four. Later in the year we had another revival conducted by myself and four orthodox ministers of the town. The visible results being the salvation of a young lady and the reconsecration of one man whom I now list among the best of our members. The salvation of the young lady, who was already secretary of the Sunday school, gave us fine timber for an assistant teacher in the Sunday school and we hope later a regular teacher. The reconsecration of the man added, a few weeks later, one teacher to our Sunday school staff and one class to the number already in our school. This class has grown wonderfully in size and earnestness and by the personal work of this teacher a number have responded to the invitations given in our preaching services.

Since these two revivals there has been a remarkable growth in the interest shown by the people of the church and by others also. Attendance at all the services of the church has increased greatly. The Sunday school increased from an average of around 95 to around 150. Where we used to count from fifteen to thirty in our Wednesday night prayer meetings we now count from forty to seventy.

The church has made progress in organization also. The number of classes in our Sunday school when I came here was five, it is now eight. There were no organized classes when I came, now there are four. A constitution has been written and adopted. A Sunday School Workers' Council has been inaugurated. Three new deacons have been elected and ordained. A Christian Endeavor Society has been organized. The women of the church have organized as an aid to the church under the name of The Willing Workers Society, their organization is growing and doing a good work. Finances in the church are better organized and the receipts are increasing though our debt has not yet been reduced.

A summary of the soul saving work of our church since I began work here is as follows. These numbers include the six mentioned in connection with the two revivals mentioned above.

Baptized and received as members on profession of faith, 23.

Received by letter, 2.

Members who made reconsecrations to the Lord, 14.

On the third of April we are expecting Dr. I. D. Bowman to be with us and to begin a revival meeting. We are looking to God in public and private prayers and expect a great harvest. "We are not very strong, but our God is." "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." (Isa. 40:31).

Buena Vista, Virginia.

THREE POINT COMMANDS

By Josephine E. Phillips

"What am I to do about my three-year-old who hears me say, 'Come here!' and deliberately starts off in the opposite direction?" The question was put before a child-study group.

"Chase him and spank him!" declared one mother, of firm convictions.

"But the fun and thrill of the chase may be just what he's after," remonstrated another. "Maybe he hasn't enough outlet for this perfectly normal competitive instinct. I found when I began playing activity-games in the yard with my little boy he was much less likely to make a game of disobedience. A word to remind him 'Mother's not playing now' was seldom needed. Sometimes we made a game of obedience, though. 'Would you run up stairs and get my glasses, please? Perhaps you'll get back before I've counted to one hundred. One—two—three—' This satisfied his play instinct and made a pleasurable basis for a prompt-obedience habit."

The suggestion met with much favorable comment.

"How would you handle it?" the leader turned to a meek little mother of five.

She hesitated. "I couldn't say, off-hand, just what I'd do, not knowing the child. Obedience isn't a matter of a mother's getting her will carried out in certain isolated cases. It's—cumulative, I guess, is the word. It has to be gained—"

Baby's First Smile

"Yes, when does it begin?" interrupted a mother eagerly. "When one can start reasoning with a child and teaching him obedience?"

"The obedience comes first, else you never can reason with him," she said smiling. "A child is an active being long before he is a thinker, and how he thinks depends a good deal on how he has been trained to act."

"How young can you teach obedience, then?" persisted the other.

"At about the time of the baby's first smile."

"But my Charlie smiled when he was only three weeks old," said the newest-mother proudly.

The mother-of-five nodded. "That's when you can start obedience. He smiles because you do. He begins to look for your smile of love and approval,—and long before he understands your words, he understands your tone of voice. You must then start being honest with him if you are to have his respect, and respect is the beginning of obedience. When he flies into a tantrum—even though he does look too cute for anything with his feet and fists beating the air,—you are to let him know by the firmness and sternness of your voice and face, just what you think of such behavior. Some psychologists go so far as to say that physical pain should follow promptly upon an infant's misdemeanor, if we are to expect him to set up the proper associations between right and wrong—on the old principle of learning, that the act which gives pleasure or satisfaction will be repeated, while that which brings discomfort will be given up."

The R-R-C Method

The first mother looked very disconsolate. "I see I didn't start soon enough. Is there anything I can do now?"

"I believe I'd try to make three-point commands whenever possible, and ask Billy to do the same."

"Three-point?"

"Yes, R-R-C's, my children call them. Reason, Request, Courtesy. 'It's time to wash for supper, Billy.' (Reason) 'Will you come right away,' (Request) please?' (Courtesy). The courtesy part is often more than a 'please.' It means a respecting of Billy's individuality. His play world and its needs are far more real to him than mine. Sometimes courtesy means saying, As soon as you're through building that tower I'd like you to help Mother.' You may be surprised how soon Billy helps, and how soon he is making a request. 'When you are through reading the paper, Dad, will you fix my engine, please?' We find the job of both parent and child is soon dignified and lifted out of the animal-trainer and animal-being-trained class by this R-R-C method."

"I'll try it!" was the group-chorus.

High Finance in Prohibition*

By Senator Smith W. Brookhart

Upton Sinclair has written a very attractive novel under title of The Wet Parade. It is the truthfulness of his picture that gives it the greatest power. He has torn off a mask from every face of the anti-prohibition fight. In its true face it is a deceptive, cowardly and selfish picture.

Tonight I want to point out to you some of the insidious and camouflaged activities of high finance in its assault upon prohibition. The first national organization was called "The Association Against Prohibition." This association was set up by a small number of big financial men who are heavy income tax payers into the Treasury of the United States, because they are heavy profiteers upon the labor and earnings of the people of the United States. They were, in fact, an association of tax dodgers looking for an opportunity to transfer their taxes to the backs of the laboring people and the common people of the country by the nullification of the Eighteenth Amendment and the legalizing of beverages of low alcoholic content. They cared nothing for the moral devastation to be wrought by such a course and nothing for the economic cruelty to women and children that would follow its adoption. Their selfish purpose was to reduce their taxes, increase their ruthless profits and establish an economic autocracy over our government. Every pronouncement of this financial association refers to this tax question in some form. The latest letter received by me, dated February 6 of this year, points out that ten states have demanded the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment; that they represent only 29.42% of our population but they pay 63.69% of the individual income taxes of the United States. This insidious statement neglects to tell you that the financial crowd in these same states are levying a tax upon the people of the whole country in the form of excess profits of a good deal more than 63.69%. In fact, they are levying these extortionate profits with such monopolistic power that 92% in number of American business enterprises ultimately fail. And it is therefore evident that high finance in these states is not now and never has paid anything like its just share of the income taxes.

An outgrowth of this organization is another association of women for so-called prohibition reform. This association is not for reform at all. It is against reform. Its whole purpose is to supplement the tax dodgers of the Association Against Prohibition.

*Address delivered over the National Broadcasting System at Washington, D. C., February 13, 1932, under the auspices of the Radio Education Committee.

tion in its efforts to tax the laboring people of the country who drink beer instead of the big incomes of the profits of monopoly.

We next find another organization which calls itself "The Crusaders." Again this is a camouflaged title. They adopt a religious name for an irreligious purpose. Under this mask they not only supplement the argument of the tax dodgers but they dive deep into economics and insist that the return of intoxicating liquor would restore prosperity. Again there is a deep and sinister purpose in this argument. We have dropped down into the biggest depression in our time. This catastrophe of economic disaster has been brought upon the country by this same financial crowd of extortionate profiteers through their power of monopoly. They built bubbles of inflation, watered stocks and inflated bonds, induced the public to invest their savings in these mythical values, and now since the bubble has burst they would have the public enter the fight over prohibition and forget the criminal excesses of this same financial crowd.

The latest, and perhaps the most contemptible exploit of this financial campaign, is the publication of a fake newspaper in Philadelphia under the title, Herald of Good Times. In a big, full-page headline this paper declares, "Hoover Demands Prohibition Repeal," and in another headline it says, "Fess Resigns on Eve of Hoover Message." On smaller type, purposeless less noticeable it says "All Imaginary—More's the Pity." This deceptive paper was mailed to all members of Congress, accompanied by a letter under heading, "Republican Citizens' Committee Against National Prohibition," signed by Raymond Pitcairn. This letter is perhaps the most insolent and traitorous document that has been published, and quoting the Wall Street Journal, it advocates revolt and rebellion in the following language:

"When on the night of July 14, 1789, the Duc de Liancourt reported to King Louis that the Bastille had fallen to the assaults of the people, the King cried, 'Why, this is a revolt.' 'No, sire,' was the reply, 'It is a revolution.' People have been revolting against our prohibition laws; the election shows the revolt is changing to revolution before which the legislative tyranny must fall."

The first revolt and rebellion we ever had in this country was in this same state of Pennsylvania, and known in history as the whiskey rebellion, and was put down by President Washington. And if this insolent and autocratic Wall Street crowd want to promote another alcoholic rebellion it, too, will be put down, and the taxes on the financial crowd will be raised instead of lowered to pay the bill.

In spite of all this froth and foam of the financial crowd against the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act, the result is not at all disheartening to the prohibitionists. A test was brought to the United States Senate upon a question of a referendum, and the wets were only able to muster fifteen votes against fifty-five. There is no danger to the prohibition cause except the insidious power of money. This power is able to control the vast majority of the public press. It is able to put its decoy ducks even in some of the great labor organizations, but it has wholly failed to impress the moral sense of the country. In spite of its efforts at nullification, conditions are greatly improved over the old saloon days, even in the great wet cities of the country.

I do not want to encourage the temperance organizations of the United States to be indifferent to this violent agitation. On the other hand, I want them to awaken and meet every argument against the advance of prohibition and law enforcement. If properly presented to the people of the country, they will understand that all the issues presented by the wet crowd are in bad faith and without any rational purpose. Before the Eighteenth Amendment can be changed or modified in any way the proposition must be submitted by a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress. At this time instead of being two-thirds in favor of such change the House of Representatives is two-thirds against it, and the Senate is three-fourths against it. After such amendment or change should be submitted, it must then be ratified by three-fourths of the states, or thirty-six in number, before it would become effective. There are two methods of ratification, one by a vote of the legislatures of the various states and the other by a convention of delegates elected for that purpose. Congress has the power under the Constitution to submit either method of ratification.

The wet crowd, having been beaten in forty-six of the forty-eight legislatures upon the ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment itself, now demand a submission to conventions which they fallaciously call a referendum. There is no provision in the Constitution for a referendum upon any question. The financial crowd that demand a referendum upon prohibition are against referendums upon any economic question. They single out prohibition for a referendum as a last forlorn hope, because all constitutional methods have failed when invoked against it. This position is entirely unfair as well as unlawful. However, the wet crowd camouflage and cover up the idea of a referendum with a demand for the convention method of ratification. With their financial means of corruption they feel they could buy enough delegates in these conventions to secure such a ratification. Such a submission would open up the greatest orgy of corruption in the history of our country, and it is the financial crowd that has both the desire and power of corruption.

The fight is over now so far as the Constitution and the law is concerned. There is no vital question left except that of enforcement, and enforcement is improving. If the temperance forces of the country will now point their guns at this financial crowd hiding behind newspapers and other organizations, the agitation itself will soon be over and the Eighteenth Amendment will be enforced in all the states of the Union as reasonably in proportion as other laws.—The Christian-Evangelist.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

HADGE-LIVENGOOD—Marion Livengood of Milledgeville, Illinois, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Livengood, and Mr. Fenton Haugh of Rock Creek Township, Illinois, were married at the residence of the writer on January 28th, 1932. The single ring ceremony was read by Z. T. Livengood.

BUCKWALTER-CHAMPION—At the home of Clarence Champion on February 26th, 1932, Mr. Harold Buckwalter and Ione Champion were united in marriage. The single ring ceremony was read by the writer, Z. T. Livengood.

DEETS-LOWER—Brother Wayne Deets was united in marriage to Sister Naomi Lower. The groom is the oldest son of Brother and Sister Deets of Lanark, and the bride is the youngest daughter of Brother and Sister Clyde Lower of Lanark. The single ring ceremony was read by Z. T. Livengood.

HOPKINS-GADWAY—Albert Earl Hopkins, and Thelma Louise Gadway, both of Powell, Nebraska, were united in holy wedlock at the Brethren Manse in Carleton, Nebraska, January 27th by the undersigned. They are making their home in Powell. Only three witnesses were present.

W. R. DEETER.

DEETER-LONGAKER—On Sunday morning, February 14th, at the Brethren church in Carleton occurred the marriage of Mr. Loyde E. Deeter, and Miss Mary Longaker, both of Topeka, Kansas. Loyde is the eldest son of Rev. W. R. and Elda A. Deeter, of Carleton. He is a Lino Operator for a large firm in Topeka and has been with the company for over ten years. The bride is a sister of Mrs. Mary Longaker, continuing their work in the city. These young folks received many congratulations from various states, and their many friends have well wishes for them. Ceremony by the writer.

IN THE SHADOW

MOATS—On February 27, 1932, Mrs. Alice Moats answered the summons, "Come home." Sister Moats was one of the best members of the Brethren church at St. James, Maryland. She loved her church, and her forty-four years were faithfully and well. As age crept upon her she respected very much that she could no longer attend the services regularly, and take her place with the worshippers. And while her body grew weak her faith did not waver. Near the close of her earthly pilgrimage she and a friend were one day singing, "There's a Great Day Coming." At its close she said, "Yes, that will be a great day. I wonder if we will all be ready for it."

Sister Moats was the aunt of Dr. W. D. Furry, at one time president of Ashland College, now president of Shorter College at Rome, Georgia. It was in her home he lived after the death of his mother.

Funeral services at the home in Tilmontown, Indiana, by her pastor.

W. S. BAXTER.

HAWORTH—George Haworth was born at Over Darwin, Leathshire, England, on December 16, 1863, and came to the United States with his father, a little child. He departed this life at his home at Altus, Oklahoma, February 24, 1932, at the age of 68 years, 2 months and 8 days. He came to Bourbon County, Kansas in 1883 and was married at Lawrence, Kansas, to Mrs. Esther Whitebarger, who survives him. He is also survived by the following children: lives him. He is also survived by the following children: Mrs. Fern Carter and William B. Haworth both of Altus, Oklahoma, and Harold Haworth of Wichita, Kansas, and two step-children: Mrs. Cleona VanBuren, of California, and Howard Whitebarger of Oakland, California; also a sister, Mrs. Alice Hicks and a brother Ralph Haworth, of Fort Scott, Kansas. Also four nieces: Mable Spencer, Mrs. Lee Turner, Mrs. Joe Heyman, of Fort Scott, Kansas, and Mrs. Anna Montague, of East St. Louis, Illinois. The funeral was conducted from the Hicks home in Fort Scott, Sunday, February 28, 1932, by the writer.

The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Evergreen cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

TINKNEY—Charles B. Tinkney, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Tinkney, was born in Ashland, Ohio, May 2, 1888, and grew to young manhood in his native city. On January 27, 1909 he was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Deffenbaugh of Glenford, Ohio. Soon after the marriage the couple removed to the Deffenbaugh homestead at Glenford where the family continued to reside until some two and one-half years ago, when they removed to a farm in Richland county, Ohio, where they have since resided.

Early in life Charles Tinkney united with the Methodist church and upon removing to Glenford united with the Brethren church at that place. Upon removing to the farm in Richland county the family transferred their membership to the Park Street Brethren church at Ashland.

Brother Tinkney passed to be with his Lord on Monday morning, March 7, 1932 at the age of 43 years, 10 months and 3 days. He leaves as those who mourn, his wife, Mrs. Ethel Deffenbaugh Tinkney, one son John W. Tinkney, his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Tinkney and two brothers, Bernard E. and Jno. D., of Ashland; and one sister, Mrs. Martha Chamberlain, of Zenia, Ohio, beside other and more distant relatives and friends.

Brief funeral services were held at the home on Wednesday morning, March 9, conducted by his pastor and Dr. J. Allen Miller. The funeral cortege then motored to the Good Hope Lutheran church, near Glenford, Ohio, where further services were conducted by Dr. Miller. Burial was made in the Deffenbaugh family lot in the cemetery adjoining the church, there to rest in the quiet sleep of death until the Lord shall come to awaken those that sleep and to call his ransomed home.

DYOLI, BELOTE.

ERB—Annie R. Erb, widow of John U. Erb, died near Linwood, Maryland, on March 4th, 1932, from a complication of diseases, aged 59 years, 5 months and 18 days.

Two years ago she suffered a paralytic stroke from which she never fully recovered. This stroke affected her vocal organs and it was very difficult for her to talk.

Sister Erb was for many years a faithful member of the Linwood Brethren church and was faithful and regular in attendance when her health permitted. In her earlier years she was quite active in the Aid Society. She departed this life March 4th, 1932 and was laid to rest in the beautiful Park cemetery which is the last resting place of many of the members of the Church of the Brethren and the Brethren.

She is survived by six children, all grown to manhood and womanhood. Funeral services by her pastor in the Linwood Brethren church.

J. L. BOWMAN.

BEACHY—Frank P. Beachy, long time deacon and pillar in the Carleton Brethren church, was the son of John W. and Susan Beachy, born August 17th, 1859 at Salisbury, Somerset County, Pennsylvania. He answered the call of God to come home on February 7th, 1932, at his home in Carleton, Nebraska. He had reached the ripe age of 72 years, 5 months, 21 days.

He was a graduate of Mt. Union College, Ohio, and for a number of years taught school, and later went into the hardware and implement business and he sold the first threshing machine in the community, and owned the first automobile around Carleton, settling here in the early eighties.

His life and work counted much for the welfare of both church and community, and he will be greatly missed from his circle of friends and co-laborers.

Funeral services were conducted from the Brethren church in charge of the writer, assisted by Rev. R. L. Sink, pastor of the Bethel Church of the Brethren, and interment made in the Carleton Cemetery near town.

W. R. DEETER.

NICOLA—Christopher Guthrie Nicola was born at Hazelton, Preston County, West Virginia, December 21, 1867, died March 8, 1932, from a paralytic stroke at his home in Gratton, West Virginia. His parents were Jacob B. Nicola and Susanna Nicola. He was united in marriage to Lydia Alice Guthrie, December 2, 1884. To this union were born nine children, three deceased. Besides his widow and the seven living children he leaves four sisters, six brothers, seventeen grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the First Brethren church at Gratton, March 10, with the writer in charge.

Brother Nicola was, at the time of his death, a member of the First Brethren church at Gratton, West Virginia. He was at one time an elder in the Church of the Brethren.

LESLIE E. LINDOWER

COOK—Edith Mabbitt Cook, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mabbitt, was born in Carroll County, Indiana, August 17, 1894. On November 14, 1925 she was united in marriage to Dr. A. J. Cook of Flora, Indiana. Early in life she united with the Brethren church at Darwin and never transferred her membership. Tuesday night, March 15, 1932 she was released from a long period of suffering, aged 38 years, 5 months and 28 days. Her mother preceded her in death three months. Besides her husband there is left to mourn her aged father, three sisters—Mrs. William Viner, Flora; Mrs. Frank Lantz, Flora; Mrs. Glen Peterson, Lebanon, and one brother, Orville E. Mabbitt of Lebanon. Services were held at the home in Flora before a large circle of friends. Burial was in Maple Lawn Cemetery near Flora. Services were in charge of the writer.

FREEMAN ANKRUN.

FLENNER—Henry Fleenner of Adrian, Pennsylvania, now awaits the resurrection mornning. After a long illness, he died on March 11, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Henry John of West Mosgrove. Mr. Fleenner was a faithful member of the Brush Valley Brethren church for many years.

He is survived by four daughters, Mrs. H. A. John, Adrian; Mrs. James Toy, Garrettts Run; Mrs. Henry John, West Mosgrove; and Mrs. Alex John, Kittanning, all of whom are also members of the Brethren Church. There are 26 grandchildren and 41 great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were held at the home in West Mosgrove and in the Brush Valley church on March 13, conducted by the writer. Burial followed in the church cemetery. Another saint has gone home to receive his crown.

OUR LITTLE READERS

A DOG THAT ATE A BIBLE

By Rev. R. D. Barnard in "The Brethren Voice"

I heard an amusing story once about a native of Africa, who came to a missionary, very much excited, and told him that his dog had been completely spoiled as a watchdog. The native told his story. He had been given a New Testament, he had laid it down. The dog had found it, chewed it up, eaten it. The native said the dog would never be any good as a watchdog, for the New Testament which he had eaten would take all the fight out of him.

This was really quite a testimony for Jesus Christ, wasn't it? The native had doubtless seen many of his fellows who had been mean and blood-thirsty, made to be followers of Jesus, loving the very people whom they had before desired to kill. The New Testament if followed does take the wrong kind of FIGHT out of you. Of course we don't eat the New Testament, we read it and then follow what it says.

Some folks believe, though, that the New Testament, if followed, takes all the fight out of a person. That it makes them "wishy-washy" and "goody-goody." That is, makes boys "sissys" and men "cowards." Is this true, or not? Did you read how St. Paul was beaten and stoned until the people thought he was dead. And when they were gone, he got up and went on his way, preaching. Did you ever hear how many years ago thousands of people were beheaded, and starved and given to the wild beasts, when all they would have needed to do was say "I give up Jesus"? And then you have heard Dr. Gribble tell just recently how the missionaries and the native Christians of Africa suffered so much, and several of them died telling the story of Jesus. All this sounds like there is some real fighting stuff left in a Christian, doesn't it?

I'll tell you what I think the New Testament does to any one who follows it. It takes the wrong kind of fight out of you and puts the right kind of fight in you, the fight for noble things. St. Paul must have been thinking of this kind of fighting when he told the young man Timothy, "Endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." You know it is much easier to do nothing, than it is to be a real Gospel Messenger. It's so much easier to fight back, than to love the other person when he fights you. It's so much easier to be cross and mean than it is to be sweet and kind. I think real heroism is to be found in doing the hardest thing, don't you?

Business Manager's Corner

"UNDERSTANDEST THOU WHAT THOU READEST?"

When one takes time to consider the quality of the mass of the reading matter displayed on the average news stand or in the average home one is inclined to ask of the average reader the question that Philip asked the eunuch he met on the Gaza road.

One need not question the quality of literature that held the attention of this officer of the queen with such fascination. It was a sacred manuscript that in some mysterious manner had gripped the soul of this earnest seeker after truth; but he had not advanced far enough in his knowledge of divine things to grasp the meaning, in full, of these truths which were so new to him. But it was not difficult for him to understand when one who was acquainted with the truth pointed out the vital teachings of the wonderful manuscript that had come into the hands of this Ethiopian while far from home, and it is encouraging to learn how readily he accepted the truth and put into practice its teaching when it was explained to him.

Our Point

The show windows and the display counters and wall racks of our news-stands of the present day are so crowded with magazines and periodicals of every color, description, and quality that one may stand in amazement before them, and with a slight alteration of the statement of the "Wise Man" of old exclaim "Of the making of Magazines there is no end." But what of the quality of these publications? and what of the quality of the publications found in the average home? What influence do they have over the intellectual and spiritual lives of the growing children in the home?

In the boyhood days of the Business Manager very few people knew anything about "balanced rations" in the feeding of children. They generally fed them what they had on hand or could afford to buy and were thankful if they had enough of that to satisfy the voracious appetites of an old fashioned growing brood. No one seemed to know anything about proteins, carbohydrates, vitamin A, B, C, D or E. The children ate such things as were set before them and were glad to get them. But today a mother who does not heed the instructions of trained dieticians in providing and preparing the food for children of such quality and kind that vitamin this and vitamin that, etc., etc., is not supplied is not considered qualified to raise a family.

Physical or Spiritual

While such stress is now laid upon proper food for the physical bodies of the rising generation, it can hardly be said that equal stress is laid upon the quality of food supplied for the spiritual nature. It is true that great stress is laid upon receiving a proper intellectual training according to the most advanced and most scientific methods as they have been developed in recent years; but one is justified in raising the question as to the value of these methods in developing that nature of the child that is just a little higher than the intellectual.

This brings up the question again as to the nature of the food that is supplied the average family in the way of suitable books and magazines.

Our contention is that the reading matter supplied in the average home is not of a nature that will tend toward the development of the spiritual life of the family. The religious nature may wither and die for lack of proper nourishment.

Christian parents should feel the responsibility they bear toward their children in seeing that there is plenty of such reading matter before them at all times. They may not read it as conscientiously or as regularly as they should, but the very fact that it is there and that their parents place a value upon it can not help but have some influence on their lives.

Brethren Reading Matter

Parents who are members of the Brethren church must surely can not expect their children to show any more interest in their church than do they themselves, and unless the parents are interested in the publications of their church, they have no right to expect their children to show much interest. While there are a number of publications that represent the various interests of the church, we do not hesitate to say if only one of these publications can come into the home that one should be The Brethren Evangelist, and we feel that it is a part of the pastoral duty of every one who has charge of a church to stress this fact and to see that every opportunity is given his membership to become readers of their church paper.

Beating the Air

So far as reaching the members of the Brethren church who are not readers of the Evangelist is concerned through this appeal it is just "beating the air", unless the pastors and subscribers tell them about it, or pass it on to them. Otherwise they will never know anything has been said about it. Not a word has been said in this column today about "the great depression", and we are not going to admit there is any such thing, if one really wants to secure his church paper. We remember a reading lesson in one of our old McGuffey's Readers on the subject "Where there is a will there is a way", and quite frequently this is true. "If you know these things, happy are ye, if ye do them."

FILLED with Violence"

According to Frank J. Loesch, president of the Chicago Crime Commission, not a single gang killer has been brought to justice in Cook County during the past four years. In that time 232 gang murders have been committed, and not one of the killers has been brought to trial.

It is true that the infamous Capone has been sentenced to eleven years in the penitentiary, but that achievement is nothing to brag about because, first, he was convicted for failing to pay an income tax instead of for his many crimes of violence; second, the securing of evidence against him was almost impossible on account of the intimidation of witnesses; third, his conviction was so uncertain that the Federal Attorney was willing to bargain with him by offering a short term for a plea of guilty; fourth, the judge gave him the longer term of eleven years because he bragged publicly about his bargain; and finally, he is not yet behind the bars.

If civilization can find in that record anything to be proud of, I do not know what it is. It will remind Bible students of the days before the Flood. The "earth was filled with violence," and every man did that which was right in his own eyes.

THE Curse of Sentimentality.

It is true that both police authorities and the courts are often criminally lax in their dealing with those who break the law, but these authorities invariably reflect the general attitude of the public. And we may as well admit it, there is no dependable public conscience toward crime today.

No matter how vile and unspeakable a man's crime may be there is always some organization or group of sentimentalists to defend him and ask for mercy. As a case in point the newspapers this morning publish the pictures of college girls from Vassar and Wellesley who are trying to secure governmental intervention to save seven negroes condemned to death for a most revolting crime.

There is something ominous about this wave of sentimentalism which invariably produces champions on behalf of criminals, but which callously ignores the victims of violence. Why is it, that a certain type of college intellectuals, both professors and students, will yell themselves hoarse in protest against the conviction of some bloody-handed criminal, but cannot be aroused to even a slight degree of indignation on behalf of law and order and decency?

In answer three things may be suggested: first, it is safer for the talkers to plead for the gangsters than it is to oppose them; second, there is more publicity in such a course and that is what the talkers are really concerned about; and third, the entire situation reveals a demoralizing reversal of moral values. "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter" (Isa. 5:20).

ANOTHER Divorce Mill

Jaurez, a little town in Mexico just across the river from El Paso, recently announced the passage of a law which provides for a divorce within one day, and thus became a rival of Nevada and Arkansas in helping along the destruction of the home.

One lawyer, with an eye for future business, immediately sent circulars to all Hollywood movie players.

The El Paso pastors have rightly denounced the new law as "a bad thing for humanity and a destroyer of love." But one cannot help wondering how many of these pastors will go on supporting by their attendance the performances of the play-actors whose example, both in reel and real life, is doing more than any other influence to make popular and profitable the "easy-divorce laws."

The Terror of Fear

Dr. Joseph Tenenbaum, prominent Jew, speaking to the executive committee of the American Jewish Congress, declared that the Jewish race is facing a world-wide war against extinction. Having reviewed the anti-semitic movements in Germany, Poland and Rumania, he said that "Never in our long history was there such a universally and diabolically conceived attempt at annihilation and destruction of a whole race."

Even if this statement be discounted greatly, it is still startlingly significant. First, it shows that the world has made little progress in some respects. The terror of the pogrom still hangs over Europe, not as a mere phantom of the imagination either, for Hitler almost won the German Presidency and more than once he has announced what he will do to the Jews, if elected.

Second, the situation points to the approaching time of the end, for the Bible forecasts a terrific outburst of anti-semitism just prior to the Coming of Christ to establish his Kingdom on the earth.

Third, the constant insecurity and fear of the Jew was predicted 3500 years ago in the Law of Moses: "Jehovah will scatter thee among all peoples. . . . And among these nations thou shalt find no ease, and there shall be no rest for the sole of thy foot; but Jehovah will give thee there a trembling heart. . . . and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear night and day, and shalt have no assurance of thy life. In the morning thou shalt say, Would it were evening; and at even thou shalt say, Would it were morning! for of the fear of thy heart which thou shalt fear." (Deut. 28:64-6).

Another New Bible

A quality writer in one of our quality magazines gives us four thousand words in the current issue on the need for a new Bible. His substitute for the Scriptures as nearly as I could make it out, would be a composite—conglomeration would probably be better—of the scientists Jeans and Edington, Mr. H. G. Wells and J. B. S. Haldane. Which assortment doesn't seem to inspire very much.

But it does bring to mind another item in the news to the effect that the Bible was selling through Europe today as never before in history. The past three years show a 25 per cent increase in that sale. Italy reports that instead of selling rosaries and pictures of saints in the streets, monks and nuns are selling Bibles. France, Spain, Portugal, Belgium report enormous increases in the sale of religious literature. In fact, in the past ten years the circulation of such books in western Europe has more than doubled.

And that brings us back to the above-mentioned forecast about a new Bible. Similar utterances have been made before. Voltaire, for example, made several. He went so far as to say that, thirty years after he died, the Scriptures would have passed into the limbo of forgotten literature. As it turned out, he was more wrong than usual. His home at present, has been converted into a Bible-distributing depot.

Similarly, Thomas Paine, a century and a half ago, wrote it down that, "I have gone through the Bible as a man would go through a wood with an axe, and felled trees. Here they lie and the priests may replant them, but they will never grow."

A good many generations after Thomas Paine, I walked, one day, into Tokyo's greatest department store, Mitsukoshi's. The book department—like all book-selling places in Japan—was crowded. In the center of the room, surrounded by a crowd bigger than any other—was a great table piled high with what appeared to be copies of the same book.

"What's this?" I asked the clerk. "This is our Bible counter," he replied. "Must be a special sale," I said. "Not at all. The Bible is our best seller. It always has been."—Christian Herald.

God does not refuse his Love to any; he has opened the Door to all who will enter; but a spirit, however great, who does not bow before the Sacrifice of Love can never understand the Secrets of Heaven; he may know all the wonders, all the secrets of nature, both of nature visible and nature invisible, but the mystery of the lowest place which rises to the highest he cannot know.

True pity is a mighty motive. When the real abiding pathos of life has gripped a man's heart, you will find him afield doing the work of the Lord. You will not see his tears. There will be a smile in his eyes, and, maybe, a song on his lips. For the sorrow and the joy of service dwell side by side in a man's life.—Percy C. Ainsworth.

Effective Enforcement and Weakening Morale

Prohibition was never more effectively enforced than now, and yet there are evidences of a steadily weakening morale on the part of the friends of Prohibition. This anomalous situation has developed as a result of the intensive wet propaganda that has been maintained for a number of years and increasing in intensity each year, and on the other hand by the appointment by President Hoover of a really efficient enforcement agent in the person of Colonel Amos W. W. Woodcock.

The opponents of Prohibition, backed by the wealth of unscrupulous millionaires, have been flooding the country with every sort of argument calculated to discourage the people with Prohibition and to convince them, if possible, that it could not be, and that it is not being, enforced. This propaganda has been kept going with such strong and continuous force that many of the rank and file, of those who favor Prohibition, and even some of the leaders, have come to half believe that Prohibition is proving a failure. At least, in view of the great fuss that is being made about it, they think there must be something radically wrong with it; they have lost their enthusiasm and much of their strength of conviction about it. Of course the wet talk is all bunk, but even so, it is having the desired effect, that of bringing about a steadily weakening of Prohibition morale. There is no longer so much of the old-time courage shown in the fight for it; not so much of the former intensive zeal exercised by church folks; nor yet the constant vigilance and concerted effort that made possible the winning of Prohibition. Much of this, of course, was brought to a halt at the time Prohibition was put into effect. Many people thought the victory was completely won and nothing more remained to be done, and they sat back to watch the system operate.

But in addition to serious effects of that mistake, we are beginning to see the influence of this constant stream of wet propaganda, in the dampening of ardor and in the bringing about of a spirit of uncertainty about the real worth of the victory we are supposed to have won. Possibly Prohibition is not the best method after all, some are saying, because it does not seem to be prohibiting. That, of course, is not true, that Prohibition does not prohibit; it is merely wet propaganda. But all too many are believing it. It stands us in good stead to take our cue from the highest Prohibition authorities rather than from those who are working tooth and toenail to destroy it.

"Prohibition enforcement conditions are steadily improving, with many evidences of less drinking and increasing observance of the law," declared Colonel Woodcock in a recent interview in Chicago to a representative of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation. And his testimony before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives was so remarkable that he won his Bureau a 100 per cent renewal of Government backing for the coming year notwithstanding the efforts of those who were trying to cut him short and thus cripple his work. When asked the question point blank recently, "What is the outlook for Prohibition enforcement and observance throughout the country?" Colonel Woodcock said very positively, "Never better. One of the best evidences that our Bureau is making progress is the high percentage of convictions secured in cases brought by Federal officials throughout the country." Then he went on to say:

Our records show that in the last few months there have been recorded 92 per cent of convictions out of all cases brought to trial by our agents. During the first six months of the fiscal year (which began July 1, 1931) the percentage of convictions of cases brought was 89.1 per cent. For the fiscal year of 1931 the percentage was 86.2 per cent of convictions on Federal cases. Naturally we are proud of this record, which is all the more remarkable when compared to that of other classes of Federal prosecutions.

One of the most significant facts regarding the enforcement service of the Prohibition Bureau is the extraordinary cooperation afforded it in all parts of the country. So great is this cooperation on the part of private citizens and organizations that we estimate that 80 per cent of all cases investigated and brought to court by our agents were initiated and undertaken from evidence and information furnished by individual citizens. The cooperation of Federal Judges in facilitating trials and insuring fair consideration of all cases cannot be too highly commended.

Whether there is less drinking and less illegal sale of liquor, is necessarily a matter of opinion, and yet we find multiplied personal testimony to that effect.

Conditions in a number of cities is greatly improved. Particularly is this true in the city of Detroit where smuggling on a large scale is no longer in evidence. The cooperation of the Canadian Government is an active factor in reducing this traffic to a minimum.

The business of the Prohibition Bureau is enforcement and we are focusing our attention upon just that one thing. We want our record to speak for itself. The transformation of the Prohibition Service personnel which has been accomplished under the provisions of the Civil Service requirements, is a great factor in increased efficiency.

That shows the situation with regard to enforcement, that it is really efficient, but that sort of efficiency is not getting much publicity these days. The metropolitan press does not carry news favorable to Prohibition to any great extent, and many of the most widely circulated city papers will not print such news. Consequently it is not very widely known that Prohibition is really a success, so far as authoritative statistics are concerned. But almost everybody knows what the wets are saying about it being a failure. The wets are making public sentiment in all too large a measure, and that is bound to tell eventually on enforcement, if not on the very retention of Prohibition. And because we believe the conscience of church forces needs to be sharpened a bit, we pass on some excerpts from a prodding given editorially in Prohibition Defender, who contends that Prohibition is not safe. We quote:

There is a grave danger in the near future for prohibition. It seems to be the tendency of the dries to minimize the danger and inspire over-confidence, when the great need of the hour is to awaken the dries to the seriousness of the situation and to inspire them to militant action. Nearly all dry writers and speakers seem to be afraid to admit the truth for fear it will discourage the dry forces. The sooner we face the facts and raise a tremendous battle-cry, the better for the cause.

Though the wets have made a very poor showing in the matter of electing congressmen and state legislators, there is no question but what public sentiment is moving rapidly in their direction. Wet newspapers are coming into perhaps nine out of ten homes of this country. Of course there is more or less dry literature going into many of these homes but the homes in which wet metropolitan newspapers do not find a place are few.

There is an alarming condition among our young people, particularly among young married people and what is called up-to-date society. It is considered quite the proper thing to serve some kind of intoxicating liquor at practically all social gatherings in private homes. This is much more general than the dries are willing to admit.

The Christian Herald recently published an article by Janet Mabie which recognizes that many drink for "fear of being different." That is an acknowledgment that drinking has become quite general. When they tell her she must not be "different" in the matter of drinking, she calls their attention to the fact that it is becoming fashionable to be different in one's apartments, clothes, parties, etc., and why not when it comes to drinking? Has it come to the point where drinking in society functions is general and the one who does not is the exception?

Unless the churches and the forces of righteousness awake to the facts and become militantly aggressive as they were when fighting for prohibition in the first place, it is only a question of a few years until the worst will come.

The wets are organizing and will intimidate many congressmen and legislators unless the dries come to active defense for the friends of prohibition among the law makers and executives of this country.

There is all too much truth in that statement to permit us passing the matter off lightly and continuing our smug and easy confidence. We have prohibition enforcement now, but few people know how efficient it is, as already suggested, and besides, who can tell how soon another administration will usher in an easy-going, inefficient enforcement, if not a real nullification policy? The time to awaken and set ourselves to the task of building a strong and courageous public sentiment that will secure the future of Prohibition is at hand.

Encouraging Bible Study

One of the biggest problems of the average pastor is to get the members of the church to study and really become acquainted with the Bible. We are carrying in the Evangelist each week two different methods of Bible study, which are proving interesting to our readers, because of the helpful instruction given, and we hope they will also prove suggestive as to method. One is the intensive method of studying rich texts, used by Dr. Rensch and the other is the comprehensive method of studying the Bible book by book, as used by Professor Stuckey. We commend both as both helpful and necessary to those who would become intimately acquainted with the Word.

Method in Bible study is really important, and it is up to pastors and other church leadership to suggest the method of study that will prove most helpful to the people. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson has offered a word along this line. He says:

The pastor who is content simply to exhort his people to read the Bible has not done his full duty. We cannot throw a library at a

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Word from Brother Herman Hoyt, pastor of the church at Mansfield, Ohio, tells us that some encouraging things are happening there, and we are promised a report soon. Suffice it to say here, that some folks are being saved and the outlook for the church is brightening.

The Christian Endeavorers will find an interesting report on their page from their national president, Brother E. M. Riddle, who tells of some correspondence he has had from Endeavor leaders. He invites more communication. If your society has not reported its doings for some time, suppose you see to it that somebody is made responsible for reporting at an early date.

Brother Frank Gehman, pastor at Krypton, Kentucky, reports an enjoyable visit from one of the Ashland College Gospel Teams. The boys brought splendid messages, added much to the encouragement of the workers and local membership and were the means of leading two souls to confess Christ as Savior. It was a fine ministry the boys rendered, much appreciated by the local leadership, as Brother Gehman testifies.

Our correspondent from Pleasant Hill, Ohio, says the interior of the church at that place has been redecorated and remodeled. She says the Sunday school had a record-breaking attendance on Easter Sunday, with the figures at 238. A new piano and the organization of a Sunday school orchestra are also signs of progress. A two-weeks' revival conducted by the pastor Brother Marlin, resulted in twenty-nine being added to the church, seven by letter and twenty-two by baptism. God has some faithful people in this church as elsewhere, and he answers the prayers of the faithful.

The church at New Lebanon, Ohio, has experienced a real revival and ingathering of souls, and the campaign was led to victory by Brother Claud Studebaker as evangelist and Brother L. V. King as pastor. There were thirty-one confessions of faith made during the meetings, and two such confessions were made just preceding the meetings, and "several" since. Twenty-one of this number had been baptized and received into the church at the time of writing. Others are expected. It was a hard-fought campaign both for pastor and evangelist, but God crowned it with success in more ways than one, not only adding souls, but building up the church in the unity of the Spirit and in the strength of faith.

For the benefit of our Illinois constituency we pass on the information recently received that two state conventions of Church school workers and pastors of that state will be held, one in Olney, May 23-25, and the other in DeKalb, May 25-27. These meetings will be the 74th annual conventions of the Illinois Council of Religious Education and the first time that more than one gathering per year has been held. We are told that plans for the giving of practical help to local church leaders of all denominations are being made, and among the names of speakers scheduled are the following: Dr. Albert B. Coe, Dr. Mary Alice Jones and Dr. Harry C. Monro.

Brother Dyoll Belote, pastor of the church at Ashland, Ohio, reports four new members received by baptism at the Easter time, also a well-attended and very helpful Easter sunrise meeting. This feature is becoming not uncommon among Brethren churches, and a beautiful and significant one it is. There is no time so conducive to a keen appreciation of the joy and victory of the resurrection of Christ as the early morning hours of Easter. Two features of the work promoted by Brother Belote, deserving of special mention, are the growing and active Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society and the Sunday school orchestra, both of which are likely to be helpful means towards holding the young people to the church at a critical age.

An extended trip of nearly five months, crowded with revival meetings, and Bible lecturing, and service for the college is interestingly related this week by Dr. W. S. Bell. His work among the churches of the Northwest district has been previously reported. This record gives an account of his Bible lectures conducted at Lathrop and Turlock, California, and a revival at La Verne, besides brief appearances in other churches. He remarks about the progress at Turlock, where Brother N. W. Jennings is the much-loved pastor, and who, he says, is anxious to be used more largely in evangelistic work. In the La Verne meeting he was teamed up with Brother A. L. Lynn, under whose evangelistic zeal and efficient leadership this church is making splendid progress. Dr. Bell comments about the good spiritual condition of practically all the California churches. He says the weather visited upon him during his trip was about the worst that was had during the winter at the respective points. Even when he came back to Ohio, where we had had California climate most of the winter, he was met with a blanket of snow and about the coldest weather of the season. Well, he may take all that as a compliment, for we doubt if Mr. Weatherman would have risked administering such a heavy and continued course of his worst weather on one of less dauntless courage.

We are privileged to present this week an unusual report from our church at Muncie, Indiana, where Brother M. L. Sands is the faithful pastor. It is a combined report of a victory revival under the leadership of Brother Charles H. Ashman, and of the completion and dedication of the basement unit of their new church building. The total results of the evangelistic campaign were fifty-three confessions, and at the time of the writing the pastor has baptized thirty-nine. Besides these, ten members were received by transfer from the disbanded Maple Grove congregation (a rural church not far distant) during the meetings. The Muncie pastor visited the entire accessible group of this former rural church and got the promise of twenty-one members to place their lot with the Muncie church. It was a fine thing for these Maple Grove people to do, and we dare say they will have a most satisfactory church home in the city of Muncie. The revival was a great success and surely gives this growing mission church cause for rejoicing. Besides this encouragement the church is planted in a field that is full of promise, and as Brother Ashman says, the future of the Muncie church is bright. The Sunday school has been going steadily forward since the completion of their new basement unit, which accommodates the large Children's Division the total attendance of the school on a recent Sunday being 227. Another feature worthy of note is the Junior Church under the leadership of Mrs. Sands, the attendance at a recent service being 69. That would be considered a fair sized adult congregation by not a few pastors. The corner stone of the new structure was laid last September 27th with Brother W. I. Duker as the speaker of the day, and the dedication took place on December 6th with Dr. J. Raymond Schutz officiating. The church was free from debt at dedication. We congratulate pastor and people.

The Joys of Service

By J. L. Bowman

To the thoughtful earnest student of the Word, it is quite clear that the Master never meant that his service should be drudgery or that his servants should be gloomy and sad. To interpret the Christian life in terms of bondage and servitude is to very much misinterpret the teachings and spirit of the Master. True, it is not recorded that he jested and laughed, but the recorded instances of his weeping always show that there was genuine sympathy and deep feeling with the parties with whom he wept.

There is nowhere any recorded instance to show that he was a sour, crabbed ascetic, one that did not enjoy the real beauty of the sunshine, or the song of the birds. We do have something to show that his deeper aesthetic nature was touched by the fragrance and color of the flowers of the fields and he was moved to exclaim, "That Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." No, no, he was no recluse, nor did he mean that his followers should be. The flowers of the field, the glory of the sunset and the matchless beauty of the rainbow did bring joy to his children, and as the wrong side of heaven declares his glory and inspires his children to higher and holier service and as they catch a gleam of the joy and beauty of heaven as revealed by his handiwork they are led to break forth into peans of praise for the home of the soul whose glory and beauty and grandeur are indiscribable.

His children here render most acceptable service to him, who lives among his children here and who share the joys and sorrows of those with whom they associate. Our Master's messages were always messages of cheer, comfort and hope. To those who bore heavy burdens, and to those who labored to the point of weariness and exhaustion, his words had a special meaning, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." These words accompanied by the sweetest of invitations had a meaning and to those whose necks were galled by the yoke of unbelief and whose souls were in a state of unrest he said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light, and ye shall find rest for your weary souls."

Jesus Christ not only taught great truths but he taught men how to live great lives. Lives that would reflect his life. Lives that were full of richness, sweetness and joy.

We may live among decaying embers, among a people whose hearts are no strangers to the sorrows of earth, but it is ours to show them the sweetness and joy of a heart that is fixed and of a soul that is trusting in the source of all joy. In the furnace one may be compelled to go, but only for the purpose of refining and consuming the dross of human nature. Pure gold can stand to be refined but dross is burned up and consumed. There is joy in being in the furnace if he is with us there, and we always come out strengthened in faith and purer in heart because the impurities are consumed. The baser metals cannot stand the furnace tests but the pure gold shines with an added luster because it has been in the furnace.

One of the chief joys in service is in knowing that he is with us always. This serves as an inspiration to be our best and to do our best.

When we are weary he says, Come to me and rest. When we are thirsty, Come and drink. When we are hungry he says, Feast on me. When the road is hot, dusty and long, he says, I am with you, and cheered by his presence we lose the sense of weariness and fatigue. And when the night is long and sleep is banished from our eyes, he gives a song for the night, A song of trust and faith, a trust so sublime that the world does not understand, a song whose sweetness outlasts time. However dark the night may be, he will never forsake us and he will permit to come into our lives only what is best for us.

The Psalmist says, "Thou hast put a new song in my mouth." The world cannot sing that song because it is the inner song of peace, joy and gladness. Many shall hear it and be glad because of the sweet note of trust in the Lord, the faith of many shall be strengthened and this solo becomes a duet, and the duet is changed again into a trio, and the trio is changed into a quartette, and the quartette becomes a mighty chorus, singing the deliverance from the pit of sin and deliverance gives a purpose to life.

Now there is no more aimless wanderings because life has a goal. This wonderful change has been wrought because I have found joy in his service and this joy is so contagious. We unconsciously shed the sweet perfume of his life. The water that he gave us to drink becomes a fountain of living water in us springing up into everlasting life and the joy in his service brings pleasure even when we are in pain.

The Laymen and the Brethren Church

By D. C. White

(Digest of a General Conference Address)

For a good many years some laymen of the Brethren Church have had a vision of an organization that would accomplish mighty things for God through obedience to his Son Jesus.

You know that a consecrated laity was the power back of the apostolic church and a consecrated laity is the only solution in this day to the problem of a spiritually empowered church that will glorify Christ.

Any organization that has for its objective the following ideas cannot help but be a power in its respective field.

The Laymen's Organization of the Brethren Church is a group of men desiring to exalt the name of Jesus above every name, to secure the promotion of a sense of comradeship and unity among the laity of the Brethren Church (and only God in high heaven knows the extent of the lack of comradeship in the Brethren Church and I dare say that there are few churches in the brotherhood that are free from this ungodly thing) and to bring increased efficiency and profound spirituality among the laity and a missionary and evangelistic spirit in all the churches and to promote the missionary and educational activities of the denomination as a whole, and to assist worthy young men and women in a financial way to acquire a college education in our denominational school, thereby preparing themselves for the ministry and mission work in the Brethren Church.

Surely any organization with these high ideals has a reason for its existence.

Many a person has been driven out of a church because the church did not give them anything to do. There was no Layman organization, and no plan for putting the average member to work. Or if there was a laymen's organization, they were not given a job. The laymen's organization did not function. If a man is asleep and indifferent in the church he will be an annoyance to the rest who are serious. And if an organization does not fulfill its task it annoys the people. Let the laymen's organization function. If you sleep sound enough you snore, and then you annoy some one else. I mean by this that an organization that does not fulfill a task annoys the people. Let us give the laymen a task and I tell you people that any red-blooded man will arise to the occasion. I tell you that the laymen have a task, yes, and I will go further and say that they have an obligation before God.

I know of some preachers who go out of their sphere and are compelled to mix too much with temporal things, neglecting the spiritual life of the Church. Laymen of the Brethren Church, this is a challenge for you, I say it out of the fullness of my heart.

Let us awake sleeping laymen and be the pastor's inspiration instead of his field. I am going to say to you laymen today that no church should be the pastor's field to the exclusion of the unsaved around about him.

Do you want your pastor to come into his pulpit with a light spirit, a rested body, and the light of God's grace shining in his face? Do you want him to come into the pulpit in such reverence as though he had just been with God? Or do you want him to come into the pulpit with a heavy heart, a tired body, and the lack of God's grace upon his face because he has been burdened all week with a lot of church trials and discord, so that his mind is burdened and sorrowful? Let every layman of this church, and every other church in this land, take his place in his respective church and do the things his hands find to do. Quit you like men, stand fast in the faith, hold up the hands of your minister and you will be surprised what the Lord will do.

Laymen, relieve your pastor of every burden you can. Let him have time to seek the lost, speak words of comfort to the sick and dying. Be his inspiration and your pastor will enter the pulpit with a work well done, and you will then begin to live in the spirit and influence of God's love.

I ask you how can a pastor give his best to the Church when he has been called upon to give his mind, his strength and his love to the flock, who are supposed to be God's children, supposed to be consecrated to his labors of love, when all around are souls going down, down, down, to a Godless eternity, and they are doing nothing about it? When there is an indwelling spirit there is an outpouring of love and self.

When the Laymen of the Brethren Church become fully filled with the Spirit you can look for great things from the Church, for a Spirit-filled church is one abounding in grace, through faith in Christ Jesus.

Laymen of the Brethren Church, let the Good Shepherd, Christ Jesus, lead us into new and green pastures, and I fully believe that the Layman organization is a movement or effort to enlist the man power of the Church in behalf of forwarding the interests of the Church of Christ. Let us catch the vision of the greater possibilities of men for service for God and humanity.

It is altogether possible for a strong brotherhood of consecrated laymen to promote local projects and to exert a strong influence, I should say, spiritual influence in the church life, that will have remarkable results.

The time of action is at hand, let the laymen go forth in battle array with the banner of God and his righteousness going on before, with everything attempted in his name. Layman, awake from your slumber and stand forth in your might through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

Study No. 1

Names in Scripture have a meaning. Genesis means "beginnings"; Exodus means "going out." The book of Revelation also has a meaning. It is the unveiling of Jesus Christ.

The Old Testament gives us Christ in type and prophecy; the gospels give us Christ in humiliation, while this book is the Revealing of Jesus Christ.

In this book we have Christ as a Lamb, slain for our redemption; we have him as the Lion of the tribe of Judah; as the great head of the church; as our Kinsman Redeemer; as the great Bridegroom; as the Hero of Armageddon; as the great center of the New Jerusalem and the source of its illumination.

Two Kingdoms

There is a kingdom of light and a kingdom of darkness. Both are bidding for the loyalty of the human heart, but at present their efforts are put forth in a hidden manner. When the church is removed and the tribulation period is ushered in (at Ch. 4) these two forces will come out in the open. There will be voices of all kinds. Voices from the altar and voices from heaven; voices like thunder and voices like a trumpet; voices like water and voices like a lion; voices of cherubim and voices of angels.

Also angels will be everywhere. Good angels and bad angels; angels bound and angels free; angels ascribing praise to the Lamb and crying woe to the inhabitants of the earth; angels holding the winds and angels with power over fire.

This book takes us up to the end of what we call time. Eternity is still young and sin's long war with God must come to a close before our Lord will take the throne of David and rule in power and righteousness.

An Open Book

This book is of such tremendous importance that a curse is pronounced upon that person who dares to change it in any way, (Ch. 22:18). Let us beware. How often people say that it is a hidden book and should not be read. May the reader of this page not be found guilty of such language, for to say that the book is hidden and cannot be understood is to change the very meaning of the title of the book. It is not a concealing or a hiding but a revelation or unveiling of Jesus Christ. And for fear we might miss the word "Revelation" it goes on to say that God gave it to "SHOW unto his servants things that must shortly come to pass."

Sign Language

But how does he show it? "He sent and SIGNIFIED it by his angel unto his servant John." Here we see that God uses a sign language, he sign-i-fied it. It is written in picture languages thus a person must know the meaning of the different pictures and symbols in order to get the message of the book.

If I would place the picture of a human eye on the blackboard, then a tin can, a body of water or a sea and then a hat, a person would have to know the meaning of each article before he could read the sign or picture language and know that I was trying to say, "I can see a hat."

It is thus with the book of Revelation. Much is written in sign language and we must know the meaning of the signs before we can get its message. The book is not written for idle curiosity but for that person who, through the illumination of the Holy Spirit, will dig down and mine out its treasures.

These signs are explained somewhere in the Bible, thus it is very necessary for a person to have a good knowledge of the Bible, especially of the Old Testament for we are on Old Testament ground after we reach the fourth chapter.

Should Be Read

Many Christians do not read this book for various reasons but will any of these excuses satisfy, when they stand before their Lord?

Suppose a man living in Pennsylvania was to go to Chicago. Every week he would write a letter back home to his wife but would receive no reply. After about six months he would meet a friend from the same town in Pennsylvania and would inquire about his wife.

"Oh, she is getting along fine," the friend would reply. "Well," says the husband, "I have written to her every week but have received no letter from her, I wonder what is wrong."

"I don't know," replies the friend. "I was there to see her just before I left for Chicago and I noticed a large pile of unopened letters from you, lying there on the stand."

Certainly the husband in Chicago would know that his wife did not really care for him.

So it is with this book. After Christ had been in glory some sixty years he came back and gave this message to "his servants" and how can we say that we really love him if we leave his last love letter lying on the stand unopened, especially when it is of such tremendous importance as to call forth such an urgent and oft repeated admonition, "He that hath an ear let him hear."

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

---

VOTES AND TAXATION

We wonder how many who pay no taxes vote at elections. In these days, when honest, industrious people of modest means are burdened with heavy exactions, a large part of which is wasted, we wonder if every voter ought not to pay something in order to cast a ballot. If there is to be no taxation without representation, why should there be representation without taxation?

We think that in determining the basis of representation in legislative bodies, an alien should not be counted. There appears to be sound basis in the effort being made to bring that to pass. This sounds like justice, and justice becomes a Christian nation.—The Presbyterian.

A NEW TESTAMENT IN THE VATICAN

A French society has sent tracts and New Testaments to certain young men in the Swiss guards of the Vatican. One of these collected fellow guardsmen in his room and read Scripture to them, comparing the passages in the tracts with those in the Word. Two were convinced and accepted Christ; a third reported the gathering to the Vatican authorities. The owner of the New Testament was summoned before a high dignitary and ordered to give up his Testament to be burned. His answer was: "If you burn my Testament I will burn an image. I today resign from the guard." So he gave up a profitable and easy position which he had held for three years and went home to face an angry Catholic family.—S. S. Times.

E. STANLEY JONES MAKES GIFT TO MEET INDIA MISSION DEFICIT

North India Methodist conference appropriation from foreign mission funds has been cut 9,000 rupees (about $3,000) this year. The Christian Advocate reports that Dr. E. Stanley Jones has offered to make up one-third of this amount out of his own purse. Each missionary family of North India agrees to contribute 45 rupees a month for one year.—The Christian Century.

WAR BREAKS OUT AGAIN

It is really wicked the way some industries persist in jumping on the poor little cigarette makers. As if it were not enough that the candy manufacturers should have presumed to resent the defensive tactics (a la the Japs at Shanghai) of the cigarette people when the latter gave us the noble national slogan, "Reach for a— instead of a sweet," one manufacturer of chewing-gum actually went so far as to suggest that after smoking a cigarette one might need some gum to sweeten his mouth and tone up his breath. And then a dentifrice manufacturer dared to suggest that the cigarette smoker might need to have a tooth-paste that would overcome acidity—actually he did that!

Evidently the poor tobacco manufacturers must have, in their meekness, shown these conscienceless pirates the errors of their ways. At least, those two awful advertisements have ceased.

And now—lo and behold!—comes another dentifrice manufacturer boldly declaring that "your dentist will tell you that tobacco stain precedes decay." Just think of it! Such high-jacking!

Well, probably some good soul will come to the relief of the poor tobacco barons, so that they can complete their benevolent campaign to have every man, woman and child a confirmed beneficiary of cigarettes. We need not worry about them nor about the decay of the teeth of the people who want to smoke. Their teeth are their own and we have no disposition to compel them to keep them if they wish to be rid of them.

We do wish some good soul would advertise some device whereby people who wish to refrain from smoking could do so, something to protect the rest of us from the discourtesy of the average smoker, for instance.—The Christian Standard.

EVERY RELIGIOUS PAPER

We do not know an exception to the fact that religious papers have suffered tremendously in this trying time. Some have had to stop. Everyone has had to be aided by some outside helper. We are confident that officers in local churches hurt the cause in which they have interest by not urging the people to take a religious paper. Boards and agencies for good purposes could get twice the result at half the expense by using some of their money to aid religious papers. Any Christian can extend his influence far more widely by giving help to a religious paper which expresses his general belief. Any home that is filled with anxiety will be sweetened and cheered by receiving and reading each week a truly religious paper. It will turn the thoughts for a while at least from the problems that are crushing some people to despair. Going to church and reading religious papers will do as much as anything to carry us over. These two things are better than amusements, sports, indulgences, which many people keep up even in hard times.—The Presbyterian.

ANTI-CHRISTIAN ARTICLES

What over-specialization in speculation can do to the tenets of the Christian religion is in process of illustration in current issues of the Christian Century, an undenominational weekly journal. Under the heading, "A Conversation About God," three prominent modernists are trying to figure out whether or not they know there is a God or not. We laugh at scholastics who argued as to how many angels could stand on the point of a needle. They at least admitted the existence of needles and of angels. Professors Wieman, Macintosh and Otto are more thorough in their agnosticism. They start with doubting the ability to know even God. The Lutheran regrets that such discussions should find distribution in a paper claiming to champion Christianity. Nothing but infidelity and final confusion and despair can possibly result.

Appearances to the contrary, we have no reason to believe that the Christian Century is published at Cicero, Illinois.—The Lutheran.

REASONS FOR DIVORCES

The Christian World recites a joke—if it be a joke—to show for what imaginary and trivial causes divorces may be obtained in the United States.

Rastus' lawyer was informing him on the legal status of his matrimonial relationship and his chances for a divorce.

"Mistuh Johnson, I has discovered I can get you yo' divorce on the grounds that yo' marriage ain't legal on account of her father he had no license to carry a gun."

For causes of no more force and dignity divorces are sometimes granted in this country. The absurdity of it ought to cause sensible people to pause. We need a big fresh crop of common sense.—The Christian-Evangelist.

Encouraging Bible Study

man and expect him to profit by our good intentions. The teacher of English literature does not throw an alveo of English authors at his pupils and say, "Read this." The books must be mastered one by one, and at every step the pupil needs assistance. Getting into the soul of English literature is an arduous undertaking, and one cannot get into it by a jump. One must work his way into it inch by inch and with a deal of persistency and patience. Exhortation accomplishes little unless it is followed up. It is a mistake to suppose that the average man or woman will know how to start in the reading of the Bible. He must be told. The pastor must pick out one of the sixty-six books and say, "Read this." A year later he will recommend another one, and a year after that a third. At the end of ten years, ten Bible books will have been recommended. This will be a good start toward the mastery of another ten. When a man has mastered twenty books of the Bible, nothing but death will prevent him from mastering them all.

And, we would add, the other method might be suggested to those who already have a fair knowledge of the contents of the Books, and that is the study of some remarkable small portions of the Bible, or outstanding verses. The pastor might select a list of important verses and passages, or better still, a list of topics and references dealing with same, and offer them to members for study.

Nothing is more important for the Christian than that he should become really acquainted with his Bible and should maintain a habit of Bible reading and study. It is surprising how pitifully small is the average church member's knowledge of the Bible, and that comes about by the widespread neglect of the Bible by such church members. The Bible is more widely owned than read. A further comment by Dr. Jefferson is to the point here:

Millions of Americans never look into the Bible. Among these millions are thousands of our so-called best people. Men and women of education and culture, of light and leading, are in large numbers absolutely ignorant of the Scriptures. Lawyers and doctors, journalists and teachers, bankers and merchants, are found in the non-Bible-reading circles. To know the Bible is not counted a necessary qualification for those who desire a seat among the upper ten thousand. The Bible continues, however, to enjoy a large sale. It still retains the honor of holding first place among the best sellers; but when one reads the statistics quoted to prove how popular the Bible is, one cannot help wondering where all these boughten Bibles go. It is easy to be misled by statistics. Because a Bible is sold, it does not follow it is read. But a Bible which is not read is no Bible at all. Only a Bible which is read becomes a force in the life of the world. Many Bibles are bought solely for ornamental purposes. They are a suitable decoration for a home supposed to be religious. A Bible looks well on the library shelf, and most Christian people would be ashamed to confess they did not have a Bible in the house. But a Bible in the house is nothing unless it is also in the mind. Only a Bible in the mind becomes a force in the life of the town."

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Acts 12:12,—“And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying.” Moffatt reads, “When he grasped the situation, he went to the house of Mary, the mother of John who was surnamed Mark, where a number had met for prayer.”

The New Testament sets up sign-posts by which we may see how far we have traveled in our journey. Worshipers in private homes stand out prominently. The handicaps of gorgeousness in worship did not hinder the early church. It takes a mighty battle to combat worldly pride in the human heart, and we have all but quit trying. Many a congregation can trace the beginning of its decline to a costly church-plant. They expected the showy church building to make contacts with human beings instead of winning men themselves. “At ease in Zion” is the death-knell of many a church with a great church-building and a brilliant pastor. In strange contrast is this New Testament group in a private home where “many were gathered together praying.”

How far have we drifted from a scene like that? “The many” have dwindled to a mere handful, if such meetings for prayer have not ceased entirely. Commodious and expensive quarters haven't saved the day. The Sunday evening service is no longer wanted, either. What is the difference between our type of religion, and the standard in that home of Mary? For example, have you ever studied the argument, and teaching of the various writers in the New Testament to preserve the communion service in the early church? Have you studied their deep concern about it? There must be something vital in such a service or its importance would have been passed up, as it is being minimized in the average church now. If the motive which brought “the many” together in the home of Mary was of vital importance then, is not such a motive and its cultivation of much more importance now than some of the things we are discussing? There is more contention now for a method, by far, than there is for “the thus saith the Lord” in HIS BOOK OF METHODS.

In that old fashioned home where many were gathered together praying, there was a Christian mother presiding over it. Card parties were out of place in that home. Her son, Mark, was in training for mission work; and for writing the second gospel. Her brother was the large hearted, generous Barnabas. And what a power was such a home! With such homes, a nation is safe. With such homes, the church will shine for Jesus, missionaries will be trained, and souls called out of the world as from a sinking ship.

"From the snares of sinful pleasure, here my feet are always free, Tho' the way may be called narrow, it is wide enough for me; It was wide enough for Daniel, and for David in his day; I am glad that I can follow, in the good, old-fashioned way.

Just a few more steps to follow, just a few more days to roam, But the way grows more delightful, as I'm drawing nearer home; When the storms of life are over, and the clouds have rolled away. I shall find the gates of heaven, in the good, old-fashioned way."

You say you don't like any reference to the "old-fashioned" way? All right; have your own way. Change it to "new-fashioned," if you prefer, and then I will laugh.

Have you noticed in what direction Peter wended his steps when set free from the old jail? The direction he took reveals character. It was toward this Christian home. He would be most at ease there. To shun a place of prayer reveals character, too. The theory that the communion has nothing to do with the Christian's eternal salvation has much to do with the indifference of Christian people in its observance. After using the greater part of a chapter (1 Cor. 11) in setting the church at Corinth right in its observance, Paul concludes with these words: "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." * * * "That ye come not together unto condemnation." Peter was to be cut off from having any part with his Lord, if he refused feet washing, (See John 13) and Paul directed Timothy to enforce the order of refusing charity to the widow by the church, however needy, unless she had engaged in washing "the saints' feet." (1 Tim. 5:9, 10). I had far rather uphold the standard, "The Lords' work must be done in the Lord's way."

Deuteronomy

Of all the books of the Pentateuch, Deuteronomy is perhaps the most practical. It is a record of the addresses of the dying Moses—one of the greatest and most worthy statesman of all time. There is no doubt that these addresses were intended for the people of the Lord. Numbers was written for the servants of the Lord and Leviticus was drawn up for the use of the priests of the Lord. Jesus, being the Man of the people, loved Deuteronomy. He quoted from its pages on meeting Satan in the wilderness and on other important occasions.

To all those men who feel the call of God to great leadership within the church, and who, when they are chosen, become self-important, autocratic, and Mussolinic in temperament, this book has a lesson. Kings and great leaders are liable to succumb to the error of Moses, namely, lack of absolute confidence in God. In fact, do not many of our failures spring from our tardy recognition of his love and our obvious neglect of his commandments? Deuteronomy corrects our hard-headedness and supplies, in its stead, a heart song. Its melody has best been caught by the great Faber:

"There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in his justice,
Which is more than liberty.

"For the love of God is broader Than the measure of man's mind
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind."

Moreover, to all those servants of our God, who, when they are challenged by a great Christian endeavor, remain meek, honest, and courageous, the book of Deuteronomy has a song for the night and sorrow of our earthly pilgrimage. Strange to say, Faber has caught that sentiment too.

"There is plentiful redemption
In the blood that has been shed;
There is joy for all the members
In the sorrows of the Head.

"If our love were but more simple,
We should take him at his word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord."

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Moses. Dt. 1:1; 31:9; 24, 30.
2. When and where written. Around 1450, in Palestine.
3. To whom addressed. The Israelites.
4. Occasion. The near passing of Moses.
5. Authenticity. The book befits Moses and his day.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The First Address of Moses (Historical) 1:1-4:49.
2. The Second Address of Moses (Legal) 5:1-26:19.
3. The Third Address of Moses (Prophetical) 27:1-30:20.
4. The final Address of Moses (Spiritual) 31:1-34:12.

III. THE SCOPE OF THE BOOK

Deuteronomy contains a written summary of the parting counsels of Moses. They cover the period of time intervening between the wanderings and entrance into Canaan.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. "Thou shalt," Obedience, Remember.
2. Key Verses. 4:1; 10:12, 13; 11:26-28; 33:25.
3. Key Chapters. 5 and 32.
4. Key Ideas. Remember, Obey, and Love God.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

This volume of the sacred canon is really the second code or repetition of the law. It provides mankind with the words, testimonies, statutes and judgments of Jehovah and of Moses' day. Furthermore, it serves as an excellent source book of the economic and sociological conditions of the Mosaic times. It contains the Ten Commandments. No others will ever equal them in simplicity, value, and scope.

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

1. Moses is presented as a prophet—a type of Jesus in that respect. Dr. 18:15-19. His birth, reception, leadership, and mighty works amongst men are favorably typical of Christ's life and labors.

2. Christ shall see Israel depressed, repentant, restored, converted, judged, and prospered some day. That is the prophetic outlook of Deuteronomy. Read Amos and Romans.

VII. THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK

1. Moses was a great prophet, legalist, intercessor, statesman, and soul winner. He was also meek.

2. Deuteronomy develops the importance and inflexibility of law. Those who obey are blessed; those who disobey are cursed. Rom. 3:19. Luke 4:4, 8, 12. The law is our tutor. It schools us in approaching Christ and in keeping him. His grace keeps us.

3. Robinson beautifully remarks: "In that tender picture of God's unfailing love in Moses' closing song, the young eaglets must have been astounded at the mother's action as she 'stirreth up her nest' until they fall helpless from the eyrie, but as she 'beareth them on her wings' and 'they learn to fly' into the milky baldric of the sky' there comes at last discovery of love's thrilling history. 'And Moses dies,' and with the single exception of the Son of Mary, there is taken from Israel the greatest man that ever blessed the earth. And while the key-word of this Book is 'remember' and while it is a book of memorials, 'no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day.' No open gate of earthly promise and no memorial stone for Moses. 'His ways are past finding out.'"

4. And Mrs. C. F. Alexander writes with grandeur:

"By Nebo's lonely mountain, on this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab there lies a lonely grave;
But no man dug that sepulchre, and no man saw it e'er,
For the angels of God upturned the sod and laid the dead man there.

"O lonely tomb in Moab's land, O dark Bethpeor's hill,
Speak to these curious hearts of ours, and teach them to be still.
God hath his mysteries of grace,—ways that we cannot tell;
He hides them deep, like the secret sleep of him he loved so well."

Departmental Division Program

By Miss Gwendolyn H. Richmond, Nappanee, Indiana

Beginners and Primaries Ages 4 to 9

It seems a great pity to me that we have only one hour in which to teach Bible in our Sunday schools but until this is remedied we must learn to make the most of it.

I. Worship or Opening Exercises

II. Lesson Period

III. Closing Period

I. The Worship period is about 20 minutes long.

A. Theme.

Morning worship should be planned before hand. Don't wait until the last minute then leaf through your song book and find songs or leaf through your Bible and try to find a Scripture. It would be a fine idea if the Superintendent would meet with her teachers and plan her morning worship a month ahead of time.

The morning worship should have a theme, let us say "Truthfulness." The songs, Scripture and prayer should all bring out this theme. If you cannot find songs you might change some they already know such as one we sing in our department—

It never pays to be bad
It never pays to be bad
It makes one feel so mean inside
It never pays to be bad.

This could easily be changed to suit the subject "truthfulness" to—

It never pays to tell lies
It never pays to tell lies
It makes one feel so mean inside
It never pays to tell lies.

There are many other songs which are easily changed.

B. New Songs

Do not use the old songs every Sunday. I can remember when I was in the Primary Department a Sunday never passed but what we sang

Let us all stand up together
Let us all sit down together.

This was a very good exercise song for children but there are many others just as good. A very easy way in which to teach children new songs is by the illustrated method. The songs are written on cardboard and pictures are placed for the words which can be illustrated. Such as—"Let the merry sunshine in." Draw a picture of the sun and put it in the place of the word sun. A door can be placed for the word door and a window for the word window, etc.

C. Scripture,

There are many methods in which the Scripture can be given to give variety to your program. Let one child give it and before hand inform that child's mother so she can drill him.

The puzzle Scripture in which the Scripture is written on paper and the words are cut apart. Each class is given a different Scripture and they put them together. You will be surprised how the child hunts out the key-word and builds up the verse around it.

The scroll picture is a very good method for memorizing new Scriptures. A Scripture is written on a scroll such as the one used in Bible days. Each Sunday you learn one or two verses and roll past them. In no time at all you have memorized the chapter.

Or the pupils may give Scriptures they already know or one of the teachers or superintendent might prepare it.

D. Prayer.

Prayer is a subject we often neglect in the teaching of children. We should learn to pray oftener and shorter prayers. Prayer prayers that are simple and about things concerning the child's life, such as his home life, school life and playing with other children.

Give the child a chance to pray also, not only the prayers you have taught them but let them make up their own prayers. One Sunday morning at the close of my lesson I offered a prayer and then I gave the children a chance to offer prayers also. I will admit I was very disappointed as none of my children responded. But later on I tried it again and one little girl offered a timid little prayer. Several Sundays later when I gave them an opportunity another child offered a prayer. Then one morning at the close of a Mission story, before the entire Primary Department I gave the children an opportunity to give sentence prayers. One of the little girls from my class offered a prayer.

Perhaps the best place then to start this individual praying is in the class. Do not force the children and do not call on one particular child or make a chain of prayer but just give them an opportunity.

II. The Lesson period is about 25 minutes long.

The Lesson period should always begin with prayer. The teacher must be prepared. She cannot expect to hold the attention of her children unless she has something to tell them. She must have a steady flow of words coming at them continually or their minds are going to be wandering to something else and she will find it is very hard to have any discipline whatever.

The story should not be over five minutes long. If the teacher is really prepared she can tell her story, stressing the most important parts in that length of time. There should then be a five minutes discussion in which the teacher finds out whether her pupils have gotten the high lights of the lesson. Don't go to class and talk AT your pupils, give them a chance to talk to you also. In this way you may settle some of the perplexing questions they have in their little minds.

A. Handcraft.

The handcraft must apply to the lesson.

If your handcraft is not furnished such as ours is there are many things you yourself can work out. One of the teachers in our Department decided that the picture she was to paste in her scrap book did not apply to her story. The story was "David singing before the King." She cut harps out of cardboard and gave her pupils string and a needle and let them put the string on the harps.

A Beginner teacher one morning had the story of "The Good Shepherd." She brought little white sheep cut out of paper, a roll of batten and some glue and let her pupils paste the wool on the sheep.

If you can't possibly think of any handcraft you might use dramatization. This can be done very successfully if each class is in a room by itself and if the teacher has made the story and the conversation very clear to her pupils. Or there is free-hand drawing.

I'll admit I didn't have much faith in free-hand drawing until one of the Beginner teachers brought me some samples that her class had done. Remember these pupils are under school age. She had told the story of Jacob's Ladder. At the close of the story she gave them a sheet of paper and a box of crayons and asked them to draw the picture of the story. One very good paper had a ladder in the center of the page. On the ladder were splashes of color which the child informed the teacher, when questioned, were the angels. At the bottom of the ladder was a round ring representing a stone and another splash of color representing Jacob. That child had visualized the story.

There are also sand-table illustrations, but don't sit your children down to a table with a spoon and a cup and let them put in their time but work out some definite story in the table.

III. The Closing period is about 15 minutes long.

This may consist of stories, object lessons, chalk talks or discussions.

1. Stories—These may be either missions stories, stories in which there is a moral or lesson taught or Bible stories.

2. Object lessons are often very difficult to find but if we will only observe the many things around which teach a lesson and by a little creative effort on the part of the teachers many good lessons can be taught. Have you ever watched a spider build a web, tear it down and see with what patience the spider begins again? Did you ever think what a fine object lesson those three little monkeys teach? One with his hands over his eyes, the other over his ears and the other over his mouth.

Then there is the door to friendship. A large heart is cut from red cardboard. In the center of the heart is a door which is fastened with a lock. On a key ring are a number of keys. Each key has a different name such as, love, unselfishness, hatred, jealousy and kindness. Let the children try the keys in the lock and they will find that the keys of love, unselfishness and kindness open the door but hatred and jealousy will not.

Then there is a Thanksgiving chart which can be worked out at Thanksgiving time. At the front of the room is a large piece of paper with the printing on it I AM THANKFUL FOR—. Let each child bring a picture of something he is thankful for and paste it upon the chart.

3. Chart Talks.

You need not be an artist for the children are not there to judge your ability in art but you must be able to get the child to talk and discuss the lesson with you.

One very interesting chalk talk we had was the story of the Devil's Fish in which the Devil's fish represented Sin and its different arms represented individual sins such as lying, hate, cheating, profanity and stealing. The Devil's Fish or Sin lived in the world, the water. Men were swimming about in the world and the Devil's Fish had hold of them, pulling them down but some of the men had hold of a life-saver called Faith and it was fastened to a ship called "Christ." Those trusting in Christ Sin could not drown.

4. Discussions

I once heard a teacher lead an excellent discussion. It was the day before Hallowe'en and, of course, that was the thing that was utmost in the minds of the children. This teacher asked them some of the things they were going to do on Hallowe'en night

THE CALL OF ABRAM

(Lesson for April 17)

Lesson Text: Gen. 12:1-9; Golden Text: Gen. 12:2

Daily Readings and Comments MONDAY

The Call of Abram. Gen. 12:1-9

God called Abram to go forth into a strange land; the call was no idle errand, but God had a definite mission for him: the founding of the Chosen People of whom the promised Seed should be born. God did not choose Abram by accident; there is every evidence that he chose Abram because of his deeply spiritual nature and his sublime faith and trust in God. Wherever Abram stopped in his journeys, "there he builded an altar unto the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord." Such men are always a blessing (see Golden Text). If we would be greatly used of God, let us strive to be more worthy, hearing his voice and doing his will in all things.

TUESDAY

Abram's Obedience. Acts 7:1-7

"The God of glory appeared unto Abraham, and said, Get thee out . . . Then came he out." Abram has always been the classic example of implicit obedience. His obedience was counted unto him for righteousness, and he was called the "friend of God;" even today, the country where Abram dwelt is still called El Khalil—"friend of God." What a faith he must have had, to leave such an impress upon the land, even after all these centuries! Yet after all, it is the men of faith that God uses. Let us pray for faith to "Trust and Obey."

WEDNESDAY

Melchizedek Blesses Abram. Gen. 14:17-24

Another outstanding characteristic of Abram was his unselfishness. He had without doubt been to considerable danger and expense in conducting this expedition, yet he refused to accept any part of the spoils that were rightfully his, finding his reward in the service he had rendered. Here as always he gave God the glory, paying tithes to his priest, Melchizedek. This priest is himself a mysterious figure, and has been referred to as a type of Christ; if we honor Christ in all that we do, striving only to be of service to him and his kingdom, paying him our tithes, we may be assured of the blessing of one greater than Melchizedek!

THURSDAY

God's Covenant with Abram. Gen. 17:1-8

What a privilege was Abram's to have God speak to him as one man might to another! And it was a wonderful promise that God made him. To show that his relation to God was different from their past relations, he even gave him a new name. However, God is no respecter of persons. He has made an everlasting covenant with us too, through the blood of his Son, Jesus; he has ever given us a new name (Rev. 2:17), and we too may hear him speak to our souls if we will but bow before him. God help us to walk before thee, and to be perfect in thy sight, through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ!

FRIDAY

The Call of Moses. Exodus 3:1-12

God calls to his work those whom he knows to be ready to follow him. Moses had tried, when he killed the Egyptian tyrant, to deliver his people in his own strength, and he only succeeded in making an exile of himself. Here in the desert he had learned his own weakness and God's strength, and was now ready to follow God, depending upon him for strength and guidance (v. 12). Let us look to him for strength for today.

SATURDAY

The Call of Saul. Acts 9:1-9

How God coveted Saul's zeal and spiritual knowledge for his Church! Yet it took a stroke from heaven to win him; he had to have his physical eyes closed before he got his spiritual eyes opened! Perhaps God has called us to some work he has waiting for us, as truly as he called Saul, but our ears have not been open to his voice. Let us pray that the eyes and ears of our spirits may ever be open to the things of God, and that we may "Answer yes, when he calls!"

SUNDAY

Faith is the Victory. Heb. 11:8-19

What miracles faith has accomplished! A few are recorded in this passage; many others are recorded elsewhere in the Bible; still others should be recorded in the pages of every Christian's personal experience. Read v. 16 carefully; then let us pray for faith like Abraham, to go out, even not knowing whither we go; and our God, who has prepared for us a city, will not be ashamed to be called our God. Let us pray, too, that we may lead many others with us to that city.

Some Christian Endeavor News

Dear Endeavorers:

We want to pass on to you some news regarding Christian Endeavor work from various corners. Here is a very encouraging letter from a Junior worker at Waterloo, Iowa.

226 Kingsley Avenue,

Waterloo, Iowa, March 3, 1932.

E. M. Riddle,
Warsaw, Indiana.

Dear Brother Riddle:

I want to send a few lines about our Junior Christian Endeavor work here in Waterloo. The work is new to me, but we have an average attendance of about a dozen loyal boys and girls, and they are indeed an inspiration to work for. We are teaching them to offer their own prayers by thanksgiving and praise, and they especially like to find Bible references. We furnished one family with a Thanksgiving basket, and recently gave a sum of money to the church in appreciation of the use of the room we use on Sunday evenings.

We sincerely ask an interest in your prayers as we feel our weakness in directing young minds in the right path. May God's richest blessings be with every Junior worker.

Yours in his Name,

Mrs. S. H. Gnagey, Waterloo, Iowa.

A letter also comes from Vale, Oregon, inquiring about literature for Junior and Senior societies, and also asking if we are using any special goals this year. This may help others, so in this paragraph, I desire to answer her question. The past two years we have not used a definite group of goals. We have tried to follow the general plan of International Society work, with the major emphasis upon our Krypton, Kentucky field, as our own denominational goal for Endeavor work. This society and all others should have access to the "Angelus" from the Brethren Publishing Co., "The Brethren Evangelist," and at least one copy of the C. E. World.

Washington, D. C., Endeavorers are arranging to begin an Expert Training class, as some others before mentioned have done. Some of their Endeavorers took the Expert course at Conference time last year and are now able to assist their pastor in this fine work.

Berlin, Pennsylvania, is the home of our new Junior Superintendent, Miss Mildred Deitz, who announced in the Angelus some months ago that she desired to have the names of officers of every Junior society. Some response was given, but she feels not all have done so yet. Junior workers, please get in touch with her.

And finally, please do not forget to be working on that special contribution for Krypton, Kentucky, work. Let us have it all by June, if possible. You will want a share. Send your gift to Miss Spice, her address is on heading of this column every week. Real Endeavorers are carrying on this work for us.

Some are planning to come to conference, already; are you?

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

NEW LEBANON, OHIO

This church grants me the privilege of one meeting outside each year. Brother L. V. King and his good people of New Lebanon called me to their church during the time from February 23 to March 13. These were very pleasant days, rich in Christian fellowship with these dear saints. Our home was with the Austin Bowsher family, and an ideal place for an evangelist to stay, but we were entertained in many lovely homes. We thank everyone for the many courtesies manifested. Indeed I do not see how they could have received both messages and the messenger with any greater appreciation. It was especially gratifying to me to again meet with our dear Brother George Kinzie, who held a meeting for us in our little country church built on the corner of my mother's farm in Illinois. Since that meeting I have held him in high esteem as a true servant of the Lord, and a splendid preacher. He was compelled to give up the work of the ministry for a while, on account of his health, but would now like to be back in the work, and should be able to find a place to serve.

Brother M. Hoover, another minister who spent some time in pastoral work, is located in this congregation. He led the music and provided for a good program of special music. We appreciated his leadership, his loyalty and fine fellowship all through the meeting. I could not speak too highly of the sweet Christian fellowship with the pastor. I had known him for some years but had never been yoked together with him in work, and that is where you learn to know a man. His home life is very lovely; those five girls are jewels; he has a lovely wife, a true home builder and an efficient pastor's helper in the church work. The sweet spirit in their home life is refreshing. It will not be long until he will have plenty of young men attracted to his church with five as handsome young ladies living at the parsonage as those girls will be.

I know Brother King has, as many other pastors have, unpleasant problems to deal with, but he had no word of grouching and our labor together was indeed pleasant. He knew his field, had a complete survey and the field is indeed a good one for our church. We had a good meeting but it seemed we only got well started and did not glean the harvest that is there to be reaped. I think every meeting had some visiting preachers. Brother Barnard was out from Dayton and sincerely manifested his interest, bringing a fine delegation. Brother George Pontius, pastor of the Salem and West Alexandria churches, was in quite often and delegations from his churches were evident, especially the Salem church, where I held a meeting for them last year and was indeed sorry I could not respond to their call again. Brother W. A. Gearhart was in several times and it was a great joy to meet him and enjoy a visit in his lovely home. He is indeed a brother beloved to me.

We encountered some hindrances of course: the "Flu" was epidemic at that time, the whooping cough was prevalent, the weather took its turn, too, but we did not blame the devil with the cold spell or the sickness either. We were quite busy, giving the business men a twenty minute service at 9:00 A. M. in the various business houses to which they responded well, prayer services in the homes at 9:30, calling each afternoon, preaching every night and three times on Sunday made a full schedule. We enjoyed it and believe we touched many lives with the power of the Gospel. May the Lord richly bless Brother King and his fine congregation in the great work God has given them. If they do not love their pastor more and the pastor love his people better after three weeks of continuous preaching, I would feel my purpose had not been accomplished. May the sweetest harmony prevail in all the churches and the gospel of love be preached and lived until the coming of the Lord.

NEW LEBANON NEWS

It is with a great deal of gladness that we report the revival and work of the New Lebanon congregation to the Evangelist family. We noticed that two other meetings were held over the brotherhood beginning and closing at the same time as our meeting here. And according to their report they experienced the same obstacles we did here. I have never gone through a revival campaign when there was as much sickness as at this time. And then the extreme zero weather, after almost summer weather, coming on the second Sunday and lasting nearly a week made it impossible to have large crowds.

And yet we are not complaining, for the Lord blessed us richly, even though the attendance was not as large as at times, the interest was all we could expect. Although both pastor and evangelist felt there was yet much to accomplish, we rejoice in the harvest won.

Every evangelistic campaign should accomplish at least two things. The Church must first of all be strengthened and a finer spirit of love and unity be manifested. As pastor we feel that this has been accomplished here. The evangelist, Brother Claud Studebaker, knows the pastor's problems and therefore was in a position to lend great assistance. We believe the meeting closed with a finer feeling between pastor and people than was manifested at its start. There was very little criticism manifested both on the part of the Church and the community, and this speaks well of any evangelist.

The second objective, namely, the winning of souls to Jesus Christ and the Church was also accomplished. Thirty-one made the good confession during the meetings, two just before the meetings began and several since. On Easter Sunday evening, 21 were baptized and received into fellowship with the church. Baptismal services will be held again in several weeks, for others are yet to come. Quite a few of the smaller children were prevented from uniting with the church by their parents because of age.

Never has the pastor worked harder than during this campaign. And if the evangelist did not work any harder than is his usual custom, he certainly is a hard worker. He was ready for service at all times. 100 calls were made into homes where there were unsaved folks, and Brother Studebaker spoke quite often during the day.

The forenoons were largely taken up with cottage prayer meetings and meetings for the business men of the village in the different places of business. We had some very splendid audiences of men at these services and were able to reach some men with the Word who never come into the church doors. The afternoons were spent in visiting the sick and unsaved.

The church extended to Brother Studebaker an unanimous call to return at some future date for another meeting. And as pastor we want to take this public way of expressing our appreciation of the help he has been to each one of us and the Church. Any church planning a revival meeting would do well to call him. I wish it were possible for such men to be out in evangelistic efforts more often during the year.

As a whole our work has been going along nicely. The six and one-half years spent on the field have been profitable years in many ways. The depression, of course, has hindered the work. Yet the people are carrying on the added burden of Church building in a wonderful way.

A new Christian Endeavor has been organized for the Intermediates and they are doing splendid work. The evening service has been much larger during the new year for which we thank God. We covet the prayers of all God's people for the work here. The field indeed is large and much is yet to be accomplished.

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

Again we at Krypton have received the blessing of the presence of the Men's Gospel Team of Ashland College. Their coming has become a yearly event. Great would be the disappointment were they to fail us. We are grateful, not alone for the fact of their coming, but also for the knowledge that we may count upon their support of this work.

The people here, like the workers, look forward to this visit. It brings a refreshing contact with the outside world. One soon learns by living here what mountain isolation is. That makes these visits of ever deepening consequence to us. Even those composing the teams do not realize the personal significance of their own coming. It is refreshing to the workers, inspirational to the young people here, and encouraging to the adults.

The message of the Gospel means more to all when lives are given over fully to its proclamation, and more, also, with the cumulative force of interlocking and agreeing testimony from different persons. It adds to the force of Christian testimony to hear the same truth from different lips. The boys preached us the Gospel truths. Krypton people have a new testimony to the facts of the Scriptures, to the Salvation provided by the Free Grace of God in the Blood of Calvary's Lamb.

As direct fruit of the efforts there were two professed conversions. Others were touched, and should have come, but refused the pleadings of the Spirit. Pray for them. Life is short and opportunities all too few.

Only God knows the extent of the fruits that eternity shall reveal.

I never judge a speaker forceful when he sways me with a passionate fervor to occupy the speaker's place and plead his cause. Not given to spineless—even should they be flowery—eulogies, I pay the Team this personal tribute: No one sermon I heard failed to fill me with this passionate fervor to proclaim the Gospel myself. More power to these men, more fruit to their reward, that there be more glory to the Blessed Savior of men.

FRANK GEHMAN.

PLEASANT HILL, OHIO

The Pleasant Hill church is still on the map and is doing things. It has been some time since anything has been printed concerning the work here but we have been busy at work steadily, preparing for a great work to be accomplished for God this winter. We have been observing all the special days with good programs, which have been a success.

We have redecorated and remodeled our church on the inside. The Sunday school has purchased a new piano and we now have an orchestra, composed of school age boys and girls, which with a vibraphone, help out the music part of the church.

Our Sunday school went over the top on Easter Sunday with a record breaking attendance which was 238.

A two-weeks' revival, which had been planned early in the winter, began on March 7 and none such a revival has ever been held in "The Little White Church." Although it was Mr. Marlin's sixth revival in the church and the weather was adverse during the first week, the seating capacity of the church became taxed almost every night. The interest and attendance being so good, it was only on account of Holy week services that we closed the second week.

Mr. Marlin preached the old-fashioned Gospel. Twenty-nine persons were added to the church, seven by letter and twenty-two by baptism. On March 20th, seventeen people were baptized and taken into the church. Also on March 27 five more were baptized. The people of Pleasant Hill church really do believe God answers prayers, as that was the only method used to bring about such a great revival.

Pray for us that we all may be used to a greater advantage yet in the salvation of souls and that this church may prosper.

Thanking you, I remain,
INA FLORY, Secretary.

NEWS FROM ASHLAND

Again time has slipped by to a longer duration than we had intended to permit when we provided our last report of things Brethren here at Ashland. And since apologies are not in good form we will refrain and tell what we have to say. Sometimes when I pick up the Evangelist and see the dearth of church news from the various points I am tempted to "rise up in meetin'" and "tell them" how they should write of- fener. But then conscience "rises up" and "slaps me down" with "you'd better take your own advice," and so it happens with me as with the others, the matter is neglected.

Well, we have been holding forth in this part of the Lord's vineyard at about the usual degree of fervor. And I suppose some of the good folks may say to themselves that there isn't very much fervor about it. Sometimes it is best not to answer charges, so we refrain. But we continue to move forward. On Easter Sunday, last, it was my pleasure to baptize and receive into the church four of the children whose parents are faithful members of the congregation. Two of these children were from a family of nine children—and the last remaining members who were not members of the church. Of this family one son is studying for the ministry of the church, a daughter is married to another of the theologues here in college, another daughter is a teacher in the Bible school and four of the others are members of the Bible school orchestra. And the entire family are faithful in attendance at the Bible school and worship services of the church, as well as the children being identified with the various Christian Endeavor societies, according to their age. The other two are from another family of six children, and the first from that family, but as faithful as the others mentioned and just setting the example for the rest of the younger ones. And there are others counting the cost of whole-hearted surrender to the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are looking forward to the semi-annual communion service on May 15, at which time we hope to experience another ingathering of souls. We crave the cooperating intercession of God's people that the Spirit may convict other sinful hearts and bring them to the Lord for their blessing and his glory.

Since our last report we have arranged for the organizing of an orchestra among the teen-age young people of the church, and we now have a fine twelve-piece orchestra (hope to increase the number later) which furnishes special music every Sunday morning for the opening exercises of the Bible school. They gave most excellent assistance at the Sunrise service which was held on Easter Sunday. It was something of a trial for some to get out for a service at 6:30, but they were there, and a nice crowd came to enjoy the service. The orchestra is under the leadership of Miss Gertrude Wilgus, head of the department of Violin, of Ashland College, and Miss Wilgus has proved herself a most capable leader.

We are looking forward to the observance of the Annual Mother's Day, which is always a day of special significance to the pastor, and one of which he seeks to make much for his people, as a sort of memorial to a mother loved long since and lost a while. In this day it appeals to me that regard and respect for parents—living or departed—needs to be inculcated, and at such services this can be done rather effectively. And then comes Children's Day and Sunday school picnics, and so the church year calendar continues its circuit. And each recurring observance presents new reasons for continued faithfulness in the presenting of the Gospel, for each year finds some missing who were present the year before.

Since our last report the Intermediate Christian Endeavor society has grown in attendance and interest until it rivals the Senior society in attendance at its devotional gatherings. This is the age when many of the youth of the church are lost and we are making an earnest effort to hold the young people of this age for the Lord and the church. Two faithful women, Mrs. K. M. Monroe and Mrs. Raymond Bixler, wives of two of the professors of Ashland College, are in charge of the Intermediate Society and right well are they discharging their duty. They shall not lose their reward.

And the Bible school continues to present the Word through the ministries of faithful teachers, and to offer opportunity for the increasing of Bible knowledge and the deepening of the soul life of the scholars. Of course we have our problems, but what school hasn't, so why grow discouraged?

* Cooperating with the Seminary in the holding of the Seminar meetings for the theological students in connection with our mid-week prayer services we have been privileged to hear several of the prominent pastors of the brotherhood as they have come in to speak before the students of the Seminary. It has been a joy to have these brethren with us, and we bid them welcome at any future time they may be in our community.

And so we are trying to maintain the somewhat difficult position of maintaining the work of a settled congregation of Brethren people, and at the same time provide a place and work where the many young people from our various congregations who are spending several years of college life here may feel at home and be held true to the faith of their fathers and mothers. Two years and a half of this endeavor has convinced me that it is no easy task, but we are leaning upon divine aid—for otherwise it could not be done—and we are constantly conscious of the need to keep humble in this place so fraught with opportunity for service. And we solicit the continued intercession of the many friends that God's will may be done here as elsewhere "Till he come." May the blessings of God continue to rest upon his laborers elsewhere as well as here, and may we all come at last in the fullness of time into the bliss of likeness to him.

Fraternally,
DYOLL BELOTE.

BELL JINGLES

I spent some time in the San Joaquin Valley in California and gave a series of Bible lectures at Lathrop and Turlock. We have three churches in this Valley, including the two mentioned and the other is at Manteca, which is about six miles from Lathrop. This section, like the Yakima Valley of Washington, is undergoing a severe financial struggle on account of the low prices of their products, which in many instances are bringing less than the cost of production.

Lathrop

The church here is the oldest in California and has many interesting events connected with its history. This was the home of such men as John Wolfe, J. W. Beer and Henry Holsinger. It was here that Henry Holsinger wrote the history of the church. The place is a junction railroad town consisting of only a few homes. The church has had no regular pastor for many years and yet maintains two regular services on Sunday, supports a Sunday school, a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, a W. M. S. and contributes to every interest of the church. It has a capable lay leadership that is not afraid of responsibility and impresses one of the Apostolic idea of church work. I am inclined to think that the modern idea of church work and perpetuating it has placed more importance and responsibility with the pastor, than it has on the laity. A pastor failing or leaving, is no reason why a church should be closed, and if there were more training of lay leadership and Bible teaching we would have more vigorous churches. One can hardly think of the Lathrop church without thinking of J. Milo Wolfe and his wife and a dozen more who carry forward the work here. The church seems like one big family. I was here ten days and gave Bible lectures on the "Great Doctrines of the New Testament." The attendance and interest was good. Brother Platt and several families from Manteca attended regularly and gave assistance in the orchestra and singing. We had in the audience Filipinos, Italians and some Catholics. The Filipino boys helped in the music. A few of the young people took their stand for Christ.

Turlock

Going to Turlock was returning to old friends, as I spent two months with these folk several years ago, performed several marriages which still hold, although Reno is not far from here. One of my old "pals," Chas. Grubb, and his family, who formerly lived in Ashland, Oregon, is located here. Some of the young people who were formerly members of my church in Sunnyside, Washington, are located near, at Merced and Modesto. Brother Jennings, who is the pastor, I had the pleasure of working with in two big meetings he held for me in Johnstown and Dayton while I served these churches as pastor. I had a delightful ten days of bible studies with the people and friends of this church. Brother Jennings has served this church for several years as pastor in a very acceptable way and dearly loved by the congregation. While he has served, they have been an addition to the church, remodeled the parsonage and gone forward in the church work. Brother Jennings is a success as a pastor, but his real field is evangelism, for which he longs. As he told me, and I believe him, he has placed all on the altar for service to his Lord. He loves the Brethren church and I with him, only wish he might be used in a larger way.

I had an enjoyable stay and a profitable time. People came from a long distance to attend, the crowds were good and interest fine.

Manteca

I was with Brother Platt and his people for one Sunday and their communion service. It was here many years ago that I assisted in a meeting when the work was organized in Manteca. As I remember the meeting was held in a building formerly occupied as a pool room and all that is associated with it. The place was called "The Palace of Amusement." I remember that two of the Brethren slept one night on the pool table. This was literally "taking the kingdom by force." Several found Christ in this place during the meeting and led to the organizing of the church in Manteca. I had an enjoyable time with Brother Platt and his people. As I wanted to see some parties over in the Santa Clara Valley on my way to Los Angeles, Brother Platt drove me down in his car, a distance of more than 400 miles. Our first stop was at San Jose, where we have several families and which is the home of Roger Darling, Dr. Wilson, Chas. Miller, and others of our faith.

It seems too bad that the church does not have the full service of a man with the ability of Brother Darling, but circumstances have made it impossible for him to give the service he would like to for our church, but he is a very busy man. He has the quiet hour of worship over the radio from the San Jose station and thousands hear him preach the Gospel, even as far north as Canada. He teaches a large men's Bible class and preaches nearly every Sunday, has a prune orchard and conducts a very successful funeral parlor. Outside of this, he does not have much to do. These people have a love for the Brethren church and still hold their membership with us. Too bad we lost the opportunity of having a church in this thriving city.

I spent one night at Mt. Herman, where Brother Platt has a cottage. It is up here in the mountain with its big redwood trees that the State Christian Endeavor of California has its Summer Retreat and Bible Conferences. The Coast drive is very interesting via Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz and Ventura.

Southern California

The land of the "unusual"—and it certainly was "unusual" in weather the whole length of the Coast this year. I ran into about all the worst weather the United States had this year. In Washington the middle of November it dropped to zero and had snow and cold all through the Sunnyside and Harrah meetings. Down in Oregon it was the same. California, where I expected to get relief, I found more snow with rain and fog. Old timers said they had the most snow and cold in fifty years. They had to smudge for frosts from the middle of November to March. When I returned back East where they were writing me of balmy weather, when I got into Cheyenne it was 10 degrees below zero and I was told that I ran into the worst part of the Winter. It is still snowing as I am writing and this is supposed to be Spring! However, the Coast Winter has been worth $100,000,000.00 as they have had it very dry the past three years and the water supply was at a danger point. God knows best.

While Southern California feels the depression, yet I think it is in the best condition of any section I have been in during my travels. Church work the whole length of the Coast is in good shape and well cared for. We have very efficient pastors in all our churches, working together in unity.

La Verne

I had a pleasant two weeks in holding a short meeting with one of my old friends, Brother A. L. Lynn, who is the pastor. I held a meeting here several years ago when Brother Broad was the pastor and it was a pleasure to work and be in the homes of old friends again. Brother Lynn and his wife have done a fine piece of work here and the church has grown under their leadership. Brother Lynn is an evangelistic pastor and does not wait for a revival to take people in the church, but is continually gathering them in. It is a pleasure to work with a man of his type and love for souls and the church. While there were only four nights during the meetings that it did not rain (when it rains in California, it rains) yet the attendance was remarkable. When I thought we would have nobody, as it seemed they would have to come in boats, the house would be nearly full. The people here love the Word of God and know how to pray. Our attendance and interest was good, yet the field was so closely gleaned that in securing new material for the church and reaching unsaved souls was not all we would like to have seen. I consider the La Verne church one of the best in California and think they made no mistake in selecting Brother and Sister Lynn to serve them. We appreciated delegations from South Gate with their pastor, Brother Leo Polman. Brother Polman is doing good work at South Gate and the church there is growing. Brother Mayes, pastor of Whittier, also attended with a delegation from his church. Brother Mayes has served very satisfactorily at Whittier and was in a union meeting in that city with John Brown when I left. Brother Cashman who is pastor of the Second church in Los Angeles, attended with some of his members. Brother Cashman is the latest recruit to the pastors of California and is going forward with his church in the work.

I preached for Brother Cover the last Sunday I was in Los Angeles to an appreciative audience and enjoyed the fellowship with Brother Cover and his people. His membership is scattered all the way from Pasadena to suburban towns. The work of the church and Bible school is in a good condition.

I had a very enjoyable stay with Brother Bauman and friends in Long Beach, where several years ago I supplied as pastor for Brother Bauman several months. The church here is continually going forward in growth and service. In spite of the depression during the past year they raised more than $14,000.00. They are having additions at nearly every service. I had the privilege of preaching again to this people. The Sunday I was there, they had 1021 in the Bible school and seeing three Filipinos baptized.

Homeward Bound

On my way back I stopped over in Nebraska and Iowa and Indiana on College matters. It seemed good to get back home after an absence of nearly five months. I found the College work moving satisfactorily. The student attendance is the largest this semester. While collections are slow, yet our finances under circumstances are very good. IT WILL BE OF INTEREST TO THE FRIENDS AND CONTRIBUTORS FINANCIALLY TO THE SCHOOL to know that among all our loans that there is only one delinquent. I found the business situation and stability of finances the best in Ashland and Ashland county of any section. In talking to the clerk of the county, he told me there were less forced sales this year than last. I am convinced that our investments here are safer than any other place.

VICTORY REVIVAL AT MUNCIE, INDIANA

The recent revival under the direction of Rev. Chas. Ashman, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, was a real victory revival. The church was united and working as a unit for the salvation of souls. Four prayer meetings had been held each week for six weeks and special sermons were preached by the pastor. Prayer lists were formulated and individual prayer was offered for prospects. The date of the meetings was kept before the public by use of the bulletin board and newspapers. Hand bills and window cards were distributed in homes. Several committees such as Entertainment, Music and Finance were appointed. And the Lord through the Holy Spirit gave us a real revival.

Rev. Ashman came to us Monday evening, February 22, and continued for three weeks in this special effort to save souls. He fired his first guns against Sin and Satan in the presence of a good crowd in the old auditorium. The crowds kept increasing until Friday night when we moved down into the New Basement Auditorium. On Sunday evening the room was full. An added attraction for this service was the DeKoven Male Chorus, a city organization, who very kindly gave their services in special numbers and led in congregational singing. Four confessions were received up to this time.

The second week was a very wonderful week. Rev. Ashman was at his best and preached great sermons. The crowds increased and interest was fine. The unsaved began to come forward nearly every night. The neighbors began to talk about and attend the services. The Holy Spirit was having right of way.

The third week began with a great day on Sunday. The Sunday school was merged into the preaching service and Brother Ashman gave a splendid illustrated talk and without undue pleading 20 children stepped out to accept Christ as their personal Savior. It was indeed an inspiring sight.

The last Sunday night was the crowning service of the meeting. Brother Ashman preached a wonderful sermon. Several came forward to accept Christ. The benediction was pronounced. Then the pastor announced that we would sing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" and everybody would march up and shake the evangelist's hand and bid him God-Speed on his journey home. While this was going on Brother Ashman stopped everybody and said that a man and his wife and two children wanted to accept Christ. He extended the invitation again and another man and wife and boy came forward. To say there was rejoicing is to put it in a mild way. There was rejoicing in heaven and earth.

There were some special features that are worth mentioning. It was inspiring to see the prayer room nearly always filled each night before the regular service with sincere Christians talking over prospects and offering earnest prayers for the success of the meetings. A lot of personal work was done by the church members as well as by pastor and evangelist. The evangelist and pastor made as many as nine calls some afternoons. Other times the calls were not so many but real instruction was given in Brethren Doctrines to help people understand why they ought to join our church.

Services were held every night during the week and Sunday afternoons. The Sunday afternoon services were devoted to the study of prophecy. The Signs of the Times and Second Coming of Christ were stressed. The people came in large numbers. They rejoiced in receiving the truth.

A question box was used very successfully by the evangelist. Many questions about Baptism, Feet Washing and other doctrines of the church were fully and completely answered. Spiritism and kindred cults were discussed and given their rightful place with Satan and his hosts. Suppers, sales, gambling devices to raise money for the church were condemned. Tithing was advocated as a Scriptural means of raising money for the Lord's work.

Baptismal services were held several times during and after the meeting. We rejoiced to see one family of seven, another of four and still another of three putting on Christ in Baptism, and entering the church. A mother and her three girls were also baptized. And a husband and wife besides several young people made the total to date of 39 baptisms. There was a total of 53 confessions with some yet to be baptized and some being prevented by parents. Among those yet to be baptized is a business man and his wife and a young lady.

Last fall a farewell service was held in the old Maple Grove church near Eaton, Indiana. At this time it was decided to turn all movable property as well as the deed for building and lot over to the Trustees of the Muncie church. This was done and the pews, the piano, the lighting fixtures and pulpit furniture were moved to Muncie and are being used in the New Basement Unit. The building and one acre of ground are being offered for sale. The Muncie Brethren are very thankful for this splendid gift.

The membership roll was also moved to this church. After going over this roll with some of the members of that church we found that there were 68 people still holding membership there. Some of these had moved away and could not be reached. Others were still around the country and by visitation the pastor secured the consent of 21 of these to let their names be placed on the Muncie church book. Ten of these good folks were welcomed into fellowship during the revival. Others will be placed on our roll and recognition given them as they are able to attend the regular services of the church. Most of these were too far away to attend very much but they will have their membership in a Brethren church. Brother Ashman helped the pastor get some of these good folks lined up for the work here.

Rev. Ashman is a great evangelist. The neighbors who attended the services said he was the best of any in the city. (Other churches had meetings going on at the same time as ours.) We found him true to the Book, ready to preach the truth, an impressive speaker, a fine personal worker. It was indeed a pleasure to have him in our home and work with him in our Victory Revival.

We were a bit fearful about the finances for the meeting. Things are getting worse in our shops. But Brother Ashman was very considerate and the Lord was very good to us and we did fairly well for these times.

The end is not yet for this revival. All the services have been well attended. There were 227 in Sunday school last Sunday. Mrs. Sands had 69 children in her Junior church which is held at regular church hours. There were good crowds at the church services with a number of strangers at both services. And a young girl of eleven years came to me after the evening service and said, "I am coming into the church next Sunday." I said that is good news but it would be wonderful news if Daddy and Mother would come too." The mother was standing nearby and she said "We are coming."

Pray for us Brethren, that the revival may keep up and that we may have the wisdom, tact and judgment necessary to take care of our added responsibilities, and a Brethren church worthy of his name be built up in Muncie, Indiana.

The New Church Building

Two momentous events had previously happened in the Lord's work in Muncie. These events were the cause of great rejoicing by the members and friends of the church. They had splendid influence on the community. They caused some talk among the churches of the city. The members feel that they really have accomplished something worthwhile.

The first of these events occurred on Sunday, September 27, 1931. At this time the Cornerstone of the new church building was laid with appropriate ceremonies. Rev. W. I. Duker, Moderator of National Conference, was the officiating minister of the occasion. A fine crowd was present in the morning and a good program was given.

The cornerstone was laid with impressive ceremonies in the afternoon with guests present from Oakville, Eaton, Dayton, Ohio and other places. Rev. Howard Cope, president of the Muncie Ministerial Association, brought greetings and congratulations from that organization. This was followed by a splendid sermon by Rev. Duker. We then repaired to the scene of the laying of the corner stone. The pastor assisted by the contractor and mason raised the stone to place and Rev. Duker read the dedicatory service. The pastor offered the dedicatory prayer.

The cornerstone is of Indiana sandstone, square in shape, massive in appearance with the words First Brethren Church, Muncie, 1931. A copper box was placed in the opening at the back of the stone. In this copper box was placed a New Testament, History of the Muncie church, including names of former ministers, a list of present members, copy of the Evangelist, some Sunday school literature, copies of Muncie daily papers, a picture of Rev. J. L. Kimmell, pastor of the church for eight years and one of the present pastor.

The second of these momentous events was the dedication of the basement unit of the new church. This occurred on Sunday, December 6 with Dr. J. Raymond Schutz, president of the Indiana Council of Religious Education, as the speaker of the day. Needless to say we had a very fine address and a fine program and good attendance at the morning services. We then repaired to the kitchen of the new basement for a basket dinner and social hour.

A large crowd greeted Dr. Schutz as he brought the afternoon message which was filled with good things to think about. A very excellent rendering of hymn, "Out of the Ivory Palaces" was given by Reid Thompson and Walter Northcutt in a trombone and trumpet duet. Other vocal numbers added to the enjoyment of the occasion. The pastor made a statement of the financial status of the buildings about to be dedicated and revealed the fact that they were being dedicated free of debt. This was followed by reading of dedicatory Scripture with responses by congregation, prayer by Dr. Schutz, and formal declaration of dedication of buildings to the worship of God and service to humanity by the pastor. The keys were turned over to Ross Thompson, president of the Board of Trustees. Rev. Sylvester Lowman, pastor at Oakville, pronounced the benediction and brought to a close a service which is destined to have a far reaching effect upon the work at Muncie.

The two events just mentioned are the partial fulfillment of a vision that the present pastor and the congregation had of a new church building in Muncie. When we came here three and a half years ago we suggested as a goal A NEW CHURCH IN TWO YEARS. There was a goodly sum of money in the building fund which was increased substantially by special gifts by individuals and special drives by the Sunday school and other organizations. The W. M. S. worked hard until they had about $300 in their treasury. The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, the Junior Church, the C. E. Society, the Berean Builders Club, all raised substantial sums. Then we felt we were ready to do something.

In the meantime Mr. A. A. Honeyfell, Church Architect of Indianapolis, was asked to present tentative plans for a new church building with Sunday school annex, a brick structure to cost about $40,000 furnished. Then we asked Mr. Honeywell to make us permanent plans for moving our old building on the back of the lot and erecting a church auditorium of Gothic structure in front. We received bids from several contractors but decided after consultation with the mission boards, to build only the new basement under the old building and new basement unit of new auditorium.

Ground was broken in the summer and the new basement dug with concrete foundation erected for old building. Then the old building was turned around facing Blaine Street and moved to this foundation. Extra space was provided at back for a steam heating plant, two large rooms were erected over this furnace room. Then the foundation for the new auditorium was laid and the new basement unit erected where the old building formerly stood. This gives us two basements separated by accordion doors, which if opened into one makes a room 105 feet long by 34 feet wide. Thus we have our old building with small auditorium and nine class rooms and new basements with five class rooms, making a total of fourteen class rooms besides the auditoriums.

A splendid kitchen fully equipped with a twelve burner gas range, good cupboards, hard maple serving counters and work tables and enough dishes to serve 200 people at one sitting. The lighting fixtures in kitchen and the pews in the basement came from the Maple Grove church. The ladies of the Maple Grove church presented the coffee urn as a gift to this church.

The outside walls of the new basement are of buff brick with pilasters and general gothic structure. There is a front entrance on Kirby avenue. The main entrance will be in the tower with walks running back to it when the auditorium is finished. There is another entrance to the basement through the old building. The inside walls are of concrete with sand finish to plaster. The ceiling is nine feet high with large windows to give plenty of light and air. These windows are fitted with velvo glass to give full light but prevent people outside from looking in. The doors to the kitchen, the serving windows and the doors to the class rooms have the same kind of glass. The outside doors have plain glass and the front door glass forms a distinct cross when you look at it.

The heating system is single pipe steam system with steel boiler. It is automatically controlled and is large enough to heat all we now have and the new church auditorium when built.

The Building Committee in charge of this work was composed of the following men, Curtiss Cruca, chairman; Loren Garrett, Secretary-Treasurer; O. V. Cruca, Roy Tuttle, M. L. Sands. Much credit is due Brother Curtiss Cruca for the faithful way he was on the job. Brother Cruca is a carpenter and was able to check up on the contractor and workmen from time to time. He is still on the job in his spare time making platforms, tables and helping get things in good working order. He is also our Sunday school superintendent.

All this and not one penny of debt. We are rejoicing in our accomplishment. We are pressing on anew in the good work for Christ and the Church.

M. L. SANDS, Pastor.

MUNCIE VICTORY REVIVAL

We have enjoyed a three weeks' Victory Revival with the Muncie Brethren. In the church are some of "the finest of the wheat." They form a group of faithful, zealous, spiritual Brethren. They have been "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" through prosperity and adversity. They have achieved a victory in the completion of the basement unit of their new church. It is a credit to their loyalty and liberality. With the old building remodeled, it provides adequate Sunday school facilities for the present. When the church auditorium is built, the entire edifice will be one of which any Brethren church can be proud.

The pastor and his faithful wife were excellent co-laborers in the Lord. Their home was a real home to us. In every possible way, they put their heart and soul into this revival. Brother Sands is loved and respected as a shepherd of this flock. It was a real joy to labor with him in winning precious souls. This was our first experience in working with him as pastor and evangelist and we shall ever remember it with joy.

The Muncie church has a good field, populated with the "common people," such as heard Jesus gladly. It has all of the general problems in keeping with other fields these days and a few peculiar ones, but there is a bright future ahead of the Muncie church. As far as the field is concerned, this church ought to grow into one of the strongest in the denomination.

The revival was victorious in several ways. The church rallied to it with increasing attendance, interest, and zeal,—until the blizzard hit us. Then, sickness and blizzard put a real test upon the meetings. But, all held steady through this and the revival closed with a fitting climax. The pastor will report the number of confessions. We were glad to do our "bit" in securing the transfer of membership of the faithful ones from the Maple Grove congregation which has become extinct. Some of those who transferred their membership to Muncie were among those who became members at Maple Grove some sixteen years ago when we held them a revival. These transfers of membership are not included in the number of confessions to be reported. The fellowship among the Brethren during this revival was sweet. The Sunday school was back of it in loyalty. The Decision Day Merged Service was an inspiration. There is a big opportunity for a larger school in this place. The people love the Bible. They are genuinely Brethren, loyal to our institutions. They love the Blessed Hope and eagerly accepted the prophetic studies we gave. May the Lord richly bless the Muncie Brethren church.

and, of course, some of the things which they thought were fun were really harmful. So in a round-about way this teacher helped the pupils to see how dangerous these things were and that often they were not fun and so they decided to make a rule which they would follow on Hallowe'en night. Of course, the Golden Rule was chosen "Do unto others as you would have them do to you."

There are many other things you might do such as a trip around the world in which you learn the customs and habits of boys and girls in other countries. Or an illustrated story book in which the teacher tells the adventures of a little boy or girl and lets the pupils bring pictures to illustrate these stories.

Let us too remember that a great deal can be taught by just hanging a picture upon the wall or if you have a bulletin board by putting new pictures on it. Let us make use of our magazines and Sunday school papers in this way.

These are only a few of the things you might do but you realize this all takes time, not just the last few minutes on Saturday night but a definite time during the week in which to prepare your Sunday school lesson. But in what better way can we spend our time than to teach and interest children in the higher living "the Christlike life"?

We teachers have a great responsibility, a responsibility that we ourselves cannot carry but we can only trust in the Lord Jesus, asking him to so fill us with his Spirit that we might be living sermons unto these little eyes which are constantly watching us.

THE LIVING SERMON

I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day;

I'd rather one would walk with me than merely tell the way.

The eye's a better pupil and more willing than the ear;

Fine counsel is confusing, but example's always clear.

The best of all the preachers are the men who live their creeds,

For to see good put in action is what everybody needs.

I soon can learn to do it, if you'll let me see it done,

I can watch your hands in action, but your tongue too fast may run,

The lectures you deliver may be very wise and true,

But I'd rather get my lessons by observing what you do.

I may not understand the high advice you give;

But there's no misunderstanding how you act and how you live.

Why Join the Church?

By Daniel A. Poling

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH because I ought to be better than I am. Henry Ward Beecher once said, "The church is not a gallery for the exhibition of eminent Christians, but a school for the education of imperfect ones."

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH because of what I can give to it and do through it, as well as because of what I may get out of it. The church is not a dormitory for sleepers; it is an institution of workers. It is not a rest camp; it is a front-line trench.

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH because every man ought to pay his debts and do his share toward discharging the obligations of society. The church has not only been the bearer of good news of personal salvation, it has been and it is the supreme uplifting and conserving agency without which "Civilization would lapse into barbarism and press its way to perdition"

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH because of memories; memories of things I can never forget; memories of faces that will never fade; memories of vows that are the glory of youth.

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH because of hope; hope that lives when promises are dead; hope that paves the way for progress; hope that visions peace and social justice; hope for time, and hope for eternity—the great hope that casts its anchor behind Jesus Christ.

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH because of the strong men in it who need reinforcing; the weak men in it who need encouraging; the rascals in it who need rebuking. If I say that I am not good enough, my humility recommends me. If I sit in the seat of the scornful, my inactivity condemns me.

I OUGHT TO BELONG TO THE CHURCH, but not until I am ready to join a going concern; not until I am willing to become an active partner with Jesus Christ.

THE Imagery of Blood"

For three years a joint committee representing the Methodist churches North and South and the Methodist Protestant Church has been working on a revised Hymnal. Recently its secretary, Dr. Langdale, gave out an advance report of what was being done. Among other things he said that the "Imagery of Blood" was distasteful to modern minds and that as far as possible "blood hymns" would be excluded from the hymnal.

Old fashioned Methodists, of whom there are still some remaining may wonder what will be the fate of the Wesleys' hymns under the hand of this revision committee; for John and Charles Wesley believed in the power of "The Blood." The answer is what you might expect—almost half of them will be dropped!

The revision committee should read Hebrews 10:28-31: "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: Of how much sorer punishment suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing. . . . It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the Living God."

WHAT Did They Fail to Teach?

Dr. A. Caswell Ellis, Director of Cleveland College, speaking before the Ohio College Association recently, made a startling confession of the tragic inadequacy of college education as generally conducted at present. He said:

"College educated leaders in industry have led us into the most inexcusable era of dire hunger, misery and depression ever recorded, and at a time when millions of idle men and thousands of factories and farms are able and eager to produce more than the world can consume."

Then Dr. Ellis asks, "What did we college professors teach our college-bred leaders that made them act this way? Or what did we fail to teach? I confess I am ashamed of this part of our record. I am ashamed that the industrial leaders we have turned out have lacked either the intelligence or the character to foresee or prevent the incredibly stupid chaos that now grips the world."

The answer to Dr. Ellis' searching question is twofold: With a few notable exceptions, the college professors have taught some things they should not have taught, and they have failed to teach other things which they should have taught.

First, they have taught a materialistic, evolutionary view of the world, short-sightedly failing to see where such a view must inevitably lead. And when the graduates of the colleges coldly and logically apply in the business and political world the philosophy which they were taught in the classroom, the professors hold up their hands in holy terror and astonishment.

Second, they have failed to teach their students the true values of life as revealed in the Person, Work and Words of Jesus Christ. And this is true today, not merely in state schools, but often in colleges which claim to be Christian. For the most part in such institutions, Christianity is relegated to a brief chapel period, and even here its presentation is thin, vague and uncertain. It is high academic treason to carry your religion into a class room, whether you are a professor or a student. The "teachings of Christ" may be patronizingly complimented from the chapel platform, but the Son of God knocks in vain upon the classroom door. "Religion and science do not mix," the student is told. Is it any wonder, then, that when he emerges into the world of business he adopts the same rule of life? —goes to church piously on Sunday, but shuts the door of his business office in the face of Christ.

And then the professors hold solemn conventions and ask what is wrong, or else decide that they must have more freedom to deny the truths of Christian faith and propagate the vicious cult of materialistic philosophy.

An educational system without Christ is fulfilling its part in preparing the world for the most frightful catastrophe in the history of mankind. The harvest may tarry but it is sure.

But dark as the situation is, there are yet some teachers and some institutions who have not bowed the knee to Baal, who continue to believe that Christ is the only hope of a lost world, and who insist that his Words are applicable to every phase of human life, whether in the field of education or the world of business. Such teachers see the folly of trying to keep their religion in one air-tight compartment of life, and their sociology and economics in another, never permitting the "twin to meet."

We do not need less education, but we do need more teachers who are unreservedly Christian.

THE Danger of "Peace Conferences"

Mr. Frank H. Simonds, a close student of foreign affairs for many years and an able writer, has made an interesting analysis of the world situation in a recent book entitled "Can Europe keep the Peace?" Mr. Simonds points out a very obvious and reasonable weakness of the habit of calling a conference whenever anything goes wrong with the world, namely, that a conference called without adequate preparation by each participating nation may actually do more harm than good.

He writes as follows: "It requires no profound examination of the consequences of the many unsuccessful conferences since 1919 to indicate how incalculable has been the harm resulting from the disclosure of international rivalries at a time when the whole world was suffering both materially and psychologically from economic depression and political dispute. Conferences rashly summoned have led only to the exacerbation of national passions and international resentments. This fact explains the Geneva axiom that one disarmament conference is more disastrous for world peace than three battles in actual war. The same thought was disclosed in the prayer of a London clergyman after the Naval Conference—"Give us peace in our time, O Lord, peace without conference!"

HELEN KELLER SAYS "THANK YOU"

In acknowledging the arrival of a new Braille Bible in twenty volumes, Miss Helen Keller recently wrote the American Bible Society:

"I was at dinner when the new Bible came Tuesday evening. I could hardly wait to finish my dinner before undoing the wrappings. When I did finally put the volumes into the bookcase, I sat down beside them, caressing them with loving pride.

"Forty years long I have loved the Word of God, and now I am happy to have it so conveniently and beautifully bound. I am pleased with everything about it—the covers, which my friends tell me suggest the Lord's green pastures, the excellent printing on both sides of the sheet, the lightness of the books, the numbering of the verses, which is the best I have ever had, and the well-marked title on the back of each volume."

"I feel the blessed pages under my hand with special thankfulness as a rod and a staff to keep firm my steps through the valley of the shadow of depression and world calamity. Truly, the Bible—the Teaching of our Savior—is the only way out of the dark.' If the wealth of things which we have possessed in abundance has not knocked on our selfish hearts and opened them to the central message of Jesus, 'Love ye one another,' perhaps these days of widespread suffering will be the pointed instrument that will 'stab (our) spirit broad awake.'"

During 1931 the number of volumes of embossed Scriptures distributed by the American Bible Society to the Blind was nearly forty percent greater than in any one of the ninety-seven years during which the Society has been providing Scriptures for persons denied the precious gift of sight. A total of 5,790 volumes was sent out in English, French, Spanish, German, Italian and Portuguese. Requests for more than 600 additional volumes had to be temporarily delayed due to the exhaustion of the funds donated for this specific work.

Husbanding the Fruits of a Revival

The church has not finished its task when it has led men and women into its membership and into fellowship with Christ. Its duty to the new members has just begun. That makes the end of a successful revival a critical time—critical in the life of the new members and of the church as well. The way a new child of God gets started in the Christian life will have much to do with the way he continues through the weeks and months and years that follow. And the worth he begins promptly to show to the church indicates his value in the days to come. New members should be given the most thoughtful and faithful care possible. It is as foolish for a church to receive new members into its fold and give no thought or effort to their spiritual welfare, as it would be for a man whose business it is to raise chickens to bring forth a brood of new-born chicks from his hatchery and then make no provision for their care. Too often young Christians are allowed to shift for themselves, and consequently the blame for much of the disappointment experienced because of their unsatisfactory development is to be laid at the door of the church and its leadership. Husbanding the fruits of a revival, then, is a most important responsibility, and no church can afford to neglect it.

There are many things that might be said with regard to the care and training of new converts to the Christian way, but we offer only a few by way of suggestion. Our purpose is not to deal with methods, but with ideals and aims.

In the first place, effort ought to be made to encourage the new church members to focus thought and energy on discovering and doing the will of God. Let us not deceive ourselves into thinking that this is fully accomplished at conversion. Conversion is a wonderful experience, but it does not do everything for the individual. It causes a man to look away from self and the world to Christ on the cross for salvation from sin, but it does not bring the soul immediately into possession of the full stature of Christian character. Conversion brings a man into the attitude of right-about-face as to the great end and aim of life, but it does not necessarily leave him much advanced from the place of weakness he previously occupied. Progress comes gradually. One must grow in grace, and encouragement is needed. It is not easy to get one's thoughts and affections collected and focused on the new way, to bring one's ideals and ambitions to the place where they are wholly centered in Christ. It is not only not easy, it is positively hard, to bring oneself actually to put Christ's will first in all the affairs of life. Many will not attempt it without encouragement, and others, attempting it, will fail unless urged to make large use of fellowship with Christ and the strength that is vouchsafed through his grace.

Nothing is more important than that Christians shall be Christ-centered. It makes all the difference between success and failure in the Christian life. That was what made the difference between Peter the shifting sand and Peter the rock, between Peter the coward and Peter the hero. That mighty emotional nature, filled with explosive energy, that was one hour ready to die with his Lord, and the next denying that he ever knew him, was focused and directed to the one supreme purpose, that of doing the will of his Master. His nature was not changed; he was still the bold, energetic, fiery Peter that he had been before, with this difference, —he was henceforth dominated by a mighty purpose. His life was Christ-centered, and he no longer scattered his relentless energy, but conserved it, controlled it and used it all for Christ.

The new church member should be encouraged to desire and to rejoice in the fellowship of Christian people. This is necessary for his largest spiritual growth. A man cannot reach the greatest spiritual heights alone. He must rise by fellowship. Transfiguration scenes may not be for the crowds, but neither are they for the lone individual who has not learned to partake of the lofty soul experiences of another. The man who claimed that he could worship God as well sitting alone on a rock out under the open sky as when meeting with his fellow-Christians in the house of God simply did not know what he was saying. He was wrong, absolutely wrong, not because God would not receive worship given under such circumstances when such worship was the best that could be given, but because his soul could not rise alone to the spiritual vision and understanding and strength of purpose such as are made possible by fellowshiping with the saints of God. Christian fellowship is one of the mightiest factors in spiritual growth that God in his mercy has provided. The church is a fellowship by very nature. In its most elemental meaning the church is not merely the "called-out" ones, but those called-out and together. Not merely are Christians called out from the world, but they are called together into fellowship. And wisely are we warned, "Not to neglect the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is." The new disciple of our Lord must learn to enjoy the fellowship of the people of God, if he is to do the best by himself. Church attendance should become to him not merely a duty growing out of a new relationship, but a blessed privilege and a holy fellowship. The church must encourage this view.

The devotion and energies of the new church members should be marshalled for service. It is not without good reason that the Women's Missionary Society heralded throughout their sisterhood the slogan, "Saved for Service." That is actually what men and women are saved for—that they may give themselves in service to the cause of Christ. And it is unfortunate when any one is allowed to come into the church without that thought in mind. The church is not a social club, but a working organization, and to enjoy honorable membership in it, every one ought to have something to do and be busy doing it. There are no membership certificates for drones. There is no more place for such in the church than there is in a hive of working bees, and it might be to the advantage of the church if its drones were treated as drastically as drones are in a swarm of bees. Jesus had little time for people who would not work, and today as then he says, "Go work today in my vineyard," and "Why stand ye all the day idle?" He sets the example of industry, saying, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." And to his disciples he gave the most stupendous task that was ever committed by any leader to his followers, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." That is real work, and every new member must be made to feel responsible for doing his level best toward the accomplishment of that commission.

The First Task of the Church and the Pulpit

There are many things claiming the attention of the preacher in these days, but he must never forget that first of all he is really a preacher of the Gospel and that everything else is secondary. There are many different phases of the church's total task and many different features and activities that are worthy and deserving to be looked after, but it must be borne in mind that above everything else it is the church's duty to give, and the world's need to receive, the message of life from the throne of God. First things must be kept first. There is nothing the church and its ministry need to be more careful about than that. There is a real temptation to allow secondary things to take first place, and to forget that the chief burden of the minister's heart is the message to a lost world he is sent to deliver and that the first task of the church is to call men out of darkness into the marvelous light of the children of God.

That duty must not only be kept uppermost, but it must be made a real passion. If that is done, it will give power to preaching and victory to the church such as there is sore need of at this hour.

The church needs to be reminded of nothing more frequently than its duty to give forth its divine message and the minister needs to cultivate nothing more constantly and carefully than the passion of preaching—preaching the Gospel of saving grace to dying men.

The Reformed Church Messenger some time ago recorded these appropriate words:

The pastor of a great city cathedral, speaking of his own Christ—

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Secretary E. M. Riddle announces the Indiana Ministers' Retreat to be held at Shipshewana Lake, May 9 and 10. Ministers are urged to bring their wives and families.

This week will find many of the church's leaders gathered on the College hill top, it being the time for the annual meeting of the College Board of Trustees, and the mid-year meeting of the Foreign Mission Board.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary-treasurer of the Seminary Faculty, makes a report of the funds received by that institution from April, 1931 to April, 1932. He also records cash receipts and disbursements for certain items for the period extending from the first of January to April 12th of this year.

Dr. Bame, who just returned from filling the pulpit at Bryan, Ohio, over Sunday, April 10th, informs us that Brother C. A. Stewart, who has been seriously ill, is recovering nicely and has been able to get down stairs. We pray that his improvement may continue and that he may soon be back in his place of leadership.

A card just received from Brother A. T. Wirick, pastor of the church at North Liberty, Indiana, informs us that he will conduct his thirteenth revival meeting for that congregation from April 10 to 24, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer of Peru, as leaders of the music. He says he will be glad for the cooperation of neighboring congregations, and asks the prayers of the brotherhood for the success of the meetings.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Flora, Indiana, writes at the completion of his first year of service there, that all departments and organizations are working well. A pageant depicting Brethren Progress was staged by the young people with such success that it was required to be given a second night. The Sunday school maintains a good interest and attendance. The Flora Brethren are anticipating the pleasure of entertaining the Indiana Conference this fall.

An example of the growing spirit of fraternizing between the two branches of the Dunkers occurred in Ashland, Ohio, on last Sunday, April 10th, when Brother Dyoil Belote, pastor of the Brethren church and Brother J. Perry Prather, pastor of the Church of the Brethren, exchanged pulpits for the morning service. The Brethren people enjoyed the helpful message and the spirit of fellowship brought by Brother Prather and we are informed that the Church of the Brethren people similarly enjoyed Brother Belote's appearance in their pulpit.

We have a good report from the Second church of Long Beach, California, where Brother John Leinhardt is the faithful pastor and preacher of the Word, and who is entering upon his sixth year of service there. During the year of 1931 fifty-one persons were baptized, and a total of thirty-eight souls were added to the church, three of this number coming by letter. The average Sunday school attendance for the year was 380 and the banner attendance was 496. This is a splendid record for a church so young, and would indicate a bright future in store for it.

The fourth of the series of lectures by leading Brethren ministers before the Seminary faculty and students, and open to members of the local church also, was delivered by Brother R. Paul Miller in the Ashland church on April 6th. The editor did not have the privilege of hearing the lecture which dealt with the principles of soul winning, a discussion of which the lecturer was peculiarly fitted to make. According to one who was there and well able to judge, he dealt with his subject in a thorough and effective manner and left his hearers with not only a sense of the great need, but also a deepened desire and a new sense of equipment for soul winning.

It is rather unusual to find a church going strong on finances during these times. Most of them are going behind or having a most strenuous battle to keep their heads above water. We were interested, therefore, to note in a mimeographed financial report of the Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, church, of which Brother W. H. Schaffer is pastor, that the quarter beginning with January 1st was closed with a neat balance on hand, after all the regular expenses for that quarter had been paid. Two things are worthy of note at this place: first, the pastor has been stressing stewardship and tithing and, second, every general interest of the church, including offerings for said interests, and subscriptions to The Evangelist, have been given proper emphasis.

The First church of Philadelphia had a very successful pre-Easter revival under the leadership of its pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmell. It began, as most of our successful revivals have begun, with intensive prayer, in which the members freely engaged, and some proved their earnestness by fasting. Quite often in undertakings of prayer and soul-winning the men are very much in the minority, but in this campaign it was not so, in fact on several occasions it is said that the men outnumbered the women. It is reported that sixty-three souls came forward during these meetings, most of them to confess Christ for the first time, some for reconsecration and some were young people dedicating their lives to definite Christian service. We are told that this congregation made an Easter offering to foreign missions of $2,800, of that amount $2,100 being cash.

Our church at Dayton, Ohio, is rejoicing in a successful evangelistic campaign recently closed under the leadership of their pastor, Brother R. D. Barnard. It was brought to a climax on Easter with the church being strengthened by sixty-three additions to its membership, fifty-six coming by confession of faith and seven by rededication. The pastor's sermons through the two weeks seem to have been a series of expositions covering the Gospel of John, and the members were urged to read that Gospel during the meeting, and it is recorded that forty-seven succeeded in completing the book in that time. The pastor was given splendid cooperation on the part of choir director Kline, the choirs and by personal workers. It is that kind of a church—where all are doing their part and giving cooperation by prayer and effort, that God blesses with victory and causes them to rejoice in the leadership he has given them.

Aside from the Easter offering reports from the First church of Long Beach and the First church of Philadelphia, both of which are mentioned elsewhere in these columns, there is further encouragement from the information received from Prof. McClain, secretary of the Foreign Board, that the Washington, D. C., church made the largest offering to foreign missions in its history, and this notwithstanding the large offering recently made by that church to its own church building fund, and the further fact that Easter was a rainy day and consequently the attendance of many was hindered. There will be some churches where financial conditions are in such a plight that retrenchment can scarcely be avoided, but from a goodly number of churches we have learned of increases over last year.

The First church of Long Beach, California, has experienced a great revival and ingathering of souls as a result of a campaign conducted by their pastor, Dr. L. S. Bauman, and assisted by Walter MacDonald, song leader and personal worker. Our correspondent writes: "The result was 197 precious souls confessing Christ as their Savior, while eleven Christians also came forward to unite with the church." At his writing eighty-seven had been baptized and all but three united with the church. Of the number confessing Christ 160 came from the Bible school. The "Seventy" by their visitation and the Bible school teachers by their interviewing of the scholars made no small contribution to the success of the meetings. Easter was not only the climax of the evangelistic campaign, but was the time of a banner Sunday school attendance of 1198, according to Brother Bauman's report in his weekly calendar, and a foreign mission offering of $5,380.21, of which $4,675.21 was cash. The Sunday school had a large part in making that splendid contribution. We notice by the calendar that the superintendent of the school, Brother A. H. Kent, has the goal of attendance set at 1,500 and he is confident they will reach their goal soon.

The Place that the Holy Spirit Should Have in the Christian's Life

By H. M. Oberholtzer

The Scriptures clearly teach that the Holy Spirit should have a very large and prominent place in the life of each Christian. He is not a mere influence emanating from God, but he is the third person of the Holy Trinity, sharing with God the Father, and God the Son, their deity. Sent by the Son and proceeding from the Father, he has been commissioned to abide in the hearts of all true believers in Christ, regenerating and sanctifying them and directing them in the way of truth and of obedience to the will of God. He is therefore an important personality for this present dispensation of God's grace.

I do not believe in fanaticism nor in the ecstasy and superficial demonstrations that are sometimes considered the operations of the Spirit; but I am inclined to think that we, of the Brethren church, have not given as much consideration as we should to the place and power of the Holy Spirit in our lives. In recent years we have begun to recognize him in a larger way, but we have only begun. Why should not the Brethren give special recognition to the Holy Spirit, and why should not his power and influence be manifest in a very pronounced way in the lives of all our members? Have we not been baptized in the name of the Holy Spirit in a very definite manner, even as we have been baptized in the name of the Father and of the Son? And, have we not had hands laid on us as a symbol of the gift of the Holy Spirit? Yet it seems that some other groups of believers, who do not give formal recognition to the Holy Spirit, do, nevertheless, place more emphasis than we do upon the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the lives and activities of believers. True it is that Christ should have the preeminence. The Holy Spirit will help us give it to him. Jesus said, "He (the Holy Spirit) shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you" (John 16:14). Yet, we should not fail to give due recognition to the Holy Spirit and to give him the large place he should occupy in our lives. The New Testament brethren were filled with the Holy Spirit, walked in the Holy Spirit, wrought in the Spirit, preached in the power of the Spirit, were guided by the Spirit, were kept by the Spirit, prayed in the Spirit and sang in the Spirit. The Spirit talked with them and told them what to do and what not to do. We claim to be a whole gospel people. Are we living and working in the Spirit as we should? With some the presence of the Spirit is not very noticeable. The fruits of the Spirit are not very prolific in their lives.

We have been accused of being too much given to formalism, but we have only the New Testament formalism, and such formalism was no hindrance to the early church. Strict obedience to the commands of Jesus and to the ordinances of the church should yield the most spiritual lives, unless we are only outwardly obedient.

However, there seems to be a danger that we become content with our outward obedience and fail to obey from the heart as the Spirit directs.

Why does not the Holy Spirit have a larger place in our lives and in the work and worship of our churches? Why are we not more intimately related to him and associated with him? Why are we not more earnestly seeking his help and guidance? Perhaps it is largely because of the lack of teaching. Our teaching concerning the Holy Spirit and his work has lacked the proper emphasis. People now as well as of old "are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Much depends upon the pastors and other leaders. We need Spirit-filled pastors and leaders. Just here a great responsibility rests upon our college and seminary.

I would that above all else Ashland College and Seminary should be a real center of spiritual power.

A wonderful transformation begins when a sinner is converted. "Old things are passed away, all things become new." Sin and Satan have been renounced. Evil habits sometimes of long standing are given up. A rebellious will has been surrendered. What if the house that is swept and garnished remains empty? Jesus gave the answer. The Holy Spirit stands ready to enter and occupy. Let him be received and recognized. He should be received by faith, even as the Father and the Son. Let the pastor explain the relation of the Holy Spirit to the convert as it is symbolized in the baptism and the laying on of hands. Let him urge that the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit be recognized and that his direction and help be sought at all times. This is very important. Mere human efforts are weak and ineffective and often disastrous. Nothing spiritual can be attained or accomplished without the aid of the Holy Spirit.

In Acts 2:4 we read "And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit." They were filled. They were not merely blessed with some manifestation of the Holy Spirit. They were possessed and filled with the divine personality. It was more than a new experience. They were indwelt. Notice also that they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, not only the Apostles, but the entire company of the disciples. This suggests the large place the Holy Spirit should have in the church. Every member should be filled with the Holy Spirit. What purity and power would then be realized! What conviction would take hold upon sinners! Let us pray and strive for such attainment.

When the seven were chosen to look after the widows (and perhaps others) in the daily ministrations, Peter urged that they select men "full of the Holy Spirit," which they proceeded to do. Among the number selected was Stephen who was said to be "full of faith and of the Holy Spirit." Further on we read that he was "full of grace and power and wrought great wonders and signs

COME, HOLY SPIRIT

*Spirit divine, attend our pray'r,
And make our hearts Thy home;
Descend with all Thy gracious pow'r;
Come, Holy Spirit, come.*

*Come as the light; to waiting minds,
That long the truth to know,
Reveal the narrow path of right,
The way of duty show.*

*Come as the fire; enkindle now
The sacrificial flame,
That all our souls an off'ring be
To love's redeeming name.*

*Come as the dew; on hearts that pine
Descend in this still hour,
Till every barren place shall own
With joy Thy quickening power.*

*Come as the wind; sweep clean away
What dead within us lies,
And search and freshen all our souls
With living energies.*

—Andrew Reed and Samuel Longfellow.

among the people." Evidently to be "filled with the Holy Spirit" meant to be "filled with grace and power."

But God has meant that we should be even more than filled with the Holy Spirit. He expects us to overflow with spiritual power until the lives of those about us are touched and blessed. This is suggested by the statement of Jesus, "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his innermost being shall flow rivers of living water," and John explains, "this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive" (John 7:38).

Much more might be said on this subject, but this article must not become too lengthy. As you read the New Testament note how often you find the words "full of the Holy Spirit" and "filled with the Holy Spirit." It is purposed that believers be indwelt by the Holy Spirit. Jesus said, "I will pray the Father, and he will give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." (John 14:16). He does not come and go, but comes to abide. We need him constantly. See also Rom. 8:9-11 and 1 Cor. 6:19.

Seminary or the Holy Spirit

By Floyd Taber

Joshua said to the captain of the Lord's host, "Art thou for us or for our adversaries?" The answer came back, "Nay." God is never limited by our little dilemmas. We say, "It must be this, or that." God says, "It is neither—or both." We can see only one side of a question; He sees all sides. Our views are partial; his is complete.

Which should be required for ordination to the ministry, a college and seminary education, or a knowledge of the Bible? The power of psychology, or the power of the Holy Spirit? The answer is obvious: Both. Not only are both essential, but each reacts favorably on the other.

A seminary education certainly should, and in our seminary does, contribute largely to the knowledge of the Bible. And on the other hand, the student who enters college with a good basic knowledge of the Bible already acquired, not only does not waste his time in school, but is able to profit by his college and seminary course much more than other students.

The minister who is a master of the laws of practical psychology can be more fully empowered and used by the Holy Spirit than the one who ignores them. And inversely, the uneducated young man who is called and filled by the Holy Spirit will get an education; in college and seminary if circumstances permit; but whatever the circumstances, he will become educated if he is to be used.

But if the relation between these two factors is so intimate and so necessary, why do some of our perfectly sincere and most well-intentioned Brethren earnestly object to an educational requirement for ordination? Because they are afraid education may be over-emphasized and crowd out the work of the Holy Spirit.

This danger, which I recognize is very real, might take on three forms. First, failure to ordain men who were really called by the Holy Spirit, but who had not received their education in the regularly approved way. Second, the ordination of men who had chosen the ministry as a profession, without being definitely called by the Holy Spirit, simply because they fulfilled the educational requirements. Third, some ministers, even those who had originally received a genuine call, might gradually lose sight of their complete dependence on the Holy Spirit, placing confidence in their education.

Since eating carries with it many excesses and abuses, and since "man shall not live by bread alone", shall we all stop eating? It would be rather dangerous to our future efficiency in Christian work, to say the least! The reasonable thing is to continue eating, but to be ceaselessly on our guard against the possible evils that accompany it.

The better a thing is, the greater the evil that results from its abuse. Education is an excellent thing for the minister—the more of it required, the better. So instead of fighting for or against educational requirements, let us unite in fighting with all our force against the dangers that may accompany them.

The Literary Digest's Latest "Straw" Vote An Editorial in "The Christian Conservator"

In answer to a large number of inquiries from many parts of the country, the following is submitted with reference to this so-called "poll of 20,000,000 American 'citizens'" on the twin questions:

"Do you favor the continuance of the Eighteenth (Prohibition) Amendment?"

"Do you favor a repeal of the Eighteenth (Prohibition) Amendment?"

In the light of the first thirty days of its progress these facts may be noted:

1. The only demand for such a referendum has come from the "wets." Every "wet" organization and every organization whose convention could be influenced by the "wets" to adopt such a resolution, have been clamoring for "referendums." The great mass of the people are not interested in it. None of the great church bodies have asked for it nor have such organizations as the Federation of Women's Clubs, 3,000,000 strong, the National Education Association with 600,000 educators, the Parent Teachers' movements throughout the country, nor any of the great civic or industrial groups. On the contrary, the Association Against Prohibition Amendment and allied organizations have spent thousands of dollars in trying to provoke and promote such ballots, official or otherwise.

2. The Literary Digest has absolutely no authorization nor political right to undertake such a "national" vote. In fact, it is an attempt to prejudge the voice of the American people in the submission of certain questions imposed upon them without permitting them any chance to decide the form or text of the questions submitted.

3. Appraisal of the questions submitted on the "straw" ballot reveals several extraordinary things. (a) The first question "Do you favor the continuance of the Eighteenth Amendment?"—is so phrased by the use of the definite article "the" as to imply that an affirmative vote would mean support of Prohibition "as is," with all of its present big city handicaps, its "wet" nullification and its lack of adequate state cooperation in many parts of the country. (b) By some curious happen-chance the second question reads, "Do you favor a repeal of the Eighteenth (Prohibition) Amendment?" Why "the" in the first instance and merely the indefinite "a" in the second? The clear implication is that a vote for the second question includes a thousand shades and varieties of modification, including any proposal to change conditions as they are, or at least as the "wets" profess they are.

4. By the phrasing adopted in these ballots, at least 90 per cent of those receiving them will be unable to fairly express their thought and conviction, simply because the wording treats the question as purely theoretical and static, and completely ignores the far more vital question at issue, namely that of adequate support for law observance or preference for nullification. A fairer phrasing of these questions would be: "Do you favor a more efficient and well sustained movement to establish the principle and purposes of National Prohibition?" or "Do you favor re-legalizing of the liquor traffic under any method of license and Government protection?"

It goes without saying that the "wets" would overwhelmingly oppose the submission of such referendum, either in a private or public poll.

5. The Literary Digest "poll" instead of being conducted as a purely disinterested public effort, is being carried on simply as a circulation and advertising scheme, the ballot in every case being printed upon the same sheet with the trial order blank, each recipient being asked to tear off and return separately.

6. Coming now to the actual polls, the first week's announcements published in the Digest of February 20, is startling in its evidence of favoritism for the "wet" side. Let it be understood there was no necessity on the part of the publication to send these first ballots to any particular section, BUT, as a matter of fact, the Digest chose to load down these first two weeks' returns with votes from the wettest state in the Union, which totaled exactly 79.9 per cent of the aggregate from all states reported which were eight in number!

The states listed in the first tabulation included the outstanding "wet" cities of New York, Chicago, Buffalo, Baltimore, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Atlanta, Richmond and Indianapolis.

No wonder with such an initial dead weight of densely "wet" support, the poll started out with an overwhelmingly "wet" majority, so great as to discourage if not disgust every friend of the Eighteenth Amendment from Maine to California.

7. The publishers of the Literary Digest show themselves to be as thoroughly versed and adept in the use of the psychological hocus-pocus as their ardent well-wishers, the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment. There may, indeed, be no relation whatever between them, and yet the deadly parallel of similar methods to promote a particular impression hostile to the Eighteenth Amendment is amazing beyond all ordinary explanation.

8. The Literary Digest is too well acquainted with the press of America to be ignorant of the way in which its totally one-sided poll announcements would be played up and "interpreted" in the columns of the leading metropolitan "wet" newspapers. Editorials in these papers of great circulation, emphasizing the preponderant "wet" vote, reported in the Digest, are now spreading to the ends of the land the predictions, easy to make and undoubtedly correct, that the results of this "vote" will be a "wet" victory, but every editorial tactic revealed by the Digest, from the start of the "ballot war," as they call it, has afforded comfort and delight to those who are engaged in belittling and attempting to destroy the Eighteenth Amendment.

9. One or two other curious facts are already cropping out. One, which is certainly significant, is that city voters are undoubtedly predominant in these early returns and they have a home and office address in the telephone book.

In thousands of cases, friends of Prohibition in the country districts will thus be placed at a disadvantage because of the fact that they have no city office address, but merely a home telephone number.

In thousands of cases, due to world wide depression, which is in no way related to prohibition, ardent supporters of the Eighteenth Amendment will receive no ballots whatever, if the Digest, as we understand, is relying to a large extent, on the telephone book names for their distribution of the ballots.

One other discrimination, which is inevitable in any poll based to a large extent, upon telephone subscribers, is the predominance of men over women who will naturally receive ballots in such a poll.

It must not be forgotten that the Literary Digest's "poll" has been highly publicized in the "wet" press. Every "wet" voted is on the qui vive to register his hostility to the Eighteenth Amendment, while those favoring prohibition may be pardoned for not being very much excited over this extra government referendum.

Therefore, summed up, the Literary Digest "poll" is chiefly a splendid and hilarious opportunity for the "wets" to make a "showing", pile up imaginary majorities and try to exert in approved mesmeric style a psychological influence through their widely circulated mediums advocating the restoration of booze.

To quote the words of a prominent editor, who last week dissected the Digest "poll":—"Great is ballyhoo, and the Literary Digest is its prophet. . . . As a pose of public service, the straw vote is unnecessary, misleading and ridiculous."

The First Task of the Church and of the Pulpit

tian experience and of the passionate desire of his heart, is thus quoted by Bishop Welsh: "I want to preach a gospel that can transform men, and not simply help them. The gospel of Jesus Christ did that for me, and I want to prove that it can do that for others." That is an inspiring and heart-searching testimony. Surely such pastors are greatly needed in our time. There is little wonder that multitudes have grown sick and tired of the anaemic and enervating messages which come from some pulpits, setting forth a sort of "salvation by sanitation," a religion which is little more than a by-product, or a species of window-dressing for a series of sociological, psychological, and ethical platitudes. The President of the Synod of the Mid-West struck a high note, and a true one, when he declared that the only "adequate potential" for the Church today is to be found in regenerated men and women, whose lives have been transfigured by the Spirit of God. To this we must be willing to subordinate all our programs, our machinery, our statistics; these can have value only as they grow out of the activities of transformed lives. Do we not all agree that there is vast meaning and fundamental truth in the poignant sentiment with which Dr. Stanley Jones closed his latest book. The Christ of Every Road: "WE MUST GO DEEPER BEFORE WE CAN GO FARTHER."

Before great progress can be made in the building of churches and in the strengthening of the activities of the brotherhood, the delivery of a vital message must be placed at the very center of the church's task and every pulpit must be made to resound with passion and power in its proclamation of the blessed Gospel of the Son of God.

FIRM GRIP ON MANCHURIA PLANNED

It begins to appear as if Japan had something very definite in mind in establishing a government in Manchuria under Pu-Yi, of Chinese royalty. Starting out with the announcement that the Manchurian occupation was only to protect Japanese lives and property, an ambitious plan for the colonization of Manchuria is now reported. The report is that the plans are being made by the Japanese Reservists Association, a large body of war veterans and reserve forces, who will move in themselves and dominate the situation. If the report is true and is carried out successfully, it may result in material advantage to Japan, but it will not add anything to her national honor.—The Presbyterian Advance.

"CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION" CALLED AT CAPITAL

A "Constitutional Convention" of women of every state, to meet in Washington, D. C., April 17 to 19, has been called by Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, chairman of the Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement, to celebrate the Bicentennary of George Washington, "the father of the constitution," and to discuss, in the light of his statements and warnings, the present situation as it appears to women in all political parties who are loyal to the constitution.

The Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement is an affiliation of large national organizations of women, aggregating 12,000,000 (twelve million) members, standing for "allegiance to the constitution and observance of law."

The program calls for mass meetings, addressed by eminent leaders, in the Washington Auditorium, in conjunction with the "Prohibition Fair" to be held there the week of April 17 to 23. The Prohibition Fair, under the direction of William Rufus Scott, is sponsored by the Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement.—The Baptist.

INSTITUTIONALISM AN ANCIENT EVIL

A popular "modern note" is to decry the tendency of various forms of organization to swallow up and smother the individual. Many of us assume that there is something novel in the influences which lead us to wear the same sort of clothes, eat the same foods, use the same toothpaste and think the same thoughts: Yet in many ways this is merely a harking back to a primitive way of life. Read what an American Board missionary writes from East Africa: "When it comes to the native church, I often fear that the institution is likely to so swallow up the individual that little real life remains. The African puts the tribe first, the community far ahead of the individual, while the family has great power over all of its members. Often it is hard to keep a living fire burning in the church." The struggle between the individual and the group is as old as man. Our faith sets a high value upon personality, and yet the corporate life always tends to dominate its members. We need both institutions and rebels—and probably society will prosper in proportion as they struggle against each other.—The Congregationalist.

HYKSOS PALACE UNEARTHED IN PALESTINE

A London news report March 7 states that the palace fortress of the Shepherd Kings of Palestine has been discovered by Sir Flinders Petrie, the archeologist, at Tell Ajjul, in South Palestine, according to a letter received by Sir Charles Marston from the discoverer.

"Next to the fortress" Sir Charles said, "is another building which, probably, was their temple. The site has been compared to that of Pompeii, from the fact that the city was only partially destroyed. We know that many houses were three stories high and there is sufficient evidence now available that the city was flourishing when the Egyptians, after the death of Joseph, were oppressing the Israelites."

It is believed by historians that the Hyksos, or shepherd kings, ruled Palestine more than 100 centuries ago. They were the earliest invaders of Egypt, according to discoveries made by Sir Flinders Petrie, the seventy-eight-year-old British archeologist, who transferred his investigations from Egypt to Palestine to seek the origins of this ancient civilization. Tell Ajjul, center of this culture, was twenty times larger than ancient Troy, he found. Two weeks ago Sir Flinders announced that he had traced the advent of the horse to Palestine more than 4,000 years ago.

These horsemen, the "shepherd kings," invaded the delta of the Nile from Palestine, he said, and split up the Egyptian state into two kingdoms, Memphis and Edfu. At Gaza, near the great pyramids, relics of these horse-riding kings have been discovered during the last six years by the British School of Archeology in Egypt, which Sir Flinders founded twenty-six years ago.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

JAPAN'S FRIENDLY WAR

Japan's little friendly war in the Shanghai area cost the Chinese 8,080 lives and $400,000,000 in property loss, according to Wu-Tachun, chief of the Chinese Department of Statistics. His figures showed that 2,000 Chinese had been wounded and 10,400 were missing. Persons directly affected by the warfare were numbered at 814,084, or 45 per cent of the total Chinese population of Shanghai, while the area occupied by the Japanese forces was estimated at 182 square miles. Ten universities and 222 other schools were forced to close, affecting 39,000 students. The value of school property destroyed was placed at more than $3,000,000. It is estimated that 250,000 persons have been thrown out of employment. But Japan says she was not at war with China at all!—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

SPAIN'S CHILDREN GET ATTENTION

Republican Spain has been giving some attention to the nation's children and finds much requiring correction. The death-rate among infants is abnormally high, that for those under a year old being 115 per thousand, while that in other countries rarely exceeds 70. It has been unofficially estimated that child beggars in Madrid alone exceed 1,000, while other large cities are thought to be no better. The government is embarking on a five-year plan to abolish illiteracy, reduce infant mortality and to save the youth of the nation from vagrancy. Since the establishment of the republic the number of primary and secondary schools has been increased by 7,000, and the plan is to add 5,000 or more annually until the new schools number more than 27,000. It looks as if the Spanish Republic were making a good beginning.—The Presbyterian Advance.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Outstanding Texts of the Bible

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

1 Cor. 1:21: "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Moffat gives us this version: "For when the world with all its wisdom failed to know God in his wisdom, God resolved to save believers by the 'sheer folly' of the Christian message."

What's that? "Save believers"? Watch out, Paul, or even the "fundamentalists" will laugh at such teaching. Fundamentalists have gotten so fundamental that believers simply can't be lost! The message of Jesus through John the Revelator as recorded in Revelations 2 and 3, to the seven churches of Asia, were wasted effort according to such theories. Lying a little, stealing a little, murdering one or two, does not amount to much according to a lot of people, if one is a sincere believer. It's a very pretty theory which gets men saved "the moment they believe", and keeps them saved in spite of their deviltry. But the Book which I have been taught to respect tells about people who "found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears" (Heb. 12: 17). John means something by this: "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it" (1 John 5:16). There are some conditions which prayer can not change.

But I did not intend to say this, however much it needs to be said. I set myself to the task to say, preach, we must. God hath ordered that nothing can take the place of the Gospel Sermon. It is God's way of making his conditions known by which men who heed can be brought to himself. But some of our best preaching, and best sermons are not heard from the pulpit. There is (1) the sermon of the good life; (2) the sermon of the dollar; (3) the sermon of the Word—that which Paul instructed Timothy to preach.

The sermon of the good life was uppermost in the mind of God when he said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Far better a good sermon in the LIFE OF THE PREACHER, rather than a brilliant one in the pulpit on Sunday to be broken down on Monday by a crooked life that brings reproach on the church. The logic of the sermon from the pulpit may be answered by the critic; but the sermon of the good life cannot be refuted. Likewise, you can break down the "society church", but you can not answer nor break down the church of clean and God-like living. A good house-cleaning of society-belles, and church-bosses would return much of the lost power now sought as an answer to prayer. Most churches need greater sermons from the pulpit but far more do they need the uplift of the sermon of the clean life from hundreds of our big hearted laymen as they go in and out among men.

Then there is the sermon of the dollar. And the dollar can preach a sermon of surpassing power. The cry of setting our hoarded dollars to work ought to go farther than try to cope with industrial problems. More dollars ought to be set preaching. If I can not go to church-houses with closed doors, my dollar can. If I can not cross the ocean, my dollar can. If I can not go to the needy fields in Kentucky, my dollar can. If I can not learn the language of the heathen in their jungles, my dollar can speak any language without delay. And who can argue against the sermons which our dollars can preach, when once we give them over to the task? Start them rolling, and ringing for God.

Also, there is the sermon of the Word. "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, with all long-suffering and doctrine" (2 Tim. 4:2). Some men are so wise in their own estimation, at least, as to declare that they know better; that doctrine is not needed. So they go on preaching their own—human opinions. Once upon a time I saw this motto in a church house: "God's Word on any subject is the end of all controversy." And from about 1882 until this very hour the vital question with a few people is, "What does the Word declare?" Mere opinions have been the bone of contention among Brethren for many, many years. More time and energy has been spent to sustain some of these speculative opinions, with its consequent bitterness, than has been given to the sermon of the Word. The peace and prosperity of any group of people depends upon keeping on the main track, and avoiding speculative questions. Why not read our orders: "Preach the Word."

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Joshua

Joshua, the son of Nun, like Booker T. Washington, came "up from slavery." Both boys were acquainted with the anxieties and torturous hardships of serfdom. The former was a military leader, while the latter was an educator. Each, in his day, became famous and added everlasting glory to the achievements of time.

The land into which Joshua led the Israelites was Canaan. It was named after Canaan, the fourth son of Ham, and father of "Sidon his first born, and Heth, and the Jebusite, and the Amorite, and the Girgassite, and the Hivite, and the Akrite, and the Sinite, and the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite." Gen. 10: 6, 15-18.

The civilization of the peoples of Canaan was of high order. They were merchantmen. They were powerful in war and dwelt within fenced cities and drove iron chariots. They were noted for their great energy and general industriousness. Josh. 17:16, 19; Deut. 6:10, 11. Furthermore, they were superstitious and Baal-worshippers. Ashtaroth engaged their attention. Degrading vices everywhere abounded. No wonder the God of Joshua thrust into this harvest field of wickedness his sickle. Gen. 15:16.

I have wondered often whether our fathers did themselves full justice in singing the sweet music of "On Jordan's Stormy Banks." The arrangement by R. M. McIntosh is excellent, and the poem by Samuel Stennett is well written, but is it biblical? If so, in what sense? I quote the first stanza. Read it carefully in light of the above lines.

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wistful eye
To Canaan's fair and happy land
Where my possessions lie."

When this hymn is made a type of heaven, it is weak. Canaan was to the Jew a place of conflict. It was also a place of victory and power, of divine blessing and comfort. Remember the inhabitants and battles of that land when you sing it again! It will transform your former notion of

"I am bound for the promised land,
O who will come and go with me?"

After all, there is a twentieth century parallel to this ancient scene. The modern educated Christian believer has his land of Canaan too. He, being a theist, is forced to dwell with some biologists, psychologists, and sociologists whose views of life are quite akin to the tenets of the ancient pagans. What a hard-headed and hard-hearted lot they are—these materialists, mechanists, "naturalists", atheists, and what not! They worship at the shrines of Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, and Haeckel. The earnest Christian must make war with them; he cannot compromise. He realizes full well what is meant by the phrase, "Jehovah is a man of war." Certainly he is! God will use his own in battle against personal, social, civic, and national sin. God will make it perfectly possible for "the just to live by faith." And, what is more, the book of Joshua proves it.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE BOOK

1. Author. Joshua.
2. When and where written. 1425 B. C. Palestine.
3. To whom addressed. Israel.
4. Occasion. The entrance of Canaan.
5. Authenticity. Real History.

II. THE OUTLINE OF THE BOOK

1. The Conquest of Canaan. Josh 1-12.
2. The Distribution of Canaan. Josh. 13-22.
3. The Farewell Address and Death of Joshua. Josh. 23-24.

III. THE SCOPE OF THE BOOK

The writing covers the period between the death of Moses and the death of Joshua. It is a historical narrative of the main events of the life and labors of Joshua and his people.

IV. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE BOOK

1. Key Words. (1) Courage. (2) Possession. (3) Victory.
2. Key Verses. Josh. 1:2, 3; 1:8, 9; 24:15.
3. Key Chapters. Josh. 1 and 24.
4. Key Events. Passage of Jordan; Jericho Captured; Canaanites Exterminated; Defeat at Ai (Achan); Battle of Beth-horon and the Miracle of the Prolonged Light; Partition of Land; Joshua's Farewell.

V. THE VALUE OF THE BOOK

The book of Joshua justifies the slaughter of the Canaanites. They were land-grabbers to begin with; were on probation for nearly four hundred years; were moral lepers; were worshippers of heathen gods; and were destroyed because their sins found them out. Joshua was in much the same position as was Oliver Cromwell in Ireland. Hear the biting Carlyle utter these famous words concerning the great liberator of England and his case: "An armed soldier, solemnly conscious to himself that he is the soldier of God the Just—a consciousness which it well becometh all soldiers and all men to have always—armed soldier, terrible as death, relentless as doom; doing God's judgments on the enemies of God! It is a phenomenon not of joyful nature; no, but of awful, to be looked at with pious terror and awe."

VI. THE CHRIST OF THE BOOK

Joshua means Jehovah-Saviour. He is a type of our Great Captain and Deliverer: Christ. Dr. Scofield has these important comparisons:

- "(1) He comes after Moses. See John 1:17; Heb. 2:10; 7:18, 19; Gal. 3:23-25; Rom. 10:4.
- "(2) He leads to victory. 2 Cor. 1:10; 2:14; 1 Thess. 1:10; 2 Tim. 4:17; Rom. 8:37.
- "(3) He is our advocate when we have suffered defeat. Josh 7:5-9; 1 John 2:1."

VII. THE LESSONS OF THE BOOK

1. Judgment. Consider also Sodom, Ninevah, Babylon; Rome.
2. Courage. Joshua was a brave general. His fidelity, trust, obedience, and service are remarkable in their pattern. There are no black spots on his escutcheon.
3. Rachab. By faith this harlot "perished not." Heb. 11:30-31.
4. Achan. As he lived, so he perished.
5. Victory. Joshua is the Epheseans of the Old Testament: the forces of faith will conquer the forces of darkness. They are as far apart as heaven and hell, and yet in eternal conflict.

Departmental Divisions

By Mrs. W. G. Hall, Elkhart, Indiana

Much has been said along this line of work, but each time we meet in a conference of this kind, we are able to gain some new ideas and, perhaps in my humble way, I may be able to drop a few words that may be used as a help. Only as we let God lead us can we succeed in this great work. I count it a great privilege to be able to help do my bit in Sunday school work. My work is with the children.

FIRST I will give some ideals for graded work, realizing that local conditions will determine how much we can use. To have separate class rooms is one ideal, or at least rooms for departmental programs, then the songs and devotions can be suited to each age.

Another ideal is Trained CHRISTIAN teachers in love with their work. The teacher is the most important person in the Sunday school, and their purpose is to make Christians. They should be regular in attendance at all services.

Every Bible school is in a sense graded or, more properly, the classes are grouped for convenience in teaching. In grading the school must be divided into departments and grades. The departments are Primary, Junior, Intermediate, and Senior or Adult.

The Primary Department consists of all children under nine years of age, divided as follows: "Cradle Roll" (from birth till three years); "Beginners" (three to six years); "Primary" (six to nine years).

The Junior Department is composed of children from nine to twelve years of age, in which will be found three grades.

The Intermediate Department is composed of persons from twelve to sixteen years, having four grades.

The Senior Department is composed of those who are sixteen years old and above.

The Adult Department consists of those who range from the ages of twenty-four and above, with the regular organized adult classes.

The Home Department is composed of those who cannot attend the regular sessions of the school.

It will be seen from these classifications that the graded Bible school fits the Bible to the scholar as he develops from year to year; it also fits the teacher to the scholar. Some teachers are adapted to children, others to adults. The presentation of the lesson to children is much different than to adults, hence, in the graded school the lessons can be adapted to the different ages.

Another ideal is to have furniture and equipment in the class rooms to suit the size and age of scholars and also plenty of light and ventilation. But having all this, we must have wide awake workers or it will not succeed. Set your standard high. Don't be satisfied with an ordinary school, aim to make it a model school. Make it the best in number, excel in efficiency, have the best equipment possible, train your teachers. Hold before your school the success of others and try to inspire your pupils to do the best they can.

Graded lessons, graded classes and teachers who strive to be specialists make it possible to teach in a wonderful way. There are many schools using the International Sunday school lessons. Some use this for classes above the Junior Department. One consideration should be "How may the members of a school receive the most benefit?" This will help determine the method of grading. It must not be forgotten there are exceptions to all rules.

The aim of a graded Sunday school is to lead every scholar, in each year of his life, through the instruction and self-expression that fits his needs for that year. A small school needs its work graded as well as a large school, although it will no doubt be in a different way. Large numbers are using graded lessons without even a screen to divide the classes. The Sunday school teacher can do much to help the child by right suggestion and direction. The children also like to be recognized for perfect attendance and any special work they are doing. Pupils can win others to the Sunday school and increase attendance better than teachers or superintendents can.

THE ELKHART SCHOOL

I may be old-fashioned, but in many schools where the children have their own opening and closing, the older people never see the children and this has its disadvantages also. When the children meet with the main Sunday school for opening or closing, it seems to me to put life and pep in the school. I have in my department Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary and Juniors, and at the close of the lesson we take them into the auditorium for closing. From one hundred twenty to one hundred fifty children will be out and seated before the older classes get ready for closing. Many older members have told me they look forward to see those children come out and that it is the best part of Sunday school. We have our own opening, and for some time had our own dismissal, but every one seems to like the closing as a massed Sunday school better.

Our classes are mixed classes until they become Juniors. Then we divide into boys' and girls' classes. I think it best in most cases to have men teachers for boys after this age and am glad to say I am able to have young men for my classes at this time that are trying to make good. It never seems as hard to keep lady teachers.

We are not able to have separate class rooms at this time, (this is a dream when our church is completed) so we had large screens to separate our classes and they have been a big help.

For the Cradle Roll, we have a sand table and teach by object lessons. They send the babies out to us about as soon as they can walk. We have a good many under two years. If they don't learn so much, they at least learn to keep quiet and play with other children. When they are four years old, they are ready for hand work and to learn Bible stories. From this age on they have handwork to suit the different ages, along with their lessons.

PREPARATION OF THE LESSON

By Mrs. Carmon Kath, South Bend, Indiana

1. Historical Framework

When a carpenter builds a house he has before him plans showing where every beam is to go, every upright, every board. He knows the exact measurement of every room and closet, window and door and without his plans he would be lost. Sunday school teachers should imitate the carpenter. Followers of the carpenter of Nazareth. Shall we stick in our boards as they chance to come? Yet this is what we do—if we lack the historical framework of our lessons.

If in Old Testament—we should get a clear outline of history of Israel in mind and not be content with our preparation of the lesson until we have fitted it into the outline.

If New Testament, master the outline of the life of the Church and the history of the early Church and the life of Paul. Make definite where in the outline the lesson is placed.

We must know what comes before and after any Sunday school lesson. It is needed for facts and even more for atmosphere. Better make a box and it well than a house which is all bungled.

Better know a few things about the Bible and really know them than have such a confused glimmering of many things that we really know nothing at all. In your following of the Carpenter—"Be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

2. Means and tools of teachers.

A. Dictionary—A condensed library of Bible Lore—every person, town, river, mountain is described—every plant, animal and object named in the Bible has an article in the Bible Dictionary telling all we need to know about it.

Keep Dictionary beside us when we read Bible. Look up all reference we do not understand. If a place—read the section about it and find it on one of the many maps. If a person—read sketch of his life and discover when he lived and to what purpose. If the 7th month is mentioned turn to article on the year and see to which of our months it corresponds. If a shilling, a talent, or a pound, read about it in the article on money.

Read the Dictionary when not reading the Bible. Go on exploring expedition through its pages. All this takes time but so do all good things.

B. Use of Pictures—Collection of pictures relating to Bible and Bible land adds interest—prints of the grand old paintings and sculptures of Bible characters and scenes are available at a few cents apiece—invest in a few each year until the set is measurably complete.

Illustrated books on Palestine and the Bible add to library as can be afforded.

Chinese saying: "One picture is worth a thousand words."

Wild Bible picture set, 60 pictures. 90 pictures every lesson.

C. Scrap Book—In addition to pictures make a scrap book or have a series of envelopes marked with subjects.

Bible places, Old Testament Persons, Poems about Christ, Easter Poems and quotations, Christman, Love, etc.

Keep your mind open for illustrative stories. If your mind is alert you will find pointers of interest in almost any daily paper, books, lesson helps in newspapers, radios.

The alert teacher will have on hand some book giving a wide view of the Bible. A book on Bible geology, on modern discoveries in Bible lands, Bible history. Not all at once; make use of Public Library.

Teacher confronted by questions outside lesson—Must know far more than the lesson—must have mind full and running over. Must teach from an abundant reservoir—He must be like a general who has plenty of reserve troops.

Does not confuse but simplifies the more one knows about a subject the more directly he can present it.

It is impossible to know too much for effective teaching.

(Note: The above lines represent the outlined notes of the address of Mrs. Carmon Kath. They should be read as such.)

ABRAM'S GENEROSITY TO LOT

(Lesson for April 24)

Lesson Text: Gen. 13:5-15; Golden Text: Rom. 12:10.

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Abram's Generosity. Gen. 13:5-13.

Abram, being the elder, might easily have claimed his privilege and chosen the best. Also, it is more than likely that he actually had a force of servants and herdsmen enough greater than Lot's to have enforced such a claim, if he had cared to do so. It is true that it would have been poor policy for Abram and Lot, being strangers in a none too friendly land, to fight among themselves, but we believe that Abram's generous offer was not the result of a carefully schemed policy; rather, it was the expression of his truly generous nature, an example of the Christ-like spirit which Paul later put into the words of our Golden Text: "In honor preferring one another." It is as ill-advised for Christians to dispute and quarrel today before the eyes of an unfriendly world: we have more of Abram's generous spirit, in honor preferring one another.

TUESDAY

Abram's Portion. Gen. 13:14-18.

To him that hath the Spirit of God shall be given many things, but from him that hath not God's spirit shall be taken away even many of the things he thinks he has. Abram had just given Lot the more fertile country toward Sodom, but now God tells Abram the entire land shall belong to him. Since Lot had but few spiritual possessions at the time, the loss of the land would have left him poor indeed. How is it with us? Abram showed his continued faith and devotion by building another altar where he might worship God. Let us also worship him.

WEDNESDAY

Abram Rescues Lot. Gen. 14:5-16

Our "wise" choices are not always seen to be so wise in the light of experience. Lot chose the best portion, but it threw him into company with the men of Sodom, who "were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly." His companionship with these evil men cost him dear in many ways. In this case he would have undoubtedly lost much spoil to the raiding kings if Abram had not rescued him; subsequently it cost him his wife, and what it cost him spiritually cannot be estimated. Consider well whether or not the things we desire, the "wise" choices we make, might not cost us far more than they are worth. Let us remember, too, that as Christians we may play the part of Abram, and rescue those who have been taken captive by the forces of evil.

THURSDAY

David and Jonathan. 1 Sam. 20:35-42

We cannot feel that the selfish Lot appreciated the unselfish love of Abram as he should; the unselfish love and affection between David and Jonathan was mutual. What a source of strength and comfort in time of testing! "The fellowship of kindred minds is like to that above." Thank God for true friends—and let us pray that we may prove true friends to others.

FRIDAY

Serving Others. Rom. 12:9-21

There have been a few—a very few—individuals who have had the courage to live in accordance with these precepts; among the nations, none have as yet attempted to follow them. The individuals who have so lived could testify to great blessing, even as Abram; if the nations had the courage to do so, they would also find themselves greatly blessed of God. Thank God there is coming a day when one shall so rule all the nations of the earth, and the blessings of our God shall abound on every hand!

SATURDAY

Submission to Wrong. Matt. 5:38-48

This is the historical position of the Brethren, but there are too few who adhere to it today. The writer once had occasion to remind a fault-finding church member that this was God's way, and she rather sharply retorted: "It may be God's way, but it's not my way!" Not many of us are so frank, but in many cases it would be true of others as well. May we make his ways our ways in all things!

SUNDAY

Brotherly Love. Ps. 133

True unity must be mutual; nevertheless, when even one has the true spirit of brotherly love, they may dwell together in unity, even as in the case of Abram and Lot. Let us pray for unity in the home and in the church. And for the secret of unity, let us also read John 17:20-23.

A Candle Light Service

By Irene Beatty in C. E. World

The materials needed for a candle light service are one large white candle, if possible one much taller than the others, and twelve smaller candles for the twelve apostles. If desired, there may be seven of a size different from the twelve, but it is not necessary to have any for the seven churches. Then have enough of the smallest birthday candles to give one to every person in the room, and pass these out.

Have a plain candlestick for the large candle; for the next size have small squares of white cardboard, and melt a little wax to fasten the candle on. Print the names of the twelve apostles, and stick each name to a candle.

Be sure that all candles are lighted from the one representing Christ.

Have a Junior pass the large candle through the aisles when the time comes for each one to light the candle representing his life.

Have a leader, who reads the talks; a sub-leader, who reads the long passages of Scripture; and a pianist. These should have a copy of the service, so that no time is lost in looking for pages.

All the singing is by the audience.

Consecration Candle Light Service

The first stanza of "The light of the world is Jesus."

The whole world was lost in the darkness of sin;

The light of the world is Jesus;

Like sunshine at noonday his glory shone in,
The light of the world is Jesus.

Chorus

Come to the light, 'tis shining for thee;
Sweetly the light has dawned upon me;
Once I was blind, but now I can see;
The light of the world is Jesus.

Before Christ was in the world there was darkness in the world through the sin of the people. God promised the people Christ and the joy they would have when Christ should come. (Read Isa. 9:1-8.)

The third stanza of "When Love Shines In."

Darkest sorrow will grow brighter
When loves shines in,
And the heaviest burden lighter
When love shines in,
'Tis the glory that will throw
Light to show us where to go;
O, the heart shall blessing know
When love shines in.

Chorus

When love shines in,
When love shines in,
How the heart is tuned to singing,
When love shines in!
When love shines in,
When love shines in,
Joy and peace to others bringing,
When love shines in.

The prophecy as given by Zacharias was of salvation through Christ and the fulfilment of a promise to Abraham that Christ was to come through his people. (Read Luke 1:68-79).

Sing the second verse of "The light of the world is Jesus."

No darkness have we who in Jesus abide;
The light of the world is Jesus:

(Light the large candle now)

We walk in the light when we follow our Guide,
The light of the world is Jesus.

Chorus

"In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." (John 1:4, 5). Christ is the light that was promised for many generations, and he came as a shining light to the world.

Christ calls his disciples (Read Matt. 10: 2-4, and, while some one is reading the Scripture, light the twelve candles that represent the twelve apostles, and place them in a semi-circle around the large candle, placing the ones for Andrew, Simon, Peter, James, and John nearest). Christ chooses his disciples from all walks of life. His earthly career was to be brief, and it was his purpose to have the gospel preached in all the world and to every creature. Therefore it was absolutely necessary that he should attach to himself a band of disciples whom he could teach and train to be his witnesses and messengers. Accordingly, at the very opening of his ministry he invites four men to be his personal companions and attendants. They were Andrew, Simon, Peter, James, and John; and then later he called the others of the twelve mentioned.

These men went about doing good with Christ; finally Judas's light went out (blow out the candle representing Judas, and separate it from the others), and he became separated from Christ; and then he betrayed Christ, and Christ was put to death; and then we have the people continuing in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread and in prayer. The apostles were then organized, and went out preaching and organizing churches as Christ had commanded them. Later there were organized seven churches.

We have the light through Christ (John 8: 12); "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Christ is our strength (Ps. 27:1); "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

Stanzas one and four of "Stepping in the Light."

Trying to walk in the steps of the Savior,
Trying to follow our Savior and King;
Shaping our lives by his blessed example.
Happy, how happy, the songs that we bring!

Trying to walk in the steps of the Savior,
Upward, still upward, we'll follow our Guide;

When we shall see him, "the king in his beauty,"

Happy, how happy, our place at his side

Chorus

How beautiful to walk in the steps of the Savior!
Stepping in the light, stepping in the light;
How beautiful to walk in the steps of the Savior,
Led in paths of light!

We like the apostles should send out the light (Ps. 43:3); "O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles."

Sing stanzas one and two of "Sunlight."

I wandered in the shades of night
Till Jesus came to me,
And with the sunlight of his love
Bid all my darkness flee.
Though clouds may gather in the sky,
And billows round me roll,
However dark the world may be,
I've sunlight in my soul.

Chorus

Sunlight, sunlight in my soul today,
Sunlight, sunlight all along the way;
Since the Savior found me,
Took away my sin,
I have had the sunlight of his love within.

What we should do with our light. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5:16).

Sing all verses of "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning."

Brightly beams our Father's mercy
From his lighthouse ever more,
But to us he gives the keeping
Of the lights along the shore.

Dark the night of sin has settled;
Loud the angry billows roar;
Eager eyes are watching, longing,
For the lights along the shore.

Trim your feeble lamp, my brother;
Some poor sailor, tempest-tossed,
Trying now to make the harbor,
In the darkness may be lost.

Chorus

Let the lower lights be burning.
Send a gleam across the wave.
Some poor fainting, struggling seaman
You may rescue, you may save.

When we think of what Christian Endeavor stands for and what Christ expects of us as young people, what could be better than to reconsecrate ourselves to his service and renew our promise "to do whatever he would like to have me do," and to ask Christ to give us the light, that we may be able and willing to do his will? "For thou wilt light my candle; the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness" (Ps. 18:28).

Each one that is willing to renew the promise to let God be supreme in his life is to light his candle, which represents his life, from the big candle which represents Christ. (Have a Junior carry the candle to each person in the room). If some are not members of Christian Endeavor, but are members of a church, you have taken upon yourselves promises that can be renewed at this time with our Christian Endeavor promises. While we are passing the candle, let all sing the first verse of "I'll Live for Him." (At this time turn off all the lights except the candles.)

My life, my love, I give to thee,
Thou Lamb of God, who died for me;
O may I ever faithful be,
My Savior and my God.

Chorus

I'll live for him who died for me,
How happy then my life shall be!
I'll live for him who died for me,
My Savior and my God!

Let us close this service with sentence prayers, and may every one join in asking God to guide us, and thanking God for the past, and promising God that we will do our share in sending out the light, trusting in him for strength wherever he needs us, whether in our own church, home, mission field.

Benediction.

What Can Wee Black Hands Do?

By Mrs. Orville D. Jobson

(This is the third of a series of African Folk Stories, collected and selected by Sister Jobson, and published at least once a month in The Evangelist. This story is taken from "Drum Call.")

The baby had been cross most of the morning, the cows had been having a feast in the peanut patch, guests were in the house, and mother was up to her ears in work. If only Menge and Obam would come home! Oh, there's the twelve o'clock drum talking on the Mission hill; school must be out!

"Ah, Na, please look at my new book!" Menge had come home, her eyes aglow with pride and joy. "I have God's Book; I've worked for it all myself. Teacher gave it to me today and she said, I'd been faithful cutting weeds. See, she has written my name in it and a verse too."

"Can you read what it says?" "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."

"You must take good care of God's Book," mother said, "and read it every day. It contains the word of love. And now I want you to take baby sister and sing her to sleep, while I begin to get dinner. I've just come from the garden. Where's your brother?"

"Obam said he was going to the forest for fire wood after school," replied Menge, taking her lovely baby sister just six months' old, in her arms. She began to sing an African lullaby in her high pitched voice, all the while watching mother peel the bananas and put them into a black clay pot and set them over the fire on three big stones. Soon the pot was boiling merrily, the baby was asleep, and mother was busy sweeping the kitchen.

"Put the baby on the bed now. Our guests will soon be back from hunting and they'll be hungry, so you must help me grind these peanuts. They are about roasted now."

Menge was only ten, but she had learned early to sit behind the flat stone with her feet stretched out before her and with another stone round and smooth, grind peanuts or seeds for mother.

"Obam has come. See his big load of wood!" "Whew!", said big brother Obam, throwing down the load of firewood that he had carried on his head. "This is heavy! Is it enough for today and tomorrow? Tomorrow is Saturday, no school and I want to go fishing." With this speech completed, Obam flung himself down on one of the shiny bamboo pole beds—by the side of the fire.

"Was your cousin in school today? Menge?" asked mother, looking up from the fire.

"No, her mother is still sick and they say that Ze is still a child and she must carry the water and build up the fire because my aunt is all alone."

Obam sat up on his bed, as though a sudden thought had struck him. "Mother, is it next Sunday that we give our offerings in God's house?" he asked anxiously

"I think so, my son."

"And here I am without a penny. I know what I'll do. I hear that the white man wants beetles and butterflies. I am going to catch some tomorrow after I come home from fishing. Perhaps he'll buy them, then I'll have money for my offering."

"That is good", his mother said, approvingly. "A person of God must always give to the one who did so much for us."

"Yes," agreed Menge, "The Lord himself said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.' We learned that verse in Sunday school. Do you remember Obam?"

"Hurry with your peanuts, Menge. I think I hear the voices of our guests. The bananas are ready to remove from the fire."

"Here are the peanuts, mother, all nice and smooth. Now, I am going to blow the fire. And may I cook the soup?"

"Do you think you can? Well, try; but don't forget the pepper, and keep stirring. These guests are good friends of your father and we must please them."

"My soup is going to be good," remarked Menge, looking up at her brother.

"Look out!" said mother. "Watch your pot, lest it upset. You can't chase two birds at one time; one will surely escape." Just then a head appeared at the kitchen, and the children cried, "Father has come!"

"Yes, we have arrived, and not a monkey did we get. Run to the garden, Obam and cut some sugar cane!"

Father stood his crossbow by the door and proceeded to tell about their poor luck at hunting. Obam listened with eyes and mouth wide open and then ran off to cut long stalks of sugar cane as his father had directed.

"Well, have our children helped their mother today and cooked our guests plenty of good food?" asked father, glancing with pride at his young daughter still stirring the peanut soup.

"They have been good children. Ever since they came from school they have helped. Menge, you must show your father your new book. He will be pleased that you are now reading God's Word."

"Eh!" cried Father, "You're reading God's Book so soon! You have done well. Why, I was a grown man when I began to read. So many years lost! But God has given me happy ones since. You must be faithful in reading your book, and lay up its words in your heart."

"That's what Mother told me too."

"Call the guests, the food is ready. They must be hungry. Obam, take the dishes to the house, but be careful you don't spill the soup."

In Menge's and Obam's town, the big brown house stands at the end of the street. Here fathers' guests were seated on the bamboo beds made dark and shiny by the oil of many brown bodies. They were chewing on sugar cane and talking about the hunt.

"The food has come," said Father, as Obam placed the food before the guests. "Shall we not ask God to bless it? He himself has provided it for his children."

"What is Obam going to do when he is grown?" asked one of the guests

Obam glanced at his father, and then said quietly "I want to be a preacher. I decided that when our teacher spoke to us about God calling boys to preach the Good News. I know Father is glad that I've answered the call."

"You have chosen well my son He will give you strength to endure."

The guests are now ready to leave. "You are going now," asked Mother? "Remember me to my sister and your wife. Greet all the Christians. If God wills, I will see you again. Come Menge," said mother, "you shall rest now, for you have been a good little helper. Mother is glad that her daughter does not shirk the tasks that are given her. That makes both father and mother very happy, and you are letting your light shine as Jesus has told us to do."

FLORA, INDIANA

As the first year of the pastorate closes here and the second one is starting it might not be an inopportune time to stop for a look. The first year seems to have speeded by on lightened wings. This has been a time of acquaintance forming and endeavoring to plan for the greatest efficiency. There are a number of things that speak well for the work of the year that has passed. The organizations are working well, some new ones have been formed and have given a good account of themselves. The young people undertook the Pageant depicting the Brethren Progress. The Sunday night on which it was given was a rainy night and the weather not at all pleasant but the building could not accommodate the people. There was a demand that it be given again, which was done on a week night, to a good audience. In spite of more than the usual amount of sickness the Sunday school has kept up well. It was our privilege to help the Burlington Brethren out two nights in preaching for them during the week. One night was a blizzard but a good audience for the night was present. Special music was given for the Easter service. While the many details relating to the work are being planned and taken care of, the coming conference in October followed by the revival meeting are the two largest objectives in view at the present time. The work here is not at all easy, but there are a fine lot of spirit filled faithful folks whom God blesses through their sacrifice and efforts. Here as elsewhere not all have caught the vision. It is indeed encouraging to see a number of the new members actively engaged in the work. While we report nothing sensational and startling this time, we are glad to report that as a church we have many things to be thankful for. The prayers of all interested in this particular section of the great vineyard are coveted.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

DAYTON'S REVIVAL

The people of the Dayton church have had occasion to greatly rejoice over their recent revival meeting which began on Sunday, March 13th, and continued through the entire two weeks with no "nights off", and closed on Easter Sunday, March 27th.

Our pastor, Rev. Barnard, did the preaching and we should say right here that he proved himself fully equal to the task. His messages were earnest and fearless, powerful, edifying and soul stirring. They were largely expository in character, portraying the truth of God directly from the Scriptures as he preached so much of the time with the open Bible in his hand, referring to it and reading from it with the zeal and fire of his soul. We believe his manner of preaching was attractive, and is deserving of this comment for we heard many compliments about his preaching from the Bible. We have been convinced of two things especially in this revival—that it is not always necessary to hire an outside minister or an evangelist and that people are yet interested in the Bible and love to hear the Word of God preached.

One of the notable features was the splendid attendance on Saturday evenings. Some at first thought it would not be advisable to hold meetings on Saturday nights but we changed our minds after the first Saturday night service. It was both surprising and cheering to our pastor and all. All meetings were well attended and we praise the Lord for it, and especially for the continued favorable weather we had.

Our Mr. Kline, in charge of the music for the services, together with Mr. Ganster and other members of our choir, with a few special features, added much to the service. Our Junior Choir, in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kline, added much to the service. We will have more to say about the Junior Choir organization in later issues.

Another feature of interest, was dealing with questions. This was conducted in two different ways. Rev. Barnard's sermons were all based on the Gospel of St. John. He requested that the people read through this gospel, and he assigned one and two chapters for each day to be read. At each meeting, except Sunday mornings, he would ask three questions on each chapter, leaving any one or more persons to answer. At the closing service on the evening of Easter Sunday, a count of hands was taken of those, reading the book of St. John through, and forty-seven had succeeded. There may have been more than that who read it through but were not present to be counted. The other way of dealing with questions was the familiar one by the medium of the question box, the pastor giving answers from the pulpit.

A band of fifty or sixty workers remained after each service except Saturdays and Sundays, for inquiry, for information and for prayer. This proved to be very helpful and remunerative in results. We feel assured.

We have saved the best till last to tell about. There were people making the forward step at nearly every service. Many of the number were children making the good confession of their Savior for the first time. It was a blessed sight as well as impressive to see the little ones do that. We were also joyful to see parents of the children—in some cases coming out to rededicate themselves to God or to accept Christ for the first time in their lives. A few came by letter or relation.

In all there were fifty-six persons expressed their intention to unite with the church and seven persons for rededication. (On Easter Sunday morning, two babies were dedicated to the Lord. These are not counted in the above number of sixty-three as a total). We believe we have experienced "refreshing times from the presence of the Lord." We believe there will be a continuation of it and that what we have done in this effort in a rather pronounced way is just a start. We pray so. Surely we are better for the occasion in many respects and especially has our pastor endeared himself to all by his consecrated service and splendid ability. The Lord help us all, not only of Dayton but everywhere in his work.

CHURCH CORRESPONDENT.

VICTORY REVIVAL IN PHILADELPHIA

We have been noting with interest that many of our churches throughout the brotherhood have been reporting special seasons of refreshing under the title of "Victory Revival." So, we want to raise our voice in praise to God, for a glorious victory in the First Brethren church of Philadelphia.

After much consideration it was decided, that we should hold a special series of meetings for two weeks preceding Easter. On account of financial conditions and the Easter offering, our own good pastor, kindly consented to be the evangelist himself.

We began as all fruitful services must begin, with prayer.

For two weeks we held six simultaneous prayer meetings, two nights a week, in the various districts where our people reside, besides the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting at the church. We also had an all-day of prayer, at which time many of our members fasted, too. At all these meetings a deep spirit of earnestness and humility has manifested, a real spirit of unity. God graciously answered our prayers, "Exceedingly, abundantly, above all that we were able to ask or think." Our revival started on March the 13th. From the very beginning unto the end the services were largely attended, the interest was deep, the spirit of revival was present in every gathering. Another of the encouraging features of this revival was, the large number of men that took part, a real active part. In attendance they outnumbered the women several times.

The Third church also helped by a goodly delegation coming over several times. Their men's chorus sang a number of splendid selections. Then our pastor worked a surprise on us by having Brother Steffler preach for us, on one of their evenings.

We cannot give our pastor too much credit for the way he gave his very best, in every way, to make this meeting a success. He always preaches the Truth and the Word, in all its purity. But it seemed as though he spoke with a new power, with a greater force and appeal, than ever before. We wonder how any sinners could resist the claims of Christ as presented so wonderfully night after night! And still some will always resist the wooing of the Spirit.

However, there were many responses. In two weeks 63 souls stepped to the front, most of them to confess the Lord Jesus for the first time, some to renew their allegiance to him, some of our young people to lay their lives on the altar for definite service. Among the latter, were our pastor's own fine children, "Ella and Orlyn." On Good Friday we observed another day of prayer, thinking chiefly of the missionary offering!

Then on Sunday we surely had a glorious Easter, with confessions and baptisms at both services, and an offering for foreign missions that keeps us asking, "Where did it come from?" Again, God answered prayer! We had set as our goal $2500.00. We went above this, at the morning service; a combined service of church and Bible school, and money for missions is still flowing in! The missionary spirit ran high, too, because our own Brother and Sister Foster were present, and each made a touching address. Then our missionaries' children were on the platform, little Lester and Paul Kennedy, and Roger Jobson. No wonder there was sacrificial giving, with such an atmosphere! Giving, not only of money, but also of lives.

And so our hearts rejoice here in Philadelphia, in a revived church, in the salvation of souls, in dedicated lives, and in a wonderful offering for foreign missions.

"Thanks be to God, which giveth us the Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

Revival services were held at First Brethren church of Long Beach from March 8 to the 27th inclusive. Walter McDonald, song leader for Evangelist Harry Vom Bruch, had charge of the music, with James Davis at the piano. As Vom Bruch needed some rest, we were able to secure "Mac" to lead the singing, with our own Brother Bauman doing the preaching. This found us somewhat unprepared; but soon over a score of prayer meetings were being held in homes throughout the city, four days a week.

Just before the evening service another prayer meeting was held at the church. The "Seventy" Group came together, supper was served, reports were given and visitation planned. Bible school teachers were busy seeing their scholars.

The attendance was good from the beginning. The song leader is a great attraction himself. We have some fine musical talent, which he secured to help in the services. Two harps were played by Mrs. Evelyn Presnell and Miss Geraldine Judd, besides several other kinds of musical instruments by others; many uplifting choruses and gospel hymns were used.

Brother Bauman used such subjects as: "The Necessity of Publicly Confessing Christ," "Why Did Jesus Christ Suffer and Die on the Cross?," "Christian Baptism by Water, Why and How?" "Fire! Fire! Fire!" and "Prophetic Messages."

On Saturday evening testimonies from God's "Living Miracles of Grace," by converted men from Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, where "Mac" was converted and others, were a great inspiration.

Conversions and confessions occurred at nearly every service. The Song leader "Mac," is a great personal worker. After the people had accepted the invitation and had come forward, MacDonald and other workers took them apart into a room for instruction and confession of Christ. The result was 197 precious souls confessing Christ as their Savior; while eleven Christians also came forward to unite with the church. Eighty-seven have been baptized and all united with the church except three. From the Bible school one hundred and sixty accepted Christ; thirty-seven have been baptized and entered the church. We expect a good many more to be baptized, young and old. The average attendance last quarter in the Bible school was 989. Easter Sunday, the attendance was 1186. The average number of scholars brought in the autos was 328. Thirty cars are engaged in this work. "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." We rejoice in every soul saved, and especially for so many young people.

When we started here nineteen years ago, many who were children then are now workers and leaders in the church. Our prayers are that they all may grow in the grace and knowledge of the Son of God, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; be an honor to God and the Church in their life and walk; waiting always in readiness for the glorious coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

REPORT OF SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH OF NORTH LONG BEACH

This is the first time I have had the privilege to report to the Evangelist as church correspondent. I will not attempt to make a lengthy report, but will try and let you hear three or four times a year, that being the Editor's request.

Our church here is certainly holding forth the word of God in all its truths and sincerity, for our pastor Brother John Leinhardt, is a spirit filled, faithful preacher of Jesus and his Word.

The Tuesday and Friday morning prayer meetings and the Wednesday night prayer meetings explain the reason for our church going forward in a deeply spiritual way. Our pastor has begun a series of expository messages, taking for his text Epistles of John. We trust that through these messages many souls will be brought to the feet of the Lord Jesus. Our church attendance is good and we praise God for it.

Our annual meeting was held January 11th. The reports read at that meeting showed the church to be in the best working condition; our pastor being unanimously elected for another year, this making his sixth year. The Sunday school superintendent found that the year's Sunday school average attendance per Sunday during the year was 380. The largest attendance during the year was 496.

The financial report was very commendable. During the past year $200 was paid off the building fund. The Board of Deacons was found to have done much relief work. We praise the Lord that he has supplied our needs in the face of financial depression in trying times. Flourishing reports were read from the organized Sunday school classes. We have six Christian Endeavor Societies.

We enjoyed the largest attendance at our last Communion, January 22nd. There were 132 persons who took part in the service. The Lord richly blessed our gathering with a special consciousness of his presence.

On February 19th, volunteer workers met and organized an evangelistic work to be carried on once a month. These workers will go from house to house, leaving God's word in a tract form at every home, thus reaching homes where people never attend church. We have his promise, "His work shall not return empty or void."

We praise God for the souls who have been saved in our assembly and for the number added to our fellowship. During 1931 fifty-one persons were baptized. Total number admitted to the church thirty-eight—three of them by letter. The Easter offering will bring in about $300.00.

We covet the prayers of God's people that many more may come to their Savior and will "be born again." May God give us wisdom, love and strength to carry on his great work.

WHOEVER USES TOBACCO

"Cigaret consumption is rampant and colossal, and only an astronomer can give us the figures. But the time is near at hand when the women crusaders are going to assail the habit among women, and the result will not be in doubt," says the Christian Register editorially. "Fantastic it seems, but fact it will become, that tobacco will soon be fighting for its right to be a solace to human kind, as alcohol has fought and lost. The manufacturers are advertising as lavishly as the liquor people did the decade before prohibition came. They sense something. The utterly bad taste they show and the outlandish prices they pay for names and pictures of persons (many of whom never use tobacco) to hoist their brands, show their extremity even in the ensuing plenty. Medical experiment is all against the weed, as we demonstrated in the extraordinary clinical articles that were published in the Register ten years ago. The reactions in those experiments with smokers, conducted by Prof. George E. Dawson, were not violent or dangerous, as some of our readers will recall, but they were palpable and cumulative—and bad. Whoever uses tobacco habitually in any form, but especially in smoking, the clinic said, is not the same person, or as good a person as he would be, in body, mind and spirit, if he let it alone."

The world crisis is telling us not only that there must be economic justice in our own nation, just and brotherly sharing between man and man; it is telling us also that there must be just and brotherly sharing between nation and nation; there must be a fairer proportion between what we have as a people and what other peoples of the world have.—Bishop Manning.

The supervising inspector general of the Steamboat Inspection Service has announced that during the year ending in June, 1931, only one life was lost in every four million persons who have traveled safely aboard ocean-going vessels. During this same period about one thousand lives were saved by modern life-saving appliances.

CANADA RECORDS BELIEF NOTION LEGALIZED DRINK BRINGS PROSPERITY

Canada is finding a startling answer to the question, "Can a nation drink itself into prosperity?"

A study of official figures, just completed by a representative of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation of Chicago, reveals a situation that contradicts many claims recently made regarding conditions in the Domain of Uncle Sam's northern neighbor.

Attractive pictures, richly colored, have been painted by wets, both in Canada and the United States, of the enormous revenue Canada is deriving from the revived liquor traffic.

A leading recent report is headed, "Liquor Control fills Coffers of Dominion." "Much cash, many benefits reaped by Canada as result of trade."

Another article asserts:—"In these days of world-wide national deficits, when governments everywhere are resorting to new taxation to make both ends meet, it is interesting to study the revenue results being achieved in Canada through government control and the sale of liquor."

Official figures, just published, show the measure of success or failure that is attending the Dominion's "ignoble experiment."

These figures reveal that Canadian liquor receipts for 1930 total $183,656,199. This was collected from liquor purchases by the government or subsidiary agencies, under the so-called Government Control System now operating in eight provinces.

All the liquor sold, both by the Government and by private licensees, is purchased from privately owned breweries, distilleries and wineries, who are busy producing the alcoholic beverages distributed under the government system.

So far as the liquor making trade is concerned, there is no doubt of its booming prosperity.

But how this prosperity effects the people and legitimate industry is another story. The effect upon Canada's resources, produced by the government-protected liquor traffic, does not reveal factors of appreciable benefit and economic aid to business in general, at a time when there is acute need for the conserving of resources.

On the one hand is a nearly $200,000,000 liquor bill, of which the Dominion Government took $55,041,068 in excise taxes and customs duties.

On the other hand, figures show some surprising things.

Three facts from the official records show that a favorable 1929 balance in Canada's international trade of $123,216,984, was changed to an unfavorable balance, in 1930, of $103,335,512.

Bank clearings, which are a fair indication as to the volume of business, decreased from $25,077,616,842, in 1929, to $20,092,343,629, in 1930, a shrinkage of $4,985,273,213.

The people of Canada are finding out, from bitter experience, that the liquor traffic creates no wealth, that it can only act as a tax collector, and that in collecting taxes it plunders the taxpayers not only of enormous additional amounts, but of health and happiness and, too often, life itself.

If, however, through the payment of this enormous "Drink Bill" of nearly $200,000,000, Canada has secured entrance to a social paradise, from which drunkenness, bootlegging and drink-caused crime has been driven, or, if the Dominion had even secured amelioration of social conditions, it might be worth the price.

Canada, however, is consuming more liquor, is paying more for it in cash, is suffering more evils from its consumption as these selling systems develop. With the return of the Liquor Traffic there has come back the whole train of affiliated evils.

The Liquor Traffic, Canadian and foreign, is greedily grabbing and gloating, but the people of Canada are paying, drinking and suffering.

JESUS BRINGING HAPPINESS TO OTHERS

By Ruth Waymire

In the little village just outside of the great city of Jerusalem, there lived a happy family; two sisters and a brother, Martha, Mary and Lazarus. Today they were very busy for they were expecting a guest. This was a very special guest, one whom they loved very dearly. His name was Jesus, and whenever he went to Jerusalem he stopped to see them because he loved them too.

Martha was a very good cook. She had been getting a fine dinner ever since early morning and there was still lots of work to do. But when the guest had come, Mary took him into a cool corner and sat at his feet while he talked to her and told her of his Father. Martha was still very busy and finally she came to the door.

"Lord, Mary has left me alone to do the work, tell her to come and help me."

But Jesus said, "Martha, Martha, you are too anxious and careful about things. There is only one thing that is really needful, and Mary has chosen the better part."

Of course we must eat too, but Jesus wants us to learn to know about him and his word and to do the things he tells us.

One day while Jesus was away, the brother Lazarus became very sick and though they sent for Jesus, he died before he reached their home. Mary and Martha crying met him and said, "Oh, if only you had been here, our brother would not have died." But Jesus, though he was crying, too, because he loved them so much, and it pained him to see them so sad, went to the grave, which was like a cave with a stone before it, and called to Lazarus.

"Come forth", and he arose and came out, and they took off his grave clothes and took him to the house. How happy they all were, and many people believed on Jesus because of Lazarus.

After Jesus had been crucified by wicked men, his disciples were very sad because they thought they would never see him again. They forgot that he had told them he would rise from the dead. The first evening they were all in a room together, thinking and talking about what had happened, and suddenly Jesus appeared in their midst. How glad and happy they were. They crowded around him and took his hands to make sure it was really he.

One day after Jesus had left the Temple, he saw a blind man. How sorry he was for this poor man, who could not see the trees, or the grass or the blue sky, or even his own father and mother. So Jesus took some clay and softened it and laid it on the blind man's eyes, and told him to wash in the pool of Siloam, and when he had done it he could see. Wasn't he a happy man?

Another time after he had healed many people a great crowd followed him and they went to the side of a mountain and Jesus taught them, but presently it grew late and the people were hungry.

"How shall we feed so many?" he asked his disciples, but they could not tell him for they were poor and could not buy so much food.

But Peter said, "There is a little boy here who has five barley loaves and two fishes, but then that wouldn't be enough."

Then Jesus told them all to sit down in groups, and he took the boy's lunch and blessed it and gave to his disciples and they kept passing it out to the people and presently five thousand people were eating, and there was even some left over. They were all happy, and I think the little boy was the happiest of all for he helped Jesus.

Jesus always loved the children wherever he went. He would take them in his arms and bless them and all the mothers were happy when he came into their towns. Because you know, mothers are always happiest when they can bring their children to Jesus for he will always bless them and make them a blessing.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

WUNDER-MAST—On October 16th, 1931, the writer united in marriage at his residence in South Bend, Mr. Ford Wunder and Miss Helen Mast, both of Brighton, Indiana.

The bride is an accomplished musician, and is pianist of our Sunday school at Brighton. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wunder are members of our church there.

C. D. WHITMER, Pastor.

HOPKINS-DAMER—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Damer, of Brighton, the writer united in marriage their daughter, Evangeline to Mr. Richard Hopkins on January 24th.

After a beautiful dinner was served to the bridal couple and many friends, the Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins drove to Flint, Michigan, where they will make their future home.

C. D. WHITMER, Pastor.

GROVE-SEGIST—At the writer's residence at South Bend on March 12th, Mr. Delmer Grove and Miss Ruth Segist were united in marriage in the presence of their immediate relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Grove are both members of the Brighton church, and will make their home near Burr Oak, Michigan.

The bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Weldon Segist, gave a wonderful reception in honor of their daughter, Ruth. Dinner was served to about forty relatives and friends.

May the richest blessings go with Mr. and Mrs. Grove throughout their whole life.

This was a very unique happening: Mr. Grove's parents and Miss Segist's parents are Deacons and Deaconesses of the Brighton church.

C. D. WHITMER, Pastor.

CARLSON-VICKROY—Our popular Christian Endeavor and Sisterhood worker, Sister Aurelia Vickroy was wedded to Mr. Carl Carlson of New Kensington, Pa., on Saturday evening, October 31st, 1931. The ceremony was performed by the undersigned, who was the bride's pastor for many years. The wedding took place at the home of the writer, in the presence of a few friends and relatives. The bride has been a resident of Kittanning for several years and will make her home in New Kensington, Pa. Our whole brotherhood will wish this splendid consecrated woman the happiest of married lives and harbor the hope that through the coming years we may continue to have a share in her spiritual interests and the benefit of her service, as in the past. She has been a loyal and faithful worker on our National staff.

GEORGE H. JONES, Pastor 2nd Church of Johnstown.

IN THE SHADOW

HOPKINS—Sister Mrs. Maude M. Hopkins of Highland Avenue, Johnstown, Pa., and a member of the Second Brethren church, passed out of this life to her Heavenly Home, March 8th, 1932. Interment in Grandview cemetery with services conducted by her pastor, the undersigned. Our sympathies go out to the loved ones in their bereavement. Sister Hopkins had been suffering for many years and was unable to attend church or leave the home for a long time.

GEORGE H. JONES, Pastor.

STUTZMAN—Sister Leona Stutzman of Detroit, an old disciple and faithful member of the Rosedale church many years ago. She has been a resident of Detroit for the past two years, having left Johnstown after the death of her husband, Brother Jacob Stutzman, who was one of our loyal members of the old Rosedale congregation. Mrs. Stutzman's remains were brought back to Johnstown for interment in the family plot, with services conducted in the Third Brethren church, under the direction of the pastor, Brother Ginsrich and the writer. May the peace that comforts the children of God be the rich heritage of the grieving families.

GEORGE H. JONES, Pastor.

BEAM—Sara K. Beam, after a brief illness, departed from this life to be present with her Lord, February 23, 1932.

Mrs. Beam, when but a girl, united with the Brethren church at Little, Pennsylvania. She moved her membership to the Second Brethren church in Johnstown in 1907. For twenty-five years she proved her faith, loyalty and devotion by her ceaseless activities in the church. At the time of her death, Sister Beam was president of the Women's Missionary Society and a teacher in the Sunday school. In all of these years, few if any of the special programs were given without her aid in the supervision. With her the church was at its best and every phase of its interests were advanced by her talent, charm and personality.

Her home life was consistent with her church life and she was privileged to leave a Godly heritage to the husband and four children who mourn her loss.

Rev. George H. Jones, her pastor, was unable to conduct the funeral on account of sickness. The writer, a previous pastor, was assisted by Rev. Bauman of the Reformed church and pastor of Mr. Beam.

H. W. NOWAG.

MOWEN—George Henry Mowen was born March 31, 1863, at Fairview, Maryland, the eldest of five children of Daniel and Barbara Mowen. Died at Sunnyside, Washington, March 24, 1932. He was aged 68 years, 11 months, 24 days.

In 1895 he was united in marriage to Ida K. Butterbaugh. To this union were born five children, four of whom are living and make their homes in or near Sunnyside: Frank H. Mrs. Treva Ross, Ralph C. and Mrs. Edna G. With the widow and four children, eight grandchildren miss the departed, a patient and loving husband, father and grandfather.

Mr. Mowen with his wife joined the Brethren Church during their residence of twenty years at Lemark, Ill., and during the eighteen years of his life at Sunnyside, has been a faithful member of the First Brethren church here. Held in esteem by neighbors, business men, and all who knew him, he leaves behind in his sudden departure the memory of a good man, whose qualities of patience, forbearance, honesty and industry, were modeled after his Savior.

Funeral conducted from the above church by his pastor, March 26, with interment in Sunnyside Cemetery.

HAROLD D. FRY.

LAUGHLIN—Miss Anna M. Laughlin of Waynesboro, Pa., passed to the life beyond from the home of her sister, Dr. Mary A. Laughlin, Hagerstown, Md., March 7, 1932, after a long illness.

Miss Laughlin was born near Mercersburg, Pa., and attended the public schools in the neighborhood of her birthplace, after which she pursued higher education. After graduation from Juniata College she taught school for a number of years. She had taken a course in the Jefferson Medical hospital in Philadelphia. After a few years in that institution she became instructress of nurses at the hospital until her election as superintendent of the Bryn Mawr hospital. In August, 1922, she was appointed superintendent of the newly erected hospital of Waynesboro, Pa. She assumed active duty upon the opening of the hospital on October 2, 1922. Miss Laughlin served actively in that capacity until ill health forced her to resign her position.

But it was as a church worker that Miss Laughlin was best known to some of us. The years of her life were given to the service of Christ and the church. Her excellent gifts and acquired knowledge were consecrated to the cause of her Master. She excelled as a Bible teacher and adviser in the affairs of the church. She was an exemplary Christian life and as such was an inspiration and help to others. Sister Laughlin was a liberal giver locally, and to the general interests of the church. Having served well, she has purchased to herself a rich reward. She was much loved by the many who knew her, but our loss is her gain.

Sister Laughlin is survived by three brothers, three sisters, many more distant relatives and a host of friends. In addition to her being a member of the First Brethren church of Waynesboro, she was a member of the Franklin County chapter, D. A. R.; of the American Hospital Association, and of the State and National Association of Nurses.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, assisted by the pastor, Rev. F. G. Coleman. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

WHITE—Margoline Moomaw White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Moomaw, was born in Ross County, Ohio, November 28, 1843. When she was about thirty years of age she was united in marriage to Obadiah White. She died at the Brethren Home, Florida, Indiana, March 26, 1932, aged 88 years and four months. She was a member of the Maple Grove church near Eaton, Indiana, and had been an inmate of the Home for nearly four years. Services were held at the Home and burial in Maple Lawn Cemetery, near Florida. Services by the writer, FREEMAN ANKNUM.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

THE RICH YOUNG RULER QUESTIONS JESUS

And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? . . . If thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments. . . . The young man said unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.
—Matt. 19:16-22.

In these days of meditation and prayer and decision, leading up to Pentecost, will worldly possessions, or pleasures, or ambitions be allowed to separate between us and the Kingdom of God?

C. A. TINDLEY, FACING THIS QUESTION, DECLARED:

*"Nothing between my soul and the Saviour.
Naught of this world's delusive dream;
I have renounced all sinful pleasure,
Jesus is mine; there's nothing between."*

The Fire at Yalouki Station

(A Statement by the Board)

Word has reached the Board that a very severe loss has been sustained on account of fire at Yalouki Station. It was caused by fire in the grass some distance from the Mission, set by natives during a hunt; the sparks being carried by an unusually high wind and igniting the grass roofs which were dry as tinder. The natives worked courageously but were unable to control the fire. At the risk of death, they were able to save only some of the personal belongings of the missionaries. The details of the fire were given in a letter by Sister Mary Emmert which appear at the close of this statement. In the face of this distressing loss the Board requests all interested to join with us in earnest prayer; first prayer of thanksgiving that no lives were lost; and second, prayer for funds and materials to replace the losses incurred.

LOSSES incurred by the Mission and Missionaries

The fire destroyed the roofs of the buildings and also the woodwork of doors and windows. Fortunately the walls were constructed of brick, and these are yet standing. Brother Hathaway has the saw-will at work cutting the material for replacement.

The most acutely felt losses, however, involve the personal possessions of the missionaries. Before these could be removed entirely the roofs fell in, destroying everything within the walls. Such losses would be serious even in the homeland, but are doubly so in Africa where one cannot run to a store and buy what is needed.

THE Immediate Needs

First, there is special need for funds with which to replace the woodwork and roofs. If this need must be supplied out of the general mission funds, it will seriously handicap the work. The very inflammable grass roof has been used thus far for two reasons: first, because it protects the missionaries from the heat and direct rays of the equatorial sun; and second, because of the high cost of other material which would have to be imported. The Board feels, however, that fire-proof material of some sort should be placed on the roofs as soon as funds will permit, in order to eliminate the perpetual fire risk. If God should lay this great need upon the hearts of any of his people, the Board will gratefully receive gifts to this end.

But we should not forget the personal losses of the missionaries at Yalouki. The official news of the fire came to the Board during our recent meeting at Ashland, Ohio. At once it occurred to us that if the Brethren people were informed, some might be able to supply gifts of material and things to replace the losses. Therefore, Mrs. Foster volunteered to make a list of such things as could be used. It is as follows:

Table Cloths
Tea Towels
Napkins
Dress Materials, voile, prints, etc. (not less than 4 yards in a piece)
Underwear for men and women
Stockings, size 10.
Socks, size 12
Night-gowns, sizes, 38, 44
Pajamas, large size

2 sets of dishes, 100 piece (need not be new) Silverware (need not be new) Cooking Utensils, pots, pans, etc., (need not be new) Pillow Cases
Sheets, single Beds
Blankets, woolen and cotton

Unless otherwise specified, the articles and materials given should be new and in good condition. Freight is so expensive that it does not pay to send out things, partially wornout.

HOW and Where to Send Materials

Freight to Africa is notoriously slow unless sent with an outgoing missionary to keep it moving. Brother and Sister Foster are authorized to sail from this country the latter part of May, and they are to take charge of gifts of material in order to get them to the field quickly. Note carefully the following directions:

1. Ship by express or parcel post to J. H. Foster, c/o A. V. Kimmell, 2259 North Tenth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
2. All shipments must reach Philadelphia by May 10th.
3. Write a letter or card giving the name of the donor and a list of the things being sent. It would be best to write to Brother Foster immediately so that possible duplications can be avoided.

GIFTS of Money for Repairing Buildings

All gifts of money for this purpose should be sent to Louis S. Bauman, Treasurer, 1295 East Fifth Street, Long Beach, California. This method will save both time and expense, as all funds must be passed through the treasury of the Society before use. The Treasurer also knows best how to transmit money to the field with safety.

Signed,

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
J. Allen Miller, President,
Alva J. McClain, Secretary,
Louis S. Bauman, Treasurer.

(MISS EMMERT'S LETTER DESCRIBING THE YALOUKI FIRE)

Yaloke, Feb. 17, 1932.

Dear Friends:

We feel we are having a few "troublesome times" here at Yaloke lately. This time we have been tried by fire, but as yet we see no gold remaining—only brick and stone. The wood and stubble have been consumed.

Saturday afternoon about 4 o'clock the cry "Fire" rang out! The schoolhouse roof was blazing. In less than 15 minutes, the two permanent (?) dwelling houses, the kitchen, and one old mud dwelling were all on fire. The grass roofs and every bit of wood in the houses were licked up clean; and today the walls stand blackened memorials of what was once our comfortable dwelling houses and school. The newest dwelling was just completed except for several days' work. In another week, Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway would have moved into it; but now it lacks six months or more of work, and even the mud house in which they were living is gone.

This is the way it all came about. The natives set fire to a large piece of grass land at one side of the Concession in order to hunt animals. There was a terrific wind, and the fire got away from them, or else it was set also on the windward side later by some villagers. When some one noticed that the sparks were being blown closer and closer to the school house, a guard was placed on the roof to beat out any that might fall upon it, but evidently they began to fall too thick and fast. The roof was as dry as the last of a very dry season could make it, and it was a seething mass of flames with natives right on top trying to beat it out! Others had already begun to drag out the cupboards full of books, the portable blackboards etc. In 10 minutes everyone had to flee the fury of the flames.

Can you imagine our consternation when we saw the veranda roof of the new house had already caught? It was at a distance of a block away, and no one would have ever dreamed that the one building could catch fire from the other, but it was due to the fierce and extreme wind. This roof was also a mass of flames almost before one could think. We ran quickly to the remaining brick house, got people up on the roof and tried to get water to them, but in vain. One fire after another broke out, and the vast majority of natives began carrying out everything in the house. By this time, the old mud house where Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway were living, had caught fire too, so there was nothing to do but save what one could from both houses. It was one great scene of confusion. The natives worked nobly and risked their lives to save our property. When a grass roof begins to burn, it is dangerous, for the cords burn and the whole mass falls to the ground.

We feel very thankful that no one was even injured. Then too, the church and hospital were saved. They were both as close to the brush as was the school, and it is quite remarkable that they were spared. Then there were several smaller buildings that escaped destruction; a garage, a store house, a kitchen, etc., most of which had

How Increase Church Attendance

That is an old question, and one that comes to life every year. As far back as church records go ministers and other Christian leaders have been troubled with the lack of church attendance. It was not an unknown problem in Paul's day, and he gave his advice that men should not neglect "the assembling of themselves together as the manner of some is." There is much complaining about it today, and some imagine it is a modern problem, and peculiar to American Christianity. Of course it is not, for it has been present in every age and in every land, but, while misery finds some comfort in company, yet that fact does not relieve us of the stress of its seriousness nor make us less concerned about finding a solution to the problem.

Just the other day a minister was lamenting about the sparsity of attendance at the evening services of a certain church. And it seems that this church has been suffering through many years from this difficulty, and more than one minister during those years has been criticised because he has not been able to maintain a respectable attendance at the evening services. And sometimes even the morning service is said to suffer from small attendance. The name of that church is legion and its location is almost universal. It is evident that the cause is a combination of circumstances and not a single element. Consequently the solution must be sought in more than one direction.

Sometimes effort is made to increase church attendance by stressing the duty of it. Church attendance certainly is a duty, a duty that the church member owes to God, to the church, to his family and friends and to himself. The very fact of membership carries with it a certain sense of proprietorship and responsibility, and every member, especially every adult member, knows that he is not exactly playing square with all the rest involved when he, without good reason, absents himself from the services of his church. Sometimes the duty needs to be urged, but such effort can be easily overdone, and is often wrongly done. The duty of church attendance should be taught, as other religious duties are taught, but little more than annoyance of the faithful is accomplished by the scoldings of the absentees.

Some leaders seek to encourage attendance by planning definitely to make their church a friendly church. The spirit of genuine friendship is a strong appeal and sincere folks like to go where it is to be found. A church has a right to be friendly,—genuinely, sincerely friendly, for such a spirit is based upon love, and love is at home in the true church. But there is a superficial glad-handedness, that is sometimes panned off as real friendliness and by means of which some think to draw people unto themselves. But real, love-inspired friendliness cannot be successfully imitated, and nothing else will win and wear, and nothing else is proper and acceptable at a church. But even genuine friendliness is not entirely distinctive of the church, nor has it in itself sufficient drawing power to guarantee a good attendance at the church services. There are other places where friendliness can be found.

Some urge church attendance and argue for its importance on the ground that it enables one to form contacts of the highest sort and to share fellowship of the most enriching kind. Such an argument is a challenge to the church that offers it, and to all those individuals who worship there. Josiah Stamp, an eminent British churchman, has said on this point: "This throws a great responsibility on those who are already there, that when they are taken at their word and their invitation is accepted, the newcomers should find and realize an atmosphere that is different from, and finer than, they have found outside. This means, of course, that standards of judgment and attitudes of mind must be on a higher plane than those of the market place and on the tennis court." A church whose membership dwells on the common levels in life and thought, and whose worship does not lift to the high places of spiritual vision and devotion, cannot urge attendance at its services by the argument of the high personal benefit that it has to offer.

Some churches bid for attendance by the exceptional music they provide. It is worth while for a church to put forth effort to have the very best and most spiritually inspiring music that is possible. Music is broad in its appeal, ennobling in its beauty and charm and deep and powerful in its influence. Luther once declared: "Next to theology I give to music the highest place and honor." And Hogg wrote:

"Of all the arts beneath the heaven
That man has found or God has given,
None draws the soul so sweet away,
As music's melting, mystic lay;
Slight emblem of the bliss above,
It soothes the spirit all to love."

But music alone will not attract many to the church. The crowds are not necessarily where the finest singing is. Something more is needed.

Good preaching counts much in church attendance, and some churches, realizing its importance, will be satisfied with nothing less than the best orator and deepest thinker they can find in one man. The preaching that counts most, however, is not always that which is most eloquent, nor the most learned. These are by no means small elements in successful preaching, but sincerity, real heart-earnestness and love are outstanding factors. Preachers who succeed and who attract people to their services are also preachers who know their people, who mingle with them in their homes and places of business and share their life problems. There are many elements that go to make a really successful preacher, one who can preach with power and understanding, one who can impart knowledge and inspiration, and who has personal winsomeness, wisdom and heart-earnestness, and there is no question but that the preacher has very much to do with the drawing of people to the services of God's house. And now, as in all the days of the past, there are some preachers who are strong and some who are weak, some who are attractive and some who are not. But every preacher can improve by hard work and earnest prayer.

But underneath this and all other factors that go to make for attractiveness and tend to draw people to the services of the church, there is one that is yet more important, and that is the assurance that when people come, they will be taught the word of God and will be led into a knowledge of the will of God. There is nothing that appeals to the hearts of men quite so much as the word of God, and nothing is quite so much appreciated as the faithful application of that word to the problems of life. The hearts of men are really hungering for a knowledge of God. Many do not admit it, and many more do not even realize it. But they are on the quest and when they find God they are satisfied, and when their souls are fed on the real Word of God they are glad to return for more. Not everybody will receive the word, but more are desiring it than we think, and specializing in teaching the Word will make for wide and permanent attractiveness more than anything else that a church can feature.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

You cannot help a man wisely so long as he hides the truth, and refuses to confess to God or divulge to man the rock-bottom cause of his trouble.

As we were going to press the public expression of appreciation, found elsewhere in this paper, came from Brother C. A. Stewart of Bryan, Ohio. His condition is encouraging, but prayer is needed for his complete recovery.

Brother I. D. Bowman is engaged in a revival meeting at Buena Vista, Virginia, and in a note recently received from him he says, "Having great crowds; meetings half over; three came forward last night (April 13th); had eleven so far."

Dr. J. C. Beal, pastor of the church at Canton, Ohio, has been ill and unable to occupy his pulpit for several weeks. Prof. M. A. Stuckey having been called to preach for him over Sunday of April 17th. He is improving, we are glad to learn. Pray for his continued improvement and complete recovery.

Brother R. I. Humbert reports a brief meeting he held for Brother I. D. Bowman in Delaware at the Mt. Olivet church. He found the people interested in the Word and the attendance increased from night to night until the house was full as the meetings closed. He pays well-deserved tribute to the fifty years of service rendered by Brother Bowman, who, though not as young and strong as he once was, still enjoys preaching the blessed Gospel to dying men.

A note from Brother Sylvester Lowman, pastor at Oakville, Indiana informs us that a pre-Easter meeting of one week which he conducted, resulted in six baptized, four of whom went into the church at that place. He says all the services are being well attended, and that a young people's society was recently organized, having an attendance of from thirty to thirty-five each Sunday evening.

On Christian Endeavor page Brother C. D. Whitmer provides us with a good article from the pen of one of the faithful Endeavorers of the First church of South Bend, Indiana, where Brother R. F. Porte is the pastor. Miss Vivian Adler is the writer, and she tells of three ways in which Christian Endeavor is helpful in training young people. Endeavorers will be profited by the reading of this article. Societies are invited to report their doings.

This is to remind Ohio Endeavorers that the 47th annual State Christian Endeavor convention is to be held at Lorain, on the shore of Lake Erie, June 21 to 24. Splendid fellowship, instructive conferences, excellent music and inspirational addresses are promised. Registration fee for those over twelve years of age is $1.00 and for those under twelve, 35 cents. Rev. R. D. Barnard of Dayton is our denominational trustee for Ohio.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of a successful tent meeting held at Alejandro, known as the "graveyard for missionaries," where the attendance was good, the offerings were the best of any town visited and where twenty-five persons professed conversion. Here we are reminded what it often costs to profess faith in evangelical Christianity in a country where the Roman church is in control, and has been for many years. Surely our hearts should go out in sustaining prayer to those new converts who are called upon to endure persecution for Christ's sake. For even the children, it means bearing a cross to be followers of Christ.

Brother Herman Hoyt, pastor of the church at Mansfield, Ohio, gives us an encouraging report of the work at that place. Brother Hoyt believes in prayer and work and the faithful preaching of the Word, and God is honoring his ministry. The people are becoming more active and encouraged. Since the first of this year sixteen souls are recorded as being added to the church, six in January and ten in April, thirteen coming by baptism and three by letter. Some of the Brethren have shown their appreciation of the services of the pastor and his wife in very practical ways. Such expressions are both timely and proper in most any pastorate in these times, especially where pastors are serving at a sacrifice.

In this issue we are publishing, over the signature of Dr. L. S. Bauman, the obituary of Elder Thomas H. Broad, for many years a much loved pastor in Southern California. It was never the editor's privilege to have had personal fellowship with Brother Broad, but we have had correspondence with him and we have heard a great deal about him from others. We have seldom known of any one about whom the comments were so universally and sincerely complimentary. He was of great service to the Brethren cause on the west coast and he will be greatly missed. He was jealous of the cause of Christ and loved men and rejoiced to serve them. Those are elements of greatness. We extend in behalf of the Evangelist family sincere sympathy to the sorrowing relatives and friends.

Dr. Louis S. Bauman brought the fifth lecture in the series before the Seminary students and faculty and a congregation of interested Brethren in the Ashland church on the evening of April 14th. His address was an answer to the question which had been put to him by the Seminary management, "Can Brethren churches be built in new communities today, and if so what is necessary to succeed?" Brother Bauman was positive that it can be done and out of his successful experience he pointed out some things that are necessary to accomplish that end, outstanding among which is to let the community know that the church preaches the whole word of God and seeks to do the whole will of God, without any exception or apology. He left his audience inspired by his strong faith in the Bible and moved with a desire to do something to extend the whole Gospel faith into new communities.

Brother B. F. Owen reports for the work at Nappanee, Indiana where he is pastor, and it is evident that God has visited his blessing upon this church in a remarkable way since last fall, when fifty-one souls were added to the church, most of them coming as a result of a union evangelistic campaign. As a result of a two weeks' campaign conducted by the pastor preceding Easter, fifty-one more were added to the church, making a total of 102 new members during these months. The Sunday school attendance has ranged from 350 to 515, the latter being the record for Easter Sunday. Further evidence of the spirituality and loyalty of this splendid church is to be seen in the attendance at communion services, the attendance of communicants last fall being 265 and this spring being 300. Their Easter offering for foreign missions was $400. Brother Owen also makes mention of his successful meeting held at Loree, Indiana, for Brother D. A. C. Teeter, concerning which report has previously been made.
